M. Chadderton: En effet, notre mémoire d'aujourd'hui ne renferme pas pareille proposition.

M. Bigg: En l'occurrence, on éliminerait peut-être des gens qui ont 20 ou 25 années d'expérience dans ce domaine. Peut-être aboutirions-nous avec des gens qui...

M. Chadderton: Une autre chose que je tiens à signaler, monsieur le président, c'est que dans la recommandation du comité Woods au sujet des modalités de nomination, le juge Woods et ses collègues ont réaffirmé que le gouvernement pourrait à bon escient faire appel à des personnes expérimentées dans les affaires des anciens combattants. Plus précisément, ils ont parlé d'ex-fonctionnaires du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et aussi parfois, d'anciens employés des organisations d'anciens combat-who is interested in appointment to that Board if that is what anybody is thinking about. We are not saying that we necessarily have anyone in mind but these were the principles and we feel that they are very good principles and consideration should be given to them.

Another thing is that the Woods Committee recommendation concerning a proposed appeal board stated that any member should be appointed in accordance with the same principles Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues saw as being the guidelines for appointment to members of the Commission. So it would be necessary to go to that particular recommendation in the Woods Committee, but what they were suggesting was that a chairman should be appointed and once he was appointed, that chairman should be in the position to make recommendations as to who goes on his board. This would give him an opportunity to scout around and look at the qualifications of various people and perhaps even convince certain people that from a career viewpoint it would be good opportunity to come onto the Appeal Board. This, of course, was getting completely away from the system of political appointment or something of that nature. It was a question of the man having to have the experience and having to qualify for the job. I am certain that that is the position of the veterans' organizations in Canada today regarding the type of personnel who should be appointed.

What we are differing with Mr. Chairman and gentlemen is—again our understanding is only what we can pick up from the White Paper—but we are differing with the principle as we understand it in the White Paper that the final level of appeal will be an appeal division within any new pension commission.

• 1135

I just want to take one moment to underscore something that was mentioned yesterday and I refer, Mr. Chairman, to the Woods Report, Volume 1, Page 85, wherein Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues said this:

> Apart from the merits or demerits of the activities of the Pension Commission, your Committee feels that the circumstances of the same body sitting in appeals from what in effect are its own decisions demands alteration of the present procedure...

and these are the important words—

> ...to repose the ultimate authority in a body outside the Pension Commission.

tants. Soit dit en passant, au cas où l'on y aurait songé, je ne connais personne parmi nous qui soit intéressé à siéger à ce bureau d'appel. Ce n'est pas que nous ayons des candidats en vue, mais nous avons posé certains principes, que nous estimons valables et, à ce titre, dignes d'être pris en considération.

En outre, au sujet du futur bureau d'appel, le comité Woods préconise que les nominations se fassent suivant les mêmes principes qui ont régi, aux yeux du juge Woods et de ses collègues, les nominations au sein de la Commission. Il faudrait donc relire cette recommandation; de toute façon, il est proposé que l'on nomme le président, puis que ce dernier ait son mot à dire dans la composition du reste du bureau. Il aurait ainsi l'occasion de chercher des candidats, d'en faire l'appréciation et même d'en convaincre certains qu'il est dans leur intérêt professionnel d'accepter de siéger au bureau d'appel. On s'éloigne, bien entendu, du régime de nomination par voie politique ou d'un régime analogue. Il faudrait que les candidats établissent leurs états de service et leur compétence. Je suis sûr que c'est là la pensée des associations canadiennes d'anciens combattants quant au mode de nomination dont nous discutons.

Là où nous différons d'avis, monsieur le président, messieurs, c'est que selon nous, et nous nous référons uniquement au Livre blanc, le principe stipulé, sauf erreur, dans ce document, est que le dernier stade d'appel réside dans une Division d'appel formée au sein de la nouvelle Commission des pensions.

Je vous prie de m'accorder quelques instants pour reprendre à mon compte un passage cité hier, monsieur le président, et qui est tiré du rapport Woods, volume 1, page 100. Selon le juge Woods et ses collègues:

> Mis à part les avantages et les inconvénients des méthodes de la Commission des pensions, votre Comité estime que la situation selon laquelle un organisme juge en appel des décisions qu'il a lui-même rendues demande qu'on modifie la procédure actuelle...

et voici le passage important:

> ...et qu'on confère l'autorité finale à un organisme indépendant de la Commission des pensions.

[Text]

Mr. Chairman, we do not see this recommendation in the White Paper as reposing the ultimate authority in a body outside the Pension Commission. We submit that the White Paper completely and beautifully misses the whole point.

Mr. Bigg: Personally, I am still worried though about the idea of drawing up wooden guidelines to say that if certain people sit at one level of adjudication that disqualifies them from sitting at another level and whether you people would be satisfied if we put this final board of appeal under the Department of Justice or under the Secretary of State or under some other branch of the government. Surely it is the quality of decision we are worried about rather than the position in the government hierarchy or so forth because if you get the wrong personnel on the Board it would not matter where you...

The Chairman: I think you would have some reservation if it was put in the Department of Justice, for example, following Mr. Bigg's comment, and composed exclusively of people with that background.

Mr. Bigg: You have to put it, Mr. Chairman, in some government department. You cannot have them in a vacuum and you would not be put under Defence or somewhere else. I presume you would have to be under one of the semi-legal branches unless you put it under the Prime Minister or under the Treasury Board directly like one of the Crown Corporations or something like that.

Mr. Lundberg: Mr. Bigg you are saying this person on the first instance we are talking of now...

Mr. Bigg: We are talking about the ten as opposed to the five.

Mr. Lundberg: Are we to understand there will be no transferring back and forth of this individual. Once he is taken from the Entitlement Board or the Directorate and is put on the Appeal Division, he is not then free to go back and forth from each committee.

Mr. Bigg: We have been assured of that already. As I have tried to simplify the thinking, they are going to try and have a horizontal separation. So if you are ever promoted from one branch of the service into this final Appeal Board you would not be going back to making decisions at the lower level or be interchangeable in any way. However, I am afraid of saying, for instance,

[Interpretation]

Monsieur le président, nous estimons qu'il n'est pas envisagé, dans le Livre blanc, de conférer l'autorité dernière à un organisme indépendant de la Commission des pensions. Nous soutenons que le Livre blanc n'a nullement conçu la chose dans cette optique.

M. Bigg: Pour ma part, il me reste quelque appréhension à l'égard de l'idée de formuler des directives bien tranchées, comme interdire à une même personne de siéger à deux différentes étapes de l'arbitrage, ou de rechercher votre avis sur la question de faire relever le dernier bureau d'appel soit du ministère de la Justice, soit du Secrétariat d'État ou de quelque autre service administratif. C'est sûrement le bien fondé des décisions rendues, non la position hiérarchique au sein de l'Administration, qui doit nous préoccuper, car si le bureau se compose de gens inaptes, peu importe si...

Le président: Des réserves s'imposent, à mon sens, quant à le faire relever du ministère de la Justice, par exemple, si, comme l'a mentionné M. Bigg, il n'est constitué que de gens tirés des cadres ministériels.

M. Bigg: Il faut tout de même le situer dans un ministère, monsieur le président. On ne peut le rattacher à rien ou au ministère de la Défense nationale, mettons. Il faudrait qu'il relève d'un de ces organismes semi-juridiques, ou encore du premier ministre ou directement du Conseil du Trésor, à l'égal des sociétés de la Couronne, par exemple.

M. Lundberg: Monsieur Bigg, est-ce à dire qu'une personne siégeant au bureau de première instance, dont nous discutons présentement...

M. Bigg: Nous parlons du bureau des dix, par opposition au bureau des cinq.

M. Lundberg: Si je comprends bien, une personne ne pourrait passer d'un organisme à l'autre. Si un membre du bureau d'admissibilité ou de la Direction était nommé à la Division d'appel, il ne lui serait pas loisible, n'est-ce pas, de passer d'un organisme à l'autre?

M. Bigg: On nous en a déjà donné l'assurance. Pour simplifier ma pensée, je dirais qu'il n'y aurait pas de mutations horizontales. Un membre promu d'un service ministériel quelconque au dernier bureau d'appel ne pourrait plus rendre de jugements à un niveau inférieur; ses fonctions ne seraient pas interchangeables. Je crains d'avoir à affirmer. qu'un poste à un niveau inférieur interdit that if you served on the lower level you would be disqualified for the higher level. Surely we do not want that.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Bigg: This is only my own opinion, but the important thing is the quality of man and the quality of the decision he is going to make. I think if we could put in some way to ensure that rather than the technical name of the body or even the department in which they sat, it would be more important. I am quite happy to ask for this separation completely, to put it from one department to the other. Again, my knowledge of public affairs is that if they want to get together over coffee and discuss the little affair, it will be done if that is the quality of people you are dealing with. There is nothing to stop them getting on the telephone and saying, "By the way, we have a sticky case from Alberta. We do not want to give the man his pension. Shall we turn him down?" If people are going to do that sort of thing, they will do it and whether they are in the Department of Justice, the Defence and so forth or whether it goes through the best-meaning Minister in the world.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Weatherhead had some comment and Mr. Stanley Knowles.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, following up Mr. Bigg's comments I think I am still not entirely clear of the position of the witnesses here. Do I gather that they really want at least a majority of brand new men on an appeal on Appeal Division, and they are willing, if they have a majority of brand new men, to take the chance that these brand new men will still have all the sympathy and experience and everything else that you feel rightly so are necessary to make an excellent appeal commissioner?

It seems to me you are trying to have naturally, the best of both worlds but you want to have all the sympathy and the experience of the old commissioners and you want brand new one at the same time. Now, can you reconcile these two positions?

• 1140

Mr. Chadderton: No, Mr. Chairman, again, we have to refer back to the recommendation of the Woods Committee which is the one which has our endorsation. I think it was quite clear that recommendation stated that appointments to any proposed appeal board could be made from among present commissioners so long as there was no majority.

[Interprétation]

l'accès aux bureaux supérieurs. Celà, nous n'en voulons sûrement pas.

Une voix: Non.

M. Bigg: Ce qui compte, à mon sens, c'est la compétence d'un homme et celle des décisions qu'il va rendre. Il importe plus de se préoccuper de ces choses que de détails matériels, comme l'appellation de l'organisme ou même le ministère de qui il doit relever. Je suis ravi de demander une telle séparation complète, le passage d'un ministère à l'autre. D'après ce que je sais des affaires publiques, si les membres sont prêts à discuter d'un cas en prenant le café, les choses se passeront ainsi, avec des gens de cette sorte. On ne peut empêcher quelqu'un de dire, au téléphone: "Soit dit en passant, le cas du type de l'Alberta nous met dans l'embarras. Nous ne voulions pas lui donner sa pension. Devrions-nous rejeter sa demande?» Si des gens ont cette attitude, peu importe qu'ils soient au ministère de la Justice, à celui de la Défense ou ailleurs, peu importe qu'ils relèvent du ministre le mieux intentionné qui soit, rien ne les empêchera d'agir ainsi.

Le président: M. Weatherhead, ainsi que M. Stanley Knowles, ont demandé à prendre la parole.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, à la suite des commentaires de M. Bigg, je n'ai pas encore une idée nette de la pensée des témoins. Si je comprends bien, ils voudraient que la majorité, au moins, du bureau d'appel se compose de nouveaux membres et ils accepteraient le risque que ceux-ci puissent ne pas avoir la sympathie, l'expérience et tout ce qu'il faut, selon leurs désirs légitimes, pour exceller dans leurs tâches.

Il me semble que vous voulez ainsi l'argent et le beurre, à la fois la sympathie et l'expérience des anciens commissaires, ainsi que du sang nouveau. Comment peut-on faire concorder ces deux choses?

M. Chadderton: Non, monsieur le président, nous devons vous renvoyer de nouveau à la recommandation formulée par le comité Woods, celle que nous endossons. Il y est dit très clairement, je pense, que les nominations au futur bureau d'appel pourraient se faire parmi les commissaires actuels, pourvu que ces derniers n'y détiennent pas la majo-

[Text]

In other words, if it is going to be a five-man appeal board, you could not have more than two from the present Commission. Also, to clarify another point, we have been discussing here this morning this question of whether a Commissioner should sit on an appeal in which he has been involved in the previous adjudication. Again I refer you to the Woods Committee recommendation Number 17, where Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues saw nothing particularly wrong with that.

Again we ourselves feel that that is our position. We do not see anything particularly wrong with the way it was at that time, with an appeal board moving around and with a commissioner who has been involved in previous adjudication again adjudicating, so long as the veteran gives his consent. And that proper protection was in the Act.

I think Mr. Justice Woods stated that if there is to be sufficient moving around of these people and hearing of cases across Canada, you have to expect, as you would with your entitlement board, 10 men. You could not expect that you are going to get a different three-man entitlement board on every case. Mathematics would dictate that that is not possible, but again I just want to refer to the fact that Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues saw nothing wrong with a commissioner re-adjudicating on an application; and that is our position here.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, getting back to the first point, your position then is that in in any event you want at least three brand-new men on an Appeal Division and that you are willing to take the chance that they might not be as experienced and sympathetic as some of the present ones.

Mr. Lundberg: That is right.

Mr. Bigg: You are not insisting that they be put under a different department or anything? You talked about their being in the same building as if the coffee break were really significant.

The Chairman: Mr. Knowles.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, what I wanted to say is on this very point that Mr. Bigg has brought up again. I think I agree with Mr. Bigg's basic concern that we support the idea of a completely independent appeal board. At the same time we do not want to lose experience. I do not think it is necessary, if I may say rité. Autrement dit, s'il s'agit d'un bureau d'appel de cinq membres, au plus deux commissaires actuels pourraient en faire partie. Un autre point que j'aimerais élucider: nous nous sommes demandés ce matin si un commissaire du bureau d'appel devrait juger d'une cause qu'il a déjà tranchée à un stade inférieur. Je vous renvoie, en l'occurrence, à la recommandation n° 17 du comité Woods, dans laquelle le juge Woods et ses collègues affirment n'y voir aucun inconvénient important.

Je le répète, c'est aussi notre pensée. Rien de particulièrement répréhensible ne nous frappe dans la pratique antérieure, alors que le bureau d'appel se déplaçait et pouvait comporter un commissaire ayant déjà porté un jugement sur le litige, à condition que l'ancien combattant en cause y consente, protection que lui accordait la Loi.

Le juge Woods a déclaré, sauf erreur, que si les déplacements des commissaires et le nombre de causes par tout le Canada le justifient, il faudrait prévoir un bureau de dix membres, tout comme le bureau d'admissibilité. On ne peut s'attendre que chaque cause déférée au bureau d'admissibilité soit jugée par trois membres différents. La chose est mathématiquement impossible; d'ailleurs, je tiens à le répéter, le juge Woods et ses collègues ne voient aucun inconvénient à ce qu'un commissaire entende la même chose plus d'une fois; nous sommes aussi de cet avis.

M. Weatherhead: Pour en revenir à la première question, monsieur le président, vous voudriez, n'est-ce pas, que la Division des appels, de toute façon, comprenne trois nouveaux membres, et vous accepteriez le risque qu'ils ne soient pas aussi expérimentés, aussi pleins de sympathie que certains des titulaires actuels?

M. Lundberg: C'est exact.

M. Bigg: Vous ne tenez pas à ce que la Division relève d'un autre ministère, mettons. Vous parlez de membres installés dans le même bâtiment comme si la pause-café était chose réellement importante.

Le président: M. Knowles.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Monsieur le président, mes remarques s'appliquent à la question même que M. Bigg a de nouveau soulevée. Je partage son point de vue, soit qu'il est essentiel que nous nous prononcions en faveur d'un bureau d'appel entièrement autonome. Néanmoins, il ne faut pas laisser échapper les avantages de l'expérience. Il me so, to talk about this separate appeal board having to be in some other department. You are right, Mr. Chairman; you frighten us if you talk about putting it in the Justice Department or Treasury or Finance—God help us.

The Chairman: It did seem to me that would have to be thought through.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is not necessary. The hierarchy is full of boards and bodies that report through certain ministers but are separate. The Canadian Transport Commission reports to the Minister but is not responsible to the Deputy Minister. The Canada Labour Relations Board is not responsible to the Deputy Minister of Labour. The Public Service Staff Relations Board is another one. It is in a bit of trouble right now, but at any rate, there it is. There is also the Canadian Radio-Television Commission and so on. We are full of boards. There are advisory boards of which you have been a member, Mr. Chairman, which report to the minister but are not part of the departmental set-up in the same way that the Bureau of Pension Advocates is going to come directly under the Minister rather than under the Deputy Minister.

It seems to me that it is quite possible to avoid going into another department and yet having this appeal board completely separate. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that despite my tendency to be critical of anything the government proposes, when the White Paper first came in I thought there was some sense to this compromise of separating the first level, putting it in the department and having the other two together but the more these organizations have made their case, the more I think they have made it very strongly that the final decision should be by a body which is completely on its own. It seems to me that that is even more important than the actual personnel who make it up. I hope the Committee will give pretty serious consideration to it.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt at this point, but I am concerned about time and I do know that there is one other point which Mr. Lundberg wants to make today. I wonder if it would be in order to proceed now.

[Interprétation]

semble inutile, si je puis dire, de parler d'un bureau d'appel distinct qui devrait se trouver dans quelque autre ministère. Vous avez raison, monsieur le président; vous nous faites peur lorsque vous parlez de le situer au ministère de la Justice, au Conseil du Trésor ou aux Finances. Dieu nous en préserve!

Le président: Il m'a semblé que cette question exige qu'on y réfléchisse bien.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Ce n'est pas nécessaire. La hiérarchie est remplie de commissions et d'organismes qui font rapport à certains ministres tout en restant indépendants. La Commission canadienne des transports fait rapport au ministre, mais ne relève pas du sous-ministre. Le Conseil canadien des relations ouvrières ne relève pas du sous-ministre du travail. La Commission des relations de travail dans la fonction publique en est une autre. Elle rencontre actuellement quelques difficultés, mais, de toutes façons, elle en est une. A ceux-ci se joignent le Conseil de la radio-télévision canadienne et d'autres organismes. Nous sommes envahis par les commissions. Il y a des commissions consultatives, dont vous avez fait partie, monsieur le président, qui font rapport au ministre, mais qui n'appartiennent pas à la structure du ministère au même titre que le Bureau des avocats des pensions qui relèvera directement du ministre plutôt que du sous-ministre.

Il me semble qu'on peut facilement éviter d'aller jusqu'à le confier à un autre ministère, tout en conservant à ce bureau d'appel son autonomie complète. Je dois dire, monsieur le président, que malgré ma tendance à critiquer toutes les propositions du gouvernement, dès que le Livre blanc a paru, j'ai pensé qu'on avait raison de séparer le premier niveau, de le placer dans le ministère et d'unir les deux autres; mais à mesure que ces organisations ont exposé leur cas, elles ont bien démontré que la décision finale devrait être laissée à un organisme complètement indépendant. A mon sens, cet aspect est encore plus important que le personnel même qui le compose. J'espère que le Comité examinera très attentivement ce point.

Le président: Je m'excuse de vous interrompre, mais je me préoccupe du temps et je sais que M. Lundberg désire exposer une autre question aujourd'hui. Je me demande s'il est réglementaire de passer à cette autre maintenant.

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: Have we completed this point?

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton is going to be back in another capacity next week and it seems to me that there will be a number of opportunities to review this point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is going to come up every time.

The Chairman: Yes. Again I am trying to think of the time of the members today and the schedule that we have announced. I do not wish to restrain you, Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Chadderton: If I might just read into the record one reference, Mr. Chairman. That is the Woods Committee Report, Volume 1, page 82, Recommendation No. (14) (z), which states:

> ... Accomodation shall be provided in a building other than that occupied by the Canadian Pension Commission.

The same reference, Recommendation No. (14) (AA) states that:

> The Chairman of the Pension Appeal Board, ... should make a report on the proceedings of his Board to the Minister of Veterans Affairs ...

And that is our position. I wanted to make that clear.

The Chairman: That is fine.

Mr. Bigg: That is the exact point I was trying to make. I do not like working in a vacuum. If they are solid recommendations, I suggested Justice only—perhaps I have a limited memory of the number of ministries that we have—but if we are not going to have it all in the same one, I would like to know what department the veterans would like.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A separate building and a separate coffee shop and another telephone.

The Chairman: Mr. Lundberg.

Mr. Lundberg: Gentlemen, I would ask you to go to the November 26 brief and on page 2, paragraph 1:

1. The Basic Rate of Pension (Woods Committee Recommendation No. 63)

> The cornerstone of the Pension Act is the principle that pensions are paid on the basis of disability, measured in terms of the amount of disqualification in the unskilled labour market. The Woods

[Interpretation]

M. Bigg: Avons-nous terminé ce point?

Le président: M. Chadderton reviendra la semaine prochaine, mais à un autre titre, et il me semble que nous aurons encore bien des occasions de revoir ce point.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Ce sujet reviendra toujours sur le tapis.

Le président: Oui. A nouveau, j'essaie de penser au temps alloué aux membres aujourd'hui et au programme que nous avons annoncé. Je ne veux pas vous restreindre, monsieur Bigg.

M. Chadderton: Permettez-moi, monsieur le président, de lire une référence dans le dossier. C'est le rapport du comité Woods, volume 1, page 82, recommandation 14 (Z) qui stipule:

> ...Le Bureau d'appel des pensions sera logé dans un immeuble différent de celui de la Commission des pensions.

La même référence, recommandation 14 (AA) stipule que:

> ...le président du Bureau d'appel des pensions devra faire rapport des délibérations du Bureau au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants...

Et voilà notre position. Je voulais l'indiquer clairement.

Le président: C'est bien.

M. Bigg: C'est exactement le point que je voulais exposer. Je n'aime pas travailler dans le vide. Si ce sont de solides recommandations, je suggère le ministère de la Justice seulement; j'ai peut-être la mémoire trop courte pour me rappeler le nombre de nos ministères, mais si nous ne pouvons pas nous entendre, j'aimerais savoir quel ministère les anciens combattants préféreraient.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Bigg.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Un édifice à part, une cafétéria distincte et un autre téléphone.

Le président: Monsieur Lundberg.

M. Lundberg: Messieurs, je vous demanderais d'ouvrir le mémoire du 26 novembre à la page 2, paragraphe 1:

1. Le taux de base des pensions (Recommandation 63 du comité Woods)

> La pierre-angulaire de la Loi sur les pensions est le principe suivant lequel le paiement des pensions est en fonction du degré d'invalidité, c'est-à-dire l'incapacité sur le marché du travail non

[Texte]

Committee recommends that this formula be retained—and provides some excellent and compelling reasons for doing so. The National Council is aware that some Ministerial Advisors have, over the past few years, advocated that this formula should be replaced by some newer yardstick. We submit that any such change would be wrong for the reason that the unskilled labour market has been the common denominator on which pension has been based since 1919. This is consistent with the principle as laid down in section 17 of the Pension Act that

> "The occupation or income or condition in life of a person previous to his becoming a member of the forces does not in any way affect the amount of pension awarded to or in respect of him."

This formula is important in that it assesses physical disability in terms of the value of physical work. It does not bar the pensioner from earning a living with whatever other abilities he has left. Accordingly, there has been a great incentive for the disabled war casualty to rehabilitate himself, safe in the knowledge that any income he can earn "with what he has left" will in no way affect his pension.

Hand in hand with this is the guarantee to him that FOR THE AMOUNT OF HIS DISABILITY WHICH DOES DISQUALIFY HIM IN THE UNSKILLED LABOUR MARKET he will be paid, at the 100% disability rate, the wage of an untrained labourer—that is $4,152 a year, for an eight hour day, in accordance with current wages in the Public Service of Canada.

Over the years the basic rate of war disability pension has fallen very considerably behind earnings in the unskilled labour market. We suggest that the adoption of a new formula could produce a ready-made means of covering up this deficiency. For example, a new formula might be devised to offer more pension only to certain of the disability classifications which should be rated at greater than 100 per cent. This solution would not be acceptable. As we have already stated, the unskilled labour market formula is the bedrock principle of the Pension Act. Where a disability can legitimately be rated as greater than 100 per cent (i.e. the multiple disability case) there is ample justification for additional spécialisé. Le comité Woods recommande de retenir cette formule, et pour ce faire fournit des raisons excellentes et indiscutables. Le Conseil national a été informé que, ces dernières années, certains conseillers ministériels ont préconisé de remplacer cette formule par quelque autre mesure plus nouvelle. A notre avis, toute modification de ce genre serait erronée, car, depuis 1919, la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée a servi de dénominateur commun à l'évaluation des pensions. Cela est conforme au principe énoncé dans l'article 17 de la Loi sur les pensions qui stipule que:

> «L'occupation ou le revenu ou l'état de vie d'une personne avant qu'elle soit devenue membre des forces ne doivent en aucune manière influer sur le montant de la pension qui lui est accordée ou est accordée à son sujet».

Cette formule est importante, parce qu'elle évalue l'invalidité physique en fonction de la valeur du travail physique. Elle n'empêche pas le pensionné de gagner sa vie avec les autres capacités qui lui restent. Ainsi, l'invalide de guerre a ressenti un vif encouragement à se réadapter, sachant que tout le revenu acquis «avec ce qui lui reste» ne nuira certes pas à sa pension.

On lui a également fourni l'assurance que POUR LE DEGRÉ D'INVALIDITÉ QUI L'EMPÊCHE D'ŒUVRER DANS LA MAIN-D'ŒUVRE NON SPÉCIALISÉE, il recevra, à 100 p. 100 de son degré d'invalidité, le salaire d'un ouvrier non spécialisé, soit $4,152 par an, pour une journée de huit heures, conformément aux salaires en cours dans la Fonction publique du Canada.

Au cours des années, le taux de base de la pension des invalides de guerre est devenu considérablement inférieur aux salaires de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. Nous sommes d'avis que l'adoption d'une nouvelle formule pourrait fournir un moyen apte à corriger cette lacune. Par exemple, on pourrait élaborer une nouvelle formule qui n'offrirait une pension plus élevée qu'à certaines catégories d'invalidité qu'on estimerait dépasser 100 p. 100. Cette solution ne semble pas acceptable. Comme nous l'avons indiqué plus haut, la formule de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée constitue le principe fondamental de la Loi sur les pensions. Lorsqu'on peut estimer légitimement que l'invalidité dépasse les 100 p. 100 (comme pension over and above the 100 per cent figure, as has been suggested by the Woods Committee.

There is more than money involved in the basic rate. The unskilled labour market formula preserves for the pensioner the age-old concept of pension as of right". In effect, this formula guarantees that pension will be paid to him on the basis of the amount of his disqualification in the unskilled labour market. This was the recommendation of the Woods Committee, as we understand it, and any deviation from this principle would amount to a betrayal of the rights of the pensioner.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs in his appearance before the Parliamentary Committee on October 29th made a statement to the effect that the basic rate of pension was not included in the Terms of Reference of the Woods Committee.

We understand that there was a limitation that the Committee should not make recommendations regarding the actual amount of monies which should be paid under the Act, but that it was free to enquire into and report on anything else, including the structure of the basic rate. The Committee did this—pointing out that it was not possible to make recommendations regarding the compensation for multiple disabilities and several other important aspects of pension administration without first establishing a firm base upon which the calculation of the amount of pension could be established.

In concluding the views of this Council on this matter, may we point out that the basic rate of pension must necessarily be based upon the amount required to compensate a single man for his disabilities. Comparisons on the basis of the married rate of pension cannot be justified. Originally Parliament intended that the basic rate should be "the earning power of a man in the class of untrained labour" which means the amount the man can earn in untrained labour, regardless of whether he has a wife and children to support. Where dependents do exist, the Pension Act recognizes this, and makes provision for additional pension to meet this added responsibility.

dans le cas des infirmités multiples), selon la proposition du comité Woods, on pourrait amplement justifier une pension supplémentaire basée sur un pourcentage supérieur au 100 p. 100.

Il n'y a pas que l'argent impliqué dans le taux de base. La formule de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée conserve au pensionné la notion séculaire de «pension de droit.» En effet, cette formule garantit que la pension lui sera payée en se basant sur son degré d'incapacité à participer à la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. Telle était la recommandation du comité Woods, croyons-nous, et toute déviation de ce principe équivaudrait à trahir les droits du pensionné.

Lorsque le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants a comparu le 29 octobre devant le Comité parlementaire, il a déclaré que le taux de base des pensions n'était pas au nombre des attributions du comité Woods.

Nous avons alors compris qu'une restriction empêchait le comité d'énoncer des recommandations concernant le montant à payer conformément à la loi, mais que le comité était libre de mener une enquête et de faire rapport sur tout autre point, y compris la structure des taux de base. Ce faisant, le comité a indiqué qu'à moins d'établir tout d'abord le calcul du montant des pensions sur une base solide, il était impossible de formuler des recommandations concernant l'indemnisation pour infirmités multiples et plusieurs autres aspects importants de l'administration des pensions.

En terminant d'exposer l'opinion du Conseil à ce sujet, qu'on nous permette de souligner la nécessité d'établir le taux de base des pensions sur le montant requis pour indemniser les célibataires. Il serait injustifiable d'établir des comparaisons en se basant sur le taux de pension des gens mariés. Au début, le Parlement proposait, comme taux de base, «l'aptitude professionnelle d'un individu appartenant à la classe de l'ouvrier non spécialisé»; en d'autres termes, le montant que l'individu peut gagner dans la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée, sans tenir compte du fait qu'il ait une femme et des enfants à charge. Dans le cas où il aurait des personnes à charge, la Loi sur les pensions prévoit une pension supplémentaire pour faire face à cette responsabilité supplémentaire.

The Chairman: Have members of the Committee any questions to raise at this point?

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, by our terms of reference we are not to deal with the basic rate, is that right?

The Chairman: My understanding was that the amount of the basic rate was outside the terms of reference. The Committee may wish to have additional testimony on the basic terms of reference on this point.

Mr. Marshall: But in our report from Committee can we make any impact on the government relative to basic rate?

The Chairman: I point out to the Committee that in relation to that there was a very specific reference in the White Paper and in the Minister's statement in the House of Commons.

Mr. Lundberg: Gentlemen, I say that the Woods Committee Report is before you, and the Woods Committee Report does contain recommendations.

The Chairman: Yes; but whether or not the Woods Committee Report exceeded the scope of its terms of reference is another matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We were not given the terms of reference of the Woods Committee Report; we were given the Woods Committee Report.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, this is a matter we can hear a good deal more about, but I suggest that the Committee may want to have further testimony on it.

Mr. Bigg: The Committee is not restricted to the Woods Committee Report, is it?

The Chairman: As I understand it, the terms of reference of the Committee—and the clerk can read them to us—are very definitely the Woods Committee Report.

Mr. Bigg: Are we not masters in our own house?

The Chairman: Not according to the rules of the House of Commons. The Committee can deal only with those matters specifically referred to it by the House of Commons, and this is a clearly understood principle.

I will ask the clerk to read the terms of reference. Mr. Levesque?

[Interprétation]

Le président: Les membres du Comité ont-ils des questions à poser?

M. Marshall: Monsieur le président, nos attributions ne nous permettent pas de traiter du taux de base, n'est-ce pas?

Le président: Sauf erreur, nos attributions ne s'étendent pas au taux de base. A ce propos, le Comité aimerait peut-être entendre d'autres témoignages concernant les attributions fondamentales.

M. Marshall: Mais dans le rapport du Comité, pouvons-nous influencer la décision du gouvernement au sujet du taux de base?

Le président: Je ferai remarquer au Comité que, sur ce point, il existe une référence très spéciale dans le Livre blanc et dans la déclaration du ministre à la Chambre des communes.

M. Lundberg: Messieurs, je crois que le rapport du comité Woods est soumis à votre examen et qu'il contient des recommandations.

Le président: Oui; mais c'est une autre question que de savoir si le rapport du comité Woods dépasse ses attributions.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): On ne nous a pas exposé le mandat du rapport de la Commission Woods; on nous a donné son rapport.

Le président: Messieurs, c'est une affaire sur laquelle nous pourrions en entendre bien davantage, mais je pense que le Comité pourrait désirer d'autres témoignages dans ce domaine.

M. Bigg: Le Comité n'est pas restreint exclusivement au rapport de la Commission Woods, n'est-ce pas?

Le président: Si j'ai bien compris, le mandat de notre Comité, et le greffier pourrait nous en lire le texte, stipule expressément le rapport de la Commission Woods.

M. Bigg: Ne sommes-nous pas maître chez nous?

Le président: Pas selon le Règlement de la Chambre des communes. Le comité ne peut se pencher que sur les affaires qui lui sont expressément confiées par la Chambre des communes, et c'est là un principe qui ne fait aucun doute.

Je vais demander au greffier de nous lire le texte de l'ordre de renvoi. Monsieur Lévesque?

Mr. D. E. Levesque (Clerk of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs): Terms of reference:

Thursday, June 26, 1969

Ordered,—That the report of the committee appointed September 8, 1965, to survey the organization and work of the Canadian Pension Commission, tabled on March 26, 1968, be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

ATTEST: ALISTAIR FRASER,
The Clerk of the House of Commons.

Mr. Bigg: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is impossible to consider the Woods Committee Report apart from the financial aspects of the case.

The Chairman: This raises a much broader subject and I question how much further the Committee can go in the time remaining this morning. No doubt we will have further discussions.

Mr. Bigg: Yes; perhaps in the time remaining this morning; but...

Mr. Marshall: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that so many of the items in the report have a relationship to basic rate that it is a...

Mr. Chadderton: In the Woods Committee Report, which is addressed to the former Minister of Veterans Affairs, Volume 1, Chapter 1, page 2, under the heading "Terms of Reference", Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues stated this:

> From discussions with you prior to the actual establishment of the Committee, the Chairman understood that you wanted it to be free to enquire into all phases of the operations of the Canadian Pension Commission excepting only actual rates of pension.

There is another reference, Mr. Chairman, on page 3 of the same report, wherein the Treasury Board Minute is quoted in these words:

> the Committee, though not limited in the scope of its report, and it goes on to say what it is to report on.

[Interpretation]

M. D. E. Lévesque (greffier du Comité permanent sur les affaires des anciens combattants): Ordre de renvoi:

Le jeudi 26 juin 1969

Il est ordonné,—Que le rapport du comité d'enquête sur l'organisation et le travail de la Commission canadienne des pensions nommé le 8 septembre 1965, déposé le 26 mars 1968, soit renvoyé au comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants.

ATTESTÉ:
Le greffier de la Chambre des communes,
ALISTAIR FRASER.

M. Bigg: Je voudrais mentionner un point de l'ordre du jour, monsieur le président. Il est impossible de traiter du rapport du Comité Woods sans tenir compte des aspects financiers de la question.

Le président: Cela élargirait considérablement le sujet, et je me demande ce que le Comité pourrait encore faire pendant le temps qui nous reste ce matin. Nous aurons sans aucun doute d'autres discussions.

M. Bigg: Oui; peut-être pendant le temps qui nous reste ce matin; mais...

M. Marshall: Puis-je faire remarquer, monsieur le président, qu'un si grand nombre de points du rapport concernent le taux de base que c'est un....

M. Chadderton: Dans le rapport du Comité Woods, qui est adressé à l'ancien ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, au volume 1, chapitre 1, page 2, sous le terme «Attributions», le juge Woods et ses collègues déclaraient ce qui suit:

> A la suite des entretiens qu'il a eus avec vous avant l'établissement effectif du Comité, le président a cru comprendre que vous vouliez que le Comité soit libre de faire enquête sur tous les aspects de l'activité de la Commission canadienne des pensions, à l'exception seulement de ce qui concerne les taux même des pensions.

Il y a encore une autre référence, monsieur le président, à la page 3 du même rapport, dans laquelle le procès-verbal du Conseil du trésor est cité en ces termes:

> Bien que cela ne doive pas restreindre la portée de son rapport...

et il poursuit en disant ce qui fait l'objet du rapport.

[Texte]

The Chairman: I think I should caution the Committee that there is additional reference in the Treasury Board Minute which is probably relevant.

• 1155

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, it could be. There is one further reference. In a letter read into the minutes of the Woods Committee Report by Mr. Ken Langford, the Chairman of the National Council of Veterans Associations, he quotes a letter from Mr. Teillet which states that the Committee may report

...as they see fit.

On that basis, Mr. Chairman, for what it is worth, we in the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada submit that the basic rate of pension is properly before this Committee.

The Chairman: I simply have to caution the Committee that I have been given contrary advice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But you have not ruled yet?

The Chairman: No, I have not. I feel that the Committee will have to hear the other items that will be submitted, which would not be in agreement with the conclusion Mr. Chadderton has drawn.

Mr. Lundberg: I would like to point out, though, Mr. Chairman, that when the last pension increase was received it was stated most emphatically by the then Minister of Veterans Affairs that this was only an interim adjustment until the report was tabled and then the matter could be clarified in its entirety.

The Chairman: Mr. Lundberg, I do not want to get into a dispute on the merits of the basic rate. It seems to me that this is a question in itself.

Certain things have been referred to us, and in particular the White Paper is a priority item which the government has prepared to move with legislation.

If the Committee goes into basic rate now there will be prolonged discussions and certainly a delay before there is legislation incorporating those items in the White Paper which have been accepted. That is a decision that the members of the Committee have to wrestle with.

We have heard your submission and know your point of view and the references that

[Interprétation]

Le président: Je crois devoir prévenir le Comité qu'il y a, dans le procès-verbal du Conseil du Trésor, une autre référence, qui est probablement pertinente.

M. Chadderton: Oui, c'est possible. Il y a une autre référence encore. Dans une lettre consignée au procès-verbal du rapport du comité Woods par le président du Conseil national des associations des anciens combattants, M. Ken Langford, il cite une lettre de M. Teillet qui déclare que le comité peut présenter son rapport comme bon lui semble.

Sur cette base, monsieur le président, et pour ce qu'elle vaut, nous prétendons au sein du Conseil national des associations d'anciens combattants du Canada que le comité est bien saisi de la question des taux de base des pensions.

Le président: Je me bornerai à prévenir le Comité qu'il m'a été précisé le contraire.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Mais vous n'avez pas encore décidé?

Le président: Non, pas encore. J'estime que le Comité devra entendre les autres points qui lui seront soumis, et qui ne concorderont pas avec la conclusion tirée par M. Chadderton.

M. Lundberg: Je voudrais cependant vous préciser, monsieur le président, que lors de la dernière augmentation des pensions, le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants de l'époque a souligné avec la plus grande force qu'il s'agissait uniquement d'une solution provisoire en attendant la présentation du rapport, et en ce moment la question pourrait être réglée dans sa totalité.

Le président: Monsieur Lundberg, je ne tiens pas à engager un débat sur la valeur du taux de base. Il me semble que c'est là une question distincte. Certaines choses nous ont été confiées, et le Livre blanc en particulier constitue une priorité que le gouvernement a préparée pour en venir à la législation.

Si le Comité se met à discuter du taux de base maintenant, il y aura des discussions prolongées et, très certainement, un retard avant que nous ayons une loi englobant les points contenus dans le Livre blanc et que nous avons acceptés. C'est là une décision sur laquelle les membres du comité doivent se prononcer. Nous avons entendu votre déclaration et nous connaissons votre point de vue,

Mr. Chadderton has sought to put in the record. We could go into this for some considerable time, and no doubt will, but I leave to the members of the Committee how far they want to go at this point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps we had better include the basic rate in the agenda.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions I would like very much, in the name of the Committee, to thank Mr. Lundberg, Mr. Chadderton, Mr. Woodcock, Mr. Clarke, and those who have appeared before the Committee today. I know they have very much appreciated the opportunity of hearing you and asking questions on your submission.

Mr. Lundberg: Mr. Chairman, before I go may I thank the Committee for the very kind interest and attentiveness they have shown and the co-operation they have extended to the National Council of Veteran Associations in Canada and the members that we represent. We appreciate this opportunity of coming before a Committee that so far as I can remember has never had any trouble in arranging for a quorum to be present. On behalf of the Council, I thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chadderton: May I make one final statement? In our brief we did make the comment at the start that our assessment of the White Paper indicated that less than one-half of the recommendations had been covered in the White Paper. I hope that all present understand that our assessment was based only on the information we had at that time.

The Chairman: We certainly understand that, Mr. Chadderton.

Mr. Chadderton: If, in further analysis, we find that this is not true we certainly will be most pleased to retract it.

The Chairman: I think that every organization appearing before us is in the same position that you are, and the purpose of the hearings, as I said previously, is to expand on the information that is available, in relation as much as possible to the additional recommendations. There is no meeting planned for this afternoon. The next one will be on Monday at 9:30 a.m. in this room. I hope we see you then.

[Interpretation]

ainsi que les références que M. Chadderton a cherché à consigner au compte rendu. Nous pourrions nous étendre sur cette question pendant bien longtemps encore et nous le ferons sans aucun doute mais je m'en remets aux membres du Comité de décider jusqu'à quel point ils désirent aller pour l'instant.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg Nord-Centre): Peut-être ferions-nous mieux d'inscrire le taux de base à l'ordre du jour.

Le président: S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions, il me plairait, au nom du comité, de remercier MM. Lundberg, Chadderton, Woodcock, Clarke et tout ceux qui se sont présentés aujourd'hui devant le comité. Je cais que les membres du Comité ont particulièrement apprécié la possibilité d'entendre ces personnes et de poser des questions sur le document qu'ils ont présenté.

M. Lundberg: Monsieur le président, avant de m'en aller, je voudrais remercier le Comité pour l'intérêt et l'attention dont il a fait preuve, et pour l'esprit de coopération avec lequel les députés ont écouté le Conseil national des associations d'anciens combattants du Canada et les membres que nous représentons. Nous sommes très heureux de l'occasion qui nous a été offerte de nous présenter devant un Comité qui, pour autant que je me souvienne, n'a jamais eu aucune difficulté à réunir un quorum. Au nom du Conseil, je vous remercie, monsieur le président.

M. Chadderton: Puis-je faire une seule remarque finale? Dans notre mémoire, nous avons commencé par dire que notre examen du Livre blanc indique que ce dernier ne traite que de la moitié des recommandations. J'espère que toutes les personnes présentes ont bien compris que notre examen était basé uniquement sur les renseignements que nous possédions à l'époque.

Le président: Nous avons parfaitement compris cela, monsieur Chadderton.

M. Chadderton: Si, à la lumière d'une étude plus approfondie, nous constatons que ce n'était pas exact, nous nous ferons un devoir de nous rétracter, soyez-en persuadé.

Le président: Je pense que toute organisation qui comparaît devant nous se trouve dans la même situation et le but de ces auditions, comme je l'ai dit précédemment, est de nous pencher sur les renseignements dont on dispose, en tenant compte, dans la mesure du possible, des recommandations supplémentaires.

Aucune réunion n'est prévue pour cet après-midi. Notre prochaine réunion aura

Mr. Woodcock: May I ask you one question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Woodcock.

Mr. Woodcock: The Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded is due to appear before this Committee. Do I understand we are to confine our comments just to the White Paper?

The Chairman: From the evidence today I think you can draw your own conclusions. It certainly has not been confined to the White Paper. The work of this Committee is to survey the report of the Woods Committee. What you choose to make in your submission will certainly be welcome so long as it is related to the report of the Woods Committee.

Mr. Woodcock: Thank you, sir.

lieu lundi à 9 h. 30 du matin, dans cette pièce. Nous serons heureux de vous y retrouver.

M. Woodcock: Puis-je vous poser une seule question, monsieur le président?

Le président: Oui, monsieur Woodcock.

M. Woodcock: L'Association Sir Arthur Pearson des aveugles de guerre doit se présenter devant le Comité. Dois-je comprendre que nous devrons restreindre nos commentaires au seul Livre blanc?

Le président: Je pense que les témoignages que nous avons entendus aujourd'hui vous permettront de tirer vos propres conclusions. Il ne fait aucun doute qu'ils ne sont pas limités au Livre blanc. La tâche du Comité est d'étudier le rapport du Comité Woods. Quelle que soit l'attitude que vous adopterez, elle sera certainement bien accueillie, à condition qu'elle concerne le rapport du Comité Woods.

M. Woodcock: Je vous remercie, monsieur.

The Chairman: Today we are going to hear a brief from The War Amputations of Canada, and Rev. Sydney Lambert is, I believe, the Dominion President. He will open the presentation. He tells me that other people will speak and he will introduce them in the course of the presentation.

Lt. Col. S. E. Lambert (Dominion President, The War Amputations of Canada): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Ladies and gentlemen, we, The War Amputations of Canada, first wish to express our very deep appreciation to the Chairman and members of this Committee for their generous acceptance of the proposal that the Committee should meet in advance of the commencement of the regular session of Parliament. We know that this has meant your having to leave your home constituencies where you, no doubt, have a great deal of backlog work.

It is too bad that you have to go back to your constituencies. You should be like me. I have been the president for 50 years and I am the permanent president, and you do not have to get in.

As I said, we know that this has meant your having to leave your home constituencies where you, no doubt, have a great deal of backlog work which has built up during the last session. Also, for some of you, it will have meant giving up your summer vacation.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs announced to the Dominion Convention of the War Amputations of Canada in Montreal a week ago today that some 80 per cent of the Woods Committee recommendations had been implemented, wholly or in part. Our analysis of the White Paper indicates that there are still many areas in which the War Amputations of Canada has a particular interest which have not been covered in the White Paper. This is not to say that we take issue with the statement of the Honourable, the Minister. We do consider it necessary, however, to emphasize that our membership is not at all satisfied that the philosophy and the major recommendations of the Woods Committee have been incorporated into the Government's intentions

TÉMOIGNAGES

Le lundi 22 septembre 1969

Le président: Nous entendrons aujourd'hui la lecture d'un mémoire préparé par l'Association des Amputés de guerre du Canada, dont le Révérend Sydney Lambert est, je crois, le président national, il fera la présentation. Il me dit que d'autres personnes vous adresseront la parole après vous avoir été présentées.

Le lieutenant-colonel S. E. Lambert (président national, Les Amputés de guerre du Canada): Merci, monsieur le président. Mesdames et messieurs, nous membres de l'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada, désirons d'abord exprimer notre profonde gratitude au président et aux membres du Comité pour l'accueil chaleureux qu'ils ont réservé à la proposition de réunir le Comité avant l'ouverture de la session régulière du Parlement. Nous savons qu'il a fallu pour cela que vous quittiez votre circonscription où, sans doute, des tâches importantes s'accumulent.

Il est malheureux que vous ayez à rentrer chez vous. Vous devriez faire comme moi. Je suis président depuis 50 ans, président permanent, et cela sans avoir à lutter.

Nous savons, je le répète, qu'il a fallu que vous quittiez votre circonscription où, sans doute, le travail s'est accumulé au cours de la dernière session. De plus, nous savons que quelques-uns d'entre vous ont été obligés de renoncer à leurs vacances.

Le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants a annoncé au Congrès national des amputés de guerre du Canada, tenu à Montréal il y a une semaine aujourd'hui, qu'environ 80 p. 100 des recommandations du Comité Woods ont été mises en vigueur, en totalité ou en partie. Notre étude du Livre blanc fait ressortir qu'il y a encore plusieurs domaines auxquels s'intéresse notre association qui ne sont pas mentionnés dans le Livre blanc. Nous ne contestons pas pour autant la déclaration de l'honorable Ministre. Il nous semble cependant nécessaire de souligner que nos membres ne sont pas tous d'accord sur les principes et les principales recommandations que le Comité Woods a exposés dans le Livre blanc comme reflétant les intentions du Gou-as set out in the White Paper. Therefore, we hope that this will be borne in mind as we proceed before you today.

The members of our delegation are a very formidable group of veterans. These top-bracket veterans in The War Amputations of Canada know more about pensions than anybody in Canada because nobody has made the study of pensions as we have. You remember Vic Meyer; you remember Eddie Baker. All these were the leading lights in this organization, and when we choose one we always get someone who is good.

Over here on my right is my friend Keith Butler. He comes from Kitchener, Ontario, and he is the Dominion Vice-President, and that is as far as he can get. Dominion Vice-President Keith Butler.

Then we have Mr. A. G. Lemay. Gerry, we are glad you were able to come. He is not well. We are glad to see him; he is the Honorary Dominion Secretary-Treasurer. Then there is Judge K. L. Crowell; he comes from Bridgetown, Nova Scotia. They do not make them any better than they do down in Nova Scotia. Next is Mr. S. J. Alderdice who is from Winnipeg, Manitoba. He is a Westerner.

Then we have a very fine French-speaking fellow from Quebec City, Mr. Paul Bedard. He is always on the job. Next we have a new executive. He was elected last week; he is Mr. H. Worling and he comes from Toronto, Ontario. He studies with me. We come along together because I live in Toronto.

Next we have the top man in Canada, Mr. Cliff Chadderton, the Executive Secretary of The War Amputations of Canada. If you want to know anything about the Woods Committee, ask Cliff.

If it meets with your pleasure, Mr. Chairman, we would wish to read the brief. It breaks down into a number of clearly defined sections, and we would wish to halt at the end of each section in order that we may provide clarification, answer questions, and generally discuss the matter dealt with therein.

We are pleased that we have been granted a full day before the Committee. The problems involved in the study of the Woods Report have been at the top of the priority list in the matters of this Association for, in some cases, as long as 40 years. With this background, we can perhaps be pardoned if we wish to take sufficient time to ensure that vernement. Nous espérons donc que vous en tiendrez compte au cours de nos délibérations aujourd'hui.

Notre délégation comprend un groupe important d'anciens combattants. Ces anciens combattants en savent plus que quiconque au Canada au sujet des pensions, vous savez que personne n'a étudié la question comme nous. Vous vous souvenez de Vic Meyer et d'Eddie Baker. Ils étaient les porte-bannières de notre association, nous choisissons toujours des hommes compétents.

A ma droite, voici mon ami Keith Butler, de Kitchener, Ontario; il est notre vice-président national, le plus haut poste qu'il puisse atteindre. Notre vice-président national, M. Keith Butler.

Nous avons aussi avec nous M. A. G. Lemay. Gerry, nous sommes heureux que vous ayez pu venir, sa santé nous donne quelques soucis, nous sommes heureux de le revoir; c'est le secrétaire-trésorier national honoraire. Voici ensuite M. le juge K. L. Crowell de Bridgetown, Nouvelle-Écosse. On ne saurait trouver mieux que de ces compatriotes de la Nouvelle-Écosse. Ensuite voici M. S. J. Alderdice de Winnipeg, Manitoba, qui représente l'Ouest du Canada.

Le suivant est un agréable camarade canadien-français, M. Paul Bédard de la ville de Québec. Il est toujours fidèle au poste. Voici ensuite un nouveau directeur. Il a été élu la semaine dernière; c'est M. H. Worling de Toronto, Ontario. Il étudie avec moi. Nous sommes venus ensemble car c'est là que j'habite.

Et voici notre champion, M. Cliff Chadderton, secrétaire administratif des Amputés de guerre du Canada. Si vous voulez des renseignements au sujet du Comité Woods, adressez-vous à Cliff.

Si vous nous le permettez, monsieur le président, nous ferons lecture du mémoire. Il est divisé en chapitres bien définis et, si vous le voulez bien, nous ferons une pause à la fin de chaque chapitre pour fournir des précisions, répondre aux questions et, d'une façon générale, discuter de la question en cours.

Nous sommes heureux qu'on nous ait accordé une journée entière d'audience. Les questions que soulève l'étude du rapport Woods sont celles-là même qui ont priorité auprès de notre Association depuis 40 ans, dans certains cas. Dans ces circonstances, on nous pardonnera sans doute de prendre le temps voulu pour nous assurer que le Comité the problems are fully understood by the Committee.

We should have brought a dozen lovely widows—my, I love widows—and they would have made a great impression here, would they not Cliff? We could have brought some widows in? We think more of widows than we do of ourselves.

Mr. Guay (St.Boniface): Well, there would have been more members of the Committee here, too, if they had known that you might have brought some with you.

Lt. Col. Lambert: We muffed that a bit, did we not? There were some nursing sisters too, some war nursing sisters, I married one and I know how good they are, and they would like to have been with us. We had over 500 at the convention in Montreal last week and they all wanted to come. We would have spoilt the whole city if we had brought that crowd, for they certainly wiped up Montreal. We had a wonderful time there. But I am glad to see Mr. James A. McDonald here. Mac I am glad to see you. Is that your wife with you? Oh say, she is nice! I never met her. So glad you came, the quadruple amputation—a lovely fellow.

An hon. Member: A triple.

Lt. Col. Lambert: Yes, I see he is a triple. I am glad to see you were able to come. If you feel well enough, stay with us, stick with us.

Finally, I would be remiss if I did not say that we do appreciate the forward steps being proposed by the government in the White Paper. That is just a word of greeting to you all. We are delighted to be here. The last time I was at a parliamentary committee I said that I would never come again. I said, "This is my last term", but anyway I was 83 last week so it is about time I was quitting.

I do not look 83, do I? But I had my birthday on Friday, and I am 83 years of age. You have to be good to be a Member of Parliament at 83, or even the president of the War Amputations of Canada. And so let us go on with this beautiful thing here. We do it up right, you know.

So, Keith, I think you have the first say. Would you like to hear Keith?

Mr. Keith E. Butler (Dominion Vice-President of the War Amputations of Canada): To the Chairman and Members, Standing Com-comprend bien les problèmes dont il est question.

Nous aurions dû nous faire accompagner d'une douzaine de charmantes veuves—j'aime les veuves—elles auraient créé une profonde impression ici, n'est-ce pas, Cliff? Nous aurions pu amener des veuves ici. Nous avons plus d'estime pour les veuves que pour nous-même.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Les membres du Comité auraient été en plus grand nombre, aussi, s'ils avaient su que vous seriez accompagnés.

Lt-col. Lambert: Nous avons raté notre chance, n'est-ce pas? Il y a aussi les infirmières, les infirmières de guerre, j'en ai épousé une et je connais leur valeur, elles auraient bien voulu venir. Elles étaient plus de 500 au congrès de Montréal la semaine dernière et auraient toutes aimé venir. Mais la ville aurait été submergée si nous avions amené toute cette foule, car elles ont assurément révolutionné Montréal. Nous avons eu du bon temps. Je me réjouis de voir ici M. James A. McDonald. Mac, je suis heureux de vous voir. Avez-vous votre femme à vos côtés? Elle est charmante! Je n'avais jamais eu le plaisir de la rencontrer. Je suis heureux que vous soyez ici, c'est un amputé des quatre membres—un chic gars.

Lt-col. Lambert: Oui, trois membres. Je suis heureux que vous ayez pu venir. Si vous vous sentez assez bien, restez avec nous.

Pour conclure, je ferais preuve d'ingratitude si j'oubliais de dire que nous apprécions à leur valeur les mesures progressives proposées par le gouvernement dans le Livre blanc. Nous sommes enchantés de nous trouver ici. La dernière fois que je me suis présenté devant un comité parlementaire, j'avais dit que je ne reviendrais plus. J'avais dit «C'est mon dernier mandat», mais j'ai atteint mes 83 ans la semaine dernière. Il serait donc temps que je me retire.

Je porte bien mon âge, n'est-ce pas? Mon anniversaire était vendredi, j'ai maintenant 83 ans sonnés. Il faut être solide pour être député à 83, et même président des Amputés de guerre du Canada. Passons maintenant à des affaires sérieuses. Nous faisons bien cela, vous savez.

Keith, à vous la parole. Je vous présente Keith.

M. Keith E. Butler (vice-président national de l'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada): Monsieur le président, messieurs les mittee of Veterans Affairs, House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario.

Under date of April 28, 1969 this Association forwarded a submission to members of Parliament, in which the views of our membership concerning the Woods Report on pensions were set out.

Since that time there have been two major developments which affect this submission, as follows:

(1) On April 17, 1969 the Chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission submitted a prepared statement to your committee, commenting upon the action taken by the Commission in respect of certain of the recommendations of the Woods Committee; and
(2) On September 9, 1969 the Minister of Veterans Affairs released a White Paper on Pensions.

We were notified on September 16th, 1969 that our tentative appointment to appear before your Committee on Monday, September 22nd, 1969 had been confirmed. At that time our officials were engaged in a Dominion Convention which concluded in the latter part of that week. Hence, we have had only a very short time to prepare this submission.

Notwithstanding, we do feel that we are able to bring before your Committee today some valid observations with respect to matters arising from the Woods Committee Report.

Before doing so, we would observe that the Pension Act, which covers the payment of pensions for death and disability arising out of military service, has been the subject of controversy since its inception on July 7, 1919. Since that time there have been three major examinations of the Act outside of Parliament. These were:

1922-24—The Ralston Royal Commission on Pensions and Re-establishment.
1932-33—The special committee on the Pension Act.
1965-68—The Woods Committee.

The reports of these three investigations indicated severe shortcomings in the legislation. In fact, the Woods Committee Report contains 148 recommendations, some of them breaking down into as many as 25 or 30 subrecommendations. It would seem that, if nothing else, this is a strong indication there is a great deal wrong with the Pension Act, and the way it is administered. Some im-membres du Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants, Chambre des communes, Ottawa, Ontario.

Le 28 avril 1969, la présente association a fait parvenir aux députés un mémoire afin d'exposer les opinions de ses membres au sujet du Rapport Woods sur les pensions. Depuis cette date, deux nouveaux événements importants qui touchent ce mémoire se sont produits. Ce sont les suivants:

(1) Le 17 avril 1969, le président de la Commission canadienne des pensions a présenté au comité un mémoire contenant des observations sur les mesures prises par la Commission à l'égard de certaines recommandations faites par la Commission Woods; et
(2) Le 9 septembre 1969, le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants a publié un Livre blanc sur les pensions.

On nous a informés, le 16 septembre 1969, que notre demande aux fins de témoigner devant le Comité le lundi 11 septembre 1969, avait été acceptée. A cette époque, nos directeurs assistaient à un congrès national qui s'est terminé vers la fin de la semaine. Par conséquent, nous ne disposions que de très peu de temps pour présenter ce mémoire. Toutefois, nous croyons être en mesure de transmettre aujourd'hui à votre Comité certaines observations valables en ce qui à trait aux questions soulevées dans le rapport du Comité Woods.

Avant de ce faire, nous désirons rappeler que la Loi sur les pensions, qui prévoit le versement de pensions en cas de décès ou d'invalidité consécutifs au service militaire, a fait l'objet d'une controverse depuis sa mise en vigueur, le 7 juillet 1919. Depuis cette date, on a effectué trois études importantes de cette loi en dehors du Parlement, à savoir:

La Commission royale d'enquête Ralston sur les pensions et le rétablissement, de 1922 à 1924.
Le Comité spécial sur la Loi des pensions, de 1923 à 1933.
Le Comité Woods, de 165 à 1968.

Les rapports de ces trois études ont laissé entendre que la loi présentait de sérieuses lacunes. Au fait, le Rapport du Comité Woods contient 148 recommandations, dont certaines se subdivisent en 25 ou 30 sous-recommandations. Il semblerait tout au moins que c'est là une indication sérieuse que la Loi sur les pensions est très insuffisante et que la façon dont on l'administre laisse beaucoup à désirer.

provements resulted from the first two reports. The Woods Report is still under consideration by the Government.

We were pleased, indeed, to have a statement from the Honourable Minister of Veterans Affairs, made to the opening of the business sessions of our Dominion Convention on September 16 of this year, to the effect that the White Paper does not necessarily represent the final committment of the government in regard to its intentions in respect of those matters arising out of the Woods Committee Report. As we understand the situation, the government's proposals are open to further consideration and we are pleased indeed to have the assurance that your Comimttee is in a position to recommend changes or improvements in the position as set out in the White Paper.

We wish to make one further observation in our opening statement. We trust that your Committee realizes that the only information we have had to date in respect of the government's intentions is that contained in the White Paper, together with certain oral explanations given to our officials by the Minister. We understand that the Chief Pensions Advocate of the Department of Veterans Affairs has made one or more appearances before your Committee during which appearances he has provided supplementary information in regard to implementation of the Woods Committee recommendations and/or the intentions of the government in this respect. It may be possible, therefore, that our interpretation of certain proposals in the White Paper may be incorrect; also, that some of the recommendations of the Woods Committee which we now believe to have been omitted from the White Paper are, in actual fact, either implemented, or it is proposed that they will be.

With this background of information, we would now desire to proceed to submit the views of our Association in regard to those matters arising out of the Woods Committee Report.

Lt. Col. Lambert: Harry Worling. He is taking the Basic Rate of Pension.

Mr. Harry Worling (Toronto):

Basic Rate of Pension:

It is our understanding that there may be some question as to whether this issue is properly before your Committee. In this regard we submit our belief that the basis or "formula" upon which pension is paid in Canada was within the terms of reference of Certaines améliorations ont été apportées à la suite des deux premiers rapports. Le Gouvernement étudie encore le Rapport Woods.

Nous avons été particulièrement heureux de prendre connaissance d'une déclaration de l'honorable ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, lors de l'ouverture des séances d'étude de notre congrès national, le 16 septembre dernier, à l'effet que le Livre blanc ne représentait pas nécessairement les engagements définitifs du Gouvernement à l'égard des questions soulevées dans le rapport du Comité Woods. Si nous comprenons bien la situation, les propositions du Gouvernement peuvent faire l'objet de nouvelles études, et nous sommes très heureux d'être assurés que votre Comité est en mesure de recommander des changements ou des améliorations aux politiques exposées dans le Livre blanc.

Nous désirons faire une autre observation dans notre préambule. Nous espérons que votre Comité se rend pleinement compte du fait que les seuls renseignements que nous ayons obtenus jusqu'ici sur les intentions du Gouvernement sont ceux contenus dans le Livre blanc, de même que certaines précisions communiquées oralement à nos directeurs par le ministre. Nous croyons comprendre que l'avocat en Chef des pensions du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants est venu témoigner plus d'une fois devant votre Comité, vous a communiqué des renseignements supplémentaires relatifs à l'application des recommandations du Comité Woods et l'a informé des intentions du Gouvernement à cet égard. Il se peut, par conséquent, que notre interprétation de certaines propositions contenues dans le Livre blanc soit erronée, et que certaines des recommandations du Comité Woods, que nous croyons maintenant avoir été omises dans le Livre blanc sont, en fait, appliquées, ou qu'on se propose de les appliquer. A la lumière de ces renseignements, nous désirons maintenant poursuivre l'exposition des opinions de notre association sur les questions soulevées dans le Rapport du Comité Woods.

Le lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Harry Worling. Il étudie le taux de base des pensions.

M. Harry Worling (Toronto):

Taux de base de la pension:

Nous croyons comprendre qu'il est douteux que votre Comité ait été saisi de ce problème selon les formes. A cet égard, nous sommes d'avis que le problème de la base ou «formule» selon laquelle la pension est versée, au Canada, faisait partie the Woods Committee. This belief is predicated on four factors as follows:

(1) In the introduction of the Woods Committee Report—Volume 1, Chapter 1, page 2, under the heading "Terms of Reference"—the following statement is made:

"From discussions with you—The Minister of Veterans Affairs—prior to the actual establishment of the Committee, the Chairman understood that you wanted it to be free to inquire into all phases of the operations of the Canadian Pension Commission excepting only actual rates of pension."

(2) The Department of Veterans Affairs News Release of September 16th, 1965, quoting the Minister of Veterans Affairs, stated:

"The Committee is not limited in the scope of its report, but it has been specifically instructed to study all matters relating thereto; first, the organization, methods and procedures used in the adjudication of disability and other pensions paid under the Pension Act; second, the interpretation by the Canadian Pension Commission of such sections of the Pension Act which it feels should be considered."

(3) Treasury Board Minute 645417 of September 8th, 1965 states as follows:

"The Committee, though not limited in the scope of its report, to study the organization, methods and procedures used in the adjudication of disability and other pensions paid under the provisions of the Pension Act, and to study the interpretation by the Commission of such sections of the Pension Act as it deems should be considered;"

Note: The important words in so far as whether the Woods Committee was entitled to look into the basis of the payment of pension would seem to be those which imply that, in making its report, the Committee was not to be "limited in scope".

(4) The proceedings of Committee Sessions of the Woods Committee, Volume 1, page F4, contain a letter dated January 6, 1966 written to Mr. G. K. Langford, des attributions du Comité Woods. Cette conviction est fondée sur les quatre éléments qui suivent:

(1) Dans l'introduction du Rapport du Comité Woods (Volume 1, chapitre 1, page 2, sous le titre «Attributions») il est dit ce qui suit:

(2) Le communiqué de presse du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, en date du 16 septembre 1965, citait ces paroles du ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants:

(3) Le compte rendu des délibérations du Conseil du Trésor nº 645417, en date du 8 septembre 1965, dit ce qui suit:

«Bien que cela ne doive pas restreindre la portée de son rapport, le Comité doit examiner l'organisation, les méthodes et la procédure qui gouvernent l'attribution de pensions d'invalidité et autres avantages prévus par la Loi sur les pensions, ainsi que l'interprétation que la Commission donne aux articles de la Loi sur les pensions que le Comité jugera à propos d'examiner.»

Nota: Les mots importants quant à l'habilité du Comité Woods à examiner l'attribution des pensions sembleraient être ceux qui supposent qu'en rédigeant son rapport le Comité ne doit pas être «limité quant à la portée de ce rapport».

(4) Le compte rendu des délibérations des audiences du Comité Woods, volume 1, page F4, contient une lettre du 6 janvier 1966, adressée à M. G. K. Langford, prési-

Chairman of the National Council of Veteran Associations in Canada, and signed by the Minister of Veterans Affairs dealing with the terms of reference of the Committee. This letter stated, in part:

> "Since the responsibility for amending the Act particularly if the amendments involve financial expenditures rests entirely with Parliament, the Committee can only submit such recommendations to me, with or without comment, as they see fit."

There is, in our view, still a further reason why it was necessary for the Woods Committee to deal with the basic rate of pension. It is the fact that the Woods Committee stated, in its report,—Volume 2, Chapter 13, page 476— "It would not be pertinent to its inquiry to consider the quantum of pension". The Committee did consider it necessary, however, to deal with the "basis upon which the pension is paid" particularly because of its relationship to pension for multiple disabilities.

We submit that any study of the Pension Act can be made only if consideration is given at the same time to the principle upon which the pension is paid, for the seemingly obvious reason that this principle is germane to many other issues involved in the legislation.

While not wishing to prolong this particular part of our submission, we would wish to suggest one further reason why it is pertinent for your Committee to give broad consideration not to the actual amount of money involved but certainly to the basis or "formula" upon which pension rates are devised.

We refer to the fact that in releasing copies of the White Paper to representatives of veterans organizations on September 9 last, the Minister revealed that he had under consideration a new proposal concerning the principle upon which pension can be paid under the Pension Act. There was no intimation that this matter would be referred to your Committee or that there would be an opportunity for veterans organizations to make known their views thereupon in advance of the actual legislative stages through which the proposal would progress. Perhaps it will be understandable, then, if we ask for the indulgence of your Committee in at least listening to the views of our organization regarding dent du Conseil national des associations d'anciens combattants du Canada, signée par le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, et qui traite des attributions du Comité. Cette lettre dit, en autres choses:

A notre avis, il y a une autre raison pour laquelle le Comité Woods a dû traiter du taux de base des pensions. C'est qu'il a mentionné dans son rapport, (Volume 2, chapitre 13, page 476) qu'«il ne serait pas conforme à notre mandat d'examiner les taux des pensions.» Le Comité a cependant jugé nécessaire d'examiner «la base sur laquelle sont versées les pensions», particulièrement à cause de sa relation avec la pension attribuée pour invalidités multiples.

Nous sommes d'avis que toute étude de la Loi sur les pensions n'est possible que si l'on tient compte également du principe sur lequel les pensions sont basées, pour la raison apparemment évidente que ce principe se rapporte à plusieurs autres problèmes dont il est question dans la loi.

Bien que nous n'entendions pas prolonger cette partie de notre mémoire, nous désirons signaler cependant une autre raison pour laquelle il est nécessaire que votre comité examine minutieusement, non pas le montant réel d'argent en cause, mais bien sûr, la «base» ou formule selon laquelle les taux sont établis.

Nous désirons rappeler qu'en faisant tenir des exemplaires du Livre blanc aux représentants des associations d'anciens combattants, le 9 septembre dernier, le Ministre a fait savoir qu'il étudiait une nouvelle proposition relative au principe selon lequel les pensions peuvent être versées en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions. Il n'a nullement indiqué que cette question serait déférée à votre Comité, ou que les associations d'anciens combattants auraient l'occasion d'exposer leurs vues sur le sujet avant que la proposition n'ait franchi les diverses étapes du projet de loi. On comprendra peut-être, alors que nous demandions l'indulgence de votre Comité, pour qu'il entende au moins à ce sujet les points de vue de notre this matter, which is, after all, the cornerstone of pension legislation in Canada.

May we be permitted one further observation. Perhaps the most significant statement in the White Paper, relative to pension rates, is to the effect that "The Government is undertaking an overall assessment of Federal Social Policy and Programmes and this will, of course, include further study of the Pension Act as well as many other kinds of pension plans and other measures".

This statement goes on to say that there have been far-reaching changes in Canada's social and economic environment since the pension programme was first introduced and "in particular, many useful development programmes of various kinds have meanwhile been initiated and numerous plans have evolved individually over the years, and the Government considers that the time has come to examine the entire fabric in order to achieve greater consistency between the various elements, and to eliminate unintended gaps or duplications".

The White Paper goes on to say that when the Government has completed the assessment of this undertaking, it may propose further changes in the pension programme or its administration.

Presumably this means that the Pension Act is being included in the current government studies in regard to the over-all social legislation of Canada. As part of this study, the Pension Act has been referred to the Senate Committee on Poverty.

It can perhaps be safely assumed that the basic rate will have to await the completion of these studies. In the meantime the veterans organizations will necessarily turn to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs as the one source available to it, at least for the time being, through which their views can be made known.

Commenting directly upon the current government studies in regard to social legislation, the War Amputations of Canada considers there are legal and moral grounds to object that pension should be included in any social legislation. Pension is paid as of right, in the form of compensation. It can be compared successfully with an insurance settlement, and the recipient's financial means have no bearing on his right to receive pension beneorganisation, car cette question constitue, après tout, la pierre angulaire de la législation canadiennes sur les pensions.

On nous permettra de faire une autre observation. La déclaration la plus significative, peut-être, que contient le Livre blanc, et qui a trait aux taux des pensions, dit que: «le gouvernement doit entreprendre une étude d'ensemble de la politique sociale fédérale et des programmes fédéraux, ce qui comprendra, évidemment, un examen approfondi de la Loi sur les pensions, et d'un bon nombre d'autres régimes de pensions et d'autres mesures sociales.»

Cette déclaration fait ensuite remarquer que de profonds changements des conditions sociales et économiques se sont produits au Canada depuis l'établissement du régime des pensions, et «en particulier, bon nombre de programmes de développement de divers genres ont été établis, et de nombreux régimes ont évolué individuellement au cours des années, ainsi le gouvernement est d'avis que le temps est venu d'examiner la situation dans son ensemble, en vue d'assurer plus d'uniformité dans les divers éléments, et de faire disparaître les lacunes et le double emploi.»

Le Livre blanc dit ensuite qu'une fois que le Gouvernement aura terminé l'évaluation de ce problème, il proposera peut-être de nouveaux changements au régime de pensions ou à son administration.

Cela signifie, on peut le présumer, que le Gouvernement inclura la Loi sur les pensions dans l'étude qu'il est en train d'effectuer sur l'ensemble de la législation sociale canadienne. Puisqu'elle fait partie de cette étude, la Loi sur les pensions a été déférée au Comité du Sénat sur la pauvreté.

On peut raisonnablement présumer que pour fixer les taux de base il faudra attendre que ces études soient terminées. Entre-temps, les associations d'anciens combattants s'adresseront nécessairement au Comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants, seul recours dont elles disposent, au moins à l'heure actuelle, pour faire connaître leurs points de vue: Au cours de ses observations, qui portent directement sur les études que le Gouvernement est actuellement en train de faire sur la législation sociale, l'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada est d'avis qu'il existe des arguments juridiques et moraux contre l'incorporation des pensions dans une quelconque législation sociale. La pension est versée de droit, sous forme d'indemnité. Elle peut être avantageusement com-fit. We would earnestly hope that the members of this Committee would see fit to agree with this premise.

The remarkable aspect is that although the three government enquiries (Ralston Commission, the 1932-33 Committee and the Woods Committee) pointed out many other improvements, all three suggested that the basic formula for calculating the payment of pensions should remain that of the unskilled labour market.

It is surprising, therefore, to learn that while continuing to give some consideration to the Woods Committee recommendations, the government is presumably attempting, at this late stage, to develop some new formula on which to base payment of pensions.

The Ralston Committee found a good deal of favour with the unskilled labour market in the early 1920s—and now in the late 1960s the Woods Committee reinforces this conclusion. In effect it says:

> Retain the unskilled labour market formula and tie the basic rate of pension to the lower categories of wages for male help in the Federal Civil Service—and then get on with the business of filling some of the gaping holes in the coverage for veterans and their dependents.

We sincerely believe that much of the difficulty which arises from the use of the unskilled labour market as the common denominator for establishing pension rates arises out of misunderstanding of the principles which led to its adoption. These principles are as valid today as they were in 1919—and they are:

> (1) All war disabled must be treated alike; that is to say, you do not pay a tap dancer who has lost a foot more pension than you would a bookkeeper—although, taking into account his pre-war occupation, the former may be said to have suffered the greater loss.
> (2) There should be no impediment or obstacle placed in the way of a disabled veteran who wishes to improve himself by way of training or other preparation for a peacetime occupation—and any parée au versement d'une assurance, et les ressources financières du bénéficiaire n'ont rien à voir avec son droit ouvrant à une pension. Nous souhaitons ardemment que les membres du présent Comité reconnaissent le bien-fondé de ces arguments.

Un fait intéressant à remarquer, c'est que même si les trois enquêtes du Gouvernement (La Commission royale d'enquête Ralston, la Commission de 1932-1933, et le Comité Woods) ont indiqué plusieurs autres améliorations, toutes trois ont exprimé l'avis que la formule de base servant à calculer le montant des pensions devrait demeurer celle du marché des travailleurs non spécialisés.

Il est étonnant, par conséquent, d'apprendre que tout en continuant d'accorder son attention aux recommandations du Comité Woods, on peut présumer que le gouvernement tente, à ce stade, de mettre au point une nouvelle formule devant servir de base à l'établissement du montant des pensions. La Commission Ralston avait trouvé de bonnes raisons en faveur de la formule du marché des travailleurs non spécialisés, au début des années '20—et maintenant, vers la fin des années '60, les conclusions de la Commission Woods viennent corroborer cette conclusion. Elles disent en effet:

> Que l'on maintienne la formule utilisée pour les travailleurs non spécialisés et qu'on ajuste le taux de base des pensions aux salaires des catégories inférieures d'employés masculins de la Fonction publique—puis que l'on comble certaines des lacunes du régime qui s'applique aux dépendants.

Nous croyons sincèrement qu'une bonne partie des difficultés occasionnées par l'utilisation des normes qui s'appliquent aux travailleurs non spécialisés, pour établir les taux de pensions, sont attribuables au fait qu'on a mal compris les principes qui ont motivé cette pratique. Ces principes sont aussi valables aujourd'hui qu'ils l'étaient en 1919. Ce sont les suivants:

> (1) Tous les anciens combattants invalides doivent avoir droit au même traitement; c'est-à-dire que l'on ne versera pas, par exemple, à un danceur à claquettes qui aura perdu un pied une pension supérieure à celle que l'on verserait à un teneur de livres—bien que, si l'on tient compte de la profession qu'exerçait le premier avant la guerre, on puisse dire qu'il a subi une perte plus considérable.
> (2) Aucun obstacle ne devrait empêcher en aucune façon aliéner le droit à la pen-moneys he is able to earn with the abilities which have been left to him despite his war service should not in any way affect his right to pension. In other words his pension is paid for disqualification on the unskilled labour market. If he is able to earn a living through acquired skills, using what he has left, he should not in any way be penalized therefor.

We have heard the suggestion that the unskilled labour market is no longer a feasible basis, in that Canada's labour force has changed in the past 50 years from primarily one of unskilled labour to one made up of highly technical and well-educated components. We submit that this does not change the basic premise, that is that war disability is paid for the loss of earning ability as an untrained labourer regardless of the economic or technological conditions which exist in this country.

We believe all war disability pensioners are prepared to accept this basis, provided that war disability pension at the 100 per cent rate for a single man is equivalent to earnings in the unskilled labour market. In this respect the Woods Committee recommended that the pay scales for unskilled labour in the Federal Civil Service should be used as the indicator. This principle is entirely sound and the War Amputations of Canada is in full agreement therewith.

We have heard another objection to the unskilled labour market, to the effect that firstly, it is difficult to determine the amount of money represented by wages in this class of employment and secondly, that this wage index would not lend itself to cyclical review. While it may be true that the wages for unskilled labour may be more difficult to determine than for well-defined trades in the skilled or semi-skilled categories, we suggest that the Woods Committee has provided the answer. Its findings were to the effect that at the outset, the wages for unskilled labour were taken as those of the cleaner and helper in the Public Service of Canada. Although this specific classification no longer exists, the Woods Committee's proposal is to the effect that this type of labour still exists in the Federal Government and should be used as the basis.

sion d'un ancien combattant invalide qui désire améliorer son sort par la formation ou quelque autre préparation à un métier de temps de paix—même si celui-ci obtient un revenu quelconque grâce aux capacités qui lui restent, en dépit de son service militaire. En d'autres termes, il touche sa pension en raison de son incapacité à titre de travailleur non spécialisé. S'il lui est possible de gagner sa vie grâce à des compétences acquises, et en utilisant les facultés qui lui restent, il ne devrait en aucune façon être pénalisé.

On a suggéré que le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée ne constitue plus une base appropriée, parce que d'une main-d'œuvre d'abord non spécialisée elle est devenue au cours des 50 dernières années une main-d'œuvre composée d'éléments d'une haute formation technique et bien instruite. Nous soutenons que cela ne change pas le principe de base, c'est-à-dire qu'une indemnité pour invalidité de guerre est payée à l'égard de la perte de l'aptitude à gagner sa vie en tant qu'ouvrier inexpérimenté, peu importe les conditions économiques ou technologiques qui existent dans notre pays.

Nous estimons que les titulaires d'une pension d'invalidité de guerre sont près à accepter cette base, à condition que la pension d'invalidité de guerre au taux de 100 p. 100 pour un célibataire soit égale au salaire obtenu sur le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. A cet égard, la Commission Woods a recommandé que les échelles de traitement pour la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée dans la Fonction publique servent d'indications. Le principe est tout à fait juste, et l'Association des amputés du Canada y donne son plein accord. Une autre objection a été apportée pour la question du marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée; elle veut que, d'abord, il soit difficile de déterminer le montant que représentent les salaires dans cette catégorie d'emploi et, en second lieu, que cet indice des salaires ne se prête pas à la revue cyclique. Tout en reconnaissant qu'il soit peut-être plus difficile de déterminer les salaires pour la main-d'œuvre que ceux pour les métiers bien définis dans les catégories de la main-d'œuvre spécialisée ou semi-spécialisée, nous estimons que la Commission Woods a fourni la réponse.

[Texte]

Moreover, through the Pay Classification Branch of the Public Service of Canada, the wages for this class of labour are subject to cyclical review and would therefore lend themselves to increase or decrease in accordance with pay standards throughout Canada. There seems to be no valid argument against the retention of the unskilled labour market. Therefore the War Amputations of Canada has no hesitation in supporting the views of the Woods Committee in this important area.

Although we have no way of knowing for certain, there is a strong suspicion that the desire to abandon the unskilled labour market as the basis for payment of War Disability Pension is being prompted by financial considerations. The 100 per cent pensioner is being "short-changed" at present in the amount of $970 per annum, as illustrated below:

Approximate wages for unskilled labour in the *Public Service of Canada $4,150. per annum
100 per cent War Disability Pension (single rates) $3,180. per annum
Deficiency $970. per annum
*1967 figures.

The War Amputations of Canada has had this most important matter under advisement, on an escalated basis, since 1965. In our discussions with the former Minister of Veterans Affairs and his officials, we were not given any valid reasons, to our way of thinking at least, for accepting a revised formula for the payment of pensions. The situation seems to be one very largely of economics. Throughout the years, successive governments have allowed the amount for War Disability Pensions to fall very far behind the wages in the unskilled labour market. Now the government of the day is faced with the perhaps unpleasant duty of closing this gap. We sincerely hope that it is not searching for a new formula, merely to circumvent the necessity of paying to Canada's war disabled the full pension to which they are entitled, both by implied contract and tradition. That is to say

Elle a conclu que, au départ, les salaires pour la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée ont été considérés comme étant ceux des nettoyeurs et aides dans la Fonction publique du Canada. Cette classification particulière n'existe plus, mais la proposition de la Commission Woods indique que ce genre de main-d'œuvre existe encore au sein du Gouvernement du Canada,—et devrait servir de base.

D'autre part, par l'intermédiaire de la Direction de la Classification de la paye de la Fonction publique du Canada, les salaires pour cette classe de main-d'œuvre sont assujettis à la revue cyclique et se prêteraient donc à une augmentation ou à une diminution selon les normes de traitement par tout le Canada. Il ne semble y avoir aucun argument valable contre le maintien du marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. L'Association des amputés du Canada n'hésite donc aucunement à appuyer la Commission Woods dans cet important secteur. Nous ne pouvons en être certains, mais nous soupçonnons fortement que le désir d'abandonner le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée comme base du paiement de la pension d'invalidité de guerre s'inspire de considérations d'ordre financier. Le pensionné à 100 p. 100 reçoit actuellement un montant en moins de $970 par année, comme il est indiqué ci-dessous:

Salaires approximatifs pour la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée dans la *Fonction publique au Canada $4,150 par année.
Pension d'invalidité de guerre de 100 p. 100 (taux de célibataire) $3,180 par année
Manque $970 par année
*Chiffres de 1967.

Depuis 1965, l'Association des amputés du Canada étudie cette très importante question de façon accélérée. Lors de nos entretiens avec l'ancien ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants et ses fonctionnaires, nous n'avons reçu aucune raison valable, du moins c'est là notre avis, pour accepter une formule modifiée pour le paiement des pensions. La situation est, en grande partie, une question d'ordre économique. Au cours des années, les gouvernements successifs ont accepté que le montant versé pour les pensions d'invalidité de guerre se prenne du retard sur les salaires versés au marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. Le gouvernement actuel se trouve maintenant devant la tâche peut-être désagréable de supprimer cet écart. Nous espérons sincèrement qu'il ne tente pas de trouver une nouvelle formule dans le but de circonvenir la nécessité de the amount of earnings in the unskilled labour market.

In essence, any attempt now to devise a new yardstick would fail to take into account the contract under which members of the Armed Forces exposed themselves to danger during time of war. They were prepared to accept the fact that, if they were killed or disabled, their pension would be based on a common denominator, for example, that of the unskilled worker. Payment of pension now at a rate any less than wages for this type of employment would be breaking faith with those who offered their lives so that this country could continue to prosper in its democratic traditions. Prosper it has, and those who made this prosperity possible should not be denied a just share in the prosperity, because of the fact that their wartime sacrifices have left them with the disabilities they proudly bear.

I will now refer also to appendix "A"—The Pension Crisis 1969—unless there are questions Mr. Chairman.

Lt. Col. Lambert: If it is all right with you sir, we will have Keith Butler read this appendix.

The Chairman: You would like to have the appendix read before questions begin?

Lt. Col. Lambert: Yes.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Butler: The Pension Crisis, 1969 would closely tie in with the submission just read.

The Pension Crisis—1969

The basic rate of pension is now $3,180. per annum for a 100 per cent pensioner. It seems very obvious that this basic rate has been allowed to lag very considerably behind what might be termed earnings in the unskilled labour market.

A history of pension increases shows that in 1919 the amount provided under the Pension Act was $720. a year. This was the equivalent of the amount paid to the Cleaner and Helper in the Federal Civil Service. The amount was increased in 1920 to $900. and no further increase was made until 1948 when the basic rate of pension became $1,128. Subsequent increases were as follows:

verser aux Canadiens qui sont atteints d'une invalidité de guerre toute la pension à laquelle ils ont droit, tant par contrat tacite que par tradition. C'est-à-dire équivalent au montant des gains dans le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée.

En fait, toute tentative actuelle en vue de trouver une nouvelle norme ne tient compte du contrat en vertu duquel les membres des Forces armées se sont exposés aux dangers en temps de guerre. Ils étaient prêts à accepter le fait que s'ils étaient tués ou s'ils devenaient invalides, leur pension serait fondée sur un dénominateur commun, soit le salaire de l'ouvrier non spécialisé. Payer une pension maintenant à un taux inférieur au salaire versé pour ce genre d'emploi serait manquer de parole envers ceux qui ont risqué leur vie pour que leur pays puisse propérer, et ceux qui ont rendu cette propérité possible ne devraient pas s'en voir refuser l'accès du fait que leurs sacrifices consentis en temps de guerre les ont laissés avec des invalidités dont ils sont fiers. Prière de se reporter également à l'appendice «A»—La crise des pensions de 1969, sauf s'il y a des questions, monsieur le président.

Le lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Si vous le permettez, monsieur, je demanderais à M. Keith Butler de lire cette annexe.

Le président: Vous préférez qu'on fasse la lecture de l'annexe avant de passer aux questions?

Le lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Oui.

Le président: Bien.

M. Butler: La Crise des pensions, 1969 ferait parfaitement suite au mémoire qu'on vient de lire.

LA CRISE DES PENSIONS

Le taux de base des pensions est présentement de $3,180 par année pour un pensionné dont l'invalidité atteint 100 p. 100. Il semble évident que ce taux de base accuse un retard très considérable sur ce qu'il conviendrait d'appeler la rémunération de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée sur le marché du travail.

Le chronologie de l'augmentation des pensions fait ressortir qu'en 1919 le montant prévu en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions était de $720 par année. Ce montant était équivalent à ce que recevaient les nettoyeurs et les aides dans la Fonction publique. Le montant a été porté à $900 en 1920 et aucune autre augmentation n'a été accordée jusqu'en 1948 lorsque le taux de base des pensions a été porté à $1,128. Les augmentations subséquentes se lisent comme il suit:

[Texte]

1951—$1,500.
1961—$2,160.
1964—$2,400.

The Cleaning Serviceman in the Public Service of Canada is, we now believe, rated at approximately $4,152. per annum. Hence, the gap between the original basis of war disability pension and the equivalent being earned by unskilled labour in the Federal Civil Service is $972. per year. The flaw in the existing situation is that a 100 per cent pension should represent accurately the earnings of the unskilled labourer, using the original comparison, that of the Cleaner and Helper in the Federal Civil Service. We understand that this was the recommendation of the Woods Committee and our association supports this fully.

Admittedly this would mean the necessity to bring pensions, at the basic rate, to $4,152 a year—a decision which the government may find difficult to take. This association would point out, however, that this is the penalty which must be paid for not having kept pensions in line, over the years, with the cost of living and other factors which go into the compilation of the earnings of the Cleaner and Helper in the Federal Civil Service.

A series of insufficient pension increases, going back before World War II, brought about the present situation. It can now be rectified in only one way—that is, for the government to stand firm on its promise that 100 per cent pension would be based on the earnings in the unskilled labour market.

This association is aware, of course, that the Prime Minister has announced an "anti-inflation" policy. He did, at the same time, state very clearly that one of the objectives of this policy was to assist the pensioner who must, of necessity, subsist on a fixed income.

It is obvious that anti-inflationary measures will be of benefit to this group of pensioners. However, it is essential, in the first instance, that the pension be brought up to a reasonable level before being subjected to a "freeze". In other words, if the war disability pension could be raised to somewhere near the $4,152 per annum and then "locked in" to be adjusted only in accordance with fluctuations in the cost of living, the anti-inflationary measures would of course assist the pensioner very

Les préposés au nettoyage dans la Fonction publique du Canada sont payés, croyons-nous, quelque $4,152 par année. Par conséquent, l'écart entre la base initiale de la pension d'invalidité résultant du service et l'équivalent que gagne un manœuvre non spécialisé dans la Fonction publique du Canada est de $972 par année. Le défaut dans la présente situation est qu'une pension de 100 p. 100 devrait correspondre exactement à la rémunération d'un manœuvre non spécialisé, en utilisant la comparaison initiale, celle d'un nettoyeur et aide dans la Fonction publique. On nous a donné à entendre que c'est ce qu'a recommandé le Comité Woods et notre association lui accorde son appui entier.

Évidemment, cela signifie qu'il faudrait accroître les pensions, au taux de base, à $4,152 par année—une décision que le gouvernement pourra trouver difficile à prendre. Notre association souligne cependant que c'est la sanction pour ne pas avoir maintenu les pensions, au cours des années, au niveau du coût de la vie et d'autres facteurs qui servent à établir la rémunération des nettoyeurs et des aides dans la Fonction publique.

Une série de hausses insuffisantes de pension, qui précèdent la deuxième guerre mondiale, a amené la présente situation. On peut maintenant y remédier d'une seule façon—le gouvernement doit honorer sa promesse et établir la pension d'invalidité de 100 p. 100 sur la rémunération de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisé sur le marché du travail.

Notre association est au courant, assurément, que le premier ministre a annoncé une politique «anti-inflationniste». Il a, par la même occasion, déclaré explicitement qu'un des objectifs de cette politique est d'aider le pensionné qui doit, par nécessité, subsister à même un revenu fixe.

Il est évident que les mesures anti-inflationnistes seront à l'avantage de ce groupe de pensionnés. Cependant, il faut, au premier chef, que la pension soit portée à un niveau raisonnable avant d'être «gelée». En d'autres termes, si la pension d'invalidité résultant du service pouvait être haussée à environ $4,152 par année et, par la suite, soumise à des rectifications seulement en fonction des fluctuations du coût de la vie, les mesures anti-inflationnistes aideraient alors considérablement le greatly. If, however, the anti-inflationary measures are applied as a means of preventing an increase in pension to the $4,152 level (where it should have been since 1967, in comparison with the Cleaning Serviceman) the war disability pensioner is being severely penalized. These anti-inflationary measures would be fair, only if they were applied to all categories of income in a standard or uniform way. However, where because of circumstances, the amount of war disability pension was considerably below where it should have been at the date that the anti-inflationary measures were announced, there is only one equitable means of dealing with the situation. That is, to bring pensions to reasonable levels AND THEN freeze them in their proper bracket in comparison with earnings in the unskilled labour market.

The Chairman: Lt. Col. Lambert, I have not interrupted but I do feel obliged at this point to put a caution on the record. The Terms of Reference of this Committee, in my opinion, certainly do not cover those matters in the appendix that you have read here today. We will have to have advice on the points that you have raised. This is not the first time these points have been raised. However, there is certainly a considerable doubt in my mind how far the Committee can go in dealing with the question of the basic rate of pension, and I think the problem of relating this to current anti-inflationary measures is clearly beyond the possibility of the Committee making recommendations.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am not so sure, Mr. Chairman, what you mean. Is it because this is not included in the Woods Report, or are you suggesting that this does not fall within what we are supposed to be considering at the moment? Could we not consider part of their representation?

The Chairman: I have not excluded anything, I have simply cautioned the people presenting the brief before us in terms of what their expectation might be of what this Committee could do.

I am simply putting a caution on the record as clearly as I know how because I think there is good reason to believe that if we had a report dealing at any length with the issues, pensionné. Cependant, si les mesures anti-inflationnistes sont mises en vigueur comme moyen d'empêcher une hausse des pensions à $4,152, (niveau qu'elles auraient dû atteindre en 1967, comparaison faite avec les nettoyeurs) le pensionné souffrant d'invalidité de service se trouve gravement pénalisé. Ces mesures anti-inflationnistes ne seraient équitables que si elles s'appliquaient à toutes les catégories de revenus d'une façon uniforme. Cependant, si, à cause des circonstances, le montant de la pension d'invalidité est très inférieur à ce qu'il aurait dû être le jour où les mesures anti-inflationnistes ont été annoncées, il n'y a qu'un moyen équitable de régler la situation. C'est-à-dire, porter les pensions à un niveau raisonnable ET ALORS les geler à leur palier approprié en regard de la rémunération sur le marché de la main-d'œuvre non-spécialisée.

Le président: Je n'ai pas voulu vous interrompre, M. Lambert, mais je crois qu'il est de mon devoir de faire une mise en garde. Je suis d'avis que le mandat de notre Comité n'englobe définitivement pas les questions soulevées dans l'appendice dont vous nous avez donné lecture aujourd'hui. Il nous faudra nous renseigner sur les points dont vous avez parlé. Ce n'est pas la première fois que ces questions sont soulevées. Il existe toutefois un grand doute dans mon esprit et je me demande jusqu'où le Comité peut pousser l'étude de la question des taux de base des pensions. Je crois que vouloir lier cette question aux mesures anti-inflationnistes présentement mises en application n'entre pas dans le cadre des recommandation que pourrait faire le Comité.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Monsieur le président, je ne suis pas trop sûr du sens de vos paroles. Est-ce parce que le Rapport Woods n'en fait pas mention ou parce que vous êtes d'avis que ces choses n'entrent pas dans le cadre de la question qui nous occupe présentement? Ne pourrions-nous pas étudier une partie de leur représentation?

Le président: Je n'ai pas voulu exclure quoi que ce soit. J'ai simplement prévenu les gens qui ont présenté le mémoire de ce à quoi ils peuvent s'attendre de la part de notre Comité.

Je tiens simplement à faire une mise en garde aussi claire que possible, parce que, à mon sens, nous avons toutes les raisons de croire que, si nous soumettons un rapport traitant d'une manière assez élaborée de questions comme celles que contient l'appendice, raised because the Terms of Reference of the Committee are delegated to us by Parliament and we cannot go beyond them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, the other day you made it clear that you had not yet given a ruling.

The Chairman: I feel obliged, however, to put a caution in the record as I did the other day, Mr. Knowles. I think you recall I did the same thing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think you may have merit on your side when you refer to what this Committee can recommend. It seems to me that in view of the references in the Woods Report itself to the basic rates, and in view of the references made by the Minister, our witnesses should not be precluded from making references. As I say, you may be privileged...

The Chairman: Mr. Knowles, I have not precluded anyone from making references, nor did I prevent them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As long as they do not feel that you have, I am satisfied.

The Chairman: How could I possibly? They have read the whole section into the transcript of the proceedings. But I do feel obliged, in good faith, to put a caution on the record in terms of what they might reasonably expect us to do at this point.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are trying to convey to us that we are restricted in this particular regard, and I feel the whole punch line of their report this far is to bring that particular point to our attention. This puts me somewhat ill at ease, because I think they have a very good point.

The Chairman: There is no disputing the merits of that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Because of the restriction placed by the Prime Minister at the moment.

The Chairman: I think that the Committee will have to have further guidance on this point, and we will have to ask for a very specific interpretation as to what we can do.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Well, even with the point that you have raised, Mr. Chairman, on en appellera au règlement car le mandat du Comité nous est confié par le Parlement et nous ne pouvons l'outrepasser.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Vous avez nettement déclaré l'autre jour, monsieur le président, que vous n'aviez pas encore rendu votre décision.

Le président: Je crois toutefois qu'il est de mon devoir de faire une mise en garde, tout comme je l'ai fait l'autre jour. Je crois, M. Knowles, que vous vous en rappelez.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je crois que vous avez droit à nos éloges quand vous rappelez les recommandations que peut faire notre Comité. Il me semble que, vu les rappels au sujet des taux de base que l'on fait dans le Rapport Woods lui-même, et étant donné les déclarations faites par le ministre, nos témoins ne devraient pas être empêchés de traiter de ces questions. Comme je l'ai dit, vous avez le privilège...

Le président: Je n'ai ni écarté ni empêché qui que ce soit de faire des déclarations, M. Knowles.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Aussi longtemps qu'on croira la chose, ça me va.

Le président: Comment la chose se pourrait-elle? On a pu lire la section complète dans le compte rendu des délibérations. Je me crois cependant obligé de bonne foi de faire une mise en garde relativement à ce dont on peut raisonnablement s'attendre de la part du Comité sur ce point.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Vous essayez de nous convaincre que nous sommes limités quant à ce point. Pour moi, je crois que toute la force de frappe du rapport jusqu'à maintenant a été de porter ce point particulier à notre attention. Cela me met en quelque sorte mal à l'aise, parce que, à mon avis, les témoins apportent un très bon point.

Le président: Il n'est pas question d'en disputer les mérites.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Étant donné les restrictions imposées actuellement par le premier ministre...

Le président: Je crois que le Comité aura besoin de nouvelles directives à ce sujet. Il nous faudra une interprétation claire des attributions qui sont les nôtres.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Même en tenant compte du point que vous avez soulevé, mon-

I think that we should proceed anyway to hear them.

The Chairman: There were some questions. Mr. MacRae had one or two questions.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Go ahead Mr. MacRae.

Mr. MacRae: It was an observation perhaps, Mr. Chairman, more than a question. But I come back to page 3 which Mr. Butler read. May I say before I go on that I am sure the Committee would concur completely. This is a magnificently written brief. There is no question of that. We hear many briefs, or read many briefs, and this is an excellent one.

Coming back to page 3 which Mr. Butler read, he touched on a point that I raised the other day and I want to come back to that point that I raised as to what is being implemented or what is the government's intention to implement. Mr. Butler brought this up, and he says:

> We understand that the Chief Pensions advocate of the Department of Veterans Affairs had made one or more appearances before your Committee, during which he has provided supplementary information in regard to implementation of the Woods committee recommendations and/or the intentions of the Government in this respect.

As you recall, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ward at that point said that he would prepare a document in which he would number the recommendations of the Woods Report, one to 148, and beside each one he would indicate whether or not it was accepted or rejected, or accepted in part and so on. And of course, what that document will reveal is that it is very different from the White Paper as such because the White Paper touched on certain points and then other points were not touched at all. So especially in the document presented by the Canadian Legion, they rightly said there is no reference in the White Paper to, say, Recommendation No. 80, which is one that I picked out. I am saying all of this perhaps for the benefit of these gentlemen who were not here to hear the evidence, and we do not yet have our transcript. But we are getting it in a day or two and then it will be very helpful.

The point I wanted to raise is this. Mr. Ward indicated that the government was accepting, in whole or in part, certain recomsieur le président, je suis d'avis que nous devons tout de même aller de l'avant et entendre les témoins.

Le président: Les membres auraient-ils des questions à poser? M. MacRae avait une ou deux questions.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Allez-y, M. MacRae.

M. MacRae: Il s'agit peut-être plus d'une observation, monsieur le président, que d'une question. En ce qui a trait à la page 3 du mémoire dont M. Butler nous a donné lecture, puis-je dire tout de suite que le Comité lui accordera certes tout son appui. Il s'agit ici d'un mémoire très bien conçu, la chose ne fait aucun doute. On nous a présenté bien des mémoires. Nous en avons lu plusieurs; celui-ci est un excellent document.

Pour revenir à la page 3 du mémoire de M. Butler, on y traite d'un point que j'ai soulevé l'autre jour et je tiens à y revenir pour savoir ce qui a été fait dans ce domaine et quelles sont les intentions futures du Gouvernement à cet égard. M. Butler a abordé la question quand il a déclaré:

> «Nous comprenons que l'avocat en chef des pensions du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants a témoigné une fois ou deux devant notre Comité et il nous a donné des renseignements supplémentaires touchant la mise en vigueur des recommandations du Comité Woods et des intentions du Gouvernement à cet égard.

Vous vous rappelez, monsieur le président, que M. Ward a déclaré à ce sujet qu'il préparerait un document relatif aux 148 recommandations du Rapport Woods, et qu'il indiquerait, en regard de chacune d'elles, si oui ou non, elle avait été acceptée ou rejetée, ou encore acceptée en partie et ainsi de suite. La teneur du document, la chose va de soi, sera très différente de celle du Livre blanc comme tel, car ce dernier touche certains points et en laisse certains autres complètement dans l'ombre. Tout particulièrement, le document présenté par la Légion canadienne, déclare à juste titre que le Livre blanc ne fait aucune mention de la recommandation n° 80, et c'est de celle-là que je veux parler. Je dis ces choses pour le bénéfice de ces messieurs qui n'étaient pas ici pour entendre les témoignages. Nous n'avons pas encore notre exemplaire, mais nous l'aurons dans un jour ou deux et il nous aidera grandement.

Le point que je tiens à souligner est celui-ci: M. Ward a fait observer que le gouvernement acceptait en tout ou en partie cermendations. Mr. Chairman, I say to you we do not doubt Mr. Ward's ability or his position, which is that of Acting Chief Pensions Advocate. Can we rest assured, can all of these veterans rest assured, and can we as a Committee, every one of us—because we are all interested, that is why we are here, we are all deeply interested—be assured that when Mr. Ward said Recommendation No. 80 is accepted, then it is accepted and that we can count that at this session, preferably of this highest legislative body in our nation, that recommendation will be translated into legislation? I hope I have made myself clear.

• 1025

The Chairman: The only comment I would like to make is that we are free to call witnesses at the discretion of the Committee, including the Deputy Minister who has appeared. The Minister himself would come back if it was the wish of the Committee. The testimony of witnesses should certainly be taken at face value.

The witnesses are being called in their official capacity and I do not think there is any question, or any reason to believe otherwise, that the statements which are made before us represent the policy of the Department. But if there is any question or doubt in the mind of any member of the Committee, I suggest we make a note of it and there will be opportunities before we conclude our deliberations to put further questions to members of the Department.

Mr. MacRae: I was just perhaps following that point, and I do not want to belabour it. Mr. Ward's position is, as you know of course, Acting Chief Pensions Advocate. He is now Chief Pensions Advocate, the Clerk of the Committee tells me. I presume that Mr. Ward is speaking with the full authority of the government of this country when he tells us that a recommendation is accepted.

The Chairman: That is quite a responsibility to put on Mr. Ward's shoulders. Generally speaking, as the Deputy Minister indicated, Mr. Ward would be prepared to present testimony in this area. Mr. Ward may want to add perhaps to what he has said, but generally speaking the testimony of official witnesses called before the Committee should be taken at face value, for what it is. When a witness indicates that this is policy, I believe, to the best of my knowledge, that this is policy.

taines recommandations. Je dois dire, monsieur le président, que nous avons confiance en la compétence de M. Ward, titulaire du poste d'avocat en chef suppléant des pensions. Les membres du Comité, comme les anciens combattants d'ailleurs, peuvent-ils compter, nous sommes tous intéressés à cette question car c'est la raison pour laquelle nous sommes ici—il n'y a aucun doute—que, lorsque M. Ward dit que la recommandation n° 80 est acceptée, il n'y a plus à en douter? Nous pouvons donc être assurés qu'au cours de la prochaine session du parlement, la plus haute autorité du pays, la recommandation prendra forme de loi. La chose est claire, du moins, je l'espère.

Le président: Le seul commentaire que j'aimerais formuler c'est qu'il est loisible au Comité de convoquer les témoins qu'il veut entendre y compris le sous-ministre qui a déjà témoigné. Le ministre lui-même pourrait revenir devant le Comité, si celui-ci le veut. Les déclarations doivent certes être prises au pied de la lettre.

Les témoins sont convoqués en tant que titulaires du poste qui est le leur, la chose ne fait aucun doute. Nous avons toutes les raisons de croire que les déclarations faites devant le Comité représentent la politique du ministère. S'il existe des points d'interrogation ou des doutes chez les membres du Comité, je vous invite à noter la chose et vous aurez l'occasion de poser d'autres questions aux représentants du ministère avant que ne prennent fin les délibérations.

M. MacRae: C'était là justement le point que je voulais souligner, je n'élaborerais pas davantage. Le poste qu'occupait M. Ward était celui d'avocat en chef suppléant des pensions . . . le secrétaire du Comité me fait observer qu'il est maintenant avocat en chef des pensions. Je présume que M. Ward est autorisé à parler au nom du Gouvernement de notre pays quand il nous dit qu'une recommandation est acceptée.

Le président: C'est toute une responsabilité que vous placez sur les épaules de M. Ward. Comme l'a souligné le sous-ministre, M. Ward serait prêt à témoigner à ce sujet. Peut-être voudrait-il ajouter quelque chose à sa déposition. En règle générale, les dépositions des témoins officiels que le Comité convoque doivent être prises au pied de la lettre. Quand un témoin déclare que c'est là la politique suivie, je crois qu'il faut ajouter fois à son témoignage.

[Text]

Mr. MacRae: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That will be satisfactory for the moment at least. I may be pursuing that at a future time, but I do thank you for your explanation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think we have to assume that until the Bill is placed before Parliament. If the Bill does not include the things that Mr. Ward said would be there, then you would have something to say.

The Chairman: And not everything calls for legislation, either. Part of it is only a matter of administrative interpretation in many cases. Mr. Whicher.

Mr. Whicher: I certainly agree with, I think, all of what has been read this morning and I am not sure that perhaps this question should be asked, but I think it has to be asked—the cost. Could the people who presented the brief tell us what it would cost to bring the basic rate from $3,180 to the figure of $4,152 that they suggest for the whole of Canada, to bring this figure to that one?

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton.

Mr. Chadderton: I would assume, Mr. Chairman, that it would be approximately 30 per cent of the present pension bill, assuming that this would apply across the board. But I would point out that we felt it was necessary to touch upon rates here, although it is not the chief matter at issue at the moment with us. The chief matter is the formula on which pensions are paid.

Having said that, if the government accepts the unskilled labour market formula and uses 1967 figures of $4,150, it would work out at approximately 30 per cent of the present pension bill. I prefer not to say, as somebody else would know the exact figure more than I would, but it is a healthy amount. And this is why, Mr. Chairman, we thought today that we had to bring before you the formula rather than the amount of money. We read the appendix on the crisis in pensions into the record because we felt it was ancillary to what we were saying, but it is not the main point.

The Chairman: Mr. Whicher, if you wanted an answer, Mr. Anderson is here, and Mr. Anderson I am sure would be perhaps the best qualified person in this room to answer that question. Do you want to ask him later, or do you want to have it now?

[Interpretation]

M. MacRae: Merci, monsieur le président. Ce sera suffisant, pour le moment du moins. Il se peut que je revienne plus tard sur le sujet. Je vous remercie de votre explication.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je crois que nous devons assumer qu'il en est ainsi tant que le projet de loi ne sera pas déposé devant le Parlement. S'il arrivait qu'il ne renferme pas les choses qu'a indiquées M. Ward, vous auriez alors quelque chose à dire.

Le président: Tout n'est pas matière à législation. Dans bien des cas, il arrive qu'une partie ne soit qu'une question d'interprétation administrative. M. Whicher.

M. Whicher: Je suis certes d'accord avec tout ce qu'on a dit ce matin. Je ne suis pas certain si je devrais poser ma question, mais je crois qu'elle s'impose. Il s'agit du coût. Est-ce que ceux qui ont présenté le mémoire pourraient nous dire combien il en coûterait si le taux de base était porté de $3,180 à $4,152, et que ce taux soit applicable à travers tout le Canada?

Le président: M. Chadderton.

M. Chadderton: Je suis d'avis, messieur le président, que les déboursés actuels pour la pension seraient majorés de 30 p. 100, à supposer que le taux proposé s'applique dans tout le Canada. J'aimerais souligner que nous avons cru nécessaire de mentionner le taux, bien que ce ne soit pas, à notre avis, la question présentement en litige. Ce qui importe en premier lieu, c'est la formule de paiement des pensions.

Ceci dit, si le gouvernement accepte la formule du marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée et emprunte les données de 1967, soit $4,150, cela équivaudrait approximativement à une hausse de 30 p. 100 des déboursés actuels pour les pensions. Je préfère ne pas en dire un mot. Quelqu'un d'autre pourrait être plus au courant que moi du chiffre exact, mais je sais qu'il s'agit d'une somme fort imposante. Voilà pourquoi nous avons cru, monsieur le président, devoir mentionner la formule plutôt que le montant d'argent en cause. Nous avons lu dans l'annexe l'exposé officiel de la dispute présente touchant la question de la pension, parce que nous estimons la chose accessoire à la question débattue, mais ce n'est pas le point principal.

Le président: Si vous désirez obtenir une réponse, M. Whicher, M. Anderson, ici présent est, j'en suis sûr, la personne toute désignée pour vous répondre. Voulez-vous le questionner plus tard ou aimeriez-vous le faire tout de suite?

Mr. Whicher: I would like to have an answer, but I wanted the witness to answer one thing more. Up to the moment you were referring strictly to pensions. We have not discussed war veterans allowance, for example. This is strictly a suggestion that it be 30 per cent of the pension paid. Is that right?

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton.

Mr. Chadderton: My figure would be approximately $55 million per annum to tag

• 1030

30 per cent on to your present pension bill. I stand to be corrected by the experts, but that is...

Mr. Whicher: But this does not include any additional for war veterans allowance at all.

Mr. Chadderton: Oh, no. We are dealing only, Mr. Chairman, with pensions in this hearing.

Mr. Whicher: I thought that was true, but I wanted to clarify it.

The Chairman: Mr. Turner and Mr. Guay had their hands up.

Mr. Turner (London East): The veterans associations of Canada would be satisfied if this was done, a 30 per cent raise.

Mr. Chadderton: I can say this, Mr. Turner, that the veterans associations of Canada have met jointly on four occasions and they have endorsed the Woods Committee proposal. The only thing that might affect this is that we were using the 1967 figures. However, I am not going to back off. Speaking personally, and I think on behalf of our delegation, I would say that the War Amputations of Canada would certainly accept it.

Mr. Turner (London East): There is a hospital in my riding and I know what the veterans went through; I have talked to many of them. I have always believed that all pensions should have a cost-of-living bonus tied to them, so if the cost-of-living goes up automatically the pension goes up. Thank you.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My question is to ask the delegation if this particular matter is basically the most important and you did answer Mr. Whicher, I believe that it was not. Could you give me priorities? I know we have

[Interprétation]

M. Whicher: J'aimerais avoir une réponse, mais je désirerais poser une autre question au témoin. Jusqu'à maintenant, nous nous en sommes tenus exclusivement à la question de la pension. Nous n'avons pas parlé, entre autres, des allocations aux anciens combattants. En ce qui a trait à la hausse de 30 p. 100 du coût des pensions, est-ce que la chose est exacte?

Le président: Monsieur Chadderton.

M. Chadderton: J'ai calculé qu'il faudrait dépenser 55 millions de dollars par année pour ajouter 30 p. 100 à votre facture actuelle des pensions. Que les spécialistes me corrigent si je fais erreur, mais c'est...

M. Whicher: Mais ce chiffre ne comprend aucun supplément pour les allocations aux anciens combattants.

M. Chadderton: Certes non. Monsieur le président, à la présente séance nous nous occupons uniquement de pensions.

M. Whicher: C'est ce que je pensais, mais je voulais le confirmer.

Le président: Messieurs Turner et Guay ont levé la main.

M. Turner (London-est): Une augmentation de 30 p. 100, voilà qui contenterait les associations canadiennes d'anciens combattants, si elle était adoptée

M. Chadderton: Je puis vous dire, monsieur Turner, que les associations canadiennes des anciens combattants se sont toutes réunies à quatre reprises et ont approuvé la proposition du Comité Woods. Le seul élément qui puisse changer le tableau est que nous utilisons les chiffres de 1967. Néanmoins, je ne vais pas faire machine arrière. Parlant en mon nom et en celui de notre délégation, je dirai que les Amputés de guerre accepteraient volontiers cette augmentation.

M. Turner (London-est): Il y a un hôpital dans mon comté et je sais ce qu'ont pu traverser les anciens combattants en fait d'épreuves. J'ai causé avec plusieurs d'entre eux. J'ai toujours cru que toutes les pensions devraient être accompagnées d'une indemnité de vie chère de sorte que si l'indice monte, automatiquement la pension monte. Merci.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Je demandais à la délégation si cette question est essentiellement la plus importante et vous avez répondu, monsieur Whicher, sauf erreur, que ce ne l'était pas. Veuillez m'énumérer vos not finished your brief but what is the most important one you would have? Let us say, if you were on priorities, if we were to give you those priorities, let us say one every week, which one would you say is the most important?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I think the most important one to our particular organization would have to be the one dealing with multiple disabilities, but again there is no quick answer. We have a man in Montreal, for instance, who was shot down in a training accident in an aircraft. He reaches age 55 this month and I am sure the most important recommendation in the Woods Committee Report to him is automatic age increase. We have the case of a widow who remarried and she did not come within the present five year limitation of the Act. I am sure the most important recommendation in the Woods Committee to her is that compassionate pension should be broadened to apply in her case. It is a very difficult question for anyone to answer at the moment, I think, but to put my finger on one I would say multiple disabilities.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Kohaly, who was here the other day was asked for priorities and he gave three. I think I remember the order or at least the three were the basic rate, the multiple disabilities and the procedures.

Mr. Chadderton: The appeal board, sir.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes. I think he was in a sense speaking for all of the veterans' organizations.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, I think if I were speaking for all veterans' organizations today I would agree. With regard to the War Amputations of Canada we have some specific problems that our people are specifically interested in. Also we have endorsed the whole report and anything that Mr. Kohaly said he was speaking for us, sir.

Mr. Whicher: I have another supplementary. Some of these things are most difficult and certainly as far as I am concerned I am completely on the veterans' side. However, I feel, Mr. Chairman, that when it is pointed out the basic rate is now $3,180 and when we premiers objectifs. Je sais que nous n'avons pas épuisé votre exposé, mais quelle est votre objectif le plus prioritaire? Supposons que nous discutions de cette question; si nous vous donnions ces objectifs, disons un par semaine, lequel jugeriez-vous le plus important?

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, je crois que le plus important pour notre association en particulier serait celui qui a trait aux invalidités multiples, mais nous savons que la réponse ne se donne pas rapidement. Ainsi, nous avons à Montréal un homme qui s'est fait descendre d'un avion par une arme à feu durant un exercice. Il aura 55 ans ce mois-ci, et je sais que la plus importante recommandation que contienne pour lui le rapport du Comité Woods est l'augmentation automatique de la pension avec l'âge. Il y a le cas de la veuve qui s'est remariée et qui ne jouit pas de l'actuelle limite de cinq ans prévue par la loi. Je suis sûr que pour elle la recommandation la plus importante du Comité Woods est l'élargissement, dans son cas, de la pension de commisération. La réponse à votre question n'est pas facile, mais je pense que s'il fallait mentionner un objectif de première importance, je citerais les invalidités multiples.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Monsieur Kohaly, qui était parmi nous l'autre jour, a parlé de trois objectifs prioritaires lorsque la question lui fut posée. Si je ne me souviens pas dans quel ordre il les a nommés, je dirais tout de même qu'il a parlé des taux de pension, des invalidités multiples et des procédures.

M. Chadderton: Le Bureau d'appel, monsieur.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Oui, dans un certain sens, je crois qu'il parlait pour toutes les organisations d'anciens combattants.

M. Chadderton: Oui, si je parlais au nom de toutes les organisations d'anciens combattants aujourd'hui, je serais de cet avis. Quant aux Amputés de guerre du Canada, nous avons des problèmes particuliers qui intéressent spécifiquement nos gens. De plus, nous avons donné notre appui au rapport tout entier et tout ce qu'a dit monsieur Kohaly reflète notre propre pensée, monsieur.

M. Whicher: J'ai une autre question supplémentaire. Certaines de ces choses présentent de très grandes difficultés et quant à moi, vous pouvez être assuré que je suis tout acquis à la cause des anciens combattants. Toutefois, monsieur le président, lorsqu'on ask for $4,152 somewhere along the line we must point out that there is no income tax on this. No one suggests, please—I am not—that there should be any; however, I think it must be pointed out that this is one advantage. If it were brought up to the respectable figure of $4,152 as suggested in this brief whereas the unskilled labour making this amount pays tax on it the veteran does not. I think we have to keep this somewhere in the back of our mind.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, I must interject that the amount of $3,180 would not be affected too greatly by income tax anyway, particularly if the man was married. If that same veteran had a child or two, he would not be paying much income tax anyway.

Mr. Whicher: Fair enough, no.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, in balancing off the fact that there is no income tax on pensions I think it is fair to consider that the cleaner and helper, for example, in the federal civil service with an income which is now far above $4,150 also receives a number of fringe benefits which the pensioner does not get. I am referring to such things as sick leave, as an example, and holidays with pay and this type of thing.

The Chairman: The pensioner does get medical care though.

Mr. Chadderton: He gets medical care, Mr. Chairman, only for his pensionable disability. He is required out of that income to cover himself and his family for medical insurance the same as any other employee. However, I know we do not want to get into a debate today on the merits of this thing.

The Chairman: I am sure this is outside the scope of the Woods Report to go into the details of comparison of fringe benefits of pensioners under one program against another government program.

Mr. Chadderton: I think that is right, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I think I have been tolerant in letting the questions go in fairness to everybody concerned.

Mr. Chadderton: I must say, Mr. Chairman, it is the formula we wish to discuss. As you dira que le taux de base est maintenant de $3,180 et que nous demanderons $4,152, il nous faudra à un moment quelconque faire remarquer que ce montant n'est pas imposable. Comprenez-moi bien, je ne dis pas qu'il devrait y en avoir, mais il faut dire, je pense, que c'est là un avantage. Si le montant était porté au chiffre appréciable de $4,152, comme il est proposé dans cet exposé, il ne faudrait pas oublier que le manœuvre qui gagne ce montant paye l'impôt alors que l'ancien combattant ne paie rien.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Monsieur le président, il faut dire ici que le montant de $3,180 ne serait pas très frappé par l'impôt sur le revenu de toute façon, surtout si l'homme est marié. Si ce même ancien combattant avait un enfant ou deux, il n'aurait pas grand impôt à payer.

M. Whicher: C'est juste, non?

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, tenant compte du fait que les pensions ne sont pas imposables, il est juste de dire que le nettoyeur et l'aide par exemple, qui travaille pour la Fonction publique du Canada, au salaire de $4,150 reçoit également un certain nombre d'avantages sociaux que ne reçoit pas le pensionné. Je veux parler de choses comme les congés de maladie, les vacances payées et ainsi de suite.

Le président: Il faut dire que le pensionné reçoit les soins médicaux.

M. Chadderton: Les soins médicaux qu'il reçoit sont réservés à son invalidité ouvrant le droit à la pension. A même ce montant de pension, il doit protéger sa famille et lui-même par une assurance médicale, comme tout autre employé. Mais j'ajoute que nul ici ne veut ouvrir un débat aujourd'hui sur cette question.

Le président: Je suis sûr que le Rapport Woods ne prévoit pas que l'on entre dans les détails d'une comparaison entre les avantages sociaux que reçoivent les pensionnés dans le cadre d'un programme, par opposition aux avantages offerts par un autre programme du gouvernement.

M. Chadderton: Vous avez raison, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je crois que j'ai été tolérant en permettant que chacun puisse poser ses questions.

M. Chadderton: Je dois dire, monsieur le président, que c'est la formule que nous vou-can see we are very much against changing this formula of the unskilled labour market for some reasons which we suggest are pretty cogent. We have brought them out for the Committee because we feel that whether it is within your terms of reference or not this is the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and it is going to be placed squarely in front of you in one way or another. Our fear is that if the Department and the Minister happen to be working on some type of formula which is different, we have no assurance that we will ever get an opportunity to be consulted on it or to discuss it. So we felt today we had to put our views in front of you.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the formula, which is coming up in every brief and probably rightly so, it seems that when the Pension Act was first legislated in 1919 it was tied to the basic unskilled labour rate principle, but from 1920 to 1948 I gather there was no change in the pension paid at all, although obviously the wages that unskilled labour could bring in the market would probably have increased, at a guess, two or three times anyway. During all these years were your respective associations pushing for the continuance of this unskilled labour rate principle? If so, why did nothing at all happen for 28 years? Did the formula lapse in the meantime and was brought back in later years?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I think the answer is that there was no increase in the basic rate from 1924 until 1948 and certainly veterans' organizations—my study of their activities—veterans' organizations were very active until the depression years in attempting to get the government to increase pensions in accordance with a general increase in wages or increase in cost of living or whatever it was called in those days. Certainly there were no strong proposals for an increase in pensions during the thirties for good and obvious reasons. It just was not the time to ask for it and things were going down if anything.

I find that there were also no requests for increases in pensions during the war years and I ascribe this to the patriotic motives of the veterans' organizations. They were saying, "Let us get on with the war" and Padre Lambert can probably tell us more about it because he was in command during those lons examiner. Vous voyez donc que nous sommes fermement opposés à tout changement à la formule du marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée et cela pour des raisons faciles à comprendre. Nous les avons exposées au Comité parce qu'à notre avis, que ce soit dans les limites de votre mandat ou non, nous sommes ici devant le Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants et le problème va nous être présenté d'une façon ou d'une autre. Nous craignons que si le Ministère et le ministre s'occupent actuellement d'élaborer quelque formule différente, nous n'ayons aucune chance d'en être consultés ou d'en discuter. C'est pourquoi nous avons pensé qu'aujourd'hui il nous faudrait vous exposer nos vues.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, en ce qui concerne la formule dont on parle, avec raison, dans chaque exposé, il me semble qu'en 1919, lorsque la Loi sur les pensions a été adoptée, le montant se rattachait au taux de base applicable à la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée, mais de 1920 à 1948 je crois comprendre qu'aucun changement n'a été apporté au montant de la pension, bien que, naturellement, les gages que la main-d'œuvre pouvait apporter sur le marché aient peut-être doublé ou triplé. Durant toutes ces années, est-ce que vos associations respectives préconisaient le maintien du principe du taux de base payé à la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée? Dans le cas de l'affirmative, pourquoi ne s'est-il rien produit pendant 28 ans? Est-ce que la formule est devenue désuète dans l'intervalle pour être reprise plus tard?

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, il est vrai que le taux de base des pensions n'a pas monté entre 1924 et 1948, mais je puis vous dire, moi qui suis au courant de l'histoire des organisations d'anciens combattants, que celles-ci ont été très actives jusqu'aux années de la crise économique lorsqu'elles ont tenté de convaincre le gouvernement d'augmenter les pensions conformément à une augmentation générale des salaires ou à l'accroissement du coût de la vie, si c'est ainsi qu'on désignait alors la chose. Certes, il n'y a pas eu de propositions insistantes pour faire augmenter les pensions durant les années trente et cela pour une excellente raison. Le temps n'était simplement pas propice à une telle demande alors que tout baissait.

Je note aussi qu'on n'a pas demandé d'augmentation des pensions durant les années de guerre et j'en attribue la cause au sens patriotique des organisations d'anciens combattants. On disait alors: «Occupons-nous d'abord de la guerre» et l'aumônier Lambert pourrait en dire long là-dessus puisqu'il était days. However, immediately after the war in 1946 the veterans' organizations started in again and the first increase came in 1948. So there were two reasons why there was no great outcry for increases in the thirties. Of course, you had a depression and in the early forties you had a war, sir.

Mr. Weatherhead: Yes, now, in recent years, since 1948 say, in your opinion has any federal government agreed to this unskilled labour concept? When they were, for instance, making the many increases that have been made since 1951 by both governments in power since then, have they referred to this concept at all or have they ever admitted to it?

Mr. Chadderton: I would have to say they have not referred directly to it, but by the same token I know of no announcements from any government since 1946 which would indicate that the government has abandoned the unskilled labour market. Consequently, we in the veterans organizations have been going on the understanding that the basis of payment of pensions remains that of the unskilled labour market, and if the government came along with a 15 per cent increase—we were asking for 30 and our 30 per cent was always based on what we assumed to the wages in the unskilled labour market. I guess the answer is that so long as it was on the books, and it has been on the books since 1924 and earlier, we had every right to assume that it was still there because no government had ever repudiated it.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chadderton, you speak of it being on the books, but did the government in those days, 1920 to 1924, refer specifically to this unskilled labour concept at the time they were initiating the first award of pension, which I believe was $720, and then there was an increase or two since that time to 1924?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there was a report by a 1919 parliamentary committee which included a reference to the unskilled labour market—it is quoted in here, I cannot quote it offhand—being sufficient to allow a man to have the enjoyment of life in terms of what he could earn as an unskilled labourer. That was again confirmed by the Ralston Committee in 1922-23, and its report commandant durant ces années-là. Néanmoins, aussitôt après la guerre, en 1946, les organisations d'anciens combattants reprirent leurs revendications et la première augmentation fut accordée en 1948. Il y avait donc deux raisons pour lesquelles on ne criait pas très fort pour avoir des augmentations dans les années '30. Bien sûr, il y a eu la crise économique, puis la guerre dans les années '40.

M. Weatherhead: Oui. Maintenant, si nous examinons les années plus récentes, depuis 1948, par exemple, savez-vous si le gouvernement fédéral, quel que soit le parti au pouvoir, a accepté ce concept de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée? Par exemple, lorsque les deux gouvernements au pouvoir ont consenti ces nombreuses augmentations depuis 1951, ont-ils fait quelque mention de ce concept ou en ont-il admis le bien-fondé?

M. Chadderton: Je dirais qu'ils n'y ont pas fait allusion directement, mais je m'empresse d'ajouter qu'aucun gouvernement depuis 1946 n'a fait de déclaration à l'effet qu'il avait abandonné le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. En conséquence, à titre de membres des organisations d'anciens combattants, nous n'avons jamais cessé de croire que la base des paiements des pensions demeure celle du marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée, et si le gouvernement proposait une augmentation de 15 p. 100, nous demandions 30 pour 100, pourcentage fondé sur ce qu'on supposait être le salaire sur le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. Je crois que si ce critère existait depuis 1924 et n'a pas été rayé depuis même avant cela, nous étions pleinement en droit de supposer qu'il était encore en vigueur, aucun gouvernement l'ayant répudié.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur Chadderton, vous dites que c'était la formule acceptée, mais durant ces années-là est-ce que le gouvernement,—de 1920 à 1924,—mentionnait spécifiquement ce concept de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée à l'époque où il accordait la pension pour la première fois, au montant de $720, sauf erreur, après quoi il y eut une augmentation ou deux jusqu'à 1924?

M. Chadderton: Oui, monsieur le président, en 1924, un Comité parlementaire publiait un rapport dans lequel il était question du marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée,—on le reprend actuellement ici, mais je ne puis le citer de mémoire. On y dit que ce montant suffit pour qu'un homme puisse jouir de la vie dans la mesure permise par son salaire comme travailleur non spécialisé. Le Comité was tabled and accepted in Parliament. I think these are the two main references: the 1919 parliamentary committee and the 1924 royal commission, whose report was accepted in Parliament. As a matter of fact, pensions were increased as a result of the report of the 1924 committee. However, I must say it is one of those things that almost by rote it appears to have been accepted and no one has ever denied it and it has never been repudiated.

Mr. Weatherhead: I am quite new at this business, you know, but it seems to me that the reports might have been accepted by Parliament as such without the government of the day—unless they specifically referred to it in some legislation, or something—actually being committed to the principle. This was fifty-odd years or so ago. I am not unsympathetic to it, you understand, but you must remember that as we are going to have to be dealing with this in every brief that we hear, and I say rightly so, to get some sort of a background, I was going back to try to get some idea if the government of the day ever did commit itself, because it seems to me that having the report tabled in Parliament and being accepted in some sort of a general way perhaps would not tie the government of the day right down to it.

Mr. Chadderton: I really think the answer, Mr. Chairman, will be found in the Woods Report. In my opinion the Woods Committee did an exhaustive amount of research on the history and background of the basic rate, and that will be found in Volume II, Chapter 13, and particularly in the opening statement on page 475 and again in the comments on page 494. I would also like to point out to the Committee, if I may, that all the references which the Woods Committee used are tabled at the end of that section. I do not think there is time to deal with this this morning, it is a very exhaustive study, and all I can say is that Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues felt quite assured of themselves when they suggested in the Report that the official formula for the basic rate was that of the unskilled labour market, as tied to the cleaner and helper in the federal government service, and this was certainly the original intent and it has never been changed.

Mr. Weatherhead: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I notice in the progressive list of basic rates given by Mr. Butler that they have increased over the years. For exemple, for 1961 it was $2,160; in 1964 it was $2,400, and so on in 1966 and

[Interpretation]

Ralston, en 1922-1923, a de nouveau confirmé la chose et son rapport a été déposé au Parlement puis adopté. A mon sens, ce sont là les deux principales références: le Comité parlementaire de 1919 et la Commission royale d'enquête de 1924, dont le rapport a été accepté par le Parlement. Néanmoins, je dois dire que c'est là quelque chose que l'on sait par cœur, comme ayant été accepté; personne n'y a opposé de démenti ni ne l'a répudié.

M. Weatherhead: Je suis assez nouveau ici, mais il me paraît possible que le Parlement ait accepté les rapports comme tels sans que le gouvernement de l'époque,—à moins de l'avoir stipulé dans quelque mesure législative ou autre,—se soit engagé à respecter ce principe. Cela date de plus de cinquante ans. Comprenez-moi bien, je ne suis pas opposé à ce principe, mais n'oubliez pas qu'il va nous falloir traiter de cette question pour tous les exposés que nous allons entendre. Je crois avoir raison d'insister pour que l'on obtienne une certaine documentation et que l'on tâche de savoir si le gouvernement de l'époque s'est déjà engagé, car il me paraît que le simple fait de faire accepter de façon générale des rapports par le Parlement n'est pas un moyen d'engager le gouvernement à se conformer à la demande.

M. Chadderton: Je suis convaincu, monsieur le président, que la réponse se trouve dans le Rapport Woods. A mon avis, ce Rapport contient une étude exhaustive des antécédents et de l'historique de la question, et vous le trouverez au chapitre 13, du Volume II et surtout dans la déclaration préliminaire en page 550 et encore dans les commentaires à la page 572. Je veux également faire remarquer au Comité, si je le puis, que toutes les références utilisées par le Comité Woods figurent à la fin de cette section. Je crois que nous n'avons pas le temps d'examiner cela ce matin; c'est une étude très complète et tout ce que je puis dire, c'est que monsieur le juge Woods et ses collègues ont affirmé avec beaucoup d'assurance dans leur rapport que la formule officielle pour établir le taux de base était le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée, donnant comme exemple l'emploi de nettoyeur et de l'aide dans la Fonction publique du Canada, et ce fut certes là l'intention première et cela n'a jamais changé.

M. Weatherhead: Merci, monsieur le président.

M. Marshall: Monsieur le président, je remarque que dans la liste de base les taux donnés par monsieur Butler ont augmenté avec les années. Par exemple, le montant était de $2,160 en 1961; $2,400 en 1964 et il y 1967, and it shows a trend to an increase of from 10 to 12 or 13 per cent over the years. Suppose we were lucky enough to have an impact on the government to recommend a further increase, keeping in mind that we asked for an increase of 30 per cent, which would amount to $55 million but it was not acceptable. How was this trend received by veterans' organizations over the years from 1961 to 1967, for example?

• 1045

Mr. Butler: If I might answer that as I see it, I think the veterans' associations all through the piece have felt that half a loaf was better than none. In other words, if an increase is granted we are grateful for the size of the increase even though it is not what we asked for, if that answers your question, sir.

Mr. Marshall: Yes, for the time being.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I was merely going to comment on the point raised by Mr. Weatherhead and I would like to say, relying solely on my memory, which is rather long around here, that I have heard a good many Ministers of Veterans Affairs refer to the basic rate principle. Perhaps it is like Calvin Coolidge's preacher being against sin and for motherhood, but certainly Mr. Chadderton is right that no Minister of Veterans affairs has ever repudiated the principle, and in my memory there have been sufficient favourable references to it that I think it would have to be said that the government at least has not moved away from it.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions, I think this would be a good time for a five-minute break, after which we will resume on the next point, which is another section of your brief.

RECESS.

(AFTER RECESS)

The Chairman: May we resume, please? I ask members of the Committee to take their seats.

The next section of the Report deals with multiple disabilities.

Lt. Col. Lambert: Yes; and Sam Alderdice of Winnipeg is going to read this. He is a good reader.

a eu des augmentations en 1966 et 1967, et la tendance indique une augmentation de 10 à 12 ou 13 p. 100 au cours des années. Supposons que nous réussissions à amener le gouvernement à recommander une nouvelle augmentation, n'oubliant pas que nous avons demandé une augmentation de 30 p. 100, ce qui équivaudrait à 55 millions de dollars, mais la demande a été refusée. De quelle façon cette tendance a-t-elle été acceptée par les organisations d'anciens combattants au cours des années, de 1961 à 1967 par exemple?

M. Butler: J'aimerais répondre à cette question comme je la comprends. Je pense que les associations des anciens combattants durant tout ce temps ont cru qu'un demi pain valait mieux qu'aucun pain. Autrement dit, si l'on accorde une augmentation, nous sommes reconnaissants à ceux qui la donnent, quel que soit l'ordre de grandeur de cette augmentation, et même si ce n'est pas ce que nous avions demandé. Cela répond-il à votre question, monsieur?

M. Marshall: Oui, pour le moment.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg Nord-centre): Monsieur le président, j'avais seulement un commentaire à faire au sujet du point soulevé par monsieur Weatherhead. Je dirai donc, en me fiant seulement à ma mémoire, qui remonte assez loin en arrière dans ces comités, que j'ai entendu bon nombre de ministres des Affaires des anciens combattants parler du principe du taux de base. Cela fait peut-être penser au prédicateur de Calvin Coolidge qui était contre le péché, mais favorable à la maternité. De toute façon, monsieur Chadderton a raison de dire qu'aucun ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants n'a jamais répudié ce principe et, autant que je me souvienne, on en a assez souvent parlé favorablement pour soutenir que le gouvernement au moins ne s'en est pas écarté.

Le président: S'il n'y a pas d'autres questions, ce serait un bon moment je crois, pour faire une pause de cinq minutes, après quoi nous aborderons le point suivant, une autre section de votre mémoire.

PAUSE.

APRÈS LA REPRISE

Le président: Messieurs, pouvons-nous reprendre? Je demande aux membres du comité de bien vouloir reprendre leurs places.

Le chapitre suivant du rapport traite des invalidités multiples.

Le lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Oui et monsieur Sam Alderdice de Winnipeg va nous le lire. C'est un bon lecteur.

[Text]

Mr. S. J. Alderdice (War Amputations of Canada, Winnipeg, Man.): Gentlemen, we are on page 14 , Multiple Disabilities.

Multiple Disabilities:

Squeezed at the top!!! This is possibly the most apt expression to describe the situation of the multilpe-disability casualty. It may be surprising for those who are not familiar with the Pension Act to learn a very significant fact. It is that, under the Table of Disabilities approved by the assessment for a war casualty can conceivably reach 320, using the following example of a quadruple amputee:

Left leg—upper mid thigh—80
Right leg—upper mid thigh—80

Notwithstanding the maximum pension paid by the Pension Commission in a case of this nature is limited to 100%. This is what we, in the War Amputations of Canada, call the application of an "artificial ceiling". The anomaly of the situation is illustrated even more forcibly by the fact that an amputee who has suffered the loss of his right leg above the knee and part of his left foot would receive exactly the same pension as an amputee who has suffered the loss of all four of his extremities. This is demonstrated in Appendix "B" hereto.

If you turn to the back of the book you will note that in Appendix B we have a man with a mid-thigh amputation and one with a Chopart's and Syme's, and he gets 100 per cent pension. We also have a quadruple amp. a man with two arms off and two legs off—80 per cent, 80 per cent, 80 per cent, 80 per cent, for all disabilities, for a total of 320 per cent. Because of the 100 per cent ceiling both amputees receive the same pension.

We go back to page 15:

The disparity brought about by the application of this 100% ceiling is brought out further in Appendix "C" hereto. This shows the pension payment, together with attendance allowance for three amputees.

This Appendix C referred to is a picture—a wonderful picture, we think. It was taken in Winnipeg. Here is a man who is a quadruple

[Interpretation]

M. S. J. Alderdice (Amputés de guerre du Canada, Winnipeg, Man.): Messieurs, nous sommes à la page 14, invalidités multiples.

Invalidités multiples:

Congé au sommet! C'est peut-être l'expression qui décrit le mieux la situation d'une personne atteinte d'infirmités multiples. Ceux qui ne sont pas familiers avec la Loi sur les pensions seront peut-être surpris d'apprendre un fait assez significatif. C'est que, selon le Tableau des invalidités approuvées par la Commission canadienne des pensions, l'appréciation de l'invalidité d'un blessé de guerre peut bien atteindre 320 p. 100, si l'on prend en exemple une personne qui a subi quatre amputations:

Bras gauche, sous le coude—80%
Bras droit, au-dessus du coude—80%
Jambe gauche—au-dessus de la moitié de la cuisse—80%
Jambe droite—au-dessous de la motié de la cuisse—80%

Cependant, la pension maximale versée par la Commission des pensions dans un cas semblable ne peut dépasser 100 p. 100. C'est ce que nous, de l'Association des amputés du Canada, appelons l'application d'un «maximum artificiel». Ce qui nous démontre l'état anormal de la situation, c'est qu'une personne qui a subi l'amputation de la jambe droite au-dessus du genou et d'une partie du pied gauche recevrait exactement la même pension qu'une autre qui a subi l'amputation des quatre membres. Cela est démontré à l'appendice «B» ci-joint.

Si vous voulez bien vous reportez à la fin du livre, vous verrez qu'à l'appendice B il est question d'un homme avec une amputation à mi-cuisse et un autre avec un Chopart et un Syme, qui est pensionné à 100 pour 100. Nous avons aussi un homme qui a les quatre membres amputés, chaque amputation étant évaluée à 80 p. 100, soit un total de 320 p. 100. A cause du planfond de 100 p. 100, les deux amputés reçoivent la même pension.

Revenons maintenant à la page 15:

Cette annexe C à laquelle nous avons fait allusion est une photo, et nous dirions même une merveilleuse photo. Elle a été prise à amputee, a man with a leg off above the knee and one below the knee and one man with his leg off above the knee. It looks as though he is a double amp here, but he is not; he has a right foot. But the quadruple amp is assessed at 220 per cent pension, and he receives a pension at the rate of 100 per cent, $265. A double leg amp is assessed at $130 per cent and he receives the same pension, $265 per month. The single leg amp is assessed at 80 per cent, but because of the 100 per cent limitation he receives $212 per month, which is $53 less than the quadruple amp, the man with the four limbs off.

We go back to page 15, and I read:

> It may be argued that the Pension Commission can award Attendance Allowance multiple-disability casualty over and above the pension paid for 100 disability. This Attendance Allowance, however, is in effect an expense allowance paid to a pensioner to help offset the added costs of personal services required because of his disability. It is encumbered income and not to be confused with compensation for the disability itself.

> This assertion would appear to have been proved, beyond shadow of doubt, by the findings of the Woods Committee. The actual recommendation in the Woods Report is to the effect the first 100 percent of disability should be paid on the basis of loss of earnings in the unskilled labour market, and that where other factors exist in a substantial degree, the Canadian Pension should indemnify the multiple disability casualty accordingly. These factors include anatomical loss, scarring and disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, pain and discomfort and shortening of the life span.

> Under this proposal, pension could be paid in excess of the mythical 100 percent ceiling and an illustration would be as follows:

Pension for one leg—above mid-thigh—80%

Pension for a second leg—above mid-thigh —80%

[Interprétation]

Winnipeg. Voici donc un homme quatre fois amputé, un homme avec une jambe coupée au-dessus de genou et une au-dessous du genou et un homme dont la jambe est amputée au-dessus du genou. On pourrait croire qu'il s'agit ici d'un amputé double, mais ce n'est pas le cas; il a son pied droit. Mais la pension de l'amputé des quatre membres a été évaluée à 220 p. 100, et il touche une pension au taux de 100 p. 100, soit $265. Un amputé des deux jambes est estimé pensionnable à 130 pour cent, et il touche une pension de $265 par mois. La pension de l'amputé d'une seule jambe est estimée à 80 pour cent, mais du fait du plafond de 100 p. 100, il touche $212 par mois, soit $53 de moins que l'amputé des quatre membres.

Nous revenons à la page 15, où je lis:

> On peut prétendre que la Commission des pensions peut accorder l'allocation de soins comme moyen d'indemniser la personne atteinte d'infirmités multiples en plus et au-delà de la pension payée pour une invalidité de 100 p. 100. De fait, l'allocation de soins est une allocation de dépenses payée à un pensionné afin de l'aider à compenser les frais supplémentaires pour les services personnels dont il a besoin en raison de son invalidité. C'est un gain grevé, et il faut le distinguer de l'indemnisation pour l'invalidité elle-même.

> Il semble que cette affirmation ait été prouvée, sans le moindre doute, par les constatations de la Commission Woods. Le rapport Woods recommande que les premiers 100 p. 100 d'invalidité soient payés selon la perte de salaire sur le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée et, lorsqu'il existe d'autres facteurs importants, que la Commission des pensions indemnise en conséquence la personne atteinte d'infirmités multiples. Ces facteurs englobent, entre autres, la perte des membres, les cicatrices et la défiguration, la perte de la joie de vivre, la douleur et les malaises et la réduction de l'espérance de vie.

> En vertu de ce projet, la pension pourrait être payée au-dessus du maximum mythique de 100 p. 100 et calculée comme suit:

Pension pour une jambe—au-dessus de la mi-cuisse 80%

Pension pour la seconde jambe—au-dessus de la mi-cuisse 80%

Pension for loss of paired organs*—25%

Total 185%

* The paired organ assessment is based on the principle that the actual loss to the amputee of paired organs is greater than double the loss of any single organ.

This assessment, as illustrated above, would be made up presumably as follows:

Loss of earning capacity 100%

Anatomical loss 25%

Scarring and disfigurement 25%

Loss of enjoyment of life 15%

Pain and discomfort 10%

Expected shortening of life span 10%

Total 185%

The recommendation of the Woods Report in regard to multiple disability casualties has been heralded among veterans' organizations as both unique and outstanding. For many years pension experts have attempted to devise a formula which would take into account not only loss of earnings, but the several other factors which affect the well-being of a severely disabled person, many of whom carry their disabilities 24 hours a day.

The Woods Committee studied the pension provisions in some other countries, noting that in a very many of them, special assessments were paid beyond the 100 percent rate for total disablement. It is the view of the War Amputations of Canada, however, that the formula now proposed in the Woods Committee Report is the most practical that can be devised under the circumstances. We urge its early implementation.

Assessment for the War Blinded: The War Amputations of Canada has some members who have lost total eyesight through war service. We have conducted a comprehensive study of their pension problems and conclude that the disability of blindness has been under-assessed by the Canadian Pension Commission for many years.

[Interpretation]

Pension pour la perte d'organes pairs* 25%

Total 185%.

* L'appréciation de la perte d'organes pairs se fonde sur le principe que la perte effective, pour l'amputé, d'organes pairs est plus grande que deux fois la perte de tout organe seul.

Cette appréciation, de la façon indiquée ci-haut, se décomposerait ainsi:

Perte de l'aptitude à gagner un salaire 100 p. 100

Perte d'un membre 25 p. 100

Cicatrices et défiguration 25 p. 100

Perte de la joie de vivre 15 p. 100

Douleur et malaises 10 p. 100

Réduction éventuelle de l'espérance de vie 10 p. 100

Total 185 p. 100

La recommandation du rapport Woods relative aux personnes atteintes d'infirmités multiples a été accueillie par les organisations d'anciens combattants comme étant unique et remarquable à la fois. Pendant nombre d'années les spécialistes en matière de pension ont tenté de trouver une formule qui tiendrait compte non seulement de la perte de gain mais aussi des autres facteurs qui influent sur le bien-être d'une personne atteinte d'invalidité grave; dans bien des cas, les personnes souffrent de leurs infirmités 24 heures sur 24. La Commission Woods a étudié les dispositions relatives aux pensions dans d'autres pays et a noté que dans un grand nombre d'entre eux, des montants spéciaux ont été versés au-delà du taux de 100 p. 100 pour l'invalidité totale. L'Association des amputés du Canada est cependant d'avis que la formule proposée actuellement dans le rapport de la Commission Woods est la plus pratique qui puisse être appliquée dans les circonstances. Nous proposons qu'elle soit mise en application le plus tôt possible.

Appréciation à l'égard des aveugles de guerre:—L'Association des amputés du Canada compte certains membres qui ont perdu complètement la vue à la suite de leurs services en temps de guerre. Nous avons procédé à une étude exhaustive de leurs problèmes en matière de pension et nous en venons à la conclusion que l'invalidité relative à la cécité a fait l'objet d'une appréciation insuffisante par la Commission canadienne des pensions pendant bon nombre d'années. La Com-

[Texte]

The Woods Committee has recommended an assessment for total blindness of 250 percent made up as follows:

Loss of earning capacity 100%
Anatomical Loss %
Scarring and disfigurement 50%
Loss of enjoyment of life 25%
Pain and discomfort 15%
Expected shortening of the life span 10%
Total 250%

In the view of the War Amputations of Canada, this is little enough assessment for the severe disability represented by loss of sight, with its many related problems such as impairment of locomotion and communication, dependence upon family members and friends, nervous proposed assessment of 250 percent would go a long way towards adequate compensation for this disability, and it should be borne in mind that, as with all other disabilities, the payment is coming many years too late, bearing in mind that the disabled persons have lived with their disabilities, in some cases, for more than 50 years.

The War Amputations of Canada is pleased indeed to note that the White Paper proposes recognition of factors other than the loss of earning power in the unskilled labour market, in regard to assessment for pension purposes. The White Paper includes, in particular:

To relieve pain and discomfort;
To increase the enjoyment of life; and
To provide the essential will to live.

We prefer not to comment upon the latter factor, as we believe that there are few multiple disability casualties, if any, who relate financial compensation to the "essential will to live".

We do suggest, however, that there are other factorw to which reference was made in the Woods Report which are not included in the White Paper. These are:

Scarring and disfigurement: and Loss of life expectancy.

It seems to me that the principle put forth in the Woods Committee Recommendations is both sound and practical. It does not interfere with the existing basis of paying pension up to 100 on loss of earning power. It does, however, recognize—and clearly delineate—the other mission Woods a recommandé que l'appréciation relative à la cécité totale soit de 250 p. 100 et qu'elle se définisse ainsi:

Perte de l'aptitude à gagner un salaire—100 p. 100
Perte de membre—50 p. 100
Balafres et défiguration—50 p. 100
Perte de la joie de vivre—25 p. 100
Douleur et malaises—15 p. 100
Réduction prévue de la durée de vie—10 p. 100
Total 250 p. 100

Selon l'Association des amputés du Canada, cette appréciation est insuffisante pour l'infirmité grave que représente la perte de la vue et les nombreux problèmes connexes tels que la difficulté de se déplacer et de communiquer, le fait d'être à la charge de sa famille et de ses amis, la tension nerveuse, la douleur et les malaises ressentis. L'évaluation proposée de 250 p. 100 contribuerait largement au versement d'une indemnité appropriée au sujet de cette infirmité, et nous devons nous rappeler que, comme dans le cas des autres invalidités, le paiement est en retard de plusieurs années si l'on pense que dans certains cas les personnes invalides ont vécu avec leurs infirmités pendant plus de 50 ans. L'Association des amputés du Canada note avec plaisir que le Livre blanc propose de reconnaître l'existence de facteurs autres que la perte de salaire sur le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée, en ce qui regarde l'appréciation aux fins de pension. Le Livre blanc recommande notamment:

De soulager la douleur et les malaises;
D'accentuer la joie de vivre; et De fournir le désir essentiel de vivre.

Nous préférons ne faire aucun commentaire au sujet du dernier facteur, étant donné qu'à notre avis peu de personnes atteintes d'infirmités multiples, s'il en est, établissent un rapport entre la compensation financière et «le désir essentiel de vivre». Nous soutenons, cependant, qu'il y a d'autres facteurs auxquels a fait allusion le rapport Woods et qui ne figurent pas dans le Livre blanc. Ce sont:

Les balafres et la défiguration; et La réduction de l'espérance de vie.

Il nous semble que les principes qui ressortent des recommandations de la Commission Woods sont à la fois justes et pratiques. Ils ne touchent pas à la formule actuelle de verser une pension jusqu'à concurrence de 100 p. 100 à l'égard de la perte du pouvoir de gagner sa vie.

factors involved in a multiple disability, for which no provisions is made under the present Pension Act. We have prepared a simple chart which attempts to show the relationship between the additional factors of a disability as proposed by the Woods Committee, and the existing factor of lost earning power.

This is the last sheet in your book. Now we refer to Appendix "D". This is the last sheet in your brief and you will note here for a double amputee, reading from the bottom to the top: loss of earning power, 100 per cent pension; loss of life expectancy, 10 per cent; pain and discomfort, 10 per cent; loss of enjoyment of life, 15 per cent; scarring and disfigurement, 25 per cent; anatomical loss, 25 per cent. This totals 185 per cent.

In the case of a triple amp, we say loss of life expectancy, 20 per cent; pain and discomfort, 20 per cent; loss of enjoyment of life, 35 per cent; scarring and disfigurement, 40 per cent; anatomical loss, 50 per cent—for a total of 265 per cent.

Now you will note that for the quad amp we have a total here of 350 per cent; the blind, 250 per cent; and the paraplegic, 350 per cent. Now these

Assessments for Multiple Disability Casualties, based on Woods Committee Recommendations No. 64-65 (Vol. II, C. 14 P. 538)

I think we can go on now.

It should be noted that this system lends itself to flexibility in regard to the relation between the assessment above 100 per cent and the monetary value which the government may be prepared to place upon that assessment. We shall be placing before you today—and you have it here—a copy of the "Multiple Disability Casualties" brief submitted to the Woods Committee by the organizations representing seriously disabled veterans of Canada. This brief is dated November 3, 1965. I would like you to turn to page 11, if you will, of this brief. You may wish to note, on page 11, that in the submission, the organizations involved suggested that compensation above the 100 per cent assessment should be paid at the half rate. Their proposal was not exactly similar to that of the Woods Committee in regard to the method of arriving at

Cependant, ils reconnaissent—et nous font voir clairement—les autres facteurs en question dans les cas d'infirmités multiples pour lesquels aucune disposition n'est prévue dans la Loi sur les pensions actuelle. Nous avons dressé un tableau où nous essayons de démontrer les rapports qui existent entre tous les facteurs supplémentaires relatifs à une infirmité, tel que proposé par la Commission Woods, et le facteur existant de la perte de l'aptitude à gagner sa vie.

C'est la dernière page de votre livre. Passons maintenant à l'annexe «D». C'est la dernière page de votre mémoire, et vous noterez ici pour un amputé double, en lisant de bas en haut: perte de la possibilité de gagner sa vie, pension à 100 p. 100; réduction prévue de la durée de la vie, 10 p. 100; souffrances et malaise, 10 p. 100; perte de la jouissance normale de la vie, 15 p. 100; cicatrices et défiguration, 25 p. 100; perte anatomique, 25 p. 100. Cela nous donne un total de 185 p. 100.

Dans le cas d'un amputé triple, nous disons perte de la longévité probable, 20 p. 100; souffrances et incommodité, 20 p. 100; perte de l'aptitude à jouir de la vie, 35 p. 100; cicatrices et défiguration, 40 p. 100; perte anatomique, 50 p. 100, ce qui nous donne un total de 265 p. 100.

Vous noterez maintenant que pour l'amputé des quatre membres, nous avons ici un total de 350 p. 100; pour l'aveugle, 250 p. 100; pour le paraplégique, 350 p. 100, or, ces

Évaluation de l'invalidité dans les cas d'amputations multiples, d'après les recommandations nos GH et GS du Rapport du Comité Woods (vol. II, c. 14, p. 643)

Je pense que nous pouvons poursuivre maintenant. Il y aurait lieu de noter que ce système se prête à la souplesse en ce qui concerne le rapport existant entre l'appréciation au-dessus de 100 p. 100 et la valeur monétaire que le gouvernement peut être en mesure de donner à cette appréciation. Nous vous remettrons aujourd'hui un exemplaire de l'exposé sur les «Personnes atteintes d'infirmités multiples» qui a été présenté à la Commission Woods par les organisations des anciens combattants du Canada qui souffrent d'invalidités graves. Cet exposé est daté du 3 novembre 1965. Vous pourrez noter, à la page 11 de l'exposé, que, dans leur présentation, les organisations en cause ont proposé qu'une indemnité au-dessus de l'appréciation de 100 p. 100 soit versée à raison de la moitié du taux. Leur proposition ne ressemblait pas exactement à celle de la Commission Woods, assessment. This may be taken as an indication, however, that the organizations representing the multiple disability casualties might be prepared to accept some reasonable compromise in regard to the dollar amounts involved, so long as the principles were retained; that is, that statutory provision be made under which pensions would be paid for additional assessment for multiple disability cases, as part of the regular monthly pension payment.

I think we have already covered Appendix "D". I just wanted you to make the comparison here in the Multiple Disability Casualties brief on page 11 with that which we have on Appendix "D". I think we can go on now. On page 20, the second paragraph and last paragraph.

The total cost of implementing this recommendation for 174 amputations—broken down this is 169 double; 4 triple; 1 quadruple; 40 totally blinded, 125 paraplegics and 10 quadraplegics—would, we estimate, be about $1.4 million a year.

• 1115

The Chairman: Is this cost estimate based on a $3,180 basis of pension or is it based on the increases that are suggested?

Mr. Chadderton: It is based, Mr. Chairman, on the existing rate of pension.

The Chairman: So if the increases in the basic rate that you suggest were implemented, there would be 30 per cent additional.

Mr. Chadderton: That is right, sir.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Lemay: Attendance Allowance:

We welcome the proposal in the White Paper to the effect that the Act be amended to state that attendance allowance is, unequivocally, not part of any pension paid for any disability. This clarification is important chiefly because it paves the way for consideration of an additional payment by way of pension for multiple disability casualties.

Up to this time, it has been possible for the government to point to attendance allowance as a means of additional compensation for multiple disability cases. The veterans' organizations have long contended that, to the contrary, the original intent of the legislation made it clear that this allowance was pour ce qui est de la méthode de calculer l'appréciation. Cela peut, cependant, servir à indiquer que les organisations représentant les personnes atteintes d'infirmités multiples pourraient être disposées à accepter un certain compromis raisonnable en ce qui concerne les montants en cause, dans la mesure où les principes sont maintenus, c'est-à-dire si la loi prévoyait qu'une pension soit versée en guise d'appréciation supplémentaire à l'égard des cas d'infirmités multiples, et que ce montant soit compris dans le paiement mensuel régulier de la pension.

Je pense que nous avons déjà traité de l'annexe «D». Je voulais seulement que vous fassiez ici la comparaison entre ce que nous avons à la page 11 du mémoire sur les invalidités multiples et ce que nous avons ici à l'annexe «D». Je pense que nous pouvons poursuivre maintenant. A la page 20, le deuxième et dernier paragraphe.

> Nous estimons qu'il en coûtera au total environ $1,400,000 par année pour mettre en pratique cette recommandation à l'égard de 174 amputés: (169 doubles; 4 triples; 1 quadruple); 40, atteints de cécité totale, 125 paraplégiques et 10 quadraplégiques.

Le président: Cette estimation du coût se fonde-t-elle sur une pension de base de $3,180 ou sur les augmentations proposées?

M. Chadderton: Sur le taux de pension actuelle, monsieur le président.

Le président: Par conséquent, si l'on appliquait au taux de base l'augmentation que vous proposez, il faudrait ajouter ici 30 p. 100.

M. Chadderton: C'est exact, monsieur.

Le président: Je vous remercie.

M. Lemay: Allocation de soins: Nous réservons bon accueil à la proposition figurant dans le Livre blanc voulant que la Loi soit modifiée de façon à préciser spécifiquement que l'allocation de soins ne fait aucunement partie de toute pension versée pour n'importe quelle invalidité. Il importe de clarifier cette question, principalement parce qu'elle prépare le terrain en vue d'étudier la possibilité de verser une somme supplémentaire, sous forme de pension, à l'égard des personnes atteintes d'infirmités multiples.

Jusqu'à présent, le gouvernement a pu définir l'allocation de soins comme étant un moyen de verser une indemnité supplémentaire dans les cas d'infirmités multiples. Les organisations d'anciens combattants soutiennent depuis longtemps que, au contraire, l'intention première du législateur laissait voir primarily based on the need for services and attendance. It came into being at a time when World War I veterans were being transferred from hospitals to their homes and the attendance allowance was paid specifically for the purpose of providing additional income which would be available to the family members who looked after the disabled veteran in lieu of the government's having to keep him in an institution. This contention was not always acceptable and when veterans' organizations pointed out the need to pay additional pension for multiple disabilities, the requests were sometimes refuted with the explanation that the multiple disability case received attendance allowance. Presumably we can assume that the White Paper sets the record straight. Attendance allowance is not part of pension. Therefore the need to pay additional pension for the severe case should be no longer in doubt.

[Text]

Symes Amputees:

The Woods Committee recommended (volume 2, chapter 17, page 662, recommendation 84) that for the purpose of attendance allowance the Symes amputation be considered the same as a below-the-knee amputation. The rate for the Symes is now $600 per annum, whereas a double below-the-knee amputee receives an attendance allowance of $1,500 per annum.

Notwithstanding, the assessment by the Canadian Pension Commission for a Symes amputation and a below-the-knee amputation is exactly the same, i.e., 50 per cent. Their pension is the same.

They are both rated the same, as disability assessments. The Pension Commission, late in 1964, approved an increase in the standard assessment for the Symes amputation from 40 per cent to 50 per cent, presumably on the understanding that this amputation was at least as disabling as the below-the-knee amputation. Representations had been made to the Commission to this effect, quoting a great deal of factual information obtained from other countries, most of which provide the same assessment for a Symes as a below-the-knee amputation.

Referring to the Table of Disabilities, which is the guideline for assessment of attendance allowance (Table of Disabilities, page 21) a clairement que cette allocation était principalement fondée sur le besoin de services et de soins.

Son origine remonte à une époque où les anciens combattants de la Première Guerre mondiale étaient transférés de l'hôpital à la maison; l'allocation de soins visait précisément à assurer un revenu supplémentaire aux membres de la famille qui prenaient soin de l'invalide et déchargeaient ainsi l'État de l'obligation de le garder dans une institution. Mais cet argument n'a pas toujours été accepté et quand les associations d'anciens combattants ont réclamé des pensions supplémentaires dans les cas d'infirmités multiples, ils se sont vu parfois opposer une fin de non-recevoir, car, disait-on, il était versé une allocation de soins dans ces cas-là. Nous pouvons donc présumer que le Livre blanc fait le point là-dessus. L'allocation de soins ne fait pas partie de la pension. Il ne devrait donc subsister aucun doute quant à la nécessité d'une pension supplémentaire dans les cas graves.

Amputés de Syme:

Le Comité Woods recommandait (volume 2, chapitre 17, page 757, recommandation 84) que l'amputation de Syme soit considérée comme une amputation au-dessous du genou aux fins de l'allocation de soins. Un amputé de Syme reçoit présentement une allocation de soins de $600 par année, tandis que celui qui a perdu deux jambes au-dessous du genou en touche une de $1,500 par année.

Néanmoins, l'évaluation de la Commission canadienne des pensions est exactement la même pour un amputé de Syme que pour un amputé au-dessous du genou, soit 50 p. 100. Ces deux genres d'amputations font l'objet de la même évaluation à titre d'invalidité.

A la fin de 1964, la Commission des pensions acceptait que l'évaluation uniforme pour une amputation de Syme soit portée de 40 p. 100 à 50 p. 100, supposément parce qu'elle jugeait que cette amputation rendait aussi invalide qu'une amputation au-dessous du genou. La Commission avait été saisie d'instances en ce sens et avait pris connaissance d'une foule de données provenant d'autres pays, dont la plupart considéraient l'amputation de Syme comme étant aussi grave que l'amputation au-dessous du genou.

Au sujet du Tableau des infirmités, qui sert de guide pour l'évaluation de l'allocation de soins (Tableau des infirmités, à la page 21), la number of "necessities" are accepted by the Commission as placing a pensioner in need of attendance. These necessities include:

• 1120

(a) Dressing and undressing
(b) Feeding oneself
(c) Attending the wants of nature
(d) Ability to get outdoors and take sufficient exercise to maintain normal health and
(e) Protection from danger incident to ordinary environment.

In our opinion, a bilateral Symes amputee would be in relatively the same position as a below-the-knee amputee in regard to these necessities. The fact that the Commission approves the same assessment for both types of amputation would seem to be ample verification of this fact. We cannot, therefore, understand the justification for the non-acceptance of the recommendation of the Woods Report to the effect that attendance allowance for the Symes Amputation should be the same as for a below-knee amputation. Our records indicate that there are not more than 15 bilateral Symes Amputees in Canada. Hence the total cost to the Government to implement this recommendation would be $13,500 per annum, at current rates.

Attendance Allowance while in Hospital: Maximum Category:

The Woods Committee made a specific recommendation (volume 2, chapter 17, page 662, recommendation 85) to the effect that the existing provisions of the Pension Act as stated in Section 33 (3) thereof be extended for all pensioners in receipt of attendance allowance at the maximum rate.

This would seem to be a most logical recommendation. This provision is already in existence for the War Blinded, despite the fact that they do not receive the maximum rate (i.e., $2,750 per annum compared with the maximum rate of $3,000 per annum). Despite this provision for the War Blinded, there is no provision in the Pension Act to pay attendance allowance while in hospital for treatment for a paraplegic, although he is covered for two months in regard to payment of attendance allowance, under the Treatment Regulations of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Consider then the case of the triple amputee. He is awarded the maximum attendance allowance of $3,000 per annum, but if he is required to go into hospital for treatment for his pensionable disability his attendance allowance ceases forthwith.

[Interprétation]

Commission reconnaît un certain nombre de «nécessités» selon lesquelles un pensionné ne peut se passer de soins. On y compte:

a) Se vêtir et se dévêtir
b) Se nourrir
c) Satisfaire les besoins naturels
d) Aller dehors et prendre suffisamment d'exercice pour conserver un état de santé normal
e) Se protéger contre les dangers du milieu normal.

A notre avis, un amputé de Syme serait à peu près dans la même situation qu'un amputé au-dessous du genou, pour ce qui est de ces «nécessités». Cela semble se vérifier amplement par le fait que la Commission approuve la même évaluation pour les deux genres d'amputation. Par conséquent, nous ne parvenons pas à nous expliquer le rejet de la recommandation du Comité Woods, voulant que l'amputation de Syme et l'amputation au-dessous du genou, fassent l'objet de la même allocation.

Selon nos dossiers, il n'y a pas plus de 15 cas d'amputations bilatérales de Syme au Canada. Par conséquent, aux taux courants la mise en application de cette recommandation ne coûterait que $13,500 par année au gouvernement.

Allocations de soins pendant l'hospitalisation: Catégorie maximum:

Le Comité Woods recommandait nommément (volume 2, chapitre 17, page 757, recommandation 85) que les dispositions actuelles de l'article 33(3) de la Loi sur les pensions soient appliquées à tous les pensionnés bénéficiaires d'une allocation de soins au taux maximum.

Cette recommandation semblerait des plus logiques. Les aveugles de guerre y trouvent déjà leur profit, sans toutefois, il est vrai, toucher le taux maximum, c'est-à-dire $2,750 par année à comparer au maximum de $3,000. Malgré cette disposition pour les aveugles de guerre, la Loi sur les pensions ne prévoit rien pour le versement d'une allocation de soins à un paraplégique hospitalisé; mais il faut dire qu'aux termes du Règlement sur le traitement du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, l'allocation de soins est maintenue pendant deux mois dans ce cas-là. Voyons ce qui se passe dans le cas d'une triple amputation. Le pensionné reçoit le maximum de l'allocation de soins, soit $3,000 par année, mais s'il doit aller se faire traiter à l'hôpital pour l'infirmité qui lui ouvre droit à sa pension, il perd par le fait même son allocation de soins.

[Text]

It is suggested that the Woods Committee Report contains much sensible argument in support of the recommendation. Perhaps, however, a specific case might make the matter more clear. We refer to a triple amputee whose total income under the Pension Act is $524. per month. Out of this he must maintain a home, purchase and operate an automobile, pay someone to maintain his house and grounds, etc. In addition his wife is required to be on hand to assist him, to feed, clothe and generally care for him 24 hour a day.

When he goes into hospital the expenses and upkeep of his home and automobile carry on. Moreover his wife, who is normally prevented from taking outside employment because of her need to be available to assist her husband, must necessarily remain out of the labour market. She could not be expected to secure a job on short notice. It should be borne in mind, also, that she would necessarily lack experience. In other words all of the circumstances which obtain for this man while he is at home, continue in exactly the same way while he is in hospital. Since we are speaking specifically about money, the family outlay would be approximately the same but, in that no provision is made to carry on attendance allowance for this category of amputee, the income would be reduced by the amount of the attendance allowance, i.e., $250.

In this particular instance, this man has, over the past years, required medical treatment arising out of his pensionable disability on at least three occasions, and possibly many more. He has refused to go into hospital, as he cannot afford to take the reduction of $250. per month in income.

• 1125

Perhaps we may be pardoned if we are critical of the proposed amendment which would extend to this type of pensioner the concession that his attendance allowance could carry on for one month only without his having to undergo a means test. In this particular case we would hope that the ground rules would be sufficiently generous that he could qualify for a continuation beyond the proposed one-month cutoff date. However, with no guarantee of this (in the same way as the War Blinded Pensioner has a guarantee through Section 33 (3) of the Act) it is perhaps understandable that he would still have some qualms about entering hospital, knowing that continuation of his atten-

[Interpretation]

Nous exprimons l'avis que le Rapport du Comité Woods contient un plaidoyer très sensé en faveur de la recommendation. Mais il y aurait peut-être lieu de citer un cas précis en guise d'exemple. Prenons le cas d'un pensionné qui a perdu trois membres et dont le revenu global aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions est de $524 par mois. Sur ce revenu, il doit entretenir un foyer, s'acheter et faire fonctionner une automobile, payer quelqu'un pour entretenir sa propriété et ainsi de suite. En outre, sa femme doit être à ses côtés 24 heures par jour pour l'aider, le nourrir, le vêtir et prendre soin de lui de façon générale.

Advenant son hospitalisation, ses dépenses et les frais d'entretien de son foyer et de son automobile ne cessent pas pour autant. Par ailleurs, sa femme, qui ne travaille ordinairement pas à l'extérieur parce qu'elle est obligée de prendre soin de son mari à la maison doit nécessairement rester hors du marché du travail. On ne saurait donc s'attendre à ce qu'elle trouve un emploi en peu de temps. Il faut se souvenir aussi qu'elle manque forcément d'expérience. En d'autres termes, que le pensionné soit chez lui ou à l'hôpital, les circonstances restent exactement les mêmes. A propos d'argent, les dépenses de la famille seraient à peu près les mêmes, mais vu que les amputés de cette catégorie doivent renoncer à leur allocation de soins, leur revenu se trouve réduit de $250, c'est-à-dire du montant de l'allocation de soins.

Dans ce cas précis, notre homme a eu besoin de soins médicaux au moins trois fois et peut-être bien davantage au cours des années à cause de son invalidité. Il a refusé l'hospitalisation, ne pouvant se permettre une baisse de revenu de $250 par mois.

Peut-être nous pardonnera-t-on de critiquer le projet de modification qui permettrait dans ces cas de maintenir l'allocation de soins pour un mois seulement, sans justification des besoins. En l'occurence, nous souhaiterions qu'au départ le règlement soit assez large pour permettre au pensionné de continuer à toucher son allocation après la date limite proposée d'un mois. Mais comme le pensionné n'en a pas la moindre garantie, comme celle dont jouit l'aveugle de guerre pensionné, en vertu de l'article 33 (3) de la loi, on comprendra peut-être qu'il hésite encore à se faire hospitaliser, sachant que la continuation de son allocation de soins après la limite d'un mois sera laissée à la discrétion des administrateurs des pensions.

dance allowance beyond the one-month period was at the discretion of the pension administrators.

This leads to another major objection—we refer to the imposition of a possible "means test" in regard to the extension of attendance allowance. To the best of our knowledge, attendance allowance has never been subject to financial need hence the proposal in the White Paper appears to introduce a completely new principle. Up until now, if a pension investigation indicated that there was a need for attendance as spelled out in the Table of Disabilities, the attendance allowance could be put into payment. It seems now however, that financial need may also become a factor—a situation about which we must express profound regret.

Attendance Allowance: Below Maximum Rate:

We are pleased to note that the recommendation in the White Paper to continue attendance allowance for a period of one month goes a very long way in meeting the requirement as seen in the Woods Report for those in receipt of attendance allowance below the maximum rate. It is suggested, however, that the same rationale applies to this group as to the maximum-rated group. That is to say, the additional costs of the disability carry on while the pensioner is in hospital; the only difference being one of degree. Mr. Justice Woods in his comments concluded that, because the need for attendance in the lower categories was not as great as for the maximum-rated group, the provision to carry on attendance allowance while in hospital could justifiably be held to two months. We see no quarrel with this. We do, however, find that the one month proposal in the White Paper simply would not provide sufficient time for the family to make the necessary financial adjustment.

The cost factor of implementing the Woods Committee recommendation in regard to the continuation of attendance allowance, on a permanent basis for pensioners undergoing treatment for a pensionable disability (without restriction for the maximum rate and for two months at those below the maximum rate) could not be too large. There are approximately 2,000 attendance allowance awards in force at this time in Canada.

[Interprétation]

Cela nous amène à une autre objection de force. Nous voulons parler de l'imposition possible d'une «justification des moyens» préalable à l'allocation de soins. Pour autant que nous sachions, l'allocation de soins n'a jamais été, fonction du besoin financier. Par conséquent, la proposition du Livre blanc semble poser un principe tout à fait nouveau. A l'heure actuelle, l'allocation de soins peut être payée s'il ressort de l'enquête que des soins sont nécessaires, suivant le Tableau des infirmités. Il semble, toutefois, que le besoin financier peut aussi entrer en ligne de compte, ce que nous déplorons profondément.

Allocation de soins: au-dessous du taux maximum:

Nous sommes heureux de constater que la recommandation du Libre blanc suivant laquelle l'allocation de soins serait maintenue pour une période d'un mois reconnaît dans une très large mesure les besoins, explicités dans le Rapport Woods, des bénéficiaires d'une allocation de soins à un taux moindre que le maximum. Nous sommes d'avis, par contre, qu'il faut appliquer à ce groupe le même raisonnement qu'au groupe qui reçoit le maximum; les frais supplémentaires qu'entraîne l'invalidité ne cessent pas du simple fait de l'hospitalisation du pensionné; la seule différence est qu'ils ne sont pas aussi élevés pour les deux groupes. Monsieur le juge Woods concluait ses observations en disant que le besoin de soins n'étant pas aussi aigu dans la deuxième catégorie que dans la première, il serait justifié de limiter à deux mois le maintien de l'allocation de soins pendant l'hospitalisation du pensionné. Nous ne trouvons rien à redire à cela. Nous trouvons, cependant, que la limite d'un mois proposée dans le Livre blanc n'est tout simplement pas suffisante pour permettre à la famille de s'adapter financièrement à une situation nouvelle.

L'adoption de la recommandation du Comité Woods relativement au maintien de l'allocation de soins pour les pensionnés en traitement, sans restriction pour ceux qui touchent le maximum et pendant deux mois pour les autres ne saurait entraîner des déboursés trop considérables. Il y a quelque 2,000 bénéficiaires d'allocations de soins à l'heure actuelle.

Attendance Allowance for War Blinded:

The Woods Committee suggested that attendance allowance for the War Blinded should be $3,000 per annum instead of the existing $2,750. No recommendation to this effect was included in the White Paper.

It would appear that the Woods Committee gave a great deal of attention to this particular matter. In particular, the Woods Committee stated that the "necessities" set out in the Table of Disabilities to describe the qualifications for attendance allowance were satisfactory in regard to those disabilities which involved impairment of mobility, but proposed that a special list of necessities be devised to describe areas which are peculiar to those who have lost their sight. In particular the needs should include such things as companionship, recreation and communication.

In this respect we refer to the Woods Report, volume 2, chapter 17, page 661, recommendation No. 80. We have been given to understand that this recommendation was accepted. This might conceivably mean that the Commission has prepared a special list of "necessities"; however, it seems obvious that recommendation 80 was intended to support an increase in attendance allowance for the totally blind, as suggested in recommendation 81. If the Commission has, in fact, prepared a new list of "necessities" for the totally blinded—but has rejected the idea of increasing the allowance for this group—surely the intent of Woods Committee recommendation No. 80 has missed its mark.

The total cost of implementing this recommendation could not be very large, bearing in mind that the number of totally blind is less than 40 across Canada.

Revision in Other Categories:

We were pleased to learn in February of 1969 that the Commission had issued a new directive to the effect that the Table of Disabilities was to be considered as a guideline only in the matter of rates of attendance allowance for specific disabilities. It is hoped that we can take this to mean that, where the need to increase attendance allowance in certain categories of multiple amputation is apparent, the Commission would have discretion to award the increase. It is our intention to survey our membership to determine instances where the existing allowance might appear to be insufficient, having regard for the Woods Committee recommendations, fol-

[Interpretation]

Allocation de soins pour les aveugles de guerre:

Le Comité Woods s'est dit d'avis que l'allocation de soins pour les aveugles de guerre devrait être de $3,000 par année plutôt que $2,750 comme à l'heure actuelle. Le Livre blanc ne renferme aucune recommandation en ce sens.

Il semblerait que le Comité Woods s'est longuement penché sur la question. Il affirmait notamment que les «nécessités» figurant dans le Tableau des infirmités comme justification de l'allocation de soins étaient valables dans le cas des infirmités qui réduisent la mobilité du sujet, mais il proposait la création d'une liste spéciale d'infirmités dans le cas des aveugles. Ces besoins doivent comprendre notamment la compagnie d'une autre personne, les activités récréatives et les communications.

Nous nous reportons à cet égard au Rapport Woods, volume 2, chapitre 17, page 756, recommandation n° 80. On nous a donné à entendre que cette recommandation avait été acceptée. Cela pourrait vouloir dire, on le conçoit, que la Commission a dressé une liste spéciale de «nécessités»; toutefois, il apparaît évident que la recommandation n° 80 se voulait en faveur d'une augmentation de l'allocation de soins pour les pensionnés atteints de cécité totale, comme le propose la recommandation n° 81. Si la Commission a effectivement dressé une nouvelle liste de «nécessités» pour les pensionnés complètement aveugles, mais qu'elle ait rejeté l'idée d'une augmentation pour ce goupe, on n'a certes pas respecté l'intention de la recommandation n° 80 du Comité Woods.

L'adoption de cette recommandation n'entraînerait pas des déboursés tellement considérables, vu que le nombre de pensionnés complètement aveugles ne dépasse pas 40.

Révision des autres catégories:

Nous avons appris avec satisfaction en février 1969 que la Commission avait donné une nouvelle directive établissant que le Tableau des invalidités n'est qu'un guide devant servir à fixer les taux des allocations de soins pour certaines invalidités données. Cela signifie donc, espérons-nous, que la Commission sera autorisée à augmenter l'allocation de soins dans certaines catégories d'amputations multiples, lorsque cela lui paraîtra nécessaire. Nous avons l'intention de mener une enquête auprès de nos membres pour déterminer les cas où l'allocation actuelle semble insuffisante, compte tenu des recommandations du Comité Woods, après quoi lowing which we would of course suggest that the pensioner make application to the Commission to use its discretionary powers to approve an increase, on the understanding that any limitation which may have applied to date in the Table of Disabilities can be exceeded, as that table is now to be considered as a guideline only.

I will stop at this point for questions.

The Chairman: Have members any questions for Mr. Lemay?

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, earlier on the witness was talking about the Syme's Amputation. I am not familiar with what that is. Could he explain it to me?

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, a Syme's Amputation is rated the same as a below-knee amputation, but in the Syme's part of his ankle is left. In other words, instead of a four or four-and-a-half inch stump below the knee he has probably eight-and-a-half or nine inches below the knee. He also can make some use of the bottom of his foot for weight-bearing. He normally cannot take all of his weight on it, but some of it he can. That is basically the difference between the Syme's and the below-knee.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, further there was some discussion about attendance allowances for those receiving less than the maximum rate and for those receiving the maximum rate. I gather that perhaps a difference is proposed between the two, and I am not sure of the difference. Could this be further explained to me?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, the Woods Committee recommended that for those at the maximum rate, if in a hospital for departmental treatment, the attendance allowance should be continued while they were in hospital. This provision is already in effect for the war-blinded and it is in effect in a different way for two months for the paraplegic, but it does not apply to the four triple amputees we have in Canada. If they go into the hospital their attendance allowance is cut off.

So the recommendation in the Woods Committee, which we endorse, is that for the nous inviterions évidemment les intéressés à demander à la Commission d'approuver une augmentation en vertu de ses pouvoirs discrétionnaires, étant donné que toute limite applicable jusqu'ici dans le Tableau des infirmités ne doit désormais servir que de guide

Je m'arrêterai ici afin que l'on puisse poser des questions.

Le président: Certains de nos membres ont-ils des questions à poser à M. Lemay?

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, le témoin nous a parlé précédemment de l'amputation Syme. J'ignore ce dont il s'agit. Pourrait-il me l'expliquer?

Le président: Monsieur Chadderton.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, le taux d'invalidité pour une amputation Syme est le même que pour une amputation sous le genou, à cette différence près que dans l'amputation Syme on laisse à l'amputé une partie de la cheville. En d'autres termes, au lieu d'avoir en-dessous du genou un moignon de quatre pouces ou quatre pouces et demi, il aura probablement sous le genou un moignon de huit pouces et demi ou neuf pouces. Il peut également faire quelque usage de la partie arrière du pied pour prendre appui. Normalement, cela ne suffit pas à supporter tout le poids de son corps, mais il peut le faire jusqu'à un certain point. C'est ce qui constitue la différence essentielle entre une Syme et une amputation sous le genou.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, on a discuté par la suite des subventions de garde pour ceux qui reçoivent moins que le taux maximum et pour ceux qui reçoivent le taux maximum. J'en déduis que l'on envisage peut-être de faire une différence entre les deux, mais je n'ai pas très bien compris cette différence. Pourrait-on me fournir des explications sur ce point?

M. Chadderton: M. le président, la Commission Woods a recommandé que ceux qui sont au taux maximum continuent à percevoir leur subvention de garde pendant qu'ils étaient hospitalisés, si c'était pour un traitement ministériel. Cette clause est déjà appliquée pour les aveugles de guerre et elle l'est également, sous une forme un peu différente pour les paraplégiques depuis deux mois, mais elle n'est pas appliquable aux quatre amputés triples que nous avons au Canada. Lorsqu'ils doivent être hospitalisés, on leur supprime leur subvention de garde.

La recommandation de la Commission Woods, que nous appelions entièrement, est maximum rate payment of the attendance allowance should continue while they are in hospital for treatment. For those in receipt of less than the maximum rate the Woods Committee proposed two months' continuation, whereas the White Paper proposes normally one month.

[Text]

Mr. Weatherhead: And what did the White Paper propose for those receiving the maximum rate?

Mr. Chadderton: The same thing—continuation for one month. And we assume that the provision already in the Act for the war-blinded will not be disturbed, so that the war-blinded would continue to receive it indefinitely.

We have no information on how the paraplegics would be covered, because they are covered under the treatment regulations of the Department. They get two months. But the net result of the White Paper proposal on attendance allowance for those in receipt of the maximum amount would cover exactly four people, as we see it. These are the four triple amputees in Canada, although there may be other people of a disease nature who are receiving the maximum. We do not know about that. But it is the four people who were left out.

• 1135

Mr. Weatherhead: I gather there has been some mention of a means test that would perhaps allow more than one month's attendance allowance while in hospital. Do you have any details on that, or is it still pretty vague?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is too vague. As we read the White Paper it states that attendance allowance—and it does not state at what rate; presumably at any rate—could be carried on beyond the period of one month where there is financial hardship. This, to us, would mean the application of a means test, sir.

The Chairman: Only in regard to the extension.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes; the extention beyond one month for attendance allowance.

[Interpretation]

que l'on devrait continuer à verser la subvention de garde aux amputés du taux d'invalidité maximum lorsqu'ils sont hospitalisés à des fins de traitement. Pour ceux qui touchent moins que le taux maximum, la Commission Woods a proposé que la subvention soit encore payée pendant deux mois, tandis que le Livre Blanc propose normalement pendant un mois.

M. Weatherhead: Et qu'est-ce que le Livre Blanc a proposé pour ceux qui reçoivent le taux maximum?

M. Chadderton: La même chose, paiement de la subvention de garde pendant un mois. Nous pensons d'ailleurs que la clause déjà comprise dans la loi sur les aveugles de guerre ne sera pas modifiée, de telle sorte qu'ils puissent continuer à la toucher indéfiniment.

Nous n'avons aucune information en ce qui concerne le régime pour les paraplégiques, parce qu'ils tombent sous le coût des règlements de traitement du ministère. Ils obtiennent deux mois. Mais le résultat de la proposition du Livre Blanc au sujet de la subvention de garde pour ceux qui touchent le montant maximum toucherait exactement quatre personnes, si nous comprenons bien. Ce sont les quatre amputés triples du Canada, bien qu'il puisse y avoir d'autre gens qui perçoivent le maximum pour des raisons de maladie. Nous n'en savons rien. Il s'agit de quatre personnes qui avaient été omises.

M. Weatherhead: Il me semble que l'on a également fait mention d'un contrôle de moyen d'existence qui accorderait peut-être plus d'un mois de subvention de garde pendant que l'amputé est hospitalisé. Pouvez-vous nous donner quelques détails sur ce point, ou est-ce encore quelque chose de vague?

M. Chadderton: Je ne pense pas que ce soit encore bien vague, M. le président. Si nous lisons le Livre Blanc nous constatons qu'il mentionne que la subvention de garde (et ne dit pas à quel taux, mais il s'agit vraisemblablement de n'importe quel taux), pourrait être prolongée au-delà de la période d'un mois en cas de difficulté financière. Selon nous, cela signifierait le recours à un contrôle de moyen d'existence, monsieur.

Le président: Simplement en ce qui concerne l'extension.

M. Chadderton: Oui, l'extension de la subvention pour frais de garde au-delà d'un mois.

[Texte]

Mr. Weatherhead: Was there any mention of whether it should be a means test relative to income or to assets, or do you have any information on that?

Mr. Chadderton: I believe the words were "financial hardship", or it might have just said "hardship", now that I recall. We did wish to point out—and I think it was referred to the other day—that as recently as February 20, 1969, there was an amendment to the Table of Disabilities of the Canadian Pension Commission in which it was stated:

> The fundamental principle in the award and level of Attendance Allowance is based on the need of attendance and thus there is no means test.

Presumably, Mr. Chairman, this was the policy of the Commission at February 20, 1969.

We submit that the White Paper is deviating from that principle if it suggests that attendance allowance could be continued beyond a month on the basis of financial hardship.

Mr. Weatherhead: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanley Knowles had his hand up, and then Mr. Whicher.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I have just a question or two. The witnesses have made it clear—and I think most of us agree with them— that they would like the pension payments to multiple amputees put on a statutory bases—and I am not talking now about the amount but the principle—so that it is a matter of right, not a matter of welfare.

May I ask if the witnesses are asking for the same kind of provision in relation to attendance allowance; that you would like some precise table so that a veteran would know what he is going to get rather than having it at the discretion of the Commission?

I see that Mr. Chadderton is getting ready to answer. Perhaps I might just add one supplementary to it. If you would like to have it precise, does it need to be in the Act or would it be satisfactory if it were precisely covered in the treatment regulations?

Mr. Chadderton: I think, Mr. Chairman, the answer to the first question is that undoubt-

[Interprétation]

M. Weatherhead: A-t-on mentionné s'il s'agirait d'un contrôle de moyen d'existence portant sur le revenu ou sur les avoirs, ou avez-vous certains renseignements sur ce sujet?

M. Chadderton: Je crois que les termes utilisés étaient «difficulté financière» à moins qu'il s'agisse simplement de «difficulté», pour autant que je m'en souvienne. Nous avons voulu souligner (et je pense qu'il y a été fait allusion l'autre jour) que tout récemment, c'est-à-dire le 20 février 1969, on a apporté au tableau des invalidités de la Commission canadienne des pensions une modification disant:

> «Le principe fondamental à la base de l'allocation et du montant de l'allocation des soins se fonde sur la nécessité de ceux-ci et n'est aucunement assujetti aux moyens d'existence du pensionné.»

Il semble donc, M. le Président, que telle était la politique de la Commission le 20 février 1969.

Nous prétendons que le Livre Blanc s'éloigne de ce principe s'il propose que la subvention pour frais de garde soit poursuivie au-delà d'un mois du fait de difficultés financières.

M. Weatherhead: Je vous remercie.

Le président: Je donne la parole à M. Stanley Knowles et je viens ensuite à M. Whicher.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): M. le Président, je voudrais poser une ou deux questions. Les témoins ont clairement fait savoir (et je pense que la plupart d'entre nous sont d'accord avec eux) qu'ils aimeraient que les paiements de pension à des amputés multiples soient incorporés dans une loi (je ne parle pas ici du montant, mais simplement du principe) et il s'agit donc d'une question de droit, et non pas d'une question de bien-être.

Je voudrais demander si les témoins souhaitent le même genre de dispositions légales au sujet de la subvention pour frais de garde; l'établissement d'un barême précis de façon à ce que l'ancien combattant sache ce qu'il va obtenir, plutôt que d'être livré à l'arbitraire de la Commission?

Je vois que M. Chadderton s'apprête à me répondre. Qu'il me laisse cependant le temps de poser encore une question supplémentaire. J'aimerais encore que l'on précise s'il serait nécessaire que cela soit incorporé à la loi, ou s'il suffirait au contraire qu'il en soit parlé avec précision dans les règlements en matière de traitement?

M. Chadderton: Je pense, M. le Président, que je puis répondre à la première question

[Text]

edly we would like it to be covered in a statutory form of some kind. The reason for that is that a triple amputee facing a trip to the hospital must necessarily sit down with his wife and discuss the finances of the thing. He has no idea how long he is going to be there, so he says, "Well, the pension cheque will come in and it will include an attendance allowance and so much is paid for this, that and the other thing", and that money is budgeted out. But consider his situation when he says, "Well, the minute I go in it will be cut off." The proposal in the White Paper is only putting off the evil day, sir, by 30 days. He says, "Well, I can go into the hospital now, and for 30 days they are going to cover me", but he has no idea whether or not he is going to come out. Therefore, he would say, "Well, if I go in, I must try to get out within 30 days, otherwise we have to reduce our budget again". There is just no protection, sir, unless he is guaranteed the same provision as the government has seen fit to guarantee, for instance, for the war-blinded

Whether it is done in the form of treatment regulations or in the form of the Pension Act, I do not think we would care a whit, sir, as long as it was a guarantee in writing. But at the moment nothing at all is done for him, and the proposal in the White Paper is to place it all on a discretionary basis after 30 days. We submit, sir—and I do not like to use the word—that this is inhumane. There is just no other word for it. If you saw the cases we handle, for that type of situation to arise and the triple amputee having to ask himself the question, "Can I afford to stay in hospital and take this treatment?" is ridiculous.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman. From your experience what happens in many cases where he has to stay in? Surely you must have gone through that experience. Do you have organizations or somebody who will make an attempt to help the family out? What is actually happening?

en disant qu'il ne fait aucun doute que nous aimerions que la question fasse l'objet d'une disposition légale sous quelque forme que ce soit. La raison en est qu'un amputé triple qui se trouve dans l'obligation de se faire hospitaliser doit de toute évidence pouvoir discuter avec son épouse de l'aspect financier de cette question. Il n'a aucune idée de la durée de cette hospitalisation, et il dira donc: «Tu sais, tu vas recevoir le chèque de ma pension et il comprendra une subvention pour frais de garde, et autant pour ceci, et puis pour cela, et puis encore pour cela» et il peut donc établir un budget précis. Mais imaginez dans quelle situation il se trouve s'il doit dire: «Tu sais, à partir de l'instant où je quitte la maison, la subvention sera supprimée». La proposition contenue dans le Livre Blanc ne fait que repousser de trente jours cette échéance tragique. Tout ce que cet amputé peut dire à sa femme est: «Tu sais, je puis me faire hospitaliser maintenant et pendant trente jours je continuerai à toucher ma subvention», mais ce qu'il ne sait pas, c'est s'il sortira véritablement de l'hôpital à la fin des trente jours. Il se trouvera donc dans l'obligation de dire: «Si je me fais hospitaliser, il faudra que je m'arrange pour sortir au bout de trente jours, sinon nous devrons encore réduire notre budget». Il n'y a donc aucune protection, monsieur, à moins que le gouvernement lui accorde le genre de protection qu'il accorde par exemple aux aveugles de guerre.

Que cela se fasse sous la forme de règlements en matière de traitement ou par une modification de la Loi sur les pensions, peu nous importe, monsieur, pourvu que la garantie soit donnée par écrit. Mais pour l'instant, rien n'a été fait pour lui et la proposition contenue dans le Livre blanc est de laisser toute décision à la discrétion de la Commission au bout de trente jours. C'est pourquoi j'affirme, monsieur (et j'utilise ce mot à regret) que cela est inhumain. Mais il n'y a pas d'autres termes pour cela. Si vous pouviez voir les cas auxquels nous devons faire face, lorsque de telles situations se présentent et lorsqu'un triple amputé doit se poser la question: «Puis-je me permettre de me faire hospitaliser pour recevoir le traitement dont j'ai besoin?» c'est vraiment ridicule.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Je voudrais poser une question supplémentaire, monsieur le président. D'après votre expérience, que se passe-t-il dans la plupart des cas lorsque l'amputé doit rester hospitalisé plus longtemps? Je pense que vous avez certainement dû faire une expérience de ce genre. Existe-t-il des organisations où quelqu'un qui saurait au moins aider la famille? Que se passe-t-il en réalité?

[Texte]

Mr. Chadderton: I can tell you that, Mr. Chairman. Our branch will go to the man or to the wife, and will say. "We have certain welfare funds." That is the worst possible thing to say to him. They are very proud people; they bear the scars of war. Put on that basis in nine cases out of ten, sir, they refuse it.

We are quite willing to assist them on a financial basis from our organization if that is required. It is the principle of the thing—that is an awful word to bring out—but it is the principle of the thing that destroys them. I might also say that I know of cases where the triple amputee has actually signed himself out of the hospital and gone home against the doctor's orders because he says: "I just cannot afford to stay in the hospital and I will not take welfare hand-outs."

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, most of my questions have been answered very well. I am certainly against any means test as far as this attendance allowance goes. However, I see that there are 2,000 receiving attendance allowance in the forces at this time. How many of these would be wives or people who are connected with the family? What about instances where we have someone else looking after the veteran who is not connected with the family? Is there a percentage? Do you know how many of these people would be involved? I am thinking of one particular case where certainly this person did not need the money. Keeping in the background that I am against the means test, I can still see where there could be the possibility of criticisms if there were a substantial number who were not wives.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I think of the 2,000 in receipt of attendance allowance there would be approximately 175—excuse me, the war blinded do not receive the maximum—so there would be approximately 150 in receipt of the maximum attendance allowance. Of those 150 people there probably would be—this is again, of course, an approximate figure, it is a guess—there would be approximately 30 to 40 who hire an attendant. In the remainder of the cases what they do rather than hiring an attendant is get married and the wife looks after them. However, I submit to you that that wife is in a very peculiar position, or a very different position from the ordinary wife because she cannot work, she cannot take any training for employment. If he goes into the hospital she cannot rush down to Manpower and say: "Find me a job; my husband has gone into

M. Chadderton: Je puis vous répondre, monsieur le président. Notre direction ira voir cet homme, ou son épouse, et leur dira: «Nous pouvons gérer les fonds de bienfaisance». C'est la pire des choses à leur dire. Ce sont des gens extrêmement fiers, ils portent les cicatrices des blessures qu'ils ont reçues à la guerre. Lorsque les choses leur sont présentées de cette façon, neuf fois sur dix ils refusent. Nous sommes prêts à leur accorder une aide financière de notre organisation, si c'est nécessaire. C'est le principe de la chose, quel affreux mot à employer, mais c'est le principe de la chose qui les détruit. Je pourrais ajouter qu'il est des cas, à ma connaissance, où un amputé de trois membres a réellement signé son propre congé de l'hôpital et est retourné chez-lui contre les ordres du médecin parce que, dit-il: «Je n'ai pas les moyens de rester à l'hôpital et je refuse d'accepter l'aumône».

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, la plupart de mes questions ont reçu une réponse satisfaisante. Je suis sûrement contre toute forme d'évaluation des moyens lorsqu'il s'agit d'allocations de soins. Cependant, je sais que 2,000 personnes reçoivent des allocations de soins à l'heure actuelle. Parmi celles-ci, combien y en a-t-il qui comptent parmi des épouses ou de la parenté? Qu'arrive-t-il dans le cas où la personne qui veille sur l'ancien combattant n'a aucun lien de parenté avec celui-ci? Connaît-on le pourcentage de ces cas? Connaissez-vous le nombre des personnes ainsi impliquées? Je songe à un cas où cette personne n'avait sûrement pas besoin de l'argent. Faisant abstraction de mon opposition à l'évaluation des moyens, je ne puis me retenir de penser à la possibilité de soulever des critiques s'il arrivait qu'un bon nombre de ces personnes ne fussent pas des épouses.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, je songe aux 2,000 personnes qui reçoivent des allocations de soins. Il y en aurait environ 175 (pardon, les aveugles de guerre ne reçoivent pas le plein montant), de sorte qu'environ 150 reçoivent le montant maximum d'allocation de soins. Parmi ces 150 personnes, il y en aurait probablement (ici également il s'agit d'un chiffre approximatif,) il y en aurait à peu près de 30 à 40 qui retiennent les services d'un aide. Dans le reste des cas, plutôt que d'embaucher un aide, ils se marient et la femme veille sur eux. Cependant, je signale que cette femme se trouve dans une position très particulière, ou du moins dans une position très différente de celle de la femme ordinaire, parce qu'elle ne peut pas travailler et ne peut pas suivre des cours de formation qui lui permettraient de se trouver de l'emploi. Si son mari retourne à l'hôpital, elle ne the hospital," because she has no training. Not only that, sir, but she does not know how soon her husband is going to come back again.

Mr. Whicher: That is right.

Mr. Chadderton: We submit the only humane thing to do in this case is to carry the attendance allowance on. Somebody might say: "Well, what are you arguing about? If there is financial hardship they have already agreed they will carry it on". Perhaps we are arguing principles, perhaps we are. Perhaps there may be the odd case where if he got down on his knees, under this hardship principle he would qualify. We submit, and this is not the time to argue it I am sure, that to forsake that principle of allowing that man to have his attendance allowance continue on a means test is going about it the wrong way. It is completely ignoring that man's mental outlook his psychological well-being. For the odd case where the government might actually have to continue the attendance allowance of $250 a month you are dealing with another 140 souls where they say: "If you do not want to give it to me, then I do not want it on any other basis." I am sure most of them would never apply.

Mr. Whicher: I just have one more question. I am thinking of an instance where a chap was on a very small pension and it was brought up by a War Veterans Allowance, and he became incapacitated and it was necessary that he have somebody attend him. Do the 2,000 attendance allowances mentioned in your brief include the total for all the services in Canada? Would it take into account a case such as the one I have mentioned or is this strictly to do with pensioners?

Mr. Chadderton: So far as we know this is the total of those in receipt of attendance allowance. Bear in mind if a man who is on War Veterans Allowance is in receipt of attendance allowance, he must also have a pension. Although it might only be a 5 per cent pension, he is a pensioner, you see.

The Chairman: Are there other questions?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg-North Centre): I understand no one who is only on the War peut pas courrir au bureau de la Main-d'œuvre et dire: «Trouvez-moi un emploi, mon mari est retourné à l'hôpital», pour la bonne raison qu'elle n'a aucune formation. Ce n'est pas tout, monsieur, elle ne sait même pas quand son mari reviendra.

M. Whicher: C'est exact.

M. Chadderton: Nous posons en fait que le seul geste humanitaire possible dans un tel cas est de continuer à verser l'allocation de soins. On pourrait dire: «A quoi bon tous ces débats? S'il existe des difficultés financières, ils ont déjà consenti à continuer de verser l'allocation.» Nous débattons peut-être un principe. Le cas peut à la rigueur se présenter où, en suppliant à genoux, on lui accordera ce qu'il demande, en vertu du principe relatif aux difficultés financières. Nous posons en fait, et ma foi ce n'est pas le moment d'argumenter à ce sujet, que de renoncer à ce principe et de permettre à cet homme de continuer à recevoir son allocation de soins à condition qu'il se soumette à une évaluation des moyens, c'est s'attaquer au problème sous un mauvais angle. C'est faire fi du bien-être psychologique de cet homme. Quant aux rares cas où le gouvernement pourrait continuer à verser l'allocation de soins mensuelle de $250, vous devez tenir compte des 140 autres personnes qui affirment: «Si vous ne voulez pas me l'accorder, eh bien! je n'en veux pas à d'autres conditions». Je suis sûr que la plupart n'en feraient jamais la demande.

M. Whicher: Je ne désire poser qu'une autre question. Je songe au cas où un type recevait une très modeste pension qui lui était versée en vertu des allocation aux anciens combattants. Avec le temps il devint invalide et dut recourrir aux bons offices d'un aide. Le chiffre de 2,000 allocations de soins mentionné dans votre mémoire englobe-t-il toutes les Forces armées du Canada? Tiendrait-il compte d'un cas tel que celui que je viens de mentionner ou s'adresserait-il directement aux seuls pensionnaires?

M. Chadderton: A notre connaissance, ceci représente le chiffre global des bénéficiaires d'allocations de soins. Il faut se souvenir que si un homme figure sur la liste des allocations aux anciens combattants et reçoit également une allocation de soins, il reçoit également une pension. Même si c'est une pension de seulement 5 p. 100, il est un pensionnaire.

Le président: Désire-t-on poser d'autres questions?

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-North Centre): Je crois comprendre que la personne qui n'appa-

Veterans Allowance can get an attendance allowance.

Mr. Chadderton: No, sir.

Lt. Col. Lambert: I think when I spoke about it at the beginning, Mr. Chairman, I said there are a great number of heroes in this country. I am not speaking about the Department of Veterans Affairs but I am speaking about the people who care for Canada's war disabled and I think that they should be recognized. I have a high regard for the Department of Veterans Affairs, but they are not the people who are caring for the disabled people of this country. The people who are caring for them are those who love them. I would like to pay my tribute to them because my little sweetheart that I had for 47 years was a nursing sister, and what a difference it made to my life when she was called away and I was left on my own.

The Chairman: Yes, I am sure we all agree with what you say Mr. Lambert. Mr. Weatherhead and then Mr. Legault.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, the arguments in favour of carrying on the attendance allowance, particularly the ones in receipt of the maximum amount, I think are very good. I wonder why the arguments are not almost as good for those who receive, say, 75 per cent of the attendance allowance or this sort of thing. Would they not be missing the income almost as much as those in receipt of the total amount? May I have some comments on that?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, we have paraphrased in this brief the findings of Mr. Justice Woods and his people on it. They felt that the greatest anomaly was that involving those in receipt of the maximum rate. They felt that the war blinded should be put up to the maximum rate; so that takes care of that group. There is another small group, double amputees, whose average attendance allowance is around $2,400, and I would say if this Committee saw fit to recommend that their attendance allowance be carried on, we would have no objection. However, we did not raise this point when the Woods Committee omitted them from their recommendation; so in all fairness, we agreed that below the maximum rate if they could be carried on for two months that would be considered as an acceptable comprise. So far as I know, our Association still feels that way. In other raît que sur la liste des allocations aux anciens combattants ne peut recevoir une allocation de soins.

M. Chadderton: Non, monsieur.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Si je me souviens bien, monsieur le président, lorsque j'en ai parlé sur la question, au début, j'ai dit que ce pays comptait un grand nombre de héros. Je ne parle pas du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, mais des gens qui s'occupent des invalides de guerre du Canada et d'après moi, ils méritent notre reconnaissance. J'ai beaucoup d'estime pour le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, mais ce ne sont pas eux qui prennent soin des invalides de ce pays. Ceux qui prennent soin d'eux sont ceux qui les aiment. Je désire leur rendre hommage parce que ma petite chérie que j'ai eue pendant 47 ans était une infirmière et quelle différence dans ma vie lorsqu'elle a disparu et que je dus me tirer d'affaires tout seul.

Le président: Oui, nous sommes tous d'accord avec vous là-dessus, monsieur Lambert. Monsieur Weatherhead et puis Monsieur Legault.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, les raisons favorables au maintien du versement des allocations de soins, particulièrement à ceux qui reçoivent le montant maximum, sont excellentes. Je me demande pourquoi les arguments ne sont pas aussi bons à l'égard de ceux qui reçoivent, mettons, 75 p. 100 de l'allocation de soins ou quelque chose de ce genre. Ne souffriront-ils pas de cette absence de revenu presque autant que ceux qui reçoivent le plein montant? Pourrait-on m'expliquer cet état de choses?

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, dans ce mémoire, nous avons paraphrasé les conclusions du juge Woods et de ses gens sur le sujet. Ils estimaient que la plus grande anomalie était celle qui a trait aux bénéficiaires du taux maximum et que les aveugles de guerre devraient recevoir le tarif maximum; ceci règle leur cas. Il est un autre petit groupe, celui des amputés de deux membres dont l'allocation de soins moyenne est d'environ $2,400, et si le Comité juge à propos de recommander que leur allocation de soins soit maintenu, nous n'y aurions aucune objection. Cependant, nous n'avons pas soulevé cette question lorsque le Comité Woods a omis d'en faire mention dans ses recommandations. Par conséquent, en toute justice, nous avons convenu qu'en-dessous du taux maximum, s'ils pouvaient continuer de leur verser leur allocation pendant deux mois, cela constituerait words, if somebody wanted to do something more for them than the Woods Committee recommended, fine, we would have no objection.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, in Mr. Chadderton's experience do most of these veterans just go in for a few weeks or a month or two? Do we not have a number that go in for a much longer period. What is his experience on that?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, I think our experience would indicate that there really is no figure, they vary so greatly. A lot of them, of course, are short term; they go in to have a stump repaired or something of this nature. Bearing in mind the seriousness of their disability, the hospital term would be beyond one month. As you realize it is just a guess, but I would say it is two and a half to three months on the average for these people. I am speaking about amputees.

When a paraplegic goes into the hospital that is a very serious matter. I mean, it is his bladder or internal problems and he may be in there as long as six months.

Mr. Legault: Mr. Chairman, my question is related to one brought out by Mr. Whicher awhile ago. Some figures were given on those receiving the maximum attendance allowance who had no family whatsoever, and the answer was that in most cases you gave an approximate figure. You said that they got married or something like that; that is very easy to say but I do not believe in practice that it is always the case. I am sure there must be cases of people who cannot cope with the situation, and so they remain in the hospital because $3,000 would not be sufficient. It would be a help to those related but such a one could not get employment. We were looking for an example awhile ago and I think we did have one here last week; the case of the gentleman who was sitting at the end of the table.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Clarke of the Canadian Paraplegic Association.

Mr. Legault: I believe he has an attendant and I had something like that in mind. We should bear in mind the cost of maintaining un compromis acceptable. A ma connaissance, notre Association est toujours de cet avis. Autrement dit, si quelqu'un voulait faire davantage pour eux que ne le recommandait le Comité Woods, très bien, nous n'aurions aucune objection.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, si l'on s'en rapporte à l'expérience de monsieur Chadderton, est-ce que la plupart des anciens combattants se bornent à passer quelques semaines ou un mois ou deux à l'hôpital? semaines ou un mois ou deux à l'hôpital? N'y en a-t-il pas un certain nombre qui y passent une période de temps beaucoup plus longue? Qu'en est-il, d'après son expérience?

M. Chadderton: Oui, notre expérience semblerait indiquer qu'il n'y a réellement pas de chiffre bien établi, la durée de leur séjour varie tellement. Beaucoup d'entre eux, évidemment, y font un court séjour; ils y vont faire réparer un moignon ou quelque chose du genre. Étant donné la gravité de leur infirmité, leur séjour à l'hôpital se prolongerait pendant plus d'un mois. Vous comprenez sans doute qu'il s'agit d'une simple conjecture, et pourtant je me hasarderais à dire que ces gens y restent en moyenne de deux mois et demi à trois mois. Je parle des amputés.

Lorsqu'un paraplégique est conduit à l'hôpital, le cas est grave. Il souffre probablement de la vessie ou de maux internes, et il peut alors rester jusqu'à six mois à l'hôpital.

M. Legault: Monsieur le président, ma question a trait à un problème soulevée par monsieur Whicher il y a quelque temps. Des chiffres furent fournis à l'égard de ceux qui reçoivent l'allocation de soins maximum et qui n'ont aucune famille, on est arrivé à la conclusion suivante que dans la plupart des cas le chiffre fourni était approximatif. Vous avez dit qu'ils se mariaient ou quelque chose du genre. C'est facile à dire, mais je ne pense pas qu'en réalité les choses se passent ainsi. Il y a sûrement des gens qui ne peuvent pas faire face à la situation, et par conséquent, ils restent à l'hôpital, parce qu'ils ne peuvent pas s'en tirer avec $3,000. Cet argent serait d'un certain secours à un parent, mais une telle personne serait incapable d'occuper un emploi. Nous cherchions tout à l'heure un exemple et je me rappelle que nous en avions un, ici même, la semaine dernière, la personne assise au bout de la table.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur Clarke, de l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques.

M. Legault: Je crois qu'il a un aide et c'est à cela que je pensais. Il faut tenir compte des frais d'entretien d'une telle personne à l'hôpisuch a person in the hospital. I am perhaps referring to the setup that we have for our elderly people in old-age homes, where a pension of $109.20 per month is paid once a person attains a certain age, yet the cost of maintaining such a person in the home for the aged is closer to about $200 per month.

An hon. Member: More than that.

Mr. Legault: Yes, it is more than that in quite a few cases. In such a situation do you not believe that in order to give a person the privilege of circulating by having an attendant at all times that he should be considered for a greater allowance so he could get such an attendant? I do not believe that $3,000 per year would be sufficient to pay for an independent attendant.

Mr. Chadderton: I certainly agree, Mr. Chairman, that if he is in a position where he actually has to hire an attendant—and this would take in some 30 to 35 people across Canada—$3,000 does not go very far towards it. Perhaps we have been remiss, in making representations to the Woods Committee, in not recommending a higher increase for that type of person, because I think we could quite easily support it. We are in the position get the facts—you would very soon find that $3,000 would not cover 50 per cent of the cost of hiring an attendant.

Mr. Legault: Thank you.

Mr. Chadderton: Incidentally, the gentleman you saw here the other day also of course has a wife who is crippled and, consequently, he has to pay the attendant you saw here in the neighbourhood of $6 or $7,000 a year. This gives you a pretty good idea of his particular problem.

Mr. Legault: Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We are asking questions as we progress, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, we are.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): May I revert and ask questions on page 2, about the third paragraph, which I would like to quote:

> It would seem that, if nothing else, this is a strong indication that there is a great tal. Je pense à l'organisation de nos foyers pour vieillards où l'on exige une pension de $109.20 par mois pour les personnes d'un certain âge, mais où le coût d'entretien de l'une de ces personnes se rapproche bien plus du chiffre de $200 par mois.

Une voix: Plus que cela.

M. Legault: En effet, c'est plus que cela dans bien des cas. Dans une telle conjoncture, ne croyez-vous pas que pour permettre à une personne de se déplacer avec le secours d'un aide à plein temps, on pourrait songer à lui accorder une allocation plus généreuse, afin de lui permettre de se procurer une aide. A mon avis, une allocation de $3,000 par année ne suffit pas à payer le salaire d'un aide indépendant.

M. Chadderton: Je conviens volontiers, monsieur le président, que s'il se trouve dans un état tel qu'il lui faut engager un aide (et ceci s'appliquerait à quelque 30 ou 35 personnes à travers le Canada), il n'ira pas loin avec $3,000. Nous avons peut-être péché par négligence lorsque nous avons présenté nos recommandations au Comité Woods, en ne demandant pas une allocation plus généreuse pour ce genre de personne, car à mon avis, nous pourrions très facilement en défrayer le coût. Nous ne l'avons malheureusement pas recommandée, mais d'après notre expérience, et il serait facile de compiler les données vous vous apercevriez très vite qu'un montant de $3,000 ne couvre pas même 50 p. 100 du coût de l'embauche d'un aide.

M. Legault: Merci.

M. Chadderton: Incidemment, le monsieur que vous avez vu ici l'autre jour a également une femme infirme et, par conséquent, il lui faut payer l'aide que vous avez vu ici avec lui dans les environs de $6,000 à $7,000 par année. Ceci vous donne une bonne idée de la situation particulière de cet homme.

M. Legault: Merci.

Le président: D'autres questions?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Nous pouvons poser des questions au fur et à mesure que nous avançons, monsieur le président?

Le président: Oui, nous le pouvons.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Puis-je retourner au troisième paragraphe que j'aimerais citer, et poser des questions à son sujet:

> Il semblerait, à défaut d'autre chose, que ce soit un indice très marqué que la Loi deal wrong with the Pension Act, and the way it is administered.

Now, is there something that you are trying to tell us here, particularly in respect of the last part of the sentence which reads "and the way it is administered"? I think that when such a statement as that appears in a brief you possibly should give an explanation.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, speaking for our delegation, I am very glad you raised that because, in the first place, we should possibly say right away that it is not intended as a personal slight upon the people administering the Pension Act. These people are with us, they are among friends and we are among friends when we are with them. But when you look at the total 148 recommendations of the Woods Committee Report and realize that a great many of them deal with the administration and suggested improvements, it has to be said that the Woods Committee found quite a bit of fault with the general administration of the Commission. This is what we are saying.

• 1150

Perhaps I should say, Mr. Chairman, to my Vice-President and my President that I think perhaps the way we stated it there is open to the wrong interpretation. We did not mean that a certain person or certain persons within the Pension Commission were not doing their jobs, we meant that the establishment was not as we saw it, the ground rules were not as we saw them and that there are a lot of proposed recommendations in here which we hope would be accepted.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I know it is close to the lunch hour but I think there is another paragraph we should mention. It is on page 10, part of section (2):

> ...by way of training or other preparation for a peacetime occupation—and any moneys he is able to earn with the abilities which have been left to him, despite his war service, should not in any way affect his right to pension.

I take it from that that if one is disabled, and he could be very badly disabled, and has the initiative to try to do something he is confronted with the fact that if he does create additional revenue by whatever he is capable sur les pension, de même que son administration, comportent de nombreux défauts.

Y a-t-il autre chose que vous cherchez à nous communiquer, tout spécialement en ce qui a trait à la dernière partie de la phrase qui se lit ainsi «de même que son administration»? A mon avis, lorsqu'un mémoire contient pareil énoncé, celui-ci exige des explications.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, qu'il me soit permis de dire, au nom de notre délégation, comme je suis heureux que vous ayez soulevé cette question, parce qu'en premier lieu, nous désirons déclarer dès maintenant que la remarque susmentionnée ne doit certes pas être interprétée comme un affront aux administrateurs de la Loi sur les pensions. Ces gens sont ici au milieu d'amis, nous les considérons comme tels, et nous travaillons en collaboration. Cependant, lorsque vous songez que le Rapport du Comité Woods comporte 148 recommandations, dont une bonne partie s'adressent à l'administration et qu'il propose des améliorations, il faut reconnaître que le Comité Woods est d'avis que tout n'allait pas pour le mieux dans le meilleur des mondes à l'administration générale de la Commission. C'est ce que nous désirons souligner. Je devrais peut-être, monsieur le président, dire à mon vice-président et à mon président que la façon dont nous avons exprimé notre pensée prête à fausse interprétation. Nous ne cherchions pas à dire qu'une certaine personne ou certaines personnes au sein de la Commission canadienne des pensions ne faisaient pas leur devoir, nous voulions simplement dire que l'organisation ne répondait pas à nos critères, non plus que les règles d'usage, et que nous espérions qu'une foule de recommandations du rapport seraient acceptées.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je sais que l'heure du déjeuner approche, mais il y a, à mon avis, un autre alinéa que nous devrions mentionner. C'est à la page 10, partie de l'article 2:

> ...en manière de formation ou autre préparation à un emploi de temps de paix, et l'argent qu'il peut gagner grâce aux aptitudes qui lui restent en dépit de son service en temps de guerre, ne devrait en aucune façon nuire à son droit à la pension.

Je déduis de cette citation que si un mutilé de guerre dont l'infirmité pourrait être très grave, a le courage de mettre à profit ce qui lui reste de talent malgré ce handicap, il s'aperçoit que s'il réussit à améliorer ainsi son of doing, it really goes against his own benefit because an equal amount is deducted immediately. Is that correct?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Then could this be explained to me.

Mr. Chadderton: I think I can explain, Mr. Chairman, why that is in the brief. We are somewhat alarmed about the fact that since 1965 at least the Minister of Veterans Affairs has been speaking about developing some new basis on which pensions shall be paid. Now, Mr. Guay, we do not know what that is. We have no idea what trend their discussions may be taking. We know that in some countries there is a form of supplement paid, but only to those who are in need. We know for instance, sir, that in 1954 the Canadian government attempted it. That is not a too well known fact, but in 1954 we did have something called the unemployability supplement, which meant that you could get 100 per cent pension and then if you could prove that you were unemployed you got a little extra on your pension cheque. A pretty good indication of the reaction to that among parliamentarians, veterans organizations and the public generally is that it only lasted about four or five months and then it was canned. But these are the types of things about which we in the veterans organization are extremely concerned right now, because the government studies are going on in-camera and we have no idea what they are doing. So all we can do at this point is try to stress the validity of the existing bases upon which pension is paid, and this is one of them, and if a man, despite the most severe handicap, is able to get out and perfect himself in some form of industry, as they say in the Pension Act now, he could make an extra $50,000 a year and it would not affect his right to pension.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there other questions that members want to ask? If not, perhaps this would be a good point at which to break.

We will resume at 2 o'clock this afternoon in this room.

[Interprétation]

revenu, il n'en tirera aucun profit parce qu'on retiendra un montant analogue sur sa pension. Est-ce exact?

Des voix: Non.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Alors, pourrait-on m'expliquer cela?

M. Chadderton: Je crois pouvoir expliquer, monsieur le président, pourquoi ce passage a été incorporé au mémoire. Ce n'est pas sans une certaine crainte que nous avons constaté que depuis 1965 au moins le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants parlait d'élaborer une nouvelle base pour les pensions d'invalidité. Veuillez croire, monsieur Guay, que nous ne savons pas ce que c'est. Nous ignorons dans quelle direction s'orientent leurs délibérations. Nous savons que dans certains pays on verse une sorte de supplément, mais seulement aux nécessiteux. Nous savons par exemple, monsieur, qu'en 1954 le gouvernement canadien a tenté d'inaugurer cette pratique. Ce fait n'est pas très bien connu, mais en 1954, il existait ce qu'on appelait le supplément d'inadaptabilité à l'emploi, ce qui voulait dire que même si vous receviez 100 p. 100 de la pension, si vous pouviez prouver que vous étiez sans travail, on ajoutait un petit supplément à votre chèque de pension. Il y a eu une telle réaction des députés, des associations d'anciens combattants et du public en général que le supplément a été aboli au bout de quatre ou cinq mois. C'est à cause de choses semblables que les membres des associations d'anciens combattants comme nous sont sur le qui-vive à l'heure actuelle, parce que les études entreprises par le gouvernement se font à huis-clos et que nous n'avons pas la moindre idée de ce qui s'y passe. Par conséquent, notre seule ressource, actuellement, c'est de chercher à faire valoir le bien-fondé de la formule actuelle des pensions. Actuellement, la Loi sur les pensions prévoit que si un homme, malgré le plus grave handicap, réussit à surmonter son infirmité et à se perfectionner dans un travail quelconque, il pourrait gagner $50,000 par année sans pour autant nuire à son droit à la pension.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je vous remercie.

Le président: Quelqu'un désire-t-il poser d'autres questions? Sinon, ce serait peut-être le moment de lever la séance.

Nous reprendrons nos délibérations, en cette même salle, à 14 heures.

(AFTERNOON SITTING)

The Chairman: I now call the Committee to order. I know there will be other members here presently, but I am concerned about time. I think Mr. Reynolds, our Research Officer, has a communication from Mr. Ward. Do you want to refer to it, Mr. Reynolds?

Mr. P. E. Reynolds (Director of Research, Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs): Yes, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Ward was asked to prepare a tabulation of the Woods Committee Recommendations showing the disposition that has been made of them so far, and he states:

> I attach a tabulation of the current proposed disposition of the Woods Committee Recommendations.

I would ask leave of this Committee to have this attached as an appendix to the proceedings for today.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: This document will be reproduced as an appendix to the transcript for today. I will leave this with the Clerk.

Are there any other announcements, comments or anything else, Mr. Levesque, that we should bring to the attention of the Committee at this point?

Clerk of the Committee: I think they should know about the delay in the transcripts.

The Chairman: The transcripts will be available when, Mr. Levesque?

Clerk of the Committee: Last Monday's, September 15, will be available this afternoon; Tuesday's will be available tomorrow and so on as they come in.

The Chairman: So the first transcripts of the current series of hearings will be available later this afternoon and Tuesday's will be available tomorrow?

Clerk of the Committee: Probably tomorrow, yes.

The Chairman: Fine.

Clerk of the Committee: The delay was caused by translation problems. It is always the same old problem.

The Chairman: The problem with translation is in making sure they are released in the two official languages at the same time. Is there anything else to be said at this point?

[Interpretation]

SÉANCE DE L'APRÈS-MIDI

Le président: A l'heure où nous allons ouvrir la séance, je remarque que certains membres du Comité ne sont pas encore arrivés, mais le temps nous presse de réouvrir nos travaux. Monsieur Reynolds a une communication à nous faire, de la part de M. Ward; monsieur Reynolds voulez-vous commencer?

M. P. E. Reynolds (directeur des recherches, Comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants): Monsieur le président, M. Ward a été prié de présenter une échelle des recommandations du Comité Woods pour montrer les dispositions qui ont été prises et il a dit:

> «J'ai annexé une échelle des chiffres proposés dans le cas des recommandations du Comité Woods.»

Je demande la permission au comité de faire annexer ces documents au procès-verbal d'aujourd'hui.

Des voix: D'accord.

Le président: Alors cela sera reproduit comme Annexe au procès-verbal d'aujourd'hui. Parfait. Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires ou annonces ou d'autres explications à signaler au Comité M. Lévesque?

Le secrétaire: Je pense que les membres du comité devraient être mis au courant des délais.

Le président: Quand aurons-nous les compte-rendus, monsieur Lévesque?

Le secrétaire: Le compte rendu du 15 septembre, sera disponible cet après-midi et le texte de mardi sera publié demain et ainsi de suite.

Le président: Ainsi la première série des compte-rendus de la présente session seront disponibles cet après-midi et les prochains demain?

Le secrétaire: Oui, probablement demain.

Le président: Bien.

Le secrétaire: Le délai est dû à la traduction, c'est toujours le même vieux problème.

Le président: Il faut publier les compte-rendus dans les deux langues officielles en même temps, c'est là le problème. Y a-t-il d'autres explications à donner?

[Texte]

If not, I will invite Lt. Col. Lambert to continue with the presentation he started this morning.

Lt. Col. Lambert: Continuing the presentation of The War Amputations of Canada on page 29, Automatic Age Increase, I will ask Mr. Chadderton to read.

Mr. Chadderton: Automatic Age Increase: Possibly one of the most important features of our pension legislation is the automatic age increase through which the Commission makes provision for deterioration, over the years, of amputation and gunshot wound cases. Unfortunately, the regulations governing this feature are inconsistent.

For example, although a 50 per cent pensioner may go to 80 per cent through automatic age increase in the years between 55 and 59, an 80 per cent or 90 per cent pensioner is not entitled to any increase through this provision. Another inconsistency—equally difficult to understand—is that the automatic age increase applies only to amputation and gunshot wounds incurred in direct action with the enemy.

It seems obvious that, as it stands, the automatic age increase provision is only a "halfway" measure. The recommendations of the Woods Committee which would extend this provision appear to be eminently sensible. They are:

(1) To extend this provision to 80 per cent and 90 per cent pensioners to allow them to reach 100 per cent and

(2) To make the provision applicable to all fixed disabilities resulting from injuries or wounds.

Again for purposes of clarification, may we cite an example. A 22 year old soldier lost his left leg above the knee in 1917. When he returned from overseas he was awarded a pension assessment of 80 per cent for the loss of this leg.

He is now 74 years of age, yet his pension assessment still remains at 80 per cent. It is inconceivable that the loss of a leg above the knee, if assessed in terms of his earning power in the unskilled labour market, would be no worse when the man is 74 years of age than it was when he was 22. This serves to illustrate the inconsistency of the legislation in respect of pensioners in the 80 per cent and 90 per cent brackets.

[Interprétation]

Alors, si non j'invite M. Lambert à continuer son exposé.

Le lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Pour poursuivre l'exposé de l'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada, à la page 29, en ce qui concerne l'accroissement automatique de la pension en vertu de l'âge, j'invite M. Chadderton à vous lire ce paragraphe;

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, un des éléments les plus importants de notre Loi sur les pensions c'est le relèvement automatique des pensions en vertu de l'âge, grâce auquel la Commission pourrait prévoir la détérioration au cours des années des cas d'amputation, et des blessures d'armes à feu. Malheureusement, les dispositions qui régissent ces cas sont inconsistantes. Par exemple, même si un pensionné à 50 p. 100 voit se relever sa pension à 80 p. 100 au cours des années entre l'âge de 55 ans et 59 ans, un pensionné à 80 ou 90 p. 100 n'ont droit à aucune augmentation en vertu de cette disposition. Une autre disposition tout aussi difficile à comprendre c'est que cet accroissement s'applique seulement aux amputés et ceux qui ont reçu une blessure au feu lors d'une confrontation directe avec l'ennemi.

Il semble donc que la disposition de l'accroissement automatique de la pension telle qu'elle existe actuellement n'est qu'une demi-mesure. Les recommandations du Comité Woods qui veulent augmenter la portée de cette disposition sont les suivantes:

(1) étendre la disposition aux pensionnés à 80 et 90 p. 100 pour leur permettre d'atteindre les 100 p. 100, et

(2) étendre la disposition à toutes les invalidités découlant de blessures.

Encore une fois, pour mettre les choses au point, nous pouvons dire que l'exemple d'un soldat de 22 ans qui a perdu sa jambe gauche en 1917, au retour d'outre-mer on lui a accordé une pension de 80 p. 100 pour la perte de cette jambe.

Il est âgé maintenant de 74 ans et sa pension reste toujours fixée à 80 p. 100. C'est inconcevable que la perte d'une jambe, si la compensation basée sur le revenu de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée, n'est pas plus élevée pour un homme âgé de 74 ans, que lorsqu'il était agé de 22 ans.

[Text]

Another example might serve to clarify the situation in regard to the discrimination between amputations lost in direct action with the enemy and those incurred in training accidents or other occurrences. We cite the case of a World War I pilot who crashed while piloting a flying boat on a training mission in England in 1918. He lost his left leg below the knee and received a pension assessment of 50 percent. No automatic increase was made for him and when he died two years ago his pension was still assessed at 50 percent. This case should be contrasted with others who lost their legs in action with the enemy. When they reached 55 their pensions would have been increased automatically to 60 percent. A further increase to 70 percent would be granted at age 57 and at age 59 they would reach a maximum of 80 percent.

We firmly believe that the opposition to the recommendations to make automatic age increase apply to the 80 percent and 90 percent pensioner and for amputations and gunshot wounds arising from causes other than direct action with the enemy, is based on the conception that, originally, this provision was introduced to ensure that veterans whose assessment was fixed by the Table of Disabilities could be brought to the level of 80 percent, so that their widows would qualify for pension in the event of their death.

In this respect we refer you to the Woods Committee Report, volume 2, chapter 18, page 684 wherein the report takes cognizance of three reasons given by officials of the Pension Commission for the institution of automatic age increase. These were:

> (1) To recognize injuries which were the result of direct action with the enemy as compared with those resulting from diseases ruled attributable to service.
> (2) To provide more adequately for pensioners who have suffered severe wounds, particularly in respect of the increasing handicap brought on by advancing years;
> (3) To bring 50 percent, 60 percent and 70 percent pensioners up to the level of 80 percent so their widows may qualify for pension in the event of their death.

While we recognize that the third reason is no longer required, in that widows may qualify provided the pension was in payment at 48 percent or greater, the reason is still as valid today as it was when this provision was implemented in 1939. That is to say:

> There is still the requirement to recognize amputation and gunshot wounds as compared with diseases for the specific reason that the latter are subjected to peri-

[Interpretation]

Un autre exemple pourrait servir à clarifier la situation envers la différence que l'on fait entre une amputation due à un engagement sur le front et celle subie après un entraînement ou autre. Voilà le cas d'un pilote de la première guerre mondiale qui a eu un accident lorsqu'il pilotait un hydravion dans une mission d'entraînement en Angleterre en 1918. Il a perdu sa jambe gauche, puis a reçu une pension évaluée à 50 p. 100. On n'a prévu aucun taux de l'accroissement automatique en sa faveur et lorsqu'il est mort, il y a deux ans, sa pension était toujours évaluée à 50 p. 100. On devrait comparer ce cas à d'autres personnes qui ont perdu leurs jambes en mission contre l'ennemi. A l'âge de 55 ans, leur pension serait majorée automatiquement à 60 p. 100, et à l'âge de 57 ans ils recevraient 70 p. 100 et à l'âge de 59 ans, ils recevraient un maximum de 80 p. 100.

Nous croyons que si l'on s'oppose à ce que de telles recommandations s'appliquent à des pensionnés à 80 et 90 p. 100 et pour les amputations ou blessures dues à des causes autres que les missions contre l'ennemi, relève du fait que cette disposition avait été présentée à l'origine pour s'assurer que les anciens combattants dont l'évaluation avait été fixée au moyen de la Table des invalidités puissent atteindre le niveau de 80 p. 100 afin que leurs veuves puissent obtenir une pension advenant leur mort. A ce sujet nous vous signalons que le Comité Woods, dans son rapport, volume II, chapitre 18, à la page 684, à l'endroit où il prend conscience des trois raisons exposées par les responsables de la Commission des pensions pour l'institution de l'accroissement automatique des pensions. C'est à dire:

> (1) tenir compte des blessures qui sont dues à l'action contre l'ennemi, par rapport à d'autres blessures découlant d'autres maladies dues au service
> (2) pour secourir les pensionnés qui ont subi plusieurs blessures dont la gravité augmente avec l'âge
> (3) pour porter à 80 p. 100 les pensions de 50, 60 à 70 p. 100 afin que les veuves puissent bénéficier d'une pension au combattant.

Bien que nous soyons conscients du fait que la troisième raison ne joue entièrement plus, puisqu'une veuve peut obtenir une pension lorsque son mari était pensionné à 48 p. 100 ou plus, nous pensons qu'elle a toujours une signification, comme elle en avait une lorsque la disposition a été mise en vigueur en 1939, et qui se lit ainsi:

> Il y a encore besoin de reconnaître les blessures et les amputations, vis-à-vis des odic reboards to check on the progression of the disease. This very often results in an increased assessment. On the other hand, an amputation or gunshot wound is usually coded by the Commission as "apparently permanent" and no provision is made for an increase with advancing years, except for those covered by the automatic age increase provision.

We find it extremely difficult to understand why the White Paper makes no reference to the automatic age increase proposals of the Woods Committee. The effect of the existing provisions is nothing short of disastrous for those in the 80 percent or 90 percent bracket or for those who had the misfortune to lose a limb or limbs while operating with training units.

We are mindful, also, of the fact that the extension of the automatic age increase provisions could be made by the Pension Commission without legislative authority. It seems evident, however, that the Commission is not prepared to take this step and we have no alternative now but to place this matter before your Committee for earnest consideration. Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there any questions members want to ask? Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marshall: The case was put very clearly. It is very understandable. I think we should take it as it is and go on.

Lt. Col. Lambert: The next section deals with consequential disabilities and Judge Crowell who comes from Nova Scotia.

The Chairman: Excuse me, Mr. Guay, did you want to ask a question now?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes, I only wanted to further your comments with regard to page 29, paragraph three, where you stated:

> Another inconsistency—equally difficult to understand—is that the automatic age increase applies only to amputation and gunshot wounds incurred in direct action with the enemy.

You made reference to that several times and I am interested in it. Possibly you could maladies, pour des raisons définies. Ainsi les maladies sont sujettes à des contrôles périodiques afin de suivre la progression de l'affection. Ce qui a pour effet, la plupart du temps, d'augmenter l'évaluation. D'un autre côté, une amputation ou une blessures d'arme à feu est habituellement déféré pour la Commission comme une affection «apparemment permanente, et aucune disposition n'est prévue pour une augmentation de la pension avec l'âge, à l'exception des cas tombant dans la catégorie de l'accroissement automatique des pensions.

L'on comprend très mal pourquoi le Livre blanc ne mentionne pas des propositions du Comité Woods portant sur l'accroissement automatique de la pension avec l'âge. Les dispositions actuelles sont très défavorables à ceux qui touchent 80 et 90 p. 100 et à ceux qui ont perdu un membre ou des membres en mission d'entraînement.

Nous sommes conscients aussi du fait que cette disposition pourrait être appliquée par la Commission des pensions sans obtenir l'autorisation du gouvernement. Il est évident toutefois que la Commission n'a pas d'autre moyen que de soumettre ses propositions au Comité pour étude. Merci.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions que les députés aimeraient poser?

M. Marshall: L'exposé a été très clair et très compréhensible. Nous devrions l'accepter comme tel et on pourrait poursuivre notre discussion.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Le prochain paragraphe traite des infirmités qui ont découlé de ces blessures, et le juge Crowell qui vient de la Nouvelle-Écosse...

Le président: Excusez-moi, je crois que monsieur Guay désire poser une question.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): J'aimerais que vous me donniez des explications sur le troisième paragraphe de la page 29, lorsqu'on parle d'une mission contre l'ennemi. On dit que:

> Un autre manquement—tout aussi difficile à comprendre—c'est que l'accroissement automatique de la pension avec l'âge ne s'applique qu'aux cas d'amputation et de blessures d'armes à feu subies lors d'un contact direct avec l'ennemi.

Vous avez mentionné plusieurs fois cette question et ceci m'intéresse. Vous pourriez expand a little more on it other than what you have in your brief. It seems you have a problem in that particular area and probably you could spell it out. I well understood what you had in mind when you were reading it, but at the same time you may want to tell us a bit more about it.

Mr. Chadderton: Oh, yes, indeed. As we say throughout this part of the presentation, we find it very difficult to understand the rationale of the Commission in this particular instance and, of course, it is a Commission policy because it is in the table of disabilities. Originally—and I think we have to go back to the original pronouncement of it which was in 1939—one of the reasons was:

> (1) To recognize injuries which were the result of direct action with the enemy as compared with those resulting from diseases ruled attributable to service.

Therefore, a distinction is drawn between the man who lost a leg in direct action with the enemy and someone who contracted a disease and is pensionable. However, we submit that in the middle there is a third group who have been overlooked and that is the fellow who does not have a disease attributable to service, who has not lost a leg through direct action with the enemy, but who has lost a leg in a training accident. We fail to see the difference between that type of loss resulting in amputation and the type of loss resulting in amputation where it was in direct action with the enemy. In other words...

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Possibly my question could be worded in a slightly different way, then, Mr. Chairman. If a veteran lost his leg in a theatre of war, but not actually in direct action with the enemy, perhaps while moving from one position to another which is not in direct action with the enemy, would it be classified as such?

Mr. Chadderton: I would say, in our experience that the Commission has been very generous in that respect. On an individual case basis, I know of no instance, for example, of a man who drove a transport lorry in France who lost his leg, we will say, where the Commission...

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): They are classified as such, then?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, they may have turned him down, but we do not know of it. However, where it occurred in England or where it occurred in Camp Borden, there is no question. These people are not qualifying today for automatic age increases.

[Interpretation]

nous donner de plus amples explications. Vu que cela cause un certain problème, vous pourriez clarifier ce point. Je comprends l'intention qui vous anime, mais j'aimerais que vous nous donniez des explications plus détaillées là-dessus.

M. Chadderton: Certainement. Comme nous l'avons déclaré dans ce paragraphe, nous comprenons mal la logique qui anime la Commission dans ce cas particulier, parce que c'est la politique de la Commission et que ces règlements se trouvent dans la Table des invalidités. Au début, il faut revenir à la mise en vigueur des dispositions en 1939. Une des raisons était la suivante:

> (1) Tenir compte des blessures découlant d'une mission contre l'ennemi par rapport à d'autres qui sont dues à des maladies attribuables au service.

Alors on a établi une distinction absolue entre un homme qui a perdu une jambe en combattant l'ennemi et un autre qui a contacté une maladie par suite du service. Mais, au milieu, il y a le troisième groupe qu'on a négligé et c'est le soldat qui n'a pas de maladie due au service, ni de blessure par suite d'une mission contre l'ennemi, mais bien celui qui a perdu une jambe dans une mission d'entraînement. Pour nous, il n'y a pas de différence entre la parte d'une jambe par suite d'une amputation et la perte d'une jambe par suite d'une mission directe contre l'ennemi.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): La question serait un peu différente si un ancien combattant a perdu sa jambe en temps de guerre mais pas en mission directe contre l'ennemi, mais plutôt dans le cadre des opérations de guerre, comme lorsqu'ils se déplacent d'une position à une autre ce qui n'est pas une mission directe contre l'ennemi: comment pourrait-on classifier un tel cas?

M. Chadderton: La Commission a été très généreuse jusque-là dans les cas individuels. Pour moi, je ne connais aucun cas où un homme qui conduisait, par exemple, un camion de transport et qui a perdu sa jambe; je ne connais pas de cas où la Commission a eu un jugement défavorable.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Ils sont classifiés comme tels, alors?

M. Chadderton: Ça peut arriver, mais en Angleterre, par exemple, ou au Camp Borden, ces gens ne sont pas éligibles à la disposition visant l'accroissement de la pension avec l'âge.

[Texte]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): So those are the group that you are making reference to, then?

Mr. Chadderton: That is quite right, sir.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I see.

Mr. Chadderton: As well as the other group, that is the ones who have a permanent pension of 80 per cent and 90 per cent, some of whom are now in their 80's, who still have had no pension increase, automatically or otherwise. We feel they are being discriminated against in comparison with the disease case because the disease case can be reboarded and he can go from 50 per cent to 60 per cent to 70 per cent as his condition progresses. He can receive an increase in pension, but the man whose pension has been fixed, apparently permanently, cannot get an increase as in case 22 which we cited this morning of a man in a wheelchair in Toronto today, sir, whose pension is 80 per cent, the same as it was when he lost his legs.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Do you wish to continue, Mr. Lambert?

Judge K. L. Crowell (Bridgetown, Nova Scotia):

Consequential Disabilities:

We welcome the proposal in the White Paper covering consequential disabilities and earnestly hope that the enabling legislation will go far enough to meet the problems which have existed for many years in this little-understood area of pension administration.

The disabled person who has lived for a number of years minus an arm or a leg knows full well that his amputation automatically places stress on the other parts of his body. Two classic examples are:

(1) The man who has lost his right arm will inevitably develop pain and discomfort in his spine, upper cervical area and quite possibly his left arm. This is because he is constantly moving and twitching far beyond the normal and because his left arm is doing the work of two.

(2) The man who suffers the loss of a right leg develops difficulties in the back, lower spine and often the hip, knee joints and ankle of the left foot.

[Interprétation]

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Voici la catégorie que vous avez mentionnée.

M. Chadderton: C'est exact.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je vois.

M. Chadderton: Et l'autre groupe, celui des anciens combattants qui reçoivent une pension permanente de 80 ou de 90 p. 100, et il y en a parmi eux qui sont âgés de 80 ans et qui n'ont pas bénéficié d'une hausse de pension depuis lors, accroissement automatique ou autre. Pour nous, ils sont victimes d'une injustice par rapport à ceux qui ont contacté des maladies, maladies qui étaient guéries à l'âge de 50, 60 ou 70 ans, ou qui à mesure que leur condition se dégradait pouvaient bénéficier d'une augmentation de pension. Mais celui qui bénéficie d'une pension de 80 p. 100, même s'il a été frappé d'une infirmité à l'âge de 22 ans et qui continue, à Toronto, de se servir d'une chaisse roulante, touche la même pension qu'à l'âge où il a reçu sa pension.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Merci monsieur le président.

Le président: Voulez-vous continuer monsieur Lambert?

Le juge K. L. Crowell (Bridgetown, Nouvelle-Écosse): Invalidités subséquentes: Nous applaudissons, à la proposition du Livre blanc touchant les invalidités subséquentes et espérons qu'une loi permettra d'aller assez loin pour aplanir les problèmes qui ont existé depuis longtemps dans ce domaine peu compris de l'administration des pensions.

L'invalide qui a vécu pendant de nombreuses années sans bras ou sans jambe ressent un stress dans d'autres parties de son corps. Voici deux exemples classiques:

1) celui qui a perdu son bras droit aura des douleurs dans sa colonne vertébrale et jusque dans la région cervicale et même dans son bras gauche, c'est parce qu'il se déplace, il fait des efforts qui dépassent la normale et son bras gauche fait le travail de l'autre bras.

2) celui qui a perdu la jambe droite, peut avoir des difficultés avec son épaule, le bas de sa colonne vertébrale et avec la hanche. Ces difficultés sont dues à un rapport inégal, des mouvements anormaux et un poids supplémentaire supporté par la jambe gauche.

[Text]

This is due to an uneven gait, abnormal twisting and the additional load being carried by the left leg.

It would seem that these hypotheses would be self-evident. Notwithstanding, in many applications for a "consequential ruling" the Pension Commission says that the condition in the back or the other limb is a "developmental" condition—it would have happened regardless of the amputation—and is, therefore, not pensionable. In some instances the Pension Commission will grant what is known as a fractional assessment. That is to say, although the condition is not directly related to the amputation, the Commission will concede that it was "aggravated thereby" and will give a ruling of $\frac{1}{5}$th or $\frac{2}{5}$th aggravation—which means that if the condition is assessed at 10 per cent the amputee receives 2 per cent or 4 per cent respectively.

Consequential conditions of this type seem to divide into two schools of thought. On one hand the amputee knows that the condition exists and that it is attributable to his amputation. On the other hand the medical advisors of the Commission appear adamant in their theory that amputation does not in itself cause these problems. The War Amputations of Canada was able to report a great deal of factual medical information from outside of Canada in its submission to the Woods Committee, in regard to this question. We are pleased to note, therefore, that, in the Woods Report, a great deal of emphasis is placed on consequential disabilities.

The Committee recommendation was to the effect that the Act should be amended to clothe the Commission with the authority to grant separate entitlement for a consequential disability. Also, the Committee leaned heavily toward the suggestion that a pensioner for amputation was made "vulnerable" by the loss of his limb, and that if arthritis or some other condition develops in the other limb, it is not only due to the amputation, but also the mere fact that one limb had been lost (due to war service) makes the condition of the other limb much more serious because it must do all the work.

The Woods Committee Recommendation on consequential disabilities deserves the closest possible study. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first clear-cut analysis of the problem to be published. It is hoped that Parliament will insist that the Act be amended as

[Interpretation]

Ce sont des hypothèses qui sont claires. Cependant, la Commission des pensions déclare que la maladie du dos ou de l'autre membre, est une maladie secondaire, qui aurait pu arriver quand même sans l'amputation, et qui ne rend pas le malade éligible à la pension. Ce qui revient à dire que si la condition ne dépend pas directement de l'amputation, la Commission admettra qu'elle a été «aggravée par elle» et rend une décision d'aggravation de $\frac{1}{5}$ ou $\frac{2}{5}$, ce qui signifie que si son état est évalué à 10 p. 100 l'amputé reçoit 2 ou 4 p. 100, respectivement.

Les états d'invalidités secondaires de ce genre semble provoquer la création de deux écoles de pensée. D'une part, l'amputé sait que cet état existe et qu'il est attribuable à son amputation. D'autre part, les conseillers médicaux de la Commission apparaissent intransigeants dans leurs théories portant que l'amputation n'est pas en soi la cause de ces problèmes. L'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada a été en mesure de communiquer une grande quantité d'informations médicales obtenue de pays étrangers et qui ont été communiquées au Comité Woods. Nous sommes par conséquent heureux de remarquer que le rapport Woods insiste beaucoup sur la question des invalidités secondaires. Le Comité, dans sa recommandation, précisait que la Loi devait être modifiée pour habiliter la Commission à accorder un droit distinct dans le cas d'une invalidité secondaire. D'autre part, le Comité a paru être très en faveur de la proposition voulant qu'un pensionné pour cause d'amputation était rendu «vulnérable» par la perte d'un membre et que, si l'arthrite ou une autre maladie venait à attaquer le membre restant, cela n'est pas dû seulement à l'amputation mais aussi au simple fait que la perte d'un membre (en raison d'un service de guerre) fait que l'affection du membre restant est beaucoup plus sérieuse du fait que ce membre doit faire tout le travail.

La recommandation du Comité Woods sur les invalidités secondaires mérite l'étude la plus attentive possible. A notre connaissance, c'est la première fois qu'on publie une analyse aussi claire de ce problème. Nous espérons bien que le Parlement insistera pour que la required, and that the Commission give full credence to the findings of the Committee in this important area.

Lt. Col. Lambert: Thank you.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add one further word. We are aware, of course, that the White Paper does say something about consequential disability and, as we read it, it states that there will be a new section of the Act covering this, and we are very grateful for this. All that we are really attempting to get across in this particular brief is that, A, it is a very severe problem to members of our association and, B, that we trust that whatever is put into the Act will be clear enough so that we will not have to argue every case. I am not suggesting that this will be the situation, we have no way of knowing, but we certainly feel that to merely say in any amendment to the Act that the Commission may award pension for consequential disability would not be sufficient. We feel that it should stress the points made by the Woods Committee and, in particular, that where it can be indicated that the consequential disability is related to the pensionable disability, that it should not be a fractional assessment. If it is related at 10 per cent, the man should get 10 per cent and not two-fifths, as the case may now be. So, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we are in the dark on this. We do not really know what is being recommended except that it is going to be placed in the Act. We thought you would like to have our views on the importance of this to the members of our association.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton, if you will excuse me, I did not quite understand you. The White Paper says that it is proposed to provide a separate section in Act to cover the awarding of pension for disability which in whole or in part is an extension of a pensionable disability. Do you feel that this is an unwise provision or what is your position in relation to it?

Mr. Chadderton: No, we feel that this provision is a long-felt one and that it should go in, but we are wondering if when it is written it will give full coverage to the problem as we see it in awarding pension for consequential disability.

• 1425

The Chairman: You are suggesting that there still may be administrative problems, but surely the principle of writing a legislative authority into the Act must be viewed by your organization as a step forward.

[Interprétation]

loi soit modifiée dans le sens nécessaire et que la Commission accepte entièrement les constatations du Comité dans ce domaine important.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Merci.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, nous aimerions ajouter un mot. Nous savons bien entendu que le Livre blanc prévoit des allocations pour les infirmités secondaires et un nouvel article dans cette loi devra régir de tels cas. Nous en sommes très reconnaissants. Tout ce que nous voulons faire comprendre dans ce mémoire, c'est premièrement qu'il s'agit d'un problème grave pour les membres de notre Association et que deuxièmement quel que soit l'article qu'on ajoutera à la loi, nous espérons que nous n'aurons pas à discuter de chaque cas. Je ne dis pas que telle sera la situation, nous n'en savons rien, mais nous avons l'impression que dans tout amendement de la Loi où la Commission pourrait accorder des pensions pour les maladies secondaires, ce système serait insuffisant. Nous pensons que l'on devrait souligner les points mentionnés par le Comité Woods et faire comprendre que lorsqu'on peut prouver que l'invalidité secondaire découle d'une invalidité ouvrant droit à pension, il ne peut s'agir d'une évaluation partielle. Si l'évaluation est fixée à 10 p. 100, le pensionné devrait recevoir 10 p. 100 et non $\frac{2}{5}$ comme c'est le cas actuellement. Monsieur le président, pour le moment, nous ne savons pas de quoi il retourne. Nous ne connaissons pas la nature de ces recommandations sauf en ce qui concerne les modifications qu'il faudra inclure dans la Loi. Nous avons pensé que vous aimeriez avoir notre opinion sur cette question.

Le président: Monsieur Chadderton, excusez-moi, je ne vous ai pas bien compris. Le Livre blanc prévoit un nouvel article à la Loi qui pourrait régir l'allocation des pensions d'invalidité, qui en tout ou en partie sont l'extension d'une invalidité ouvrant à pension. Trouvez-vous qu'il s'agit d'une mauvaise recommandation? Quelle est votre position?

M. Chadderton: Non. Pour nous, cette disposition devrait être incorporée dans la Loi, mais nous nous demandons si, lorsqu'elle sera rédigée, elle pourra régir totalement le problème des allocations pour invalidités secondaires.

Le président: Vous voulez dire qu'il y aura peut-être encore des problèmes administratifs mais la rédaction d'un article qui sera inclus dans la Loi devrait être envisagé par votre organisme comme un pas en avant?

[Text]

Mr. Chadderton: Oh, yes. I think I said that.

The Chairman: I just wanted to be sure there was no misunderstanding.

Mr. Chadderton: Oh yes, we are grateful for this, there is no question about it.

The Chairman: I am sorry, I misunderstood at that point. Is the point that you are concerned about here the question of how much further legislation can go in anticipating administrative discretion? I feel that when legislation is being drafted there will inevitably be some discretion through the regulations, et cetera. This is the usual pattern of legislation, is it not?

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if Mr. Chadderton's point was not a question of the language that was used and the emphasis that was to be given to that language, and that it be stated as clearly as possible that the recommendations of the Woods Commission would be incorporated in the language of the bill.

The Chairman: I must confess that I did not quite understand why the section of the White Paper was not satisfactory to him. This is what concerned me. It seemed to me that this was about all one could expect in a statement indicating legislative intent. Perhaps Mr. Chadderton could elaborate a little more. I must confess I did not quite get his point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought he expressed satisfaction with what is in the White Paper. He just wants to be sure that it is in the legislation.

The Chairman: If that is it, then I think there is no question.

Mr. Marshall: He just wants to be sure that the legislation covers what they are recommending.

The Chairman: I am not quite sure. There is a difference between Mr. Knowles' position and Mr. Marshall's interpretation.

Mr. Whicher: He wants us to give the government a little prod, and I do not blame him,

The Chairman: Certainly I think we are all agreed that this is desirable, but how much further he feels the legislation should go is what I would like to know. Perhaps he would elaborate a little further.

[Interpretation]

M. Chadderton: Oh oui, c'est exact.

Le président: Je voulais seulement m'assurer qu'il n'y avait aucun malentendu.

M. Chadderton: Nous en sommes très reconnaissants, il n'y a pas de malentendu.

Le président: Je m'excuse, je vous avais mal compris à ce sujet. Je voudrais savoir dans quelle mesure l'article de loi projeté peut prévoir une bonne gestion administrative. Est-ce là la question qui vous préoccupe? Je pense que la loi accordera un pouvoir discrétionnaire, c'est là, ne pensez-vous pas, la nature même de toute loi?

M. Saltsman: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais savoir si M. Chadderton se préoccupe peut-être de la teneur de cette disposition ou de l'interprétation qu'on y attachera, à savoir si les recommandations du Comité Woods seront inscrites dans la Loi?

Le président: Je n'ai pas bien compris pourquoi cet article du Livre blanc n'a pas eu l'heur de plaire à notre témoin. Il me semblait que c'est tout ce qu'on peut attendre d'une déclaration d'intention concernant un projet de loi. Peut-être que M. Chadderton pourrait nous donner des explications supplémentaires, un peu plus détaillées, je les accepterais volontiers, car je dois dire que je n'ai pas bien compris ses intentions.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je pense qu'il a exprimé sa satisfaction au sujet du Livre blanc, mais qu'il voulait être sûr que ces mesures figurent dans la Loi.

Le président: Si c'est cela, je pense qu'il n'y a pas de questions à se poser.

M. Marshall: Il voulait s'assurer que la loi couvre ses propres recommandations.

Le président: Je n'en suis pas sûr. Il y a une différence entre l'opinion de M. Knowles et l'interprétation de M. Marshall selon moi.

M. Whicher: Il voulait simplement que nous donnions un petit coup d'aiguillon au gouvernement et je ne le blâme pas.

Le président: Nous acceptons tous qu'il s'agit d'une disposition souhaitable mais dans quelle mesure, il vaudrait mieux avoir une législation plus généreuse, c'est cela que j'aimerais savoir, du moins avoir des explications là-dessus.

[Texte]

Lt. Col. Lambert: We could help them if they would let us draw it up!

The Chairman: I think members of the Committee will have some views to express when we make our recommendations, but I really think that Mr. Chadderton is familiar with the legislative process and he knows roughly the kind of thing that can be said at this stage. My question to him is how much more should we say than is presently in the White Paper?

Mr. Chadderton: Just one second.

The Chairman: I thought this was a point about which you would be very happy, to be very truthful with you. I got a rather different impression.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Why do we not clarify it? Perhaps I do not understand the question clearly. Why do we not ask the delegation, Mr. Chairman, to point out to us in that particular paragraph on page 13 of the White Paper where consequential disability is indicated where in their opinion it is possibly wrong and what they would like to have substituted. At least we will get their version.

The Chairman: What they would like to have added.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes.

Mr. Chadderton: I think, Mr. Chairman, there is no need to take up the time of the Committee to quote it in full, but I will give you as a reference the Woods Report, Volume II, Chapter 16, page 628, starting with the heading: Consequential Disability (Medical Development Type). It goes down to the first paragraph on page 630. It is fairly technical but we felt that to give legislative authority to what the Commission was doing right now in regard to consequential disabilities would not be going far enough.

What we can see happening is that a man develops arthritis in his remaining leg and the Commission looks at it and says that this is a developmental type of thing, it would have happened anyway. They assess it at 10 per cent and they say it is only two-fifths aggravated by the fact that he has an artificial leg. Our theory on this, and I suppose it is our feeling on it, is that it should be assessed in a little different light. It should be assessed on the fact that in the first instance he has lost one leg. If his second leg develops arthritis, this worsens the consequences of having lost the leg that he lost in service and therefore, although it may be admitted that the Commission can say that this was a devel-

[Interprétation]

Le lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Nous pouvons les aider, s'ils nous permettent de légiférer!

Le président: Je crois que les membres du Comité pourront s'exprimer lorsque nous ferons nos recommandations, mais je pense que M. Chadderton connait très bien le processus législatif et il sait ce qu'on peut préciser dans une loi, mais j'aimerais savoir ce qu'il voudrait précisément qu'on incorpore dans une loi.

M. Chadderton: Une seconde.

Le président: Je pense que c'est une question qu'il accepterait avec joie de nous préciser. Mais pour être franc avec vous, j'ai une impression différente.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): On pourrait demander à la délégation de nous signaler dans ce paragraphe du Livre blanc où on parle des maladies secondaires, à la page 13, et nous expliquer à leur avis qu'elle disposition est mauvaise et comment elle voudrait la voir modifiée.

Le président: Ce qu'elle veut ajouter . . .

M. Guay (St-Boniface): C'est exact.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, je ne veux pas prendre tout le temps du Comité pour citer complètement le texte mais je pourrais vous signaler que dans le volume 2 du rapport du Comité Woods, au chapitre 16, à la page 628, sous le titre «Maladies secondaires», c'est un texte très technique et je poursuis jusqu'au premier paragraphe de la page 630. Nous pensons que d'octroyer une autorisation légale pour ce que la Commission fait présentement au sujet des invalidités secondaires ne serait pas suffisant.

Ce qui pourrait arriver, c'est qu'un patient victime de l'arthrite dans la jambe qui lui reste et que la commission décide qu'il s'agit là d'un cas secondaire et évalue cette maladie à 10 p. 100 et accorde $\frac{2}{5}$ d'aggravation à son infirmité première à cause de sa jambe artificielle. Nous estimons qu'on devrait faire l'évaluation dans un autre contexte. Soit que premièrement il a perdu une jambe en service, c'est la deuxième jambe qui souffre d'arthrite, ce qui aggrave son état d'invalide de guerre. Ainsi, même si la Commission a admis qu'il s'agit d'une anomalie secondaire et que cette maladie aurait surgi de toute façon et que l'aggravation est de $\frac{2}{5}$ par le fait d'avoir perdu sa jambe droite, la conséquence opmental anomaly and it would have happened anyway and it is only two-fifths aggravated by having lost his right leg, the very fact that he has lost his right leg is an additional factor which should be sufficient for the Commission to say that even though it is a developmental anomaly, as they say, he should still be pensioned at the full rate of the medical assessment, that is 10 per cent.

We are most grateful to see this in the White Paper and to see the indication that the government intends to put this in the Act. But if the intention is merely to legalize what has been going on now—the Chairman of the Commission has said quite properly to us many times that there really is no legal authority for what they have been doing, and we are grateful they have been doing as much as they have—but if the intention is really to legalize what has been going on now, that is not carrying out the recommendation of the Woods Committee. The Woods Committee felt that in addition to legalizing it and granting pension for consequential disability, additional emphasis should be placed on the fact that if a man has lost one leg and his other leg goes bad on him, this has increased the total disability.

In the time available to us this afternoon this is as clear as I can make it. I suggest that the only other thing to do is to refer to the Woods Report and pick up the details of it, but I would have to say in all honesty that in reading the White Paper we felt that the door had been opened, that they were going to place this in the Act. But we are not at all certain—maybe we will when we get more information—but at the moment we are not at all certain that the full intent of the Woods Committee recommendation on this was contained in the White Paper and would be carried out.

Mr. Marshall: I think you said that on page 35. It is very clear to me.

Mr. Butler: The next item, Mr. Chairman, is the Appeal Board.

Appeal Board:

One of the significant areas examined by the Woods Committee concerned the question of appeals in the so-called peripheral areas of pension administration. A great deal has been written about the lack of proper appeal véritable de la perte de sa jambe droite devrait être un élément supplémentaire qui pourrait justifier l'opinion de la Commission selon laquelle, même si c'est une anomalie subséquente comme ils disent, il devrait toucher une pension au taux évalué par le médecin, de 10 p. 100.

Nous sommes très heureux d'avoir vu ce passage dans le Livre blanc et de constater que le gouvernement a l'intention de l'incorporer au texte de la loi. Mais si on a surtout l'intention d'approuver ce qui se passe, le président de la Commission nous a dit assez clairement, à plusieurs reprises, qu'il n'y a pas de compétence juridique pour ce qu'ils ont fait, et nous leur sommes reconnaissants d'avoir fait autant, mais si l'on veut vraiment légaliser le statu quo: il ne s'agit pas de donner suite aux recommandations du comité Woods. D'après ce Comité, en plus de légaliser cet état de choses et d'accorder une pension pour invalidité subséquente, on devrait aussi considérer que si une personne est amputée d'une jambe et que l'autre jambe est atteinte, cela augmente son invalidité.

Pour le peu de temps qui nous est réservé cet après-midi, c'est tout ce que je peux donner comme précision. D'après moi, il ne reste qu'à se référer au rapport Woods et aprendre mais, en toute honnêteté, je devrais dire qu'à la lecture du Livre blanc, nous avons enlevé

Pour le peu de temps qui nous est réservé cet après-midi, c'est tout ce que je peux donner comme précision. D'après moi, il ne reste qu'à se référer au rapport Woods et à prendre connaissance des détails mais, en toute honnêteté, je devrais dire qu'à la lecture du Livre blanc, nous avons eu l'impression que la voie était déjà tracée et que nous allions l'incorporer au texte de la loi. Pour le moment, nous ne sommes pas certains que toutes les intentions du rapport aient été traduites dans le Livre blanc et qu'elles seraient adoptées.

M. Marshall: Je crois que vous l'avez dit à la page 35. C'est parfaitement clair à mon avis.

M. Butler: Monsieur le président le prochain paragraphe, porte sur la Commission d'appel.

Commission d'appel

L'un des secteurs importants qu'étudie le Comité Woods a trait à la question des appels dans la partie dite périphérique de l'application des pensions. On a beaucoup parlé du manque d'une bonne procédure d'appel à la procedure in the Commission in regard to entitlement. The War Amputations of Canada heartily agree with the conclusions of the Woods Committee in this regard and commend to the Government the establishment of an independent Pension Appeal Board to hear cases involving basic entitlement.

It may have gone almost unnoticed, however, that the Woods Committee was equally concerned about the lack of appeal procedures in regard to other types of decisions including the extent of assessment, consequential rulings and the amount being paid for Attendance Allowance. Under existing Commission procedures, there is no appeal in these types of cases. The applications are considered by a single Commissioner who then obtains the signatures of two other Commissioners, and if the decision is negative, that is it!

For the pensioner whose entitlement is not in doubt (in that his disability resulted from some clear-cut incident such as a gunshot wound) the provision of an independent appeal board to deal with applications in regard to discretionary matters which often arise from the original disability may be far more important than the provision for appeals in regard to basic entitlement.

The files of the War Amputations of Canada contain many instances where, despite resounding evidence, the "one-shot" application for an increase in assessment, a consequential ruling or an award of Attendance Allowance was denied. The Association had to be content with this decision as there was no appeal therefrom. It is understandable, therefore, that the War Amputations of Canada supports wholeheartedly the proposal of the Woods Report for an independent appeal board, and in particular emphasizes the need to make provision, under this board, to hear appeals in regard to the ancillary matters referred to herein, the most important of which are possibly the degree of assessment and consequential disabilities.

The decision in the White Paper which indicates that the new appellate procedure would apply not only to entitlement but to discretionary awards, described as "any award other than an entitlement award" is a forward step and we would wish to express our sincere appreciation in this connection.

[Interprétation]

Commission au sujet de l'admissibilité. L'association des amputés de guerre du Canada est tout à fait d'accord avec les conclusions du Comité Woods à ce sujet et recommande au gouvernement qu'une Commission d'appel des pensions indépendante soit établie pour entendre les causes relatives au droit à l'admissibilité.

Il se peut cependant qu'on n'ait pas remarqué que le Comité Woods s'était aussi intéressé à l'absence de procédure d'appel concernant les autres types de décision comme le degré d'évaluation, les décisions vis-à-vis des invalidités secondaires et le montant à verser à titre d'allocation de présence. Suivant les procédures qui existent à la Commission, il n'existe pas de droit d'appel dans ce genre de cas. Les demandes sont étudiées par un seul commissaire qui demande ensuite à deux autres commissaires d'apposer leurs signatures et, si la décision est négative, le cas est réglé!

Quant aux pensionnés dont le droit n'est pas mis en doute parce que son invalidité provient d'un incident dont on a la preuve, (comme la blessure par balle), l'existence d'une commission d'appel indépendante, pour instruire les demandes vis-à-vis des invalidités secondaires concernant les questions où une discrétion peut s'exercer et qui proviennent de l'invalidité originale, peut être beaucoup plus importante qu'une disposition permettant de faire appel au sujet du droit à l'admissibilité.

Les dossiers de l'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada renferment plusieurs cas où, en dépit d'une évidence patente, une demande d'augmentation d'évaluation unique, une décision concernant l'invalidité secondaire ou encore une décision touchant une allocation de soin a été rejetée. L'Association a dû se contenter de cette décision puisqu'il n'était pas possible d'en appeler. On peut donc comprendre pourquoi l'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada appuie sans réserve la proposition du rapport Woods portant création d'une commission d'appel indépendante et souligne d'une façon particulière le besoin de prévoir, au sein de cette commission, un mécanisme afin d'entendre les appels relatifs aux questions d'invalidités secondaires dont on parle et dont les plus importantes d'entre elles sont peut-être celles touchant le degré d'évaluation et les invalidités secondaires.

La recommandation du Livre Blanc qui prévoit une nouvelle procédure d'appel qui s'appliquerait non seulement au droit à pension mais aussi aux décisions discrétionnaires, qui se définissent comme «toutes décisions autres qu'une décision relative à un droit à pension» constitue un pas en avant. Nous

[Text]

We are concerned, however, regarding a possible lack of independence should the final authority for such appeals rest with the proposed "APPEAL SECTION" of the Pension Commission. We fully realize all of the difficulties involved in attempting to establish a form of appeal which would ensure a completely independent review and which would give to the applicant the appearance of justice having been done. Certainly an appeal to the courts would not seem to suit the situation; neither would a form of "Ministerial Review" solve the problem. The latter seems to work well in respect of several other administrative tribunals in the federal government service, but traditionally pensions are removed from the immediate influence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. We can only presume that the Woods Committee gave the matter a great deal of thought after hearing the views of veterans organizations and consulting with a number of other knowledgeable persons in this area. Its proposal to establish an independent appeal board outside of the Pension Commission would seem to us to be the ideal solution.

The Chairman: Are there any questions the members of the Committee want to ask? Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, in the White Paper it gives two divisions: an Entitlement Hearing Division which consists of 10 Commissioners, and in the Appeal Division it gives another five. In the Appeal Division, what is your ultimate solution? What should be the make-up of these five members of the Appeal Board?

Mr. Butler: I think in answering that, Mr. Chairman, no matter how you look at it, although the divisions of the Pension Commission would be separate, as outlined in the White Paper, in many fields we feel, and our members feel, that those members would still be working together with the other members of the Commission whatever division they may be in or may be transferred from and to. I do not know the workload of the Pension Commission, but I know it is very heavy; and whether or not money could be provided for an additional group is not in our reference at all, but we feel that a completely separate board, separate from the Pension Commission, would be ideal.

désirons exprimer notre reconnaissance la plus vive à cet effet. Nous sommes cependant inquiets au sujet de l'absence possible d'indépendance si l'autorité finale jugeant ces appels fait partie de la section d'appel projetée de la Commission des pensions. Nous nous rendons bien compte des difficultés qui existent quant aux tentatives d'établissement d'une forme d'appel qui assurerait une révision des cas complètement indépendante et qui donnerait impression au demandeur que justice lui a été rendue. Bien sûr, un appel placé devant les tribunaux ne nous apparaît pas convenir à la situation et une forme ou une autre de «révision ministérielle» ne règlerait pas non plus le problème. Cette dernière possibilité semble bien fonctionner dans le cas de plusieurs autres tribunaux administratifs à l'intérieur du service gouvernemental fédéral mais, par tradition, les pensions sont soustraites à l'influence immédiate du ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants. Nous devons donc accepter l'hypothèse que le Comité Woods a beaucoup réfléchi à cette question après avoir entendu les opinions des organisations des anciens combattants et avoir consulté un certain nombre de personnes spécialisées dans ce domaine. Sa proposition d'établir une commission d'appel indépendante en dehors de la Commission des pensions nous apparaît comme la solution idéale.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions qu'aimeraient poser les députés? Monsieur Marshall.

M. Marshall: Monsieur le président, dans le Livre blanc l'on constate qu'il y a deux sections: une Division de l'admissibilité composée de 10 commissaires et une Division des appels qui en compte cinq. Pour la Division des appels, quelle solution proposez-vous? Comment devrait-on constituer cette Division des appels?

M. Butler: Monsieur le président, l'optique qu'on adopte, les deux divisions de la commission des pensions seraient distinctes, comme l'indique le Livre blanc. Dans plusieurs domaines nous croyons, ainsi que nos collègues, que ces membres devraient encore collaborer avec les autres membres de la Commission; quelle que soit la division où ils se trouvent et où ils soient mutés. Je ne connais pas la quantité de travail de la Commission des pensions, mais je sais qu'il y en a beaucoup et nous n'avons pas pour mandat de savoir si on pourrait ou non verser de l'argent à un autre groupe, mais, à notre avis, une commission indépendante, distincte de la Commission des pensions serait la solution idéale.

[Texte]

Mr. Marshall: Separate from the ten?

Mr. Butler: Yes, separate from the board at present.

Mr. Marshall: In other words, the Appeal Division should not consist of any of the ten members of the Entitlement Hearing Division?

Mr. Butler: That is our general thinking on it. It should be a separate unit entirely which is assessing it independently, with no influence of previous hearings.

Mr. Marshall: Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? I think we have had a fair amount of testimony in previous hearings on that point and I think members of the Committee are generally quite sympathetic to the point of view expressed.

Mr. Butler: Would you like to hear our French boy, Paul Bédard, from the province of Quebec. Income Tax Exemption. It is all yours, Paul. Are you going to speak in English?

Mr. Paul Bédard (War Amputations of Canada, Quebec City, Quebec): I hope everybody will understand.

Income Tax Exemption:

Veterans organizations have been understandably concerned regarding the recommendation in the Report of the Royal Commission on Taxation to the effect that War Disability Pension should be taxable. This recommendation is an abrogation of the rights guaranteed to veterans by successive administrations since World War I. We are indebted to the Woods Committee for taking the time and delving into the research which permitted a thorough exploration of the facts. We are indeed pleased to note that in the opinion of the Woods Committee, the exemption granted to War Disability pensioners is well founded and should continue.

It is not feasible to review the matter at length in this submission. The War Amputations of Canada has prepared a separate brief on this question, copies of which were forwarded to the Minister of Finance on April 26, 1968. Additional copies of this brief can be made available to members of the House of Commons as required.

[Interprétation]

M. Marshall: Indépendante des dix commissaires?

M. Butler: Oui, distincte du bureau actuel.

M. Marshall: Autrement dit, la Division des appels ne devrait être formée d'aucun membre de la Division de l'admissibilité?

M. Butler: C'est ainsi qu'on voit la chose. Ce devrait être une section entièrement séparée, ce qui implique qu'on devrait en choisir les membres de façon indépendante, sans être influencé par des audiences précédentes.

M. Marshall: Merci.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Je crois qu'il y a eu un assez bon nombre de témoignages à ce sujet au cours des audiences précédentes et que les membres du Comité comprennent en général assez bien l'opinion exprimée.

M. Butler: Aimeriez-vous entendre le témoignage de notre délégué de langue française, M. Paul Bédard de la province de Québec, sur la question de l'exemption d'impôt sur le revenu. La parole est à vous, Paul. Allez-vous parler anglais?

M. Paul Bédard (Amputés de guerre du Canada, de Québec (Qué.)): J'espère que tout le monde comprendra.

Exemption d'impôt sur le revenu

Les associations d'anciens combattants s'inquiètent, et cela se comprend, au sujet des recommandations que fait le rapport de la Commission royale sur la fiscalité selon lesquelles la pension d'invalidité de guerre devrait être imposable. Cette recommandation constitue l'abrogation de droits garantis aux anciens combattants par les administrations qui se sont succédées depuis la première guerre mondiale. Nous avons contracté une dette envers le Comité Woods qui a pris le temps et fait les efforts voulus pour faire les recherches qui permettent d'étudier intégralement les faits. En effet, nous sommes heureux de remarquer que, de l'avis du Comité Woods, l'exemption accordée aux pensionnés pour invalidité de guerre est bien fondée et elle devrait continuer à être appliquée.

Il n'est pas possible d'étudier la question longuement dans le présent exposé. L'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada a établi un exposé distinct sur cette question et des exemplaires ont été adressés au ministre des Finances le 26 avril 1968. Des exemplaires supplémentaires de cet exposé peuvent être mis à la disposition des députés de la Chambre des communes au besoin.

[Text]

Perhaps it is sufficient to state here that War Disability Pension is a continuation of wartime pay and allowances, and the same exemption which has always applied to this form of emolument should continue for pensions. In other words, compensation being paid to a war casualty is, by law and tradition, a very special type of income, earned on the field of battle. Canada, by implied contract, agreed that this income would be tax-free and any attempt to bring it under the purview of income tax would be to deprive the pensioner or his widow of a right conferred by a government in respect of war service.

• 1440

Mr. Butler: His English was pretty good, was it not?

Mr. Marshall: It is better than my French.

Mr. Bédard: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Thank you. Any questions anyone wants to raise? Mr. Knowles.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): What action did this Committee take to—this apparently is something within the purview of the Department of Finance, and I was wondering what steps we as a veterans affairs committee could take to add to the representation. Mr. Chairman, maybe you could answer that. Is there anything we can do as a committee?

The Chairman: I think the Committee will have to examine a number of matters in this report and this is one which members might want to flag. Concerning what we can recommend in this area is something about which I am going to get additional advice.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Perhaps take the Minister of Finance on one side.

The Chairman: In any case, I am sure we have all noted the representation, and there are many avenues opened to Members of Parliament to express their views. Are there any other comments? Mr. Chadderdon.

Mr. Chadderton: Just one comment, Mr. Chairman, that may be of value to your Committee. All veterans organizations were deeply concerned with this recommendation in the report on the Royal Commission on Taxation, particularly inasmuch as it was not explained at any great length. It was just a kind of

[Interpretation]

Il suffit peut-être de dire ici que les pensions d'invalidité de guerre constituent une continuation de la solde et des allocations du temps de guerre et que la même exemption qui a toujours été appliquée à cette espèce de rémunération doit s'appliquer aux pensions. En d'autres termes, les versements faits à une victime de la guerre constituent, selon la loi et la tradition, une catégorie bien spéciale de revenus qui ont été gagnés sur le champ de bataille. Par un contrat tacite, le Canada a accepté que ce revenu soit exempt d'impôt et toute tentative de le soumettre à un impôt sur le revenu équivaudrait à priver le pensionné ou sa veuve d'un droit qui lui a été conféré par un gouvernement à l'égard d'un service de guerre.

M. Butler: Son anglais est assez bien n'est-ce pas?

M. Marshall: C'est mieux que mon français.

M. Bédard: Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Merci. Ya-t-il d'autres questions à poser? Monsieur Knowles.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Quelle a été l'attitude de ce Comité? Apparemment il s'agit d'une chose qui relève de la compétence du Ministère des Finances, je me demandais quelles mesures nous pourrions prendre en tant que Membres du Comité des Affaires des anciens combattants pour faire valoir notre point de vue. M. le président, pourriez-vous nous répondre, n'y a-t-il rien que nous puissions faire en tant que membres de ce Comité?

Le président: Je crois que le Comité devra examiner un certain nombre de questions dans ce rapport et celle-ci en est une que les membres pourront soulever au sujet de nos recommandations, je vais encore me renseigner à ce sujet.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Peut-être auprès du Ministre des Finances.

Le président: En tout cas je crois que nous avons tous pris note de la remarque et les membres du Parlement ont diverses voies pour exprimer leurs vues. Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires? M. Chadderton.

M. Chadderton: Juste une remarque M. le président qui peut être utile pour les membres de votre comité. Toutes les organisations d'anciens combattants se préoccupent grandement au sujet de cette recommandation dans le Rapport de la Commission royale sur la fiscalité surtout du fait qu'elle n'a pas été très one-line reference, but we realized when we read it, the tremendous impact on the Pension Act and on pensioners generally. I think it was for that reason that the veterans organizations placed the matter squarely before the Woods Committee.

So far as I know, the examination of this subject done by Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues is the only examination that has ever been done of the validity of the exemption of income tax in the matter of the Pension Act.

When I was required as committee secretary to dig into it, there was no research done. We were starting from scratch, and if for no other reason I commend to your Committee the pages in the Woods Committee Report dealing with this because it really does dig out the background and shows the validity of this exemption.

What we are afraid of, Mr. Chairman, in the veterans movement is that if this is not handled by a veterans affairs committee and it comes in front of a committee dealing purely with finance, when the White Paper on finance comes up, who is going to speak for us? This is our problem, sir, and this is why we put it squarely in front of this Committee that we feel somebody has got to bring out these views.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, on this particular point, would it be possible for this Committee to inquire from the other committee if we could either appear in front of them or get some information relative to the veterans question so that we could look at it appropriately? I have to agree with the delegation that this Committee has a responsibility to that end, and I think this matter should be well looked into.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Guay, I do not think there is any procedure by which one committee can make representations before another committee of the House of Commons. But I do think there will be public hearings on tax reforms, and I am sure there will be every opportunity for the War Amputations of Canada and other groups to make their representations when the White Paper on tax reform is put forward. I always find that many people seem to give blanket endorsement to the total package of the Carter Combien expliquée. Il s'agit juste d'une référence très brève mais nous avons vite réalisé lorsque nous l'avons lue son immense répercussion sur les dispositions prévues par la Loi sur les pensions et pour les pensionnés en général. Je crois que c'est pour cette raison que les organisations d'anciens combattants ont porté la question tout entière devant les membres du Comité Woods.

En autant que je sache, l'étude qui en a été faite par M. le Juge Woods et ses collègues est la seule qui ait jamais été faite relative à la validité de l'exemption de l'impôt sur le revenu relative à la Loi sur les pensions. Quand il m'a été demandé à titre de secrétaire du Comité de m'en occuper, je me suis aperçu qu'aucune recherche n'avait été faite. Il nous a fallu partir du début et c'est pourquoi à toutes fins utiles je recommande à votre comité la lecture de ces pages dans le rapport du Comité Woods qui traitent du sujet car vous y verrez exposées toutes les données et tout l'historique de la question démontrant la validité de cette exemption.

Ce que nous craignons, M. le président, dans notre association d'anciens combattants, c'est que si cette question n'est pas traitée par un comité des affaires des anciens combattants, qu'elle le soit devant un comité préoccupé uniquement de questions financières, lorsque le Livre blanc sur ces questions sera publié qui parlera en notre nom? C'est là notre problème, monsieur, et c'est pourquoi nous vous le soumettons tel quel car nous pensons que quelqu'un doit s'en occuper.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): M. le président, sur ce point en particulier, nous serait-il possible de nous renseigner auprès de l'autre comité pour savoir si nous pouvons nous présenter devant eux et leur demander des renseignements sur la question relative aux anciens combattants afin que nous soyons mieux renseignés? Je suis entièrement d'accord avec l'opinion de la délégation sur le fait, que nous avons une certaine responsabilité à cet égard, je pense que cette question doit être étudiée de très près.

Le président: M. Guay, je ne crois pas qu'il existe aucune procédure qui permet à un comité de faire des représentations devant un autre comité de la Chambre des communes, je crois qu'il y aura des audiences publiques sur les réformes fiscales et je suis sûr que les Amputés du Canada et les autres groupes auront toutes les possibilités de faire valoir leur point de vue lorsque le Livre blanc sur les réformes fiscales sera déposé. D'après ce que je vois, nombreux sont ceux qui souscrivent sans réserve à l'ensemble des recommanmission recommendations. But one has to look at the fine print in many of the recommendations.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to Mr. Chadderton, because of this matter. The Carter Commission is trying to establish a new basis of taxation. It is quite a different basis, and it is based on additions to purchasing power, and taxation should be based on the ability to pay. If exemptions are granted in one instance and have to be granted in other instances, this virtually destroys the principle of the Carter Commission because, let us say, mining companies who have been granted the special concessions will argue that it was given by the Canadian government and that any withdrawal from this will constitute a breach of contract or a breach of promise between the parties.

I am wondering if there is some way of preserving the principle of the Carter Commission which has essentially stated a buck is a buck by granting exemptions. In other words, taxing the income but granting exemptions in the case of certain amputations, which the Carter Commission has suggested—not specifically in this case, but we know that persons who were suffering, who have suffered a loss of limb, certainly have extra expenses—these persons are deserving of a different kind of treatment than those who have not gone through this sort of thing. Have you given any consideration to that approach? In other words, to permit the income to be taxable but then call for special exemptions in the case of amputations?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we certainly have in the War Amputations of Canada, and we studied the Carter Report at length and we were alarmed by the blanket recommendation. I will quote it:

> The comprehensive tax base we recommend should encompass all forms of income, and therefore in principle all exclusions and exemptions should be terminated.

All forms of income, of course, would include income under the Pension Act but, when we examined further into the Carter Report, we noted some 13 different types of income, and none of them would apply to the Pension Act. I mean, things such as monies earned for services rendered, workmen's compensation, retirement income, social benefit to replace income, unemployment insurance, monies received from the proceeds of an insurance dations de la Commission Carter. Il faut cependant savoir lire entre les lignes pour nombre de ces recommandations.

M. Saltsman: M. le président, j'aimerais poser une question à M. Chadderton là-dessus. La Commission Carter tente d'établir une nouvelle assiette de l'impôt. Il s'agit d'une base différente fondée sur les additions au pouvoir d'achat et l'impôt devrait tenir compte de la capacité de payer. Si des exemptions sont accordées dans un cas et doivent être admises dans d'autres, le principe même de la Commission Carter en est virtuellement détruit, citons par exemple les sociétés minières à qui des concessions particulières ont été accordées, elles feront valoir que celles-ci leur ont été concédées par le Gouvernement du Canada et que toute suppression constituerait une rupture de contrat ou l'annulation d'une promesse entre les parties. Je me demande s'il existe un moyen de conserver les principes de la Commission Carter qui déclare en fait qu'un dollar est un dollar par l'allocation d'exemptions. En d'autres termes imposer le revenu mais permettre des exemptions pour certaines amputations ce que la Commission Carter a proposé sans spécifier pour quels cas, mais nous connaissons, nous savons que les personnes qui ont subi la perte de membres doivent certainement faire face à des dépenses supplémentaires et ces personnes doivent être traitées d'une manière différente des autres. Que pensez-vous de cette façon de voir les choses? C'est-à-dire permettre que le revenu soit imposable mais réclamer alors des exemptions particulières dans le cas des amputés?

M. Chadderton: Oui, M. le président, les Amputés de guerre y ont certainement songé, nous avons étudié le Rapport Carter en détail et nous avons été alarmés par la portée générale de la recommandation, je cite:

> L'assiette compréhensive que nous recommandons incluerait toutes les formes de revenu et par conséquent toutes les exclusions et exemptions devraient en principe être abolies.

Naturellement, toute forme de revenu engloberait le revenu découlant de la Loi sur les pensions mais quand nous avons étudié le Rapport Carter de près nous avons noté 13 différentes sortes de revenus et aucune parmi elles ne se rapportait à la Loi sur les pensions, je veux dire des choses comme des montants gagnés pour des services rendus, les indemnités d'accident du travail, les pensions de retraite, les prestations sociales pour rempla-policy, monies paid as investment income, monetary gifts, monetary rewards for some specific act, bursaries or scholarships, alimony or separation allowances, monies received as part of a profit-sharing plan, and finally winnings from gambling.

So we felt that this was fine. We do not disagree with the principle that these are all various forms of income. Many of them are paid through plans which are contributory, where the man has been putting his money in all along, and that type of thing. But what we were pointing out was that nowhere, apparently, in the Carter Report specifically, did they attempt to clarify just what pension was, and it does not come under any of the monies that they classified.

The Chairman: You do not think it is a social benefit to replace income?

Mr. Chadderton: No, definitely not, sir. No, we do not. Pension is paid partly to replace earnings, but traditionally and by law it is also paid as a debt and as a mark of gratitude which certainly takes it out of the category of income replacement. It is partly income replacement, yes, but not wholly.

Mr. Saltsman: Are you saying, then, that you have no quarrel with the philosophy of the Carter Commission, but you think that your position is completely different from that of anyone else?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Saltsman, this is precisely the principle of the brief of the War Amputations of Canada.

Mr. Saltsman: You see your position, then, as being unique.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, we do, sir. We do, because we feel that pension income is unique.

Mr. Whicher: In other words, it should not be taxable.

Mr. Chadderton: That is quite right, Mr. Whicher. I might add that we ourselves are quite prepared to go before any other parliamentary committee which may be studying this matter. But traditionally, we look to the Veterans Aflairs Committee as our cham-cer le revenu, l'assurance-chômage, et les montants reçus à titre de règlement de police d'assurance, les montants versés à titre de revenus qui proviennent de placements, les cadeaux en argent, les récompenses monétaires pour certains actes, les bourses d'études, les allocations de séparation ou d'entretien, les sommes reçues en tant que part d'un plan de profits mutuels et pour finir les gains provenant du jeu.

Nous pensons que c'est excellent. Nous sommes d'accord avec le principe qu'il s'agit là de diverses formes de revenu, nombre d'entre elles sont payées grâce à des plans de contribution où la personne a contribué par des versements réguliers, mais ce que nous faisons remarquer c'est que nulle part et dans le Rapport Carter en particulier ils n'essaient de préciser sous quelle sorte de revenu se classe la pension car en fait elle n'entre dans aucune de ces catégories.

Le président: Vous ne pensez pas qu'il s'agit d'un avantage social pour remplacer le revenu?

M. Chadderton: Non, certainement pas, Monsieur. La pension est payée en partie pour remplacer les gains, mais traditionnellement et selon la loi elle est aussi versée comme dette et comme marque de gratitude ce qui assurément l'exclut de la catégorie de remplacement de revenu. C'est en partie un remplacement de revenu mais pas entièrement.

M. Saltsman: Voulez-vous dire alors que vous n'avez rien contre la philosophie de la Commission Carter mais vous jugez que votre situation est complètement différente des autres?

M. Chadderton: M. Saltsman, c'est précisément le principe à la base du mémoire des amputés de guerre du Canada.

M. Saltsman: Vous voyez votre cas alors comme étant unique.

M. Chadderton: Oui, monsieur, parce que nous estimons que le revenu provenant de pension est tout à fait particulier.

M. Whicher: En d'autres mots il ne doit pas être imposable.

M. Chadderton: C'est cela même M. Whicher. Je puis ajouter que nous-mêmes nous sommes tout à fait prêts à comparaître devant tout autre comité parlementaire qui étudie cette question. Mais par tradition, nous considérons le Comité des affaires des anciens pions, and if you can do anything to assist, we hope you will.

The Chairman: I am sure members of the Committee are sympathetic. I do think, however, that your organization should avail itself of any opportunities that are extended by the parties looking at tax reform generally to make your own direct representation.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, we will do so.

Mr. Whicher: I think it would be a good idea, Mr. Chairman, if he did appear before the Finance Committee to let us know, the members of this Committee. We could be along to lend a helping hand in case there is somebody there who wishes to have the Carter Report implemented in total.

Mr. Chadderton: Very good.

The Chairman: We will leave it at this point and invite you to go on.

Lt. Col. Lambert: The next item is the continuation of pension at married rates for 12 months. Mr. Harry Worling is our newest member of the War Amputations of Canada, National Council. He was elected last week, at Montreal.

Mr. Marshall: He looks very young.

Lt. Col. Lambert: He is very able.

Mr. Worling: Continuation of Pension at "Married Rates" for 12 Months: May we refer to the Woods Report, volume 3, chapter 27, page 906, rcommendation 109, which states:

> 109—That Section 24 (1a) and (b) be amended to provide that pension continue to be paid for a peiod of 12 months following the death of a member of the forces in receipt of pension on account of disability in respect of whom additional pension is payable for a wife, child or parent.

May we refer also to the document: WHITE PAPER ON VETERANS PENSIONS August 1969, page 15, column 2, wherein it reads:

combattants comme notre porte-parole et si vous pouvez faire quelque chose pour nous nous espérons que vous le ferez sans hésiter.

Le président: Je suis sûr que vous avez la sympathie de tous les membres du comité. Je pense cependant que votre association devrait profiter de toutes les occasions de se faire entendre directement par les parties qui s'occupent de la réforme fiscale.

M. Chadderton: Oui, c'est ce que nous ferons.

M. Whicher: Je crois que ce serait une excellente idée, M. le président, si l'Association se présentait devant le Comité des finances de nous le faire savoir à nous autres membres de ce comité, nous pourrions prêter main-forte au cas où il y aurait là quelqu'un qui souhaiterait voir les recommandations du Rapport Carter mises en vigueur dans leur totalité.

M. Chadderton: Très bien.

Le président: Nous allons nous arrêter là et nous vous invitons à poursuivre.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Le prochain article se rapporte à la continuation de la pension au taux accordé aux personnes mariées pendant douze mois. M. Harry Worling est un tout nouveau membre du Conseil national de l'Association des amputés de guerre du Canada, il a été élu la semaine dernière à Montréal.

M. Marshall: Il semble très jeune.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Il est très compétent.

M. Worling: Continuation d'une pension au tarif des gens mariés durant 5 mois. Nous nous permettons de nous reporter à la recommandation 109, page 1037 du chapitre 27 du volume 3 du rapport Woods qui se lit ainsi:

> 109—Que l'article 24 (a) et (b) soit modifié afin que la pension continue d'être versée pendant une période de 12 mois après le décès d'un membre des forces qui recevait une pension en raison d'une invalidité, et qui avait également droit à une pension supplémentaire pour son épouse, son enfant, son père ou sa mère.

Nous nous permettons de nous reporter également au document qui s'intitule Livre blanc sur les pensions des anciens combattants, août 1969, page 15, colonne 2, où l'on déclare ce qui suit:

> «Le gouvernement a aussi rejeté plusieurs recommandations concernant l'élargisseare paid to his dependents have been rejected. One of these recommended that payment of the rate in effect at the time the pensioner died be continued for a year; and another that where the disability was assessed at less than 48 percent, the pensioner's dependents should be pensioned at the percentage that he was receiving at the time of death.

The reason given for rejection of these recommendations was as follows:

Such payments would veer from the principle of compensation for loss suffered and, in effect, would be welfare payments. As such, they would be designed to meet needs which are already taken care of in other Government Programmes.

We respectfully suggest that although the rationale of the government might well apply to the recommendation to continue pensions on a pro rata basis for widows of pensioners who have died and were in receipt of pension at less than 48 percent, such rationale is not applicable to recommendation number 109, which merely asks that a widow who is already entitled to pension under Section 36 (3) of the Act be allowed to receive pension at the married rate (where it is higher than the widows rate) for a period of one year. The reasoning in this proposal is merely to allow her time to make the necessary adjustment in her way of life following the death of the pensioner.

It stands to reason that, in a situation of this nature, the ordinary expenses of the family will carry on for the period immediately following the death of the pensioner and for some few months into the future.

Necessarily, the family will have been counting on this income to meet at least part of such expenses; and a sharp drop within the period anywhere between one and 30 days is too sudden. It has never seemed necessary to go into detail in explanation of this matter, and the situation appears to speak for itself. Veterans organizations have been puzzled for many years over the hesitancy of successive governments to adopt this seemingly logical measure.

We have never fully understood what objections there may have been to its adoption—and we must confess that we are even more confused by the reason given in the White Paper.

[Interprétation]

ment des dispositions de la loi en vertu desquelles, après le décès d'un pensionné, une pension est versée aux personnes qui étaient à sa charge. On avait proposé de continuer pendant un an le paiement de la pension au taux en vigueur au moment du décès du pensionné; et aussi de verser aux personnes à charge, une pension identique à celle dont jouissait le pensionné, avant son décès, dans le cas d'invalidité inférieure à 48 p. 100.»

La raison donnée pour justifier le rejet de ces recommandations était la suivante:

Nous proposons avec tout le respect voulu que même si le raisonnement officiel pourrait fort bien s'appliquer à la recommandation visant la continuation de la pension à un taux proportionnel aux veuves de pensionnés décédés qui touchaient une pension inférieure à 48 p. 100, un tel raisonnement ne s'applique pas à la recommandation n° 109 qui demande simplement qu'une veuve ayant déjà droit à une pension suivant l'article 36 (3) de la Loi soit autorisée à recevoir une pension au taux des gens mariés (dans les cas où ce taux est supérieur au taux versé à une veuve) durant une période d'un an. Le raisonnement qui s'applique à cette proposition consiste simplement à lui accorder le temps voulu pour se réadapter au nouveau mode de vie qui sera le sien après le décès du pensionné.

Dans une situation de ce genre, il apparaît tout à fait raisonnable que les dépenses ordinaires d'une famille vont continuer à se produire dans la période qui suit immédiatement le décès du pensionné et durant les quelques mois à venir. Nécessairement, la famille devait compter sur ce revenu pour faire face, partiellement du moins, à de telles dépenses, et la réduction substantielle de ce revenu en moins de trente jours est trop soudaine. Il n'a jamais semblé nécessaire d'expliquer ce point en détail, car la situation est évidente en soi. Depuis nombre d'années, les associations d'anciens combattants se demandent pourquoi les gouvernements successifs ont tant hésité à adopter une mesure qui semble si logique. Nous n'avons jamais compris les objections qu'on oppose à son adoption et, confessons-le, nous comprenons encore moins la raison avancée dans le Livre blanc.

[Text]

Surely it cannot be said that to continue pension in payment at the married rate for a reasonable adjustment period would constitute any form of welfare. Also, we know of no "other government programmes" which are designed to meet such needs.

With all due respect, we contend that the continuation of pension at the married rate for a period of one year would certainly qualify under the "Principle of Compensation for Loss Suffered". We are speaking, in this instance, of the pensioner's income rather than the widow's income. The pensioner's income (which recommendation 109 suggests should be continued for a period of one year) is paid as compensation for the loss of earning power in the unskilled labour market. This loss of earning power would have been a very real factor in the financial management of the pensioner's family prior to his death. As a result of his disability it is quite likely that his earning potential was reduced during his lifetime, and it must be acknowledged that this would affect the financial situation confronting his widow, at least during the adjustment stages after his death.

We are satisfied with the provisions of Section 36 (3) which provides for continuation of payment to the widow of the pensioner in classes 1 to 11—but we feel that the overnight adjustment from married rates to widows rates makes no provision for the transition stages—a situation which has been in existence since the inception of the Pension Act, and one which has caused a great deal of hardship over the years.

May we be permitted one further observation: this Association has made repeated requests that a provision to continue pension in payment at the married rates for a year be incorporated into the Act. We feel most strongly that the governments who have considered these requests have never given a reasonable answer as to why this provision cannot be made. Although we do not wish to seem bitter about it, we have no alternative but to comment that the reason for refusal now, as outlined in the White Paper, still leaves us without a satisfactory explanation in the matter.

The government's answer is all the more confusing when it is considered that it is used to cover two totally different recommendations. Quite obviously, it does apply to a

[Interpretation]

Peut-on dire que de continuer le versement de la pension au taux de personne mariée pendant une période raisonnable d'adaptation constituerait une forme de bien-être? Certes non. De plus, il n'existe, à notre connaissance, aucun «autre programme du gouvernement» pour répondre à de tels besoins.

Nous soutenons, sauf votre respect, que le versement de la pension au taux de personne mariée pendant un an se placerait certainement sous la rubrique «Principe d'indemnisation des dommages». Il s'agit ici du revenu du pensionné et non du revenu de la veuve. Le revenu du pensionné (la recommandation n° 109 propose que ce revenu soit maintenu pendant un an) est versé comme une indemnité pour la perte de la capacité de gain sur le marché du travail non spécialisé. Cette perte de capacité de gain aurait pesé lourd dans la gestion des finances de la famille du pensionné s'il eût vécu. A cause de son invalidité, il est fort probable que son potentiel de gain a été réduit pendant qu'il vivait—et il faut admettre que cela aurait eu une incidence sur la situation financière de la veuve, du moins pendant la période d'adaptation ultérieure au décès.

Nous sommes satisfaits des dispositions de l'article 36(3) qui prévoit la continuation des versements à la veuve du pensionné des classes 1 à 11; cependant, à notre avis, le passage, du jour au lendemain, du taux de personne mariée au taux de veuve, ne tient aucun compte de la période de transition. Cette situation existe depuis que la Loi sur les pensions a été adoptée, et a été la cause de nombreuses difficultés au cours des ans. Permettez-nous une autre observation: notre association a demandé à maintes et maintes reprises qu'on incorpore à la loi une disposition prévoyant le versement pendant un an de la pension au taux de personne mariée.

A notre avis, les gouvernements qui ont étudié ces demandes n'ont jamais donné de raison valable pour ne pas adopter cette disposition. Nous le disons sans amertume, mais il n'empêche que la raison du refus, telle qu'avancée dans le Livre blanc, ne nous donne pas encore une explication satisfaisante de la question.

La réponse du gouvernement est encore plus étonnante si l'on pense qu'elle se rapporte à deux recommandations totalement différentes. Il est évident qu'elle vise la recom-recommendation that pension be carried on indefinitely on a pro rata basis for widows where the pensioner was in receipt of less than 48 per cent. By no stretch of the imagination, however, could it be made to apply to the request that pension carry on at the married rates for a reasonable adjustment period following the death of a pensioner, where the widow will eventually be required to subsist on widows pension.

If it pleases the Committee, we earnestly suggest that the true intent and purpose of recommendation 109 be studied, in the light of the supporting comment stated in the Woods Committee Report at pages 907 through 909 of the Committee Report, volume 3, chapter 27.

Mr. Whicher: With war veterans allowances are they cut off immediately too?

Mr. Chadderton: They are continued for one year at married rates, sir.

Mr. Whicher: So in other words, we have a precedent here. I thought you might have mentioned that in your brief.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, we do not consider that the continuation of married rates for the war veterans allowance recipient is a precedent for the reason that war veterans allowance is of course a welfare measure: it is based on need. If we were to try to use the War Veterans Allowance Act as a precedent, then we would have to accept the reason in the White Paper for not continuing it, because the White Paper states that it is a welfare measure. We disagree, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen. We say that it is not a welfare measure. Therefore we are not trying to say that because it is done in the War Veterans Allowance Act, it should be carried on in the Pension Act. We do say, though, that the circumstances are similar. You just cannot expect a family which has been living on an income, part or all of which has been made up of pension, to automatically within one to thirty days change their way of living over to where they can live on widows pension.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I agree with what the speaker said, but the fact is that what we want to do is to get this through, and I think a very strong argument is the fact that in other veterans' legislation such as the War Veterans Allowance, it is carried on for mandation de verser indéfiniment une pension au prorata aux veuves dont le mari recevait une pension inférieure à 48 p. 100. Cependant, même avec un grand effort d'imagination, il est impossible de voir comment cette réponse peut s'appliquer à la demande que le versement de la pension au taux de personne mariée soit continué pendant une période raisonnable d'adaptation après le décès du pensionné, alors qu'éventuellement la veuve ne devra compter, pour assurer sa subsistance, que sur une pension de veuve.

Nous demandons respectueusement au Comité de bien vouloir examiner l'intention et le but véritables de la recommandation 109, à la lumière des commentaires contenus aux pages 1025 à 1036, chapitre 27, 3e volume du rapport du comité Woods.

M. Whicher: Arrête-t-on immédiatement les allocations aux anciens combattants?

M. Chadderton: Non, pendant un an, elles continuent à être versées au taux de personnes mariées.

M. Whicher: En d'autres mots, il y a ici un précédent et je me demande pourquoi vous n'avez pas fait état de cela dans votre mémoire.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, nous ne croyons pas que la continuation des taux de personnes mariées pour les pensions des anciens combattants forment un précédent pour la très bonne raison que les allocations aux anciens combattants font partie du programme de bien-être et qu'elles sont fondées sur le besoin. Si nous devions essayer d'utiliser la loi comme précédent, nous devrions alors accepter la raison que donne le Livre blanc pour ne plus en accorder, à savoir, qu'il s'agit d'une mesure sociale. Nous disons que ce n'en est pas une. Par conséquent, nous ne voulons pas insinuer que, parce que ces allocations sont accordées en vertu de la Loi sur les allocations aux anciens combattants, il faudrait qu'elle le soient aussi en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions. Nous croyons, néanmoins que les circonstances sont semblables. On ne peut s'attendre qu'une famille qui vit d'un revenu presque entièrement composé d'une pension puisse en 30 jours changer son mode de vie afin de pouvoir vivre d'une pension de veuve.

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, je suis d'accord avec ce que l'interlocuteur vient de dire. Mais, en fait, ce que nous voulons, c'est permettre que cette pratique se fasse et à cet égard, un argument probant est le suivant: la Loi sur les allocations aux anciens combat-one year; secondly I would like to point out that in many instances where it is cut off to a single rate after the pensioner dies, that amount of money is much less than the widow would receive from what you choose to call welfare measures, namely the War veterans allowance, and if the government had done it on one hand, there is no reason why they should not come up with a good excuse why they should not do it on the other.

Mr. Chadderton: In earlier years we did make what turned out to be a mistake in our discussions with the Commission and government people. We made the mistake of saying that it is done for veterans allowance recipients so should be done for the pension recipients. Quite properly we were shot down on the understanding that they were quite willing to do it for the pension widow provided she is willing to subject herself to a means test. This is why we did not use that as extra ammunition for our argument; we feel we do not need it, sir. We feel that the point is that you just cannot expect a pension widow to make this transition overnight and that that argument stands up by itself.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton, did I understand you to say that a widow of a pensioner is still eligible to apply for a war veterans allowance pension?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, she would be if her widow's pension was not sufficient, but certainly not the widow of a pensioner, a member of our organization, because all our members are in receipt of pension of 48 per cent or greater. So under current rates she would receive $200 a month, which would make her ineligible for war veterans allowance.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I think that perhaps...

The Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Weatherhead had his hand up and I recognized him.

Mr. MacRae: What I have to say is on the same point. I think as a matter of clarification at this point Mr. Chadderton could advise, because of his great knowledge of this, that when you talk about the widow's pension under war veterans allowance that is completely at the discretion of the War Veterans Allowance Board whether or not that extra year is granted. Perhaps, Mr. Whicher, you did not realize that and it sheds more light on the matter. It is up to them whether or not tants stipule que les allocations continueront un an après, le mort de l'ancien combattant; je voudrais aussi signaler que dans de nombreux cas où la pension est réduite au taux simple à la mort du pensionné, ce montant est beaucoup moindre que le montant que recevrait la veuve si elle recevait ce que vous appelez les prestations d'assistance sociale, soit l'allocation aux anciens combattants; je ne vois pas pourquoi si le gouvernement l'a fait dans un cas, il ne trouverait pas une bonne excuse de le faire dans l'autre.

M. Chadderton: Par le passé, nous avons fait ce qui s'est révélé être une erreur dans nos discussions avec le Comité et le gouvernement. Nous avons commis l'erreur de dire que ce qui était fait pour les bénéficiaires d'allocations aux anciens combattants pouvait l'être aussi pour les bénéficiaires de pensions. Franchement, le Comité et le gouvernement étaient d'accord à la condition que la veuve autorise qu'on contrôle ses ressources. C'est pourquoi nous n'avons pas voulu nous servir de cet argument pour nos discussions; nous pensions que nous n'en avions pas besoin. Nous voulons simplement insister sur le fait qu'il est pour ainsi dire impossible pour une veuve de changer son mode de vie du jour au lendemain.

Le président: Monsieur Chadderton, dois-je comprendre que vous avez dit qu'une veuve de pensionné a encore droit à demander une pension d'allocation aux anciens combattants?

M. Chadderton: Oui, si sa pension de veuve n'est pas suffisante, mais ce n'est certainement pas le cas d'une veuve de pensionné d'amputé de guerre car tous nos pensionnés le sont à 48 p. 100 ou plus. Ainsi, avec le taux actuel, elle recevrait $200 par mois, ce qui ne lui permettrait pas de demander une allocation aux anciens combattants.

M. MacRae: Monsieur le président, je crois que peut-être...

Le président: Je regrette, mais monsieur Weatherhead avait levé la main et je lui ai cédé la parole.

M. MacRae: Ce que j'ai à dire se rapporte à la même question. Je crois qu'en raison de ses connaissances en la matière, monsieur Chadderton pourrait préciser au sujet de la pension de la veuve, qu'en vertu des Allocations des anciens combattants, c'est la Commission des allocations aux anciens combattants qui décide d'accorder cette année supplémentaire. Il est possible, monsieur Whicher que vous ne vous en soyez pas rendu compte. Cela éclaire donc un peu plus la question. Il leur reste à they decide as a matter of means, as a matter of welfare, to continue that extra year for the War Veterans Allowance recipient's widow, if you follow what I mean.

The Chairman: Yes, but surely there would be very few cases when they would refuse a War Veterans Allowance recipient's widow.

Mr. MacRae: That is true, but there is still the provision that they can refuse if they chose to and that is the whole point I wanted to make.

The Chairman: I see. Are there other points related to this matter?

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I think my point is on the same general topic. I wonder if Mr. Chadderton would tell us the difference between the married rates and the widows' rates in round figures.

Mr. Chadderton: For a married pensioner it would be approximately $137 a month where a pension is in payment at married rates and where there are no children. It would be $337 a month if the pension were paid at married rates. When she drops to widow's rates she drops to $200, so you are talking about a difference of $137 a month.

Mr. Weatherhead: At the present time is she just paid for the month of the death at married rates or what is the cut-off date?

Mr. Chadderton: The pension is adjusted to the first day of the month following the death which could be as small a period as two days and as long a period as thirty days.

Mr. Weatherhead: On a pro rata basis?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes.

The Chairman: No, not pro rata. I think Mr. Chadderton might explain just a little more. It is cut off on the first day of the month following death. So if he died on the 30th and if it were a 30-day month, it would be cut off the next day, is that right?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If he died on the 2nd of the month it would be paid for that whole month, just the same as the Old Age Security pension.

décider de continuer pour une autre année à accorder à la veuve du pensionné les allocations des anciens combattants à titre de mesure de bien-être, si vous me comprenez bien.

Le président: Oui, mais sans aucun doute, ils refuseraient très peu souvent des allocations d'anciens combattants à la veuve du pensionné.

M. MacRae: C'est vrai, mais il existe encore une disposition qui leur permet de refuser s'ils le désirent. C'est ce que je voulais préciser.

Le président: Je vois. Aimerait-on soulever d'autres arguments au sujet de cette question?

M. Weatherhead: Je crois que ma question a trait au même sujet. Monsieur Chadderton, est-ce que vous pouvez me dire de façon approximative quelle différence existe entre les taux mis en vigueur pour les personnes mariées et pour les veuves.

M. Chadderton: Un pensionné marié toucherait environ $137.00 par mois au taux des personnes mariées sans enfant. Ce serait $337.00 par mois si la pension était versée aux taux des gens mariés. Lorsqu'elle touche le taux des veuves, elle reçoit $200 par mois. La différence est donc de $137.00 par mois.

M. Weatherhead: Et à l'heure actuelle, pour le mois où la mort a lieu, touche-t-elle la pension aux taux des gens mariés ou quand le versement fait-il l'objet d'une diminution?

M. Chadderton: La pension est redressée la première journée du mois qui suit la mort du pensionné, ce qui peut se produire après 2 jours ou après 30 jours.

M. Weatherhead: Au prorata?

M. Chadderton: Oui.

Le président: Non, non, ce n'est pas au prorata. Je crois que monsieur Chadderton peut nous expliquer cela un peu plus à fond. La diminution est effectuée le premier jour du mois après la mort. Donc, s'il meurt le 30 dans un mois de trente jours, l'allocation peut très bien être diminuée le prochain jour, n'est-ce pas?

M. Chadderton: Oui.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg Nord-Centre): S'il meurt le deuxième jour du mois, elle toucherait la pension pour le mois entier, tout comme pour la pension de sécurité de la vieillesse.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an observation on this question of whether something is an act of charity or an act of right in order to perhaps avoid an argument which is largely semantic. It is really the people of this country through their government and through committees, who decide whether it is a right or an act of charity. There is nothing inherent in it one way or the other. I would think that any argument that tries to prove that it would be a welfare measure is a pretty sterile argument. We make the decision whether it is a right or not and we have made this decision in the past with things like old age pensions and other things of this nature. I think this is really what the representatives are asking us to do by accepting the Wood's recommendation, that we give this as a matter of right rather than as a matter of discretion or welfare. Is this correct?

Mr. Chadderton: Except, Mr. Saltsman, that the White Paper does not intend to give it even as a matter of discretion.

Mr. Saltsman: No, but what I am saying is that you are asking for it as a matter of right.

Mr. Chadderton: That is quite right, and I might say because I think we are all familiar, perhaps generally, with the terms of pension legislation, that if there was one thing that angered our delegates at our recent convention was that this was turned down on the basis that it would be a welfare measure. We just cannot accept the fact that continuation for a year for a widow of a pensioner would be any form of welfare. If it were welfare and it were made a welfare measure it would be up to the widow to apply and in most cases I think they would not.

The Chairman: Are there other questions? If not would you proceed, Mr. Lambert.

• 1505

Lt. Col. Lambert: Yes, we will move on. Keith Butler will read the section dealing with children undergoing course of instruction on page 43.

Mr. Butler: Mr. Chairman on children undergoing course of instruction, our submission is as follows:

> The Woods Committee Recommendation 108 (volume 3, chapter 26, page 890) proposes:

[Interpretation]

M. Saltsman: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais faire un commentaire sur la question de charité ou de droit afin d'éviter une discussion d'ordre sémantique. Ce sont vraiment les citoyens de ce pays, par l'intermédiaire de leur gouvernement et leurs comités qui décident si c'est un droit ou un geste charitable. Il n'y a rien de sous-entendu d'une façon ou d'une autre. Je crois que tout argument qui tente de prouver que c'est une mesure sociale est un argument assez stérile. Il nous appartient à nous d'en décider. Nous l'avons fait par le passé au sujet des questions de pension de vieillesse, et autres choses de ce genre. Je crois que c'est ce que les représentants nous demandent de faire en acceptant les recommandations du rapport Woods, à l'effet que ce soit une question de droit plutôt qu'une question de discrétion ou de bien-être. Est-ce juste?

M. Chadderton: Sauf monsieur Chadderton que le Livre blanc n'indique pas l'intention de le considérer comme une question de discrétion.

M. Saltsman: Non, mais je dis que vous demandez qu'on en fasse une question de droit.

M. Chadderton: C'est juste et j'ajouterais étant donné que nous connaissons tous d'une façon générale, les termes de la mesure législative par les pensions que nos délégués ont été offusqués lors de notre dernière convention, de voir que cela avait été refusé parce que ce serait une mesure sociale. Nous ne pouvons pas accepter que le prolongement d'un an pour la veuve d'un pensionné constituerait une forme de mesure sociale. Si c'était une question de bien-être et si on en faisait une mesure sociale, la veuve devrait faire une demande et dans la plupart des cas, je crois, elle s'en abstiendrait.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Sinon, pourriez-vous continuer monsieur Lambert?

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Oui, nous allons continuer. Monsieur Keith Butler donnera lecture de la partie qui traite des enfants qui suivent un cours d'enseignement, à la page 43.

M. Butler: Monsieur le président, la section se lit comme il suit:

> Dans la recommandation n° 108 (3e volume, chapitre 26, page 890) le comité Woods propose brièvement ce qui suit:

[Texte]

That pension be continued on behalf of a child undergoing a course of instruction up to age 25 years provided the pensioner contributes a major share, where possible, to the financial requirements of the child. The White Paper makes no reference to this recommendation and it is assumed that it was one of those which was not accepted by the government. May we summarize hereunder some of the supporting argument to be found in the Woods Report dealing with this matter.

(1) The use of the arbitrary age of 21 for discontinuation of pension for a student is outdated. This was first introduced in 1919.

(2) The average of the years spent by students has increased substantially since that time.

(3) More students are continuing their education beyond the secondary school level than was the case then:

(4) The average age for graduation from university has increased.

(5) It was never realistic to assume that a student would finish his university training at age 21; there is even less justification for using this for a cut-off age now.

(6) Pension legislation should take cognizance of the trend toward higher education.

(7) The Pension Act should be subject to the same time limits as the Education Assistance Act, i.e., normally age 25.

It is noted that the government has given no reasons for rejecting this recommendation of the Woods Committee. Presumably there could be no reason except possibly for a financial one. The intent of the existing legislative provision, as we understand it, is that a pensioner who must make a contribution towards the education of his child is entitled to some assistance in this respect by reason of additional pension. It seems only logical that this contribution should continue in payment, so long as it is needed. The arbitrary cancellation thereof at age 21 makes very little sense, bearing in mind that most pensioners would require the assistance for several years beyond the limitation of the existing provision.

Unfortunately, we have no record upon which we could base an estimate of the cost of implementation. We would observe, however, that an outlay of fed-

[Interprétation]

Que le versement de la pension soit continué quand un enfant suit un cours d'enseignement, jusqu'à ce que cet étudiant atteigne l'âge de 25 ans pourvu que le pensionné continue à assumer la majorité des frais nécessités par l'entretien et l'instruction de l'étudiant.

Le Livre blanc ne fait aucune allusion à cette recommandation, et nous supposons qu'elle est une de celles qui n'ont pas été acceptées par le gouvernement. Permettez-moi de résumer les arguments sur lesquels s'appuie le rapport Woods à ce sujet:

(1) On a fixé arbitrairement à 21 ans l'âge où l'on cesse de verser la pension à un étudiant. Cette mesure est dépassée, car elle date de 1919.

(2) La moyenne des années d'étude a sensiblement augmenté depuis.

(3) Un plus grand nombre d'étudiants vont maintenant au-delà du secondaire qu'à cette époque.

(4) L'âge moyen des finissants d'université est plus élevé.

(5) Il a toujours été faux de prétendre que l'étudiant terminait son cours universitaire à 21 ans; il est donc encore moins justifiable d'utiliser ce critère pour cesser le versement de la pension.

(6) La législation sur les pensions devrait tenir compte de la tendance vers une éducation de plus en plus poussée.

(7) La Loi sur les pensions devrait fixer le même âge limite que la Loi sur l'aide aux enfants des morts de la guerre (Éducation) c'est-à-dire 25 ans d'ordinaire.

Nous remarquons que le gouvernement n'a pas donné de raisons pour rejeter cette recommandation du comité Woods. Il est à supposer qu'il n'en a pas, sauf, peut-être, une raison financière. Si nous comprenons bien l'esprit de la loi actuelle, le pensionné qui assume une partie des frais d'éducation de son enfant a le droit de recevoir une aide à cet effet au moyen d'une pension additionnelle. Il semble logique que cette aide soit maintenue aussi longtemps que nécessaire, et la supprimer arbitrairement à l'âge de 21 ans n'a pas de sens, si l'on tient compte que la majorité des pensionnés en ont besoin pendant plusieurs années après l'âge limite fixé par la loi actuelle. Malheureusement, nous n'avons pas de documentation qui nous permettrait d'évaluer le coût approximatif de son application. Toutefois, nous faisons remarquer qu'une telle dépense du gouvernement fédéral, eral government funds in this respect would not only be a justifiable expenditure as part of the government's pension program for those disabled by war, but would also be recognized as a valuable contribution towards higher education for worthy sons and daughters of the pensioners involved.

[Text]

The Chairman: Are there any questions from the Committee? Mr. Whicher.

Mr. Whicher: Section (7) on page 44 states:

The Pension Act should be subject to the same time limits as the Education Assistance Act, i.e. normally age 25.

Would you clarify that? Why is age 25 in there? You picked that age instead of 21. Why should we not go to 27, for example? I know lots of students at university who are 27. There has to be a cut-off year somewhere. Would you explain that section (7)?

Mr. Chadderton: Of course, Children of War Dead (Education Assistance Act) as it is called, does make this provision under which assistance is available to such children until they reach age 25 and in certain instances until they reach age 30. You could quite properly ask what is the magic in age 25, why not 27. I would just point out, Mr. Whicher, that we were merely paraphrasing one of the arguments that had been brought to bear on this item by the Woods Committee and they felt that in addition to all of the other arguments that the fact that the Education Assistance Act could go to age 25 was a pretty good forerunner that should be followed in the Pension Act. I also think, although it is dangerous to paraphrase, it states in there that the other extension in the Education Assistance Act might also be incorporated, that is, could even to go age 30 in certain cases. However, the main point is that if you took age 25 as the cut off you would be covering most of the cases. You would be legislating for the majority, sir.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman I have just one supplementary. I still, because of lack of knowledge, do not know just what this Education Assistance Act does for somebody who is, say, age 24. How does it help? What does it do?

Mr. Chadderton: If one of our members died in 1964.

Mr. Whicher: By that you mean anyone receiving a pension.

[Interpretation]

en plus d'être justifiable, constituerait un grand apport à l'éducation poussée des enfants talentueux des pensionnés en cause.

Le président: Y a-t-il des questions? Monsieur Whicher.

M. Whicher: A la page 44, au paragraphe 7, on stipule que:

... la Loi sur les pensions devrait fixer le même âge limite que la Loi sur l'aide aux enfants des morts de la guerre (Éducation), c'est-à-dire 25 ans d'ordinaire.

Pourriez-vous préciser ce point? Pourquoi choisir 25 ans? Pourquoi 25 au lieu de 21? Pourquoi ne pas nous rendre jusqu'à 27 ans par exemple? Je connais beaucoup d'étudiants de 27 ans. Il devait y avoir un arrêt quelque part. Pourriez-vous nous expliquer le paragraphe 7?

M. Chadderton: Naturellement la loi sur l'aide aux enfants des morts de la guerre (Éducation), comme on l'appelle, prévoit l'assistance aux enfants jusqu'à l'âge de 25 ans et parfois jusqu'à l'âge de 30 ans. Vous avez raison lorsque vous demandez pourquoi on a arrêté notre choix sur 25 ans, plutôt que 27. Nous ne faisons que répéter un des arguments avancé par le comité Woods. Ils ont cru qu'en plus des autres arguments, le fait que la Loi sur l'aide à l'éducation adoptait 25 ans, que c'était un bon guide à suivre pour la Loi sur les pensions. Bien qu'il soit délicat de citer le passage, on dit également que l'autre prolongement d'âge pourrait aussi être inséré dans la Loi sur l'aide à l'éducation, soit dans certains cas jusqu'à 30 ans. Toutefois, si vous établissez 25 ans comme l'âge limite, cela prévoirait la grande majorité des cas. Vous adopteriez des mesures législatives pour la majorité des gens, monsieur.

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, une autre question complémentaire. Par suite d'un manque de connaissances, je ne comprends pas encore tout à fait ce que la Loi sur l'aide à l'éducation fait pour un étudiant, de 24 ans disons. Quelle aide prévoit-elle?

M. Chadderton: Si l'un de nos membres était mort en 1964.

M. Whicher: Vous voulez parler de la personne qui touche une pension.

[Texte]

Mr. Chadderton: Yes. If his child wanted to continue on into higher education under the Education Assistance Act the child could receive assistance under this Act to take university training, normally up to age 25. I do not know if I am being clear on this or if I understood the question, but in any event we felt that in a sense if this was good legislation for the children of the war dead because it was assisting them in their education, it would also be good legislation for pensioners' children, to assist them in their education. It is just one more way of pointing out, in our thinking, the fallacy of a cut-off age at 21.

The Chairman: Mr. Legault had his hand up, and Mr. MacRae and Mr. Stanley Knowles.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the deceased in that case have to have been a pensioner?

Mr. Chadderton: Normally, the education assistance act was brought in, as we understand it, as a measure for children whose fathers were killed during the war. Later on, if they were placed on pension and then died, and their pension was 48 per cent or greater, their death was considered generally to be attributable to service, and so the act was continued on for their children.

The Chairman: Mr. MacRae, is your question on this point?

Mr. MacRae: I think you could call it on this point, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask Mr. Chadderton what payment is made to a pensioner's child in university? It is not very high, I know. Could you tell the Committee what it is? I think members would be interested in knowing just how much help is given.

In the case of the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, which is a separate act, it is quite good, as perhaps the Committee knows. It is an exceptionally good act. But the child of the pensioner is not at all in such a good position. Perhaps this is information not readily available. If not, we could get it later.

The Chairman: One or two members who are attending with the delegation seem to...

Mr. Chadderton: I think I am correct that $36 a month is the additional pension for one child.

Mr. Whicher: Twelve months of the year?

[Interprétation]

M. Chadderton: Oui, si son enfant désire continuer ses études supérieures, aux termes de la Loi sur l'aide à l'éducation, l'enfant pourrait fréquenter l'université jusqu'à l'âge de 25 ans, normalement. Je ne sais pas si je me fais bien comprendre ou si je comprends la question, mais de toute façon c'était selon nous, dans un sens, une bonne mesure législative pour les enfants des morts de la guerre car cela les aidait à poursuivre leurs études.

Il serait aussi recommandable d'inclure dans les mesures législatives l'éducation des enfants de pensionnés. Cela démontre une fois de plus qu'il est illogique de faire cesser les versements quand l'enfant atteint l'âge de vingt et un ans.

Le président: M. Legault désire prendre la parole, puis M. MacRae et M. Stanley Knowles.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): La personne décédée doit-elle avoir été un pensionné?

M. Chadderton: En fait, la Loi sur l'aide aux enfants des morts de la guerre (Éducation) a été promulguée afin de protéger ces enfants. Si la pension du père était de 48 p. 100 ou plus, on considère que sa mort est imputable au service militaire c'est la raison pour laquelle on continue à verser la pension à ses enfants en vertu de la loi.

Le président: Monsieur MacRae, avez-vous une question à poser à ce sujet?

M. MacRae: Oui, je le crois. Je voudrais demander à M. Chadderton ce que reçoit un enfant de pensionné de guerre qui fréquente l'université? La somme n'est pas très importante. Pouvez-vous dire au comité combien il reçoit exactement? Je sais que dans le cas des enfants tombant sous le coup de la Loi sur l'aide aux enfants des morts de la guerre (Éducation), la somme accordée est bien suffisante. Comme les honorables membres le savent. Il s'agit d'ailleurs d'une très bonne loi. Mais les enfants des pensionnés ne sont pas dans une aussi bonne situation. Peut-être n'a-t-on pas les chiffres à la disposition. Dans ce cas, nous pourrions les avoir plus tard.

Le président: Un ou deux membres qui font partie de la délégation semblent...

M. Chadderton: Je crois qu'il est exact de citer $36 par mois comme pension supplémentaire par enfant.

M. Whicher: 12 mois par an?

[Text]

Mr. Chadderton: Yes; twelve months of the year.

The Chairman: Mr. Legault had his hand up.

Mr. Legault: Thank you. I have a question of Mr. Chadderton. Anyone at the age of 21, I understand, could perhaps obtain the moneys which are available under the students' loan. Was this taken into consideration when preparing the brief?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, it was, but in our feeling, Mr. Legault, it did not alter the situation materially, because the cost of maintaining a child in university is certainly somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1,500, $2,000 a year, and the additional pension is something like $36 a month.

Mr. Legault: Yes. The point I want to bring out is that every province does not have the same program, Mr. Chadderton. You talk about the $1,500, or so. There are students who are receiving loans or bursaries that would not amount to that figure and part of it is a grant. Has this been considered, because once you reach that particular stage, apart from the veteran's problem there are numerous other cases where at 21 the student can declare himself as being independent and obtain that money, although it is not the same in every province, I must admit.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes. We are not contending that this continuation of pension would be his only source of income. We also realize that particularly in recent years there have been quite a few additional sources of assistance available to children in university compared with, say, 15 years ago. We recognize all of this, but we also feel, Mr. Legault, that there are just grounds for continuing what is being done up to age 21 beyond age 21. For example, someone asked "Why 25?" Well, I think 25 is a more realistic age than 21. We are not arguing the merits of the legislation. We are simply saying that in a day and age when most children do not graduate from university until at least 24 or 25, it does not seem realistic to continue a principle of cutting off their assistance under the Pension Act at 21.

• 1515

Mr. Legault: Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions at this point? If not, will you continue?

[Interpretation]

M. Chadderton: Oh! bien entendu. Douze mois par an.

Le président: Monsieur Legault.

M. Legault: J'ai une question à poser à M. Chadderton. Tout enfant atteignant l'âge de 21 ans pourrait, si je comprends bien, bénéficier d'un montant d'argent en vertu de la loi sur les prêts aux étudiants. A-t-on songé à cela quand on a rédigé le mémoire?

M. Chadderton: Oui, nous y avons songé, mais à notre avis, cela ne changerait pas la situation parce que les frais d'université s'élèvent à quelque $1,500 ou $2,000 par année et la pension supplémentaire est de $36 par mois environ.

M. Legault: Ce que je voulais signaler, c'est que dans toutes les provinces, on ne suit pas toujours le même régime. Lorsque vous parlez de $1,500 environ, monsieur Chadderton. Je puis vous dire qu'il y a des étudiants qui reçoivent des prêts et des bourses bien inférieures dont une partie est une subvention. A-t-on tenu compte de cela, car, une fois qu'on atteint ce stade, sauf dans le cas des anciens combattants, il y a de nombreux cas où l'étudiant de 21 ans peut se déclarer indépendant et obtenir les sommes d'argent, bien que le régime ne soit pas le même dans toutes les provinces.

M. Chadderton: Oui. Nous ne refusons pas le fait que cette continuation de pension devrait être son seul revenu. Nous nous rendons compte aussi que, lors des dernières années, spécialement, les enfants fréquentant l'université ont reçu une aide supplémentaire provenant de sources différentes comparé avec l'aide dont ils pouvaient bénéficier il y a quinze ans. Nous nous en rendons compte, mais nous croyons aussi qu'il faut que cette aide s'étende au-dessus de 21 ans. Quelqu'un a demandé pourquoi 25 ans. Je trouve qu'il est plus réaliste d'arrêter de verser la pension à 25 ans. Nous ne contestons pas ici la valeur des mesures législatives. Nous voulons simplement souligner qu'à l'heure actuelle, la plupart des étudiants sont diplômés à 24 et 25 ans au moins. Il semble donc peu logique de les priver d'aide à 21 ans aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions.

M. Legault: Merci.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Sinon, voudriez-vous continuer.

[Texte]

Lt. Col. Lambert: All right. We will move on to "Legal Damages". Judge Crowell.

Judge Crowell: Legal Damages: For many years this Association has requestest the Government to amend legislation which provides that a settlement of legal damages payable to the widow of the pensioner who has died, must either be recovered by the crown or result in a reduction of pension. The legislation provides also that such damages payable to the widow of a member of the Regular Force, or to a pensioner in certain circumstances, may be recovered by the crown or alternatively result in reduced pension. This legislation affects also awards to a pensioner or widow in the nature of workmen's compensation, in some instances.

In our understanding, Recommendation 90 of the Woods Committee (volume 2, chapter 19, page 738) was to the effect that the existing sections be replaced with a new section which would provide only that a person be prohibited from receiving both an award of pension under the Pension Act and an award under similar legislation of the Federal Government.

In the comment furnished by the Woods Committee in regard to this recommendation we note the statement at page 758 as follows:

> Secondly, your Committee is of the view that, on general principle, the provisions of sections 20 and 21 have no place in the Pension Act. This Act confers certain rights upon members of the forces and their dependents, based on the obligation of the Government to provide compensation for disability or death. It is difficult to justify alienation of these rights by reason of the fact that the disability or death may also become compensable from some other source. The responsibility to award legal damages is that of the courts, the awards usually being based on such factors as earning potential and life expectancy. Workmen's Compensation is awarded by provincial boards. A Court or Compensation Board might well decide to take into consideration any award being made under the Pension Act, and might have the right to do so. Your Committee considers, however, that receipt of a pension should not be contingent upon other sources of income.

It seems to us that the nub of the matter is contained in the statement quoted above. In the event of the death of the pensioner, or a

[Interprétation]

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Très bien. Pourrions-nous étudier la question des Dommages-intérêts, monsieur le juge Crowell?

Dommages-intérêts:

Le juge Crowell: Depus nombre d'années, notre association demande au gouvernement de modifier l'article de la loi prévoyant que les dommages-intérêts versés à la veuve d'un pensionné devront être recouvrés par la Couronne ou alors que la pension sera réduite. La loi prévoit aussi que les dommages-intérêts payables à la veuve d'un membre des Forces régulières, ou à un pensionné, dans certains cas, pourront être recouvrés par la Couronne, ou que la pension sera réduite. La loi vise aussi les sommes versées à un pensionné ou à une veuve comme indemnités de travail, dans certains cas.

Si nous comprenons bien, la recommandation nº 90 du comité Woods (vol. 2, chapitre 19, page 738) propose de remplacer les articles actuels par un nouvel article prévoyant seulement qu'il est défendu à quiconque de recevoir une pension en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions, et une autre pension en vertu d'une autre loi semblable du gouvernement fédéral.

Voici les commentaires du comité Woods au sujet de cette recommandation. Vous les trouverez à la page 758:

> Deuxièmement, votre comité est d'avis qu'en principe les dispositions des articles 20 et 21 ne devraient pas figurer dans la Loi sur les pensions. Cette loi, en effet, confère certains droits aux membres des forces armées et aux personnes à leur charge, droits fondés sur l'obligation de la part du gouvernement d'accorder une indemnité de réparation pour invalidité ou décès. Il est difficile de justifier l'aliénation de ces droits par le fait que l'invalidité ou le décès peut par ailleurs recevoir une réparation d'autres sources. L'attribution de dommages-intérêts est de la compétence des tribunaux, les indemnités étant calculées habituellement sur certains facteurs, dont la capacité de gain et l'espérance de vie, tandis que les indemnités de travail sont accordées par des commissions provinciales. Un tribunal ou une telle commission peut fort bien décider de tenir compte de toute somme versée en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions et il peut être autorisé à le faire. Votre Comité estime cependant que la concession d'une pension ne devrait pas dépendre des autres sources de revenu.

Il nous semble que cette déclaration contient le nœud de la question. Survenant le décès du pensionné, ou d'un membre des For-member of the forces, or in circumstances where a pensioner suffers additional injury through causes contingent upon his pensionable disability, the widow or pensioner, as the case might be, is entitled to receive the full benefit of the Pension Act. This is the prior consideration. It is the right of the pensioner or the widow, as guaranteed by law. Over the years we in this Association have heard many arguments from personnel of the Pension Commission concerning the fact that indemnification should not be paid from two sources for the same death or injury; also that the Crown should not be placed in the position of having to pay additional pension where there is the right of recovery from some other source.

Whether these arguments have merit is a moot point. All we can suggest, at this juncture, is that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs should study, at length, the arguments prepared by the Woods Committee to support its contention that these sections be removed from the Act. In our view, they amount of a "judgement" which is very difficult to refute.

Concerning the actual recommendation in the White Paper we can suggest only that it is by way of a very small concession. In the first place, it covers only awards of legal damages to widows of pensioners—whereas the Woods Committee recommendation would have removed the effect of the inequities of this legislation from all three groups involved, i.e.:

Widows of pensioners;
Widows of members of the regular force; and Pensioners who sufler additional disabilities.

Secondly, the proposal in the White Paper is to exempt that portion of the payment of legal damages which is directed towards indemnification for pain and suffering, special damages and loss of consortium. In the first place this would be only a very small portion of the usual legal damages settlement. Also, hurried consultation with legal authorities over the past few days appears to indicate that, in some instances, the courts do not identify the actual portions of any claim into the specific categories used in the White Paper.

Therefore it is difficult to see how the recommendation could be carried out.

The Chairman: Perhaps this would be a good point at which to have our coffee break? At the back of the room we have made provi-les armées, ou quand le pensionné subit d'autres blessures découlant de l'invalidité pour laquelle il reçoit déjà une pension, la veuve ou le pensionné, selon le cas, a droit à tous les avantages prévus par la Loi sur les pensions. C'est la première considération. Il s'agit du droit du pensionné ou de celui de la veuve, tel que le garantit la loi. Au cours des ans, notre Association a entendu le personnel de la Commission des pensions avancer bon nombre de raisons pour que l'indemnité, pour le même décès ou les mêmes blessures, ne soit pas versée de deux sources, et aussi pour que la Couronne n'ait pas à verser de pension additionnelle s'il y a lieu de faire un recouvrement d'une autre source.

Le mérite de ces raisons est discutable. Tout ce que nous pouvons faire, pour le moment, c'est de demander au Comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants d'étudier en profondeur les arguments qu'apporte le comité Woods pour demander qu'on supprime ces articles de la loi. A notre avis, les arguments du comité constituent un «jugement» difficile à réfuter.

Quant à la recommandation du Livre blanc, ce n'est qu'une bien mince concession. Primo, elle ne touche que le versement des dommages-intérêts aux veuves des pensionnés, tandis que la recommandation du comité Woods aurait fait disparaître de la loi les iniquités qui visent les trois groupes en cause:

Les veuves des pensionnés
Les veuves des membres des Forces régulières, et Les pensionnés affligés d'invalidités additionnelles.

Secundo, le Livre blanc propose de ne pas verser la partie des dommages-intérêts qui sert à indemniser la souffrance, les dommages spéciaux et la perte du conjoint. Tout d'abord, il ne s'agirait là que d'une infime partie des dommages-intérêts habituellement versés. De plus, une rapide consultation des autorités juridiques semble indiquer que les tribunaux n'identifient pas toujours les diverses parties d'une réclamation aux catégories énumérées dans le Livre blanc.

Il est donc difficile de voir comment cette recommandation peut être suivie.

Le président: Il serait peut-être opportun de faire la pause-café maintenant. Le café nous attend au fond de la salle. Nous pour-

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COFFEE BREAK

The Chairman: Are we ready to resume?

Lt. Col. Lambert: Paul, will you carry on please?

Mr. Paul Bédard (Quebec City): Deposition of pension...

The Chairman: Oh, I am sorry. There were no questions before the adjournment so there may be some questions, I am sorry. Mr. Stanley Knowles.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suppose my question is a rhetorical one, Mr. Chairman, but let me put it anyway. I preface it by saying that I agree with this position about legal damages, but my question is this. What is the rationale that the government uses for taking this away? For example, if a veteran on a disability pension inherits a fortune from a rich uncle does that take away from his pension? If he earns money in some other way, that does not take away from his pension? I know it is a strange phrase to talk about "earning" some money because you have been through an accident but at least it is a separate operation.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton, there was a reference to the theory that the same loss of earnings should not be compensated from two different sources; is this the theory that is put forward? There is a reference in your paper to it.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, that is it. We believe it started toward the end of 1918 when a lot of people who were still in the service were being injured in civilian accidents; not a lot, I would say a very few as a matter of fact. However, they were being injured in civilian accidents and there was under the insurance principle a requirement for the federal government to pay them pension. At the same time the man was open to proceed against the party who had injured him. I recall one case in particular which involved the then Transportation Commission of Toronto, and the federal government people the Board of Pension Commissioners I think at that time, or whatever it was called, said, "Well, we certainly are not going to accept the liability in the federal government when the cause was the streetcar that ran the man down". That was rions ensuite reprendre la période des questions. Êtes-vous d'accord?

Des voix: D'accord.

PAUSE-CAFÉ

Le président: Nous sommes prêts à reprendre la séance?

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Paul, voulez-vous continuer?

M. Paul Bédard (ville de Québec): Témoignages concernant la pension.

Le président: Il n'y a pas de question. M. Stanley Knowles.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): La question est plutôt hypothétique. Je suis d'accord du point de vue des dommages-intérêts, mais quelle est la raison d'être utilisée par le gouvernement pour enlever ces dommages-intérêts, par exemple, si un pensionné hérite d'une fortune d'un oncle riche, est-ce qu'on soustrait cet argent ou un autre revenu de sa pension? S'il gagne de l'argent d'une autre façon cela ne lui enlève pas sa pension. C'est un drôle d'endroit de parler de gagner de l'argent.

Le président: Monsieur Chadderton, il est question que le manque à gagner ne soit pas compensé au moyen de deux sources, est-ce bien là votre théorie? Je crois que vous y faites allusion dans votre mémoire.

M. Chadderton: Oui, règle générale, c'est cela que nous voulons dire. Cela a commencé vers la fin de 1918 alors que plusieurs faisaient partie du service des forces armées, ils étaient blessés dans des accidents civils, et aux termes du principe de l'assurance, le gouvernement devait leur payer une pension, et même l'homme avait le droit de poursuivre la personne qui l'avait blessé. Je me souviens d'une cause contre la Commission des transports de Toronto, alors que les gens du gouvernement fédéral, la Commission des transports, je crois, ont dit: «il ne nous appartient pas d'accepter la responsabilité parce que l'homme a été heurté par le tramway.» Et c'est ainsi que les choses ont débuté et se passent depuis que la loi sur les pensions existe. Le principe s'applique toujours et cela touche non seulement la pension des veuves, mais aussi celle d'un pensionné qui est blessé the original start of it and then that trend continued all the way through the Pension Act despite its many refinements until we get the situation today where the principle still applies and it affects pension, not just to widows but where a pensioner may be re-injured, a member of the Regular Force may be injured, or to the widow of a member of the Regular Force. It is probably the time to point out that one of our objections to the coverage in the White Paper, although we welcome it, we are grateful for it because it is certainly better than nothing, is that it only covers one of the four categories that the Woods Committee was attempting to relieve from the effects of Sections 20, 21 and 22.

The Chairman: Mr. Legault. Sorry, there are three, Mr. Whicher, Mr. Legault and Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Legault: I have a supplementary. If someone suffered injuries while not in receipt of a pension, being in the Regular Forces, and whose civil court is obtaining an adjustment, do you suggest that a pension be paid to him plus whatever moneys would be allotted by this court?

Mr. Chadderton: I would answer that by saying, first, the Woods Committee certainly saw that he was entitled to pension if he was covered. Bear in mind that under Regular Force pension today the man is not entitled to the insurance principle; therefore, it would have to be shown that his injury was in some way related to service in the forces. That is a very loose term, you see. The classic example that we gave the other day I think would answer your question. That was the officer returning from Korea who was killed in a TCA crash. It was pensionable under the Pension Act because he was on duty, and it was also the type of accident where there was a third party settlement. Of course, the widow had to choose between accepting pension or accepting settlement. So the answer to your question is that we visualize that the effects of sections 20, 21 and 22 against members of the Regular Force should be removed.

Mr. Legault: Thank you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If a veteran is drawing a disability pension because he is an amputee, he has one leg off, he gets what; 80 per cent pension? If that veteran is involved in a serious automobile accident and sues in the civil courts and gets damages that are in excess of what he was getting as a pensioner, what happens to him?

[Interpretation]

une autre fois, d'un membre des Forces armées qui peut être blessé ou même de la veuve d'un membre des Forces armées. Je crois que le moment est venu de signaler qu'une des objections que nous avons contre le Livre blanc est le fait qu'il ne couvre que l'une des quatre catégories que le Rapport Woods essaie de soustraire aux effets des dispositions des articles 20, 21 et 22.

Le président: M. Legault. Excusez-moi. Vous êtes trois: M. Whicher, M. Legault et M. Weatherhead.

M. Legault: Une question complémentaire. Si quelqu'un subit des blessures pendant qu'il ne reçoit pas de pension, un membre des Forces armées du Canada par exemple, et se voit accorder une indemnité par les tribunaux civils, croyez-vous qu'on doive lui verser une pension en plus de l'argent qui lui est accordé par le tribunal?

M. Chadderton: Le Comité Woods lui accorde le droit à une pension, dans certains cas. Aux termes du règlement sur les allocations aux membres des Forces régulières aujourd'hui, il n'a pas droit à l'assurance. Il faut faire valoir que sa blessure se rattache au service dans les Forces armées. L'exemple que nous avons cité l'autre jour devrait répondre à votre question. Vous avez le cas d'un officier qui revenait de la Corée et qui a été tué dans un avion d'Air Canada. La pension a été accordée parce qu'il était en fonction. Il y a eu également le règlement du cas d'un tiers. Évidemment la veuve a dû choisir entre les deux. Donc les articles 20, 21 et 22 défavorables aux membres des forces régulières doivent être supprimés à ce titre-là.

M. Legault: Merci.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Si un ancien combattant a droit à une pension parce qu'il a perdu une jambe, que reçoit-il? Une pension de 80 p. 100. Si cet ancien combattant est victime d'un accident grave d'automobile et, si après avoir intenté une poursuite devant un tribunal civil, il reçoit des compensations en plus de ce qu'il reçoit à titre de pensionné, que peut-il lui arriver?

[Texte]

Mr. Chadderton: Well, if he is merely injured and there is a third party settlement section 21 and 22 of the Pension Act would not apply unless he then applied to the Pension Commission and said, "Because of my artificial leg it gave out on me and I fell in front of this car and I am entitled to a consequential pension", you see of a physical accident type then of course the Canadian Pension Commission would say "Well if there is a requirement upon the Canadian Pension Commission to pay additional pension arising out of that automobile accident you cannot have it both ways". If the Canadian Pension Commission granted the additional pension and there would be an entitlement claim on that first, but if they granted the additional pension then consideration would be given to whether he should receive that pension and retain the damages or whether the damages would be paid to the Crown and he could continue to receive the additional pension because the Crown had received the money, you see.

• 1540

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am afraid I got lost at one point there.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes?

The Chairman: Is this the case which relates to the instance?

Mr. Chadderton: Oh yes.

The Chairman: How would you modify that?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let me state a case as I see it. Here is a veteran on 80 per cent pension because he is an amputee. He gets seriously hurt in an automobile accident, such that the court awards him, a third party, very high damages, the capitalized value of which is worth more than the pension he was getting. Does he have to give some of that to the Crown?

Mr. Chadderton: No, sir. It is only when he attempted to apply for additional pension claiming that his bad leg caused him to fall under the car where this section of the Pension Act comes in.

The Chairman: Mr. Whicher had his hand up and so did Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chadderton, I should know the answer probably but if a Regular Force soldier on active duty in Canada today is hit by a truck and his leg is severely damaged, does he have to initiate the action in a civil court or does the Crown do it?

[Interprétation]

M. Chadderton: Non, s'il n'est que blessé les articles 21 et 22 pourraient ne pas s'appliquer, à moins qu'il puisse faire valoir devant la Commission des pensions que sa jambe artificielle a été responsable de sa chute devant une voiture. Alors, la Commission répondrait que si on lui demande de payer une pension supplémentaire parce qu'il a été victime d'un accident de voiture, il ne pourrait pas être dédommagé de deux façon. Dans le cas où la Commission canadienne des pensions accorderait la pension supplémentaire, il faudrait alors déterminer si l'accidenté devrait recevoir la pension ainsi que les dommages-intérêts ou bien si les dommages devraient être payés à la Couronne. Alors l'accidenté pourrait recevoir le supplément de pension, parce que c'est la Couronne qui aurait encaissé le montant.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je ne saisis pas bien vos explications.

M. Chadderton: Oui.

Le président: S'agit-il du cas que l'on discute?

M. Chadderton: Oui.

Le président: Quelles modifications apporteriez-vous?

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Voici un cas. Un ancien combattant reçoit une pension de 80 p. 100 parce qu'il est amputé. Il est grièvement blessé dans un accident d'automobile et le tribunal lui accorde des dommages-intérêts très élevés, qui en termes de capital, valent plus que la pension qu'il recevait auparavant. Doit-il en remettre une certaine fraction à la Couronne?

M. Chadderton: Non. Toutefois, s'il fait une demande pour une pension complémentaire, en invoquant le fait que sa jambe artificielle a été la cause de sa chute devant la voiture, la Loi sur les pensions entre en jeu.

Le président: M. Whicher, vous désirez parler et vous aussi M. Weatherhead?

M. Whicher: Si un soldat des Forces armées au Canada en service actif est grièvement blessé à une jambe par un camion est-ce lui qui doit intenter une action en justice ou bien est-ce la Couronne qui doit s'en charger?

[Text]

Mr. Chadderton: It would depend on which came first, but if he had applied for pension under the Pension Act, Section 13 (2), and then he were awarded a pension because the Canadian Pension Commission felt that this arose out of or was directly connected with service.

Mr. Whicher: It was directly connected with service.

Mr. Chadderton: All right. Then if he does that, and there is a possibility of third party damages, yes, a representative of the Commission will discuss it with him and tell him that he must initiate action against a third party.

Mr. Whicher: But under the White Paper any amount that was given by the court for pain and suffering he will get from now on.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, except our information on this—as you probably realize, the brief you are looking at was started three or four days ago and we have not had much time to research—is that a very small portion of the usual legal damages award is covered under the words stated in the White Paper, special damages, pain and suffering, and loss of consortium. In other words, in the case of the TCA crash we mentioned, that particular widow would get absolutely no relief under this provision in the White Paper, because there was no pain and suffering nor loss of consortium. It was just a straight award under the Warsaw Convention of I believe $5,000.

Mr. Whicher: That is what she got.

Mr. Chadderton: $5,000 was what she had offered to her.

Mr. Whicher: By TCA?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes. It is not proper to say TCA because TCA really has nothing to do with it. It is under the Warsaw Convention and all airlines are involved in it. I say that because I think TCA could be criticized unfairly in this particular case.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, in that regard I do not think the witnesses are trying to say that the pain and suffering and special damages, which are out-of-pocket expenses, and loss of consortium are always very minor awards. For instances, in some cases the veteran may have been retired and not had any other income, and this type of damage would be the main award that he would get. In your particular case of the fellow who was coming

[Interpretation]

M. Chadderton: S'il demande une pension aux termes du paragraphe 2 de l'article 13 de la Loi sur les pensions et l'obtient parce que la Commission estime qu'il y a droit.

M. Whicher: Cela se rapportait directement au service.

M. Chadderton: S'il fait cela il est possible qu'il y ait aussi des compensations d'une troisième partie. Oui, après consultation avec un représentant de la Commission ce dernier lui dira s'il doit instituer des poursuites contre la troisième partie.

M. Whicher: Mais aux termes du Livre blanc pour la souffrance, le montant qui lui sera alloué par le tribunal sera bien à lui dorénavant.

M. Chadderton: Vous savez que le mémoire a été écrit il y a trois ou quatre jours, donc nous n'avons pas fait partie des dommages qui sont mentionnés dans le Livre Blanc. En d'autres mots, l'avion d'Air Canada—et dans le cas de l'accident d'Air Canada la veuve n'a rien reçu parce qu'il n'y avait pas question de souffrance. Je crois qu'il y a eu une indemnité de $5,000 seulement, en vertu du Congrès de Varsovie.

M. Whicher: C'est bien ce qu'elle a reçu.

M. Chadderton: $5,000. C'est tout ce qu'on lui a offert.

M. Whicher: Par Air Canada?

M. Chadderton: Ce n'est pas juste de dire que c'était Air Canada. Air Canada n'avait rien à voir là-dedans. C'était aux termes du congrès de Varsovie, qui touche toutes les compagnies aériennes. Je ne voudrais pas que Air Canada soit injustement sujet à critique dans cette affaire.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, je ne crois pas que nous devrions dire que les questions de souffrance ont droit à une certaine compensation, parce que ce sont des prestations assez légères. Je crois que ce genre de dommages pourraient lui apporter la seule compensation qu'il puisse obtenir. Par exemple, un type qui revient de la Corée et qui meurt dans un accident d'avion d'Air Canada, subit une perte de cohabitation s'il back from Korea and died in a plane crash, it is hard to know all the circumstances but there certainly would be loss of consortium if he had a wife. And there certainly would be special damages because there would be a lawyer involved. I suppose there would be out-of-pocket expenses, including legal expenses. With reference to pain and suffering, if he died instantly perhaps there would be no pain and suffering. But I would think that in the case of some of your older veterans who are retired and not making any other income the pain and suffering, if the veteran had not died instantaneously, would be considerable, and perhaps this should not be underestimated. On the other hand, I must say that if, as I gathered, the government is obligated eventually after the pensioners have died for one reason or another to pay the widows, no matter how they died, it is difficult for me to see just why they should get out of it because they were killed in an accident of some sort.

Mr. Chadderton: I will answer quickly both points. Over the weekend I telephoned the lawyer who handled this particular Air Canada case just to find out whether there would have been any relief for that widow under this and he said absolutely not because the amount of damages was not detailed. The court simply said $5,000; it did not say how much was for loss of consortium and so on. This fellow happens to be a judge in the Province of Alberta and he also told me at the same time that in his active experience in this regard this would be very difficult to apply in a lot of cases. I cannot quote his name, I do not think we care about that, but as a point of information he said this would be very difficult to apply because in very many cases, they do not really lay it down that way.

They simply say $30,000 or $20,000 or whatever it is.

Another thing, on general principles we consulted with some lawyers who were with us in Quebec and took a quick rule of thumb on this—the joint veterans association statement of last Thursday, was very similar—consultation was carried out with as many lawyers as could be consulted in the space of maybe two or three days and they all said that generally speaking the relief under the proposal in the White Paper is not too great.

I admit that if you get a man who is no longer in the earning capacity age, a man of 65 years of age, yes, not too much of his award probably would be for loss of earnings. However, compare that with the average World War II veteran in his fifties now who est marié. Il y a eu des questions de dépenses, de frais juridiques, etc., s'il meurt sur le coup, il n'y a pas de souffrances mais il me semble que dans le cas d'anciens combattants, qui sont à leur retraite et n'ont pas d'autres revenus, il y a certainement une question de souffrances. Mais dans le cas de nos anciens combattants qui sont à leur retraite et qui n'ont pas d'autres revenus, la souffrance peut être considérable si la personne ne meurt pas subitement. De toute façon, comme le gouvernement est obligé de payer les veuves quelle que soit la cause du décès du pensionné je ne peux pas voir comment il pourrait s'en dispenser dans le cas d'un accident.

M. Chadderton: Je puis vous répondre rapidement sur les deux points. J'ai téléphoné à l'avocat qui s'est occupé du procès d'Air Canada pour savoir si la veuve aurait pu recevoir une indemnité quelconque. Il a dit «absolument pas» parce que le tribunal a relevé que c'était $5,000 tout simplement. Il s'agissait d'un juge de la province d'Alberta et il m'a dit en même temps que, d'après son expérience, dans la plupart des cas, ce serait un cas très difficile à mettre en application parce que bien souvent les questions ne sont pas tellement bien précisées.

On vise $30,000 ou—un montant quelconque—mais, en ce qui concerne les règles générales, nous avons consulté certains avocats qui étaient avec nous à Québec ainsi que tous les avocats qu'il nous a été possible de consulter dans les deux ou trois jours qui nous étaient alloués. Ils ont tous dit que, en règle générale, d'après les propositions du Livre blanc, on ne peut pas prévoir beaucoup de compensation. Dans le cas d'un homme de soixante-cinq ans, on ne pourrait pas allouer trop d'argent pour le manque à gagner. Dans le cas d'un ancien combattant qui est dans la cinquantaire, il a encore quinze ans de vie active devant lui. Ce serait donc une moyenne assez considérable en cause, je crois. Nous ne faisons qu'établir ce point. Si quelqu'un peut presumably has 15 years of earning capacity left; as we saw it, it would be a pretty high proportion. But I do not think we want to stand or fall on this particular point in our brief, we are simply relating it as information and if the Committee can come up with other information which indicates that we are wrong we would be quite willing to say fine, we agree.

• 1545

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, am I correct in assuming that the widows of pensioners and of members of the regular force now are all entitled to a pension of one sort or another on the deaths of their husbands?

Mr. Chadderton: The widow of a pensioner in receipt of a pension of 48 per cent or more, Mr. Weatherhead, yes, certainly. Now the widow of a member of the regular forces would be entitled to pension only if the Commission could find that that death had arisen out of or was directly connected with service. During wartime you had what is called the insurance principle. No matter what happens to him, if he dies during the war a pension is paid, but during peacetime service it has to be shown that in some way the death arose out of or was connected with service. That is Section 13(2) of the Act.

Mr. Whicher: So in the Woods proposals which you are supporting do I gather that you want to go further for the widows of pensioners and members of the regular armed forces, or just further as far as letting them keep all their general damages?

Mr. Chadderton: No, sir, we are merely suggesting that if normally a pension would be paid that it be paid without relationship to whether or not there are third party damages available to that widow.

Mr. Whicher: I understand. Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there other questions?

Mr. Turner (London East): Mr. Chadderton on page 46 of the brief you say:

> This legislation affects also awards to a pensioner or widow in the nature of workmen's compensation . . .

Do I understand you right, that if there is an award under workmen's compensation this is in the event that the pensioner is killed?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes.

Mr. Turner (London East): Does this affect the widow's pension?

[Interpretation]

prouver que nous avons tort, nous serions prêts à l'accepter.

M. Weatherhead: M. le président, dois-je supposer que les veuves des pensionnés et les veuves des membres des forces régulières ont toutes droit à une pension quelconque à la mort de leur mari?

M. Chadderton: Une veuve de pensionné qui recoit 48 p. 100 ou davantage, M. Weatherhead, oui, certainement. La veuve d'un soldat des forces régulières a droit à une pension que si on peut prouver que la mort de son mari résulte de son service pendant la guerre. Pendant la guerre il y avait ce qu'on appelait le principe d'assurance. Si la mort survient pendant la guerre, une pension est payée, mais en temps de paix, il faut prouver que la mort a rapport avec le service aux termes de l'article 13-II de la Loi.

M. Whicher: Donc, dans les propositions du rapport Woods que vous appuyez, dois-je comprendre que vous allez aller plus loin pour les veuves des pensionnés ou pour les veuves des soldats des forces régulières, ou bien si vous voulez vous en tenir aux dommages réguliers?

M. Chadderton: Non, nous croyons que si la pension normale est payée, qu'elle le soit, qu'il y ait des dommages payés par une troisième partie ou non.

M. Whicher: Merci.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions?

M. Turner (London-est): M. Chadderton, à la page 46 du mémoire vous dites que:

> cette mesure législative a trait aux compensations de pensionnés aux termes des indemnités payés aux ouvriers.

Aux termes des indemnités je crois qu'il est question de pensionnés qui se sont fait tuer.

M. Chadderton: Oui.

M. Turner (London-est): Est-ce que cela touche à la pension de la veuve?

[Tetxe]

Mr. Chadderton: Oh, yes. If a pensioner is killed in an accident which is compensable under workmen's compensation legislation the Pension Commission sits down and says that normally you would be entitled to pension under the Pension Act, I think it is Section 36(6). If she were also entitled to pension under the workmen's compensation legislation of any province then Sections 21 and 22 of the Act would apply and somebody would have to say whether she could retain the pension and the workmen's compensation because, under the Act, she cannot retain both.

Mr. Turner (London East): Does she have a choice?

Mr. Chadderton: Oh, yes, she certainly has a choice. She can take whichever is the greater or, if she is contemplating remarriage, she may decide not to proceed with the Pension Act right away and take one year's bonus and live on workmen's compensation—because if she remarries she loses her widow's pension under the Pension Act. But she certainly can elect to take a choice here, and of course we have no objection to that.

Mr. Turner (London East): Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Chadderton: May I add just one point, Mr. Chairman. On page 757 of Volume II of the Woods Report there is a very important figure quoted which I wish to bring to the attention of the Committee. In the 13 years preceding 1957, according to the Commission's records, there were 182 cases involved in this type of thing and the amount of money was $710,000. In 13 years presumably $710,000 was recovered under this legislation. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Marshall: Did they keep it?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes. This is the amount that was recovered in one way or another.

The Chairman: By the Crown?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, either recovered or deducted from pension.

The Chairman: Yes.

Lt. Col. Lambert: It is sort of chiselling, in my opinion. Anyway, that has nothing to do with it.

Next is Stabilization of Pensions.

Mr. Bedard: Stabilization of Pensions: The Woods Committee recommended that World

[Interprétation]

M. Chadderton: Oui. Si un pensionné est tué au cours d'un accident qui tombe sous le coup de la Loi sur l'indemnisation aux employés, on leur dit «vous auriez droit à la pension, aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions». Elle aurait également droit à une pension aux termes de la Loi sur les indemnités aux ouvriers. Donc l'article 21 ou 22 de la Loi s'appliquerait et quelqu'un devrait dire si oui ou non elle a droit aux deux pensions.

M. Turner (London-est): Est-ce qu'elle a le choix?

M. Chadderton: Ah oui, elle a le choix et elle peut choisir la plus considérable des deux pensions ou bien si elle songe à se remarier, elle peut prendre une prime d'un an, puis vivre sur les indemnités aux ouvriers. Parce que si elle se remarie, elle perd sa pension de veuve d'un pensionné. Mais elle a le choix bien entendu.

M. Turner (London-est): Merci.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions à poser?

M. Chadderton: Puis-je ajouter quelque chose? A la page 757 du volume II du rapport Woods, il y a un chiffre très important que l'on cite et que je veux signaler au comité. C'est que dans les treize années précédant 1957, d'après les dossiers, il y a 182 cas, et le montant en jeu était $710,000. Je présume que dans treize ans, le montant qui a été recouvert par la Couronne est de $710,000.

M. Marshall: Est-ce que cela a été gardé?

M. Chadderton: Oui, ça été recouvré d'une façon ou d'une autre.

Le président: Par la Couronne?

M. Chadderton: Oui, sous forme de recouvrements ou de déductions sur les pensions.

Le président: Oui.

Lieutenant-Colonel Lambert: Pour moi ça été injustement encaissé.

Passons à la stabilisation des pensions.

M. Bédard: Stabilisation des pensions. Le comité Woods a recommandé de stabiliser les

[Text]

War II pensions be stabilized, where the assessment had been in effect for three years or more. (See Woods Committee Report Chapter 31, page 996). Presumably, this recommendation was based on a similar provision for World War I Veterans, which has been in effect since 1936, according to statements made by the Pension Commission.

The White Paper proposes that pensions arising out of service subsequent to World War I will be stabilized:

• 1550

After the pensioner reaches age 60;
Provided such had been in effect for 10 years or more.

This would have to be considered as a restrictive compromise, compared with the recommendation of the Woods Committee. This Association considers that the White Paper proposal should be examined in depth. The principle of stabilization, which the Woods Committee saw as essential to good pension administration, was presumably introduced by the Pension Commission for the World War I pensions in order to provide a measure of security for pensioners with medical disabilities, on the understanding that, once an assessment had been in effect for a reasonable period of time, three years, the pensioner should not have to live with the fear that his pension would be reduced. Surely the World War II pensioner has every reason to expect similar protection under the Pension Act. Was his war any less hazardous? Are his disabilities any less severe?

In studying this matter further, it seems necessary to consider that stabilization was introduced for World War I pensioners some 18 years after the end of that conflict. It is now nearly 25 years since the end of World War II. Also, inasmuch as the White Paper introduces an arbitrary age of 60, we should perhaps consider the average age of World War II veterans. This is believed, at this date, to be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 50. Accordingly, this group of pensioners must necessarily wait for another ten years before the Commission will allow them the security of permanent assessment, and even then, only if they had had the assessment in effect for ten years or more. Thus, it is inconceivable that the same benefit which was extended to World War I veterans when they were in their early 40's will not be available to the World War II group until they are in their mid-60's.

pensions des combattants de la Deuxième guerre mondiale dont l'appréciation médicale est en vigueur depuis trois ans et plus. (Voir le rapport du comité Woods, chapitre 31, page 996). Nous supposons que cette recommandation est fondée sur une disposition semblable visant les combattants de la Première guerre mondiale, en vigueur depuis 1936 selon les déclarations de la Commission des pensions.

Le Livre blanc propose que les pensions accordées pour service ultérieur à la Première guerre mondiale soient stabilisées.

Après que le pensionné aura atteint 60 ans;
Pourvu que la pension ait été en vigueur 10 ans et plus.

Voilà un compromis restrictif, si on le compare à la recommandation du comité Woods. Notre association est d'avis que la proposition du Livre blanc devrait être étudiée à fond. Le principe de la stabilisation—indispensable, aux yeux du comité Woods, à la bonne administration des pensions—a sans doute été introduit par la Commission des pensions, en ce qui a trait aux pensions des combattants de la Première guerre mondiale, pour assurer une certaine mesure de sécurité aux pensionnés affligés d'invalidité: une fois l'appréciation médicale en vigueur pendant une période de temps raisonnable (trois ans), le pensionné n'aurait plus à craindre que sa pension soit réduite. Le pensionné qui a combattu à la Deuxième guerre mondiale devrait certainement avoir droit à la même protection en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions. Sa guerre était-elle moins dangereuse? Ses invalidités sont-elles moindres?

En approfondissant cette question, on découvre que la stabilisation des pensions des combattants de la Première guerre mondiale a été introduite environ 18 ans après la fin de ce conflit. Il y a maintenant 25 ans que la Deuxième guerre mondiale est terminée. De plus, vu que le Livre blanc fixe arbitrairement l'âge à 60 ans, nous devrions peut-être nous demander quel est l'âge moyen du combattant de la Deuxième guerre mondiale. Nous croyons qu'il est d'environ 50 ans. Donc, ce groupe de pensionnés devra attendre encore dix ans avant que la Commission leur accorde la sécurité d'une appréciation permanente, et seulement si l'appréciation a été en vigueur dix ans ou plus. Par conséquent, il est inconcevable que les avantages accordés aux combattants de la Première guerre quand ils eurent atteint la quarantaine soient refusés aux combattants de la Deuxième guerre tant qu'ils n'auront pas atteint la soixantaine avancée.

We do not intend, in this submission, to expound the virtues of a stabilization policy. These were, in our view, clearly enunciated in the Woods Report. What we fail to understand is how those who had the responsibility to prepare and approve of the White Paper could have strayed so far from the mark!

The Chairman: Are there any questions members want to ask? Yes, Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, do I gather that the White Paper makes no reference to the World War II veterans having their pensions stabilized?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It proposes that 60 after 10 years have been in effect.

The Chairman: It is a very clear reference.

Mr. Weatherhead: I am sorry, what is the reference?

The Chairman: On page 12 there is a paragraph in the White Paper on stabilizing pensions. It says:

> It is now proposed to give statutory authority to that policy, and to provide that pensions, arising out of service subsequent to World War I, will be stabilized after the pensioner reaches age 60 if, and when, they have been in effect for 10 years or more.

• 1555

This is the section which is found, I think, a little onerous by the War Amputations group, who feel that the 10-year requirement is excessive. I gather that is the substance of their recommendation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The 10-year requirement and the age 60.

The Chairman: Well, the two go together, yes.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I guess I do not understand the background too well, but is the concern here that the disabilities in the meantime might become less, therefore they would be entitled to a lesser pension than if it had been stabilized earlier?

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton had better answer that.

[Interprétation]

Nous n'avons pas l'intention d'analyser, dans le présent mémoire, les avantages de la stabilisation. A notre avis, le rapport Woods les a très bien mis en lumière. Cependant, nous ne comprenons pas comment ceux qui étaient chargés de rédiger et d'approuver le Livre blanc ont pu se fourvoyer de pareille façon!

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions à poser?

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, je comprends que, dans le Livre blanc, il n'est pas question de la stabilisation des pensions des anciens combattants de la deuxième guerre mondiale. Quelle est la référence?

M. Knowles (Winnipeg Nord-Centre): Il l'a proposée à 60 ans, après une attente de dix ans.

Le président: C'est une référence qui est bien claire.

M. Weatherhead: Pardon, quelle est la référence?

Le président: A la page 12 du Livre blanc, il y a justement un paragraphe qui traite de la stabilisation des pensions.

Il y est mentionné:

> Nous proposons maintenant de donner un caractère statutaire à cette politique et à accepter que les pensions résultent d'un service accompli après la première guerre mondiale, soient stabilisés après que le pensionné aura atteint l'âge de 60 ans seulement si celles-ci ont été en vigueur dix ans ou plus.

Je pense que c'est ce paragraphe que le groupe des amputés de guerre trouve un peu excessif. Je trouve la condition de dix années excessive. Donc, je crois que c'est là leur recommandation.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Cette condition de 10 ans et celle de l'âge de 60 ans.

Le président: Eh bien! Les deux conditions ne sont-elles pas inséparables?

M. Weatherhead: Oui, cela va de pair. Eh bien!, monsieur le président, je ne comprends pas très bien l'historique, ici. Est-ce que les infirmités, dans l'intervalle, peuvent devenir moindres et que, par conséquent, il se peut qu'ils aient droit à une pension moindre que si la pension avait été stabilisée plus tôt?

Le président: M. Chadderton est mieux en mesure de répondre à cette question.

[Text]

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, that is quite right. There is every possibility that a veteran with a medical disability—and we are not speaking here of too many war amps, although we have some amps who have in addition medical disabilities—can be assessed by the Commission, let us say 15 per cent for ulcers, and he may have that assessment for three or four years. He feels that this is a permanent assessment now he can count on it and all of a sudden he gets a notice from the Commission to come in to be reboarded.

He goes in, they take another look at him and the doctor says: "Oh, well, your assessment now is only 5 per cent." So he can be reduced.

Now measured against that, sir, is the fact that stabilization of medical pensions has been, what we choose to call it, an essential principle of pension administration for World War I veterans since 1936. There is a quote in the Woods Committee report quoting a letter from the Chairman of the Commission saying that commencing about 1936 they started to introduce this as a principle. Again on the background, Mr. Chairman, this was a wonderful thing for the World War I veteran, because we were in the midst of a depression and about that time the greatest fear of pensioners was that their pension would be cut. Along came the Commission and they stabilized it and they said: "No, if you have had it for three years, we will not reduce it." The veterans naturally breathed a sigh of relief and this has been a wonderful thing in World War I pensions.

What we fail to understand is that it is nearly 25 years since the end of World War II and the government has not introduced a similar principle for World War II pensions.

What the proposal in the White Paper says in effect is that this will not be done for World War II pensioners until they reach age 60. I submit by that time a lot of these World War II pensioners are going to do a lot of heart burning and worrying about whether their pensions are going to be reduced. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If it has been a good principle for World War I—certainly the government has never challenged it, the veterans organizations have felt it was good and successive parliamentary committees have supported it—then why can it not be done for World War II veterans? It is exactly the same principle as we see it. But for the World War II fellow, despite the fact that it was available for World War I, 18

[Interpretation]

M. Chadderton: Oui, c'est juste. Il est très possible qu'un ancien combattant ayant une infirmité médicale; et nous ne parlons pas ici de trop des amputés de guerre bien qu'il y en ait qui aient des infirmités médicales, puisse être évalué par la Commission, à 50 p. 100 pour des ulcères, par exemple. Il peut avoir été ainsi évalué depuis trois ou quatre ans, il croit que c'est là une évaluation permanente acceptée. Et puis, tout d'un coup, il reçoit un avis de la Commission. On va l'examiner à nouveau.

Le médecin le réexamine et lui dit: votre évaluation n'est plus maintenant que de 5 p. 100. Donc, sa pension peut être réduite. Mais il faut tenir compte du fait que la stabilisation des pensions médicales est un principe essentiel depuis 1936 pour les anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale et que, dans le rapport Woods, on cite une lettre du président de la Commission que, indiquant que c'est aux environs de 1936, qu'ils ont commencé à énoncer ce principe.

Et puis, question d'historique aussi, monsieur le président, c'était là quelque chose de merveilleux pour l'ancien combattant de la première guerre mondiale, parce que nous étions en plein marasme; et, que la plus grande peur des pensionnés, c'était que leur pension soit coupée. Et la Commission a stabilisé leur pension en disant que s'ils la recevaient depuis trois ans celle-ci était stabilisée. Aussi les anciens combattants ont-ils poussé un soupir de soulagement et ce fut une caractéristique merveilleuse des pensions versées aux anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale.

Alors, ce que nous comprenons mal ici, c'est qu'il y a 25 ans d'écoulés depuis la deuxième guerre mondiale et nous sommes en droit de nous demander pourquoi le gouvernement n'a pas établi le même principe pour les pensions de la deuxième guerre mondiale.

Alors, ce que le Livre blanc dit en fait c'est que la chose ne se fera pas pour les anciens combattants de la deuxième guerre mondiale avant qu'ils n'aient atteint l'âge de 60 ans. A mon avis, à ce moment-là, ces pauvres anciens combattants doivent s'inquiéter beaucoup de leur pension. Et si c'était un bon principe pour les anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale, je ne vois pas pourquoi ce ne serait pas la même chose pour les anciens combattants de la deuxième guerre mondiale. Tout le monde est d'accord pour le dire. Le Parlement était d'accord. Les associations d'anciens combattants ont jugé que ce principe était bon et divers comités parlementaires par la suite se sont prononcés en sa faveur. Pourquoi, alors, ne pas l'appliquer years after his service, the World War II fellow is going to have to wait until he is 60 years of age and he is going to have to wait until he has that disability 10 years. Our figures are that it is not going to be of very much value to the World War II fellow until he is in his mid-60's and that is a far cry from the way this provision has worked for World War I veterans.

We are not suggesting that the World War I veterans got something they were not entitled to. They were certainly entitled to it and Mr. Justice Woods and his people also saw it as I think what they called an essential principle of pension administration. We are perplexed, Mr. Chairman, absolutely perplexed, to see why the people who framed the White Paper would come along and say it was all right for World War I, but you fellows are harder, or tougher, or you do not need it, or something to this effect and finally bring it in at age 60 if the fellow has had it for 10 years. There is just one word to describe it and that is "puzzlement". We just do not understand it.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, once the World War I veterans pensions were stabilized, was it still possible for each of them to have their assessments revised upwards?

Mr. Chadderton: Oh, yes indeed.

Mr. Weatherhead: So stabilized means a minimum base or floor. Is that the idea?

Mr. Chadderton: It is a floor.

Mr. Weatherhead: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters.

• 1600

Mr. Peters: I would like to know if stabilization means that you do not have to have an annual or regular board. Is this what stabilization means?

Mr. Chadderton: I think I would have to say that when the witnesses from the Commission are before you that is an answer they would have to give. I do not really know. I do know that once it is stabilized, the man quits worrying about it unless he starts getting worse.

[Interprétation]

aux anciens combattants de la seconde guerre mondiale. A notre avis, c'est exactement le même principe qui est en jeu. Mais, en dépit du fait que la chose était possible pour les anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale, 18 ans après avoir servi, le pauvre ancien combattant de la deuxième guerre mondiale doit attendre à 60 ans et avoir souffert d'infirmités pendant plus de 10 ans. D'après nos chiffres, cela ne lui servira pas à grand chose avant la soixantaine. Et, je crois que c'est injuste comparé au traitement des anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale.

Nous ne disons pas que les anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale n'avaient pas droit à cette stabilisation, loin de là; et le juge Woods et ses collègues y voyaient aussi un principe essentiel de l'administration des pensions. Et, nous sommes fort perplexes de voir que les gens, dans le Livre blanc, disent: cela était satisfaisant pour la première guerre monaiale, mais vous, camarades, vous êtes plus aguerris ou vous n'en avez pas besoin et, finalement, ils vous l'accordent à 60 ans si vous avez été invalide pendant 10 ans. Un seul mot peut décrire cette situation «incroyable». Nous n'y comprenons rien.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, une fois que les pensions des anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale ont été stabilisées, est-ce que chacun d'entre eux pouvait faire rétablir ou réévaluer sa pension à la hausse?

M. Chadderton: Oui, c'était possible.

M. Weatherhead: La stabilisation exige que l'on possède une base consistant en un chiffre minimum. Ai-je raison?

M. Chadderton: C'est une base en effet.

M. Weatherhead: Merci.

Le président: Monsieur Peters.

M. Peters: Est-ce que la stabilisation veut dire que vous n'avez pas besoin de subir un examen annuel ou régulier? Est-ce là le sens de la stabilisation?

M. Chadderton: Je crois que lorsque les témoins de la Commission comparaissent devant vous, c'est une réponse qu'ils devront donner eux-mêmes. Je n'en sais rien exactement. Je crois que lorsque la pension est stabilisée, l'homme ne s'en préoccupe plus à moins que son état empire.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: What is stabilizing then? Over the years, or at least for a long time, once a year I used to have to go for a board and now I go for a board occasionally. I do not know just how often, perhaps every three years, or something like that. Do World War I veterans not go for a board at all?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, I notice that World War I veterans once they are stabilized, do not ask for boards as often.

Mr. Peters: But they would have to ask for the board.

Mr. Chadderton: Not necessarily. As I say though, sir, I would prefer that the Commission answer that question. I would not want to give an answer on just what the Commission's policy is about calling World War I stabilized pensions in for reboard because I do not know what the policy is.

Mr. Peters: What does stabilization mean then.

Mr. Chadderton: It means an awful lot, sir, to the individual. You have mentioned your own case.

Mr. Peters: I think mine is stabilized.

Mr. Chadderton: It cannot be because you are World War II.

A World War I veteran in exactly the same position as you are today with relation to his service in World War I by this time could have quit worrying. If he had had a 15 or 20 per cent assessment for a medical disability the chances are he would not have been reduced because stabilization policy was in effect.

But twenty-five years after World War II the World War II veteran with a medical disability still has to worry about being called in and having his pension reduced.

There is no question in our mind that it is a concession, it is a benefit, and this is what we are requesting. This is in the true spirit of administering the Pension Act, as we see it, and why subject a fellow to the worry of his pension having to be reduced. If it had never been done for World War I, I still submit we would have been here today arguing that it should be done for World War II. Because of the fact that it is in effect for

[Interpretation]

M. Peters: Qu'est-ce que cela veut dire «stabiliser»? Pendant longtemps, une fois par année, j'ai dû me présenter devant une Commission. Maintenant, je n'y vais qu'à l'occasion. Je crois que c'est tous les trois ans. Est-ce que les anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale n'ont jamais à se présenter devant la Commission? Mais est-ce que c'est à eux qu'il convient de demander de passer devant une Commission?

M. Chadderton: Oui, je remarque que les anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale, lorsqu'ils sont établis, ne demandent pas aussi souvent à se présenter devant la Commission?

M. Peters: Mais il faudrait qu'ils demandent à passer devant la Commission.

M. Chadderton: Pas nécessairement. Mais j'aimerais mieux laisser à la Commission le soin de répondre à cette question. J'hésiterais à dire quelle est au juste la politique de la Commission lorsqu'il s'agit de convoquer les pensionnés de la première guerre mondiale dont les pensions ont été stabilisées, car je ne connais pas cette politique.

M. Peters: Alors, que signifie la stabilisation?

M. Chadderton: Elle signifie beaucoup pour le particulier. Vous avez mentionné votre propre cas.

M. Peters: Je crois que ma pension est stabilisée.

M. Chadderton: Elle ne peut pas l'être parce que vous êtes un ancien combattant de la deuxième guerre mondiale. Placé exactement dans votre situation quant au service, un ancien combattant de la première grande guerre n'aurait plus à s'inquiéter à l'heure actuelle. Si on avait évalué son invalidité à 15 ou 20 p. 100, il y aurait de bonnes chances pour que cette pension n'aie pas été réduite, car la politique de la stabilisation était en vigueur. Mais vingt-cinq ans après la deuxième guerre mondiale, l'ancien combattant atteint d'invalidité doit encore s'inquiéter parce qu'on peut toujours lui annoncer la réduction de sa pension.

A notre avis, il n'y a aucun doute qu'il s'agit là d'une allocation et c'est cela que nous demandons. Selon nous, c'est le véritable esprit dont s'inspire l'administration de la loi; et pourquoi amener la personne à s'inquiéter de la réduction éventuelle de sa pension. Si cela n'a jamais été fait pour la première guerre mondiale, nous ne nous en serions pas moins retrouvés ici aujourd'hui, prétendant que cela devrait être fait pour la World War I and has been in effect for so long it completely puzzles us, as I said earlier, why this recommendation cannot be accepted.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, the Woods Committee recommended that the same apply for World War II. When we were discussing it, if my memory serves me right, with Mr. Ward, who made some comments pertaining to some of that Committee's recommendations, it seemed to me, and according to the report we have at hand, that this was agreed to in principle, with modification. However, I do not recall what the explanation was.

The Chairman: I think that the Committee will probably want to ask further questions of departmental witnesses on this matter when we have them back before us.

Lt. Col. Lambert: We do not ask too many questions of departmental people because we know better than they do.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, the word "modification" has us very worried. Take the word "modification" in that legal damages proposal. To our way of thinking, as we read it and I think we can read it very clearly, the White Paper offers a very small portion of what Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues had recommended on stabilization. The modification, sir, is quite a bit less than the veterans organizations had suggested and that the Woods Committee recommended. We had suggested stabilization after three years for World War II veterans. There was no waiting until he was age 60 and there certainly was no ten-year period in there.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to Mr. Chadderton.

Based on your experience, how many veterans would benefit from stabilization, aside from the psychic or emotional benefits, and how many have been reduced? Have you run into many cases where the Department has reduced pensions?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, from the research done in the Woods Committee I would say not too many are reduced. The great value we see here, and I will use your words, is really in the psychological advantage of being stabilized. We do not really deuxième guerre mondiale. Parce que cette mesure était en vigueur pour la première guerre mondiale et est demeurée en vigueur si longtemps, nous ne pouvons pas, nous l'avons dit tantôt, concevoir pourquoi cette recommandation ne peut être approuvée.

Le président: Monsieur Guay.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Monsieur le président, le comité Woods recommande que la même chose s'applique pour la deuxième guerre mondiale. Si je me souviens bien, lorsque nous en avons discuté avec M. Ward, qui a commenté certaines recommandations du Comité, il m'a semblé que suivant le rapport que nous avons en main que cela a été recommandé et approuvé avec modifications. Cependant, je ne me souviens pas quelle explication fut donnée à ce moment.

Le président: Je crois que le Comité aura probablement d'autres questions à poser aux témoins du ministère lorsqu'ils seront cités à nouveau.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Nous ne posons pas trop de questions aux gens du ministère parce que nous en savons plus long qu'eux.

M. Chadderton: Ce mot «modification» nous cause beaucoup d'inquiétude. Prenons-le par exemple, dans la proposition relative aux dommages en loi. A notre avis, comme sa lecture nous permet de le voir clairement, le Livre blanc offre une très petite partie de ce que M. le juge Woods et ses collègues avaient recommandé sur la stabilisation. La modification, monsieur, représente appréciablement moins que ce que les associations d'anciens combattants avaient suggéré et que le comité Woods avait recommandé. Nous avions proposé la stabilisation après trois ans pour l'ancien combattant de la deuxième guerre mondiale. Il n'était nullement question d'attendre qu'il ait atteint l'âge de 60 ans et il n'y avait certes pas là de période de dix ans.

M. Saltsman: J'aimerais poser une question à M. Chadderton, monsieur le président.

Combien d'anciens combattants profiteraient selon vous de la stabilisation, sauf pour les avantages psychiques et émotifs, et combien d'entre eux ont vu leur pension réduite? Connaissez-vous de nombreux cas où le ministre a réduit la pension?

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, d'après les recherches du Comité Woods, les pensions réduites n'auraient pas été trop nombreuses. Il s'agit ici, pour parler en vos termes, des avantages psychologiques de la stabilisation. Nous n'envisageons pas que l'apvisualize it as being a very costly thing for the federal government to implement because not too many people really are reduced—but they live in the fear of being reduced.

[Interpretation]

plication en sera tellement coûteuse pour le gouvernement fédéral, car les pensions réduites ne sont pas tellement nombreuses, mais les gens vivent dans la crainte de la voir réduite.

• 1605

Mr. Saltsman: Yes. In some ways it may cost the federal government less money because they would not have to look at it that often. If there are not many being reduced anyway how costly could it be to effect this proposal? What you are suggesting is that the same benefits apply to Second World War veterans as to First World War veterans.

M. Saltsman: Oui, mais il en coûterait peut-être moins cher au gouvernement fédéral qui n'aurait pas à examiner ces questions si souvent. Si de toute façon, il y en a peu dont la pension doit être réduite, combien en coûterait-il pour réaliser cette proposition que vous proposez en somme, d'appliquer aux anciens combattants de la deuxième guerre mondiale les mêmes avantages que ceux qui sont appliqués aux anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale.

Mr. Chadderton: I think that is a very good point. I think that you reach the point of no return. You keep on bringing people in front of medical officers which costs a lot of money, just to see whether their pension is still assessable at the degree they had been awarded.

M. Chadderton: Voilà à mon avis une remarque pertinente. Il y a des limites. On soumet les gens à des examens médicaux répétés, qui sont très onéreux, uniquement pour établir si leur pension peut encore être estimée à la valeur à laquelle elle a été accordée.

Mr. Saltsman: The actual experience has been that very few are reduced.

M. Saltsman: De fait, très peu de pensions sont réduites.

Mr. Chadderton: This would be my experience, indeed.

M. Chadderton: Ce serait, en effet, mon avis.

Mr. Weatherhead: Surely, Mr. Chairman, we would still be bringing them in, would we not, to see if their pensions could be increased? They usually come in to see if their pensions could be increased and not reduced. I think we would still be seeing them in any event. Is that not the case?

M. Wetherhead: Assurément, monsieur le président, ils seraient quand même appelés par la Commission pour savoir s'il y avait lieu d'augmenter leur pension, au lieu de la réduire? Nous les verrions de toute façon, n'est-ce pas?

Mr. Chadderton: That is why I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, that I would prefer the Commission people answer. I do not really know what the policy is on bringing people in once they have been stabilized. I know they can come in, there is no question about that, and if the man feels he is worse he can come in at any time, but I do not know whether the Commission brings them in regularly once they are stabilized.

M. Chadderton: Voilà pourquoi, monsieur le président, j'ai dit plus tôt que je préférerais que les gens de la Commission répondent. Je ne sache point pertinemment que la politique de la Commission exige d'appeler les pensionnés une fois qu'ils sont stabilisés. Je sais qu'ils peuvent se présenter devant la Commission, cela ne fait aucun doute; et si la personne se sent plus mal, elle peut se présenter en aucun temps; mais je ne sais pas si la Commission les convoque régulièrement, lorsque leur pension a été stabilisée.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, that was my point. It is not so much the reduction, the fact is that it is a great advantage to the veteran to decide when he wants to come in, if he has a problem. The other way of doing it is to look in the book and say that it is so many months since a person has been in, we had better call 15 people in for this week. This does not seem to bear any relationship to the problem the veteran himself may have. It is a kind of book operation and they come in annually or bi-annually. It seems to me that this is an expensive way of doing it. It involves not only the medical profession but transportation, loss of wages and other factors, and it is usually quite inconvenient. If a difficulty arises it is to the benefit of the veteran to come in at that time.

M. Peters: Justement, monsieur le président, Ce n'est pas tellement une question de réduction, mais de l'avantage que retire l'ancien combattant de pouvoir décider lui-même quand il ira devant la Commission, parce qu'il a un problème. L'autre méthode consiste à regarder dans le registre et si tant de mois se sont écoulés depuis qu'une personne s'est présentée, en conclure qu'il conviendrait de con-

Mr. Chadderton: Also, Mr. Chairman, we in the organization are not unmindful of the responsibility of the Commission to the taxpayer. We feel that in certain cases the amount of awarded pensions is not going to progress because the condition can improve. However, we feel that three years should give the Commission doctors plenty of time to decide whether this is an apparently permanent assessment.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): In reference to what the second last speaker said, Mr. Chairman, I feel that it goes away beyond even the points of discussion at the moment. For example, there could be many advantages of a review to both the government and the veterans, once the pension is stabilized. By calling him in and giving him a recheck they may find out that they can cure certain ills which otherwise would land him in the hospital and he probably would be there for a long time, which would be costly to the government. On the other hand, by proper treatment at that particular moment they could keep him out of hospital thereby benefitting both the veteran and the government, yet they would not touch his pension. There are many many things which could be discussed in this particular field.

The Chairman: Thank you. I would like to call the time to the Committee's attention.

Mr. Peters: To be fair to the Commission, to some extent this has been advantageous. I can remember right after 1946 every time that a pensioner came in he was informed that he could see the VLA, asked if he was interested in a house, improvements on his property and so on. He was sent to a number of people, if he wished to see them, and there was an advantage. Most of our legislation that affected veterans has now run out in that particular field and if they have not qualified for many of these advantages, such as insurvoquer cette semaine-là 15 pensionnés. Ceci ne semble pas s'apparenter au problème même que l'ancien combattant pourrait avoir. C'est purement une question d'écriture dans un livre et ils se présentent une fois l'an ou deux fois l'an. C'est là, il me semble, une façon onéreuse de procéder. Il n'y a pas seulement la profession médicale de mise en cause, il y a aussi les déplacements, la perte de traitements, et d'autres facteurs et il est rare que le moment convienne. S'il survient une difficulté, c'est à ce moment qu'il est à l'avantage de l'ancien combattant de se présenter.

M. Chadderton: De plus, monsieur le président, nous, gens de l'Association, ne perdons pas de vue les responsabilités de la Commission envers le contribuable. Nous croyons que dans certains cas, le montant des pensions n'augmentera pas du fait que l'état peut s'améliorer. Nous croyons cependant que trois ans devraient suffire aux médecins de la Commission pour décider si l'évaluation semble permanente.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Monsieur le président, au sujet de ce qu'a dit celui qui a été l'avant dernier à prendre la parole, il me semble que cela va bien au-delà de la présente discussion. Par exemple, la révision de la pension, une fois qu'elle est stabilisée, présenterait peut-être beaucoup d'avantages pour le gouvernement et pour l'ancien combattant. On découvrirait peut-être, en le convoquant et en le soumettant à un autre examen, qu'on peut le guérir de certaines infirmités qui, autrement, lui auraient peut-être valu l'hospitalisation, qui aurait pu coûté cher au gouvernement. Par ailleurs, un traitement approprié administré au moment opportun lui aurait évité l'hospitalisation, avantageant de ce fait à la fois le gouvernement et l'ancien combattant, sans pour autant toucher à la pension de ce dernier. Il y a sur ce point particulier nombre de questions que l'on pourrait étudier.

Le président: Merci. J'aimerais signaler l'heure à l'attention des membres du comité.

M. Peters: En toute justice envers la Commission, cela a été profitable dans une certaine mesure. Je me souviens qu'aussitôt après 1946, chaque fois qu'un pensionné se présentait, on lui apprenait qu'il pouvait se prévaloir de la Loi sur les terres destinées aux anciens combattants; on lui demandait s'il voulait acheter une maison; apporter des améliorations à sa propriété, etc... Il était référé à nombre de personne, s'il en manifestait l'intention et que c'était à son avantage. Toutes les mesures de la Loi qui concernaient ance, VLA and so forth, they cannot now. There was a big advantage but that is not nearly as prevalent now as it was before.

Mr. Chadderton: I think, Mr. Chairman, that the drafters of the White Paper are hoist with their own petard because, if you look at the White Paper, what do they say? They are prepared to put into legislation what is available for World War I. We would much have preferred that if they did not like the Woods Committee recommendation that they would have come out and said, "Look, stabilization is no good". But when they turn around and say they are going to put into the legislation what has been in effect for 20 some years with regard to World War I certainly the government can have no argument about the validity of it, and if they are going to put it in the Act for World War I then why not for World War II?

The Chairman: I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that we still have some sections of the brief to hear and time is passing. If there are no further questions—I do not like to stop questioning—could we proceed with the brief.

Lt. Col. Lambert: We will proceed as speedily as we can.

The Chairman: As required.

Lt. Col. Lambert: Yes. On page 51 in the heading "Pension to be increased to 100 per cent while under treatment for a pensionable disability".

Mr. Chadderton: This provision in the Pension Act results in a $15 deduction for pensioners below 95 per cent when they are placed in departmental hospitals for treatment. The Woods Committee recommended deletion of the provision. There is no mention of the matter in the White Paper. We would wish to express our disappointment and our surprise in regard to this omission.

The disappointment comes from the fact that this provision is one of the small irritations which provoke the war disability pensioner, far out of proportion to its importance in dollars and cents. While he is in hospital, he is excluded from earning his living in the unskilled labour market. Hence he feels entialors les anciens combattants ont maintenant pris fin dans ce domaine particulier et ceux qui n'ont pas déjà établi leur admissibilité à l'égard de ces avantages, assurance, terres destinées aux anciens combattants etc... ne peuvent plus le faire aujourd'hui. Il y avait alors un avantage notable qui n'est plus, de loin, aussi notable aujourd'hui.

M. Chadderton: Je crois, monsieur le président, que ceux qui ont rédigé le Livre blanc se sont pris à leur propre piège car, en somme, que disent-ils? Ils sont prêts à traduire en mesures législatives ce qui existe déjà pour la première guerre mondiale. S'ils n'aimaient pas les propositions du Rapport Woods, ils n'avaient qu'à dire sans détours: «la stabilisation ne vaut rien» Mais, lorsqu'ils disent qu'ils vont ériger en loi ce qui se fait déjà depuis 20 ans à l'égard de la première grande guerre, je ne vois pas quelle raison le gouvernement aurait quant à la validité de cette loi et s'ils doivent l'intégrer à la loi pour la première grande guerre, pourquoi ne feraient-ils pas pour la deuxième grande guerre?

Le président: Puis-je signaler au Comité que le temps passe et qu'il nous reste encore certaines parties du mémoire à lire. Je n'aime pas à couper court aux questions, mais si vous avez fini, nous allons poursuivre notre étude du mémoire.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Nous procéderons le plus rapidement possible.

Le président: Selon le besoin.

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Le mémoire porte la rubrique suivante à la page 51: Majoration de la pension à 100 p. 100 lorsque le pensionné suit un traitement pour une invalidité ouvrant droit à pension.

M. Chadderton: Cette disposition de la Loi sr les pensions aboutit pour les pensionnés reconnus invalides à moins de 95 p. 100, à une déduction de $15 lorsqu'ils sont hospitalisés pour traitement dans les hôpitaux du ministère. Dans son rapport, le comité Woods recommandait la suppression de cette disposition. Or, le Livre blanc n'en parle pas. Nous voudrions exprimer notre déception et notre surprise devant cette omission.

La déception provient du fait que cette disposition est un des petits détails qui irrite le pensionné invalide de guerre à un degré sans rapport avec sa valeur pécuniaire. Pendant son hospitalisation il ne peut gagner sa vie sur le marché de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée. Il estime donc avoir droit à une pension tled to 100 per cent pension but is subject to a $15 monthly deduction, unless he is a 95 per cent or 100 per cent pensioner. The deduction makes no sense to him, and even less to those of us in the Association who represent him.

Our surprise in the matter comes from the fact that, for the 95 per cent and 100 per cent pensioner, governmental authorities have already moved in the direction of eliminating this $15 deduction. This was one of those compromises which did not go far enough and, in fact, it was done by the somewhat subtle manoeuvre of leaving the 100 per cent and 95 per cent pensioners on pension while in hospital, instead of placing them on treatment allowances, as is done for the pensioners of 95 per cent or below.

Most veterans organizations who have long wrestled with this matter, felt that the Government would welcome the opportunity, in conjunction with the amendments arising from the Woods Report, to correct this seeming inequity. This supposition was heightened by the reference of the Woods Committee to a report prepared by the Department of Veterans Affairs Treatment Branch under date of December 2, 1958 which described the $15 deduction as a "discrepancy" and concluded that "there appears to be no sound reason why there should be a difference in the rate depending on whether in-patient or out-patient treatment is involved or of making a deduction in maintenance during in-patient if the principle that the pensioner is 100 per cent disabled while in receipt of treatment for his service disability is accepted."

In fact, as with many other areas, this Association is grateful to the Woods Committee for the research done in regard to this matter, and for the thorough explanation thereof which will be found in volume 3, chapter 40, pages 1183 to 1199. It appears to us that the recommendation to eliminate the $15 deduction is completely logical and as we said earlier, we find it difficult to understand—and amazing as well—to learn that the Government does not intend to accept the recommendation.

The Chairman: Mr. Saltsman and then Mr. Bill Knowles.

Mr. Saltsman: I think this is one recommendation that could commend itself to Members of Parliament because all of us are aware of what happens when you have to leave a residence behind you while you are occupying temporary premises in Ottawa. And in some cases your expenses do not go down, they actually go up. I know, speaking d'invalidité de 100 p. 100, mais s'il n'est pas invalide à 95 ou 100 p. 100, sa pension fait l'objet d'une déduction mensuelle de $15. A ses yeux cette déduction est illogique et elle l'est encore davantage pour ceux d'entre nous, membres de l'Association, qui le représentons. Notre surprise à ce sujet provient du fait qu'en ce qui concerne le pensionné invalide à 95 ou 100 p. 100 les autorités gouvernementales s'étaient déjà orientées dans ce sens, c'est-à-dire la suppression de cette déduction de $15. C'est l'un de ces compromis qui n'ont pas été assez loin; en fait, on avait usé d'une manœuvre subtile continuant à verser sa pension au pensionné hospitalisé, invalide à 100 ou 95 p. 100, au lieu de lui verser une allocation de traitement comme c'est le cas pour les pensionnés invalides à 95 p. 100 ou moins.

La plupart des organismes d'anciens combattants qui s'acharnent depuis longtemps à résoudre ce problème, croyaient que le gouvernement se réjouirait, à l'occasion des modifications découlant du rapport Woods, de pouvoir rectifier cette injustice apparente. Cette hypothèse était renforcée par le fait que le comité Woods citait un rapport préparé par la Direction des traitements du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, daté du 2 décembre 1958 qui qualifiait la déduction de $15 de «contradictoire» et concluait qu'aucune «raison logique ne semblait justifier une différence de taux qu'il s'agisse d'un traitement comme malade hospitalisé ou externe ni une déduction pour frais d'entretien pendant l'hospitalisation si l'on admet le principe que le pensionné est invalide à 100 p. 100 lorsqu'il suit un traitement pour invalidité causée pendant son service». En fait, comme c'est le cas dans bien d'autres domaines, notre Association sait gré au comité Woods de la recherche effectuée au sujet de cette question et de l'explication approfondie qu'il en donne au volume 3, chapitre 40, pages 1364 à 1373. Il nous semble que la recommandation visant à supprimer la déduction de $15 est parfaitement logique et, nous le répétons, nous avons du mal à comprendre—et nous sommes renversés d'apprendre—que le gouvernement n'a pas l'intention d'accepter cette recommandation.

Le président: Monsieur Saltsman, puis ce sera monsieur Bill Knowles.

M. Saltsman: Je crois que c'est là une recommandation valable aux yeux des membres du Parlement. Tous, nous comprenons ce qui arrive quand il faut quitter son chez-soi et occupé des locaux temporaires à Ottawa. Les dépenses augmentent et ne sont pas réduites. Je parle surtout des familles de la classe ouvrière. Ce sont souvent les maris qui s'oc-from personal experience, that particularly in working-class families where the husband often does the minor repairs around the house, the expenses actually rise for the family when the breadwinner is in the hospital.

It makes no sense whatsoever to me to continue this $15 deduction. I think it is eminently sensible that no deduction take place when someone is a patient in the hospital. I say this both from personal experience as a Member of Parliament and from my personal experience with constituents and their problems in my riding.

The Chairman: Mr. Bill Knowles and then Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I would like to ask whether there has been any research on the cost to the government if the full pension is paid while the person is under treatment. Would you know anything about that?

Mr. Chadderton: I think it would be safe to say that it is not high, but these days almost anything could be high. We really do not know. But it is not a large item.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Do you think this would be the reason?

Mr. Chadderton: I do not know, sir. This is why we are surprised because even the departmental officials themselves recommended some years back that this was just some sort of anachronism and it was time to remove it, and we cannot see why somebody has not taken that action.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Certainly it is an irritation.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, are we sure the government has rejected this proposal? Which recommendation number in the Woods Committee was it?

cupent des petites réparations. Les frais augmentent donc lorsque le chef de la maison est hospitalisé. Je ne vois pas quel avantage il y aurait à continuer cette déduction de $15. Je crois qu'il est tout à fait juste de recommander qu'il n'y ait pas de réduction dans le cas d'un ancien combattant hospitalisé. C'est mon expérience personnelle auprès de mes commettants et celle que j'ai acquise en tant que membre du Parlement qui me dictent ces paroles.

Le président: Monsieur Bill Knowles, puis ce sera monsieur Weatherhead.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): J'aimerais savoir si l'on a fait des recherches quant aux frais qui seraient encourus si le gouvernement décidait de verser le montant entier de la pension aux anciens combattants qui sont hospitalisés.

M. Chadderton: Je crois que le coût n'en serait pas très élevé, mais aujourd'hui presque tout coûte cher. Franchement, on ne sait pas. Nous ne croyons pas que ce soit une dépense extraordinaire.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Croyez-vous que ce soit là la raison.

M. Chadderton: C'est pour cela que nous exprimons notre étonnement. Même les fonctionnaires du ministère ont souligné, il y a quelques années, que c'était là un anachronisme et qu'il fallait supprimer cette déduction. Nous ne voyons pas pourquoi aucune mesure n'a été prise à cette fin.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Je comprends que ce soit quelque chose de frustrant pour l'ancien combattant.

M. Chadderton: La chose ne fait aucun doute.

Le président: Monsieur Weatherhead.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, êtes-vous sûr que le gouvernement a rejeté cette proposition? De quelle recommandation s'agissait-il dans le Rapport?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Monsieur le président, la page 5 du rapport porte la mention «Accepté sans modification» à la suite de la recommandation 144. Est-ce qu'on mentionne les mots «Accepté sans modification» à la page 103 du rapport? Si tel est le cas, le me? If that is the case, accepted unchanged, the words of the Woods Committee report recommendation are that this be deleted. I would take it then, that they were in accord with what we are discussing.

Mr. Chadderton: They were in agreement with No. 144.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Right. In the report which we were given, we were told that No. 144 was accepted unchanged.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, because it is redundant anyway. It is in the Act now but it does not apply because they overcame this by allowing the 100 per cent and 95 per cent pensioner to remain on pension. But the guts of this issue—if you will pardon the word—is in No. 145. And if this has not been accepted, and we understand that it has not, then this $15 deduction will still apply to any pensioner of 90 per cent or below when he goes into hospital. When he goes into hospital he is off the market. He has got to go on 100 per cent pension. But they say: "Well, no, you will get treatment allowances and that is $15 a month less."

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I will have to say something that we have said on previous days here that has not been said today. When the Minister presented us with this White Paper he said that it was flexible. Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking on your behalf, I am speaking for myself. In view of the words of the Minister certainly this Committee can consider this matter and possibly could make some recommendations.

The Chairman: Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Chadderton if he knows how they arrived at this $15. Did they just pick this out of the air, $15 every time a veteran goes into the hospital?

Mr. Chadderton: No, it was not picked out of the air, Mr. Chairman. As nearly as I recall—it has been in the legislation quite a long time—it was at one time thought that when a man was in hospital on treatment allowances, this represented that portion of his total income which his wife in the home would not require because he was in hospital, and it is supposedly less to keep him in hospital than it is to keep him at home. That is the theory.

libellé des recommandations du rapport Woods portant que cela soit supprimé indique qu'ils sont en faveur.

M. Chadderton: Ils étaient d'accord avec la recommandation nº 144.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): C'est vrai. Dans le rapport qu'on nous a fait tenir, on précisait que la recommandation nº 144 était acceptée sans modification.

M. Chadderton: En effet, cette mention est superflue. La Loi renferme cette disposition, mais on a évité la chose en permettant aux anciens combattants touchant une pension de 100 p. 100 ou de 95 p. 100 de demeurer des pensionnés. C'est dans la recommandation 145 toutefois que se trouve le nœud ou la question. Si cette recommandation n'est pas acceptée—on nous donne à entendre que tel est le cas—la déduction de 15 p. 100 continuera de s'appliquer à l'égard d'un ancien combattant hospitalisé qui touche une pension de 90 p. 100 ou moins. Quand il est hospitalisé, il n'est plus sur le marché du travail. Il touche une pension de 100 p. 100. On explique alors que ce n'est pas le cas. L'indemnité de traitement que vous recevez équivaut à une déduction de $15 par mois.»

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): J'aimerais répéter aujourd'hui ce que j'ai déjà dit quand le ministre a déposé le Livre blanc et qu'il nous a dit que la teneur en était souple. Monsieur le président, il s'agit ici d'une opinion personnelle. Compte tenu des paroles du ministre, le Comité peut certes examiner la question et faire des recommandations.

Le président: M. Marshall.

M. Marshall: J'aimerais demander à M. Chadderton s'il sait comment on en est arrivé à ce montant de $15. L'a-t-on imaginé tout simplement pour l'ancien combattant chaque fois qu'il est hospitalisé?

M. Chadderton: Ce chiffre n'a certes pas été imaginé, monsieur le président. Si ma mémoire est fidèle ce chiffre est prévu dans la Loi depuis longtemps. On était alors d'avis que lorsque l'ancien combattant était traité à l'hôpital, cela représentait la tranche de son revenu dont sa femme n'avait pas besoin, parce qu'il était à l'hôpital. Il est censé en coûter moins pour son entretien à l'hôpital que pour ses soins à la maison. Voilà le principe qui a inspiré ce chiffre.

[Text]

Mr. Marshall: I hope whoever was responsible for that—whenever it was—they turn over in their grave for the niggardly amount of $15.

Mr. Chadderton: I believe at one time it was $30 and that goes back to the thirties, and then it was reduced to $15.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chadderton, to what extent have you found in your experience that the $15 deduction sometimes acts as a deterrent, and veterans simply cannot afford to go because of this loss?

Mr. Chadderton: Not very often. I think we described it as an irritant, and I think that is the best word, sir.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, does it not change the method of payment? It changes the source of payment, and the source of payment means that there is a delay of probably a month, and in some cases more.

This is what I have found. It is not the $15 entirely, but it is the change from the Pension Branch to the Treatment Branch. Instead of the cheque coming from one source it goes through certain processes and these are always subject to the old argument of lost documents. With anything that happens that does not follow along as A,B,C, then there is a delay. This means that the wife will not get the cheque; at least she is apt not to get the cheque at the regular time. This, I think, is why Members of Parliament get involved in it all the time because the family find the cheque did not come. It is transferred from the Pension Branch to the Treatment Branch and there is a delay. This is really the biggest problem.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It probably costs them more than $15 to make the changes from one branch to another. That might be another thing we should look into.

Mr. Peters: In my experience this is where the problem is. It is not the complaint by the family about the $15; it is the complaint that they did not get a cheque, period.

Mr. Chadderton: You are quite right. I would not want to imply that in our experience there is any real delay by the treasury people in DVA. We think they are pretty good. But it is just the force of circumstances of shuffling papers back and forth. It is a delay that is excusable because they are forced to do it.

The Chairman: I call to the attention of the members of the Committee that we still have quite a bit of the brief to go. Would you like to proceed?

[Interpretation]

M. Marshall: Alors, celui qui a eu la responsabilité de ce chiffre doit se sentir coupable maintenant. Un montant aussi parcimonieux que $15.

M. Chadderton: Dans les années 30, je crois, ce chiffre était de $30; puis on l'a réduit à $15.

M. Saltsman: Comment, selon vous, monsieur Chadderton, cette déduction de $15 peut-elle servir de préventif et dissuader un ancien combattant d'être hospitalisé?

M. Chadderton: Pas très souvent. Je crois qu'il s'agit-là d'une nuisance. C'est là le mot juste.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, la méthode de paiement n'est-elle pas modifiée? Il y a modification dans la source de l'allocation et cela signifie un retard probable d'un mois, peut-être plus en certains cas. J'ai découvert qu'il ne s'agit pas seulement du $15, mais d'un changement de la direction des pensions et des traitements. Au lieu d'être émis exclusivement par un bureau, le chèque passe par divers paliers. On peut toujours d'ailleurs invoquer l'excuse du document égaré. Avec tout ce qui arrive, les choses ne sont pas aussi simples que l'alphabet. Il se produit certains retards. Alors, l'épouse ne reçoit pas le chèque au moment prévu. Voilà pourquoi les députés doivent intervenir. La famille n'a pas reçu le chèque, parce qu'il est passé de la Direction des pensions à la Direction des traitements hospitaliers. Alors, il se produit un retard. C'est vraiment là le problème majeur.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Il en coûte probablement plus que $15 pour transférer le chèque d'une source à une autre. C'est là une question qu'il vaudrait la peine d'examiner.

M. Peters: C'est là qu'est le problème, à mon sens. La famille ne se plaint pas au sujet du $15. La plainte qu'elle formule, c'est de ne pas recevoir le chèque. Un point c'est tout.

M. Chadderton: Vous avez raison. Je ne devrais pas laisser entendre qu'il y a des retards imputables à la trésorerie du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. Je crois que les fonctionnaires s'acquittent bien de leur travail, mais il y a un concours de circonstances qui expliquent ces retards dans l'acheminement des formules et des documents. Ces choses sont inévitables.

Le président: Je rappelle aux membres du Comité que nous avons encore une bonne tranche du mémoire à examiner. Aimeriez-vous poursuivre la lecture de ce texte?

[Texte]

Lt. Col. Lambert: We will proceed, and fast.

The Chairman: No, we will take the time that is required, but I am simply calling to the attention of members...

Mr. Alderdice: I think it will read a little bit faster.

Recommendations Being Implemented Under Existing Authorities:

The White Paper suggests that about one third of the Woods Committee recommendations have been accepted and can be implemented under existing authorities. In this regard we refer to the comments made in the statement by the Chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission, in his appearance before your Committee, on April 17 last. The views of this Association were provided to your Committee by our Executive Secretary on April 19 and it is our intention, in our submission today, to touch only briefly upon the recommendations involved.

Pension Examination While Undergoing Hospital Treatment:

The Commission presumably suggested that examination was, or would be, made at the time of discharge. The Woods Committee was obviously aware that this is now being done, but was suggesting an amendment to the procedure, whereby medical examination would be made before discharge.

Disclosure of Information from Veterans Files:

The Commission Chairman suggested that disclosure of information was permitted only where this was considered to be in the best interests of the veterans. Our interpretation of the Woods proposal is that disclosure from the veterans pension file should not be allowed, under any circumstances. This is viewed as a very serious matter in our Association, bearing in mind that the pensioner has no access to his own file, and does not know what information it contains. If he is asked to give consent to allow a prospective employer or insurer to look at his file, he is reluctant to refuse this consent as it could raise suspicions. We feel there are valid and just reasons for the recommendation in the Woods Committee report which would ensure that the information on the pensioner's file would be available only to the Pension Commission and the Department of Veterans Affairs.

It is of particular interest that in his statement on this matter (item 22) the Chairman

[Interprétation]

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert: Nous allons continuer, et rapidement.

Le président: Non, nous prendrons le temps nécessaire, mais je rappelle simplement aux membres...

M. Alderdice: Je pense que je lirai un peu rapidement.

Application des recommandations par les services administratifs actuels:

Selon le Livre blanc, environ un tiers des recommandations du comité Woods ont été acceptées et peuvent être appliquées par les services administratifs actuels. A cet égard, nous nous reportons aux observations que renfermait la déclaration du président de la Commission canadienne des pensions lorsqu'il a comparu devant le comité le 17 avril dernier. Les opinions de notre Association vous ont été communiquées par notre secrétaire exécutif et nous nous proposons dans notre mémoire d'aujourd'hui, d'effleurer seulement les recommandations en cause.

Examen de la pension tandis que le pensionné suit un traitement à l'hôpital:

La Commission a probablement laissé entendre que l'examen avait lieu, ou aurait lieu, lorsque le pensionné quitterait l'hôpital. Le comité Woods savait évidemment que c'était la façon actuelle de procéder, mais il proposait qu'on la modifie et que l'examen médical ait lieu avant la sortie de l'hôpital.

Révélation de renseignements tirés du dossier des pensionnés:

Le président de la Commission a laissé entendre que la révélation des renseignements n'était autorisée que lorsqu'elle était considérée comme étant favorable à l'ancien combattant. Or, selon notre interprétation de la proposition du comité Woods, on ne devrait autoriser, en aucune circonstance, la révélation de renseignements consignés au dossier de pension des anciens combattants. Il s'agit, pour notre Association, d'une question extrêmement grave, lorsqu'on songe que le pensionné n'a pas lui-même accès à son propre dossier et qu'il ignore les renseignements qu'il renferme. Si un employeur ou un assureur éventuel lui demande de consulter son dossier, il hésite à refuser de crainte d'éveiller des soupçons. Selon nous, la recommandation du comité Woods qui garantirait que seuls le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et la Commission canadienne des pensions aient accès aux renseignements qui figurent dans le dossier du pensionné, s'explique par des motifs justes et valables. Fait particuof the Commission paraphrased the Woods Committee recommendation incorrectly. The version used in his report was that instruction be amended to provide that information would only be disclosed when, in the opinion of departmental officials, the disclosure was in the best interests of the veteran, and when the consent of the veteran has been obtained. The Woods proposal was that disclosure from the veteran's pension file should not be allowed, under any circumstances.

[Text]

Standard Applications Forms:

In his report (item 6) the Commission Chairman refers to the Woods Committee recommendations as follows:

> That standard application forms be used for entitlement claims and standard forms for Commission decisions be utilized.

This presumably refers to the Woods Committee recommendation number 35, but in our opinion something has been lost in the translation. To state Woods Committee recommendation number 35 in the terms used by the Commission Chairman could be misleading. It could give the appearance that the Woods Committee was recommending that forms be instituted for entitlement only. This provided the Commission with a ready-made answer, as there is already such a form. However, the Woods Committee recommendation was using the entitlement application as a model, and suggested that similar procedures be used for all other forms of benefit under the Pension Act. It is not at all clear that this recommendation is being implemented. A further proposal (item 7) purported to have been a recommendation of the Woods Committee, paraphrased in the Commission Chairman's report was as follows:

> That the Canadian Pension Commission may in its discretion accept informal applications for pension.

• 1625

The reply of the Commission Chairman was that the Commission had always accepted informal applications. We submit, here again, that in paraphrasing the Woods Committee recommendation the intent may have been lost. We refer to volume 1, chapter 9, page 359 where it suggests that, for the purposes of establishing the effective date of an award, documentary evidence such as a letter could lièrement intéressant, dans sa déclaration sur cette question (article 22) le président de la Commission ait paraphrasé incorrectement la recommandation du comité Woods. Voici la version de son rapport: que l'on modifie les directives pour que les renseignements ne soient révélés que lorsque de l'avis des fonctionnaires du ministère, cette révélation était dans l'intérêt de l'ancien combattant et lorsque ce dernier y avait consenti. Selon la proposition du comité Woods, on ne devrait autoriser en aucune circonstance, la communication des renseignements consignés dans les dossiers des anciens combattants.

Formules de demande réglementaires:

Dans son rapport (article 6) le président de la Commission cite les recommandations du comité Woods, comme suit:

> «Que l'on emploie des formules réglementaires pour les demandes d'admissibilité et que les décisions de la Commission soient rédigées sur des formules réglementaires».

Ce passage fait probablement allusion à la recommandation n° 35 du comité Woods, mais selon nous, on n'a pas rendu tout son sens. Les termes employés par le président de la Commission pour citer la recommandation n° 35 pourraient induire en erreur. On pourrait croire que le comité Woods recommandait que l'on établisse des formules d'admissibilité seulement. De ce fait, la Commission avait une réponse toute prête car il existe déjà une pareille formule. Cependant, le comité Woods dans sa recommandation utilisait la demande d'admissibilité comme modèle, et il proposait que l'on emploie des méthodes analogues pour toutes les autres formes d'avantages en vertu de la loi sur les pensions. Il n'est pas du tout évident que l'on applique actuellement cette recommandation. Une autre proposition (article 7) qui, paraît-il, était censée être une recommandation du comité Woods était ainsi paraphrasée dans le rapport du président de la Commission:

> «Que la Commission canadienne des pensions puisse accepter, à son gré, des demandes officieuses de pension.»

Le président de la Commission a répondu que la Commission avait toujours accepté des demandes officieuses. Là encore, selon nous, en paraphrasant la recommandation du comité Woods, on en a peut-être perdu le sens. Nous nous reportons au Volume I, chapitre 9, page 417 où l'on dit que «la date effective de l'attribution d'une pension nous semble ressortir d'une manière suffisante et be accepted as proof of an intention to apply. The report goes on to suggest, however, that the use of a proper application form for all requests would provide assurance that the full details are made available to the Pension Commission at the first adjudication. The Woods Committee presumably saw this as benefitting the applicant, in circumstances where, if the Commission considered only an informal application and it was turned down, the adjudication may have been based on insufficient detail.

There are, undoubtedly, other recommendations which are under consideration by the Commission or may have already been implemented, but about which we have no specific information at this date. We have no alternative, therefore, but to reserve any comment until we have had a further opportunity to determine the disposition which has been made, or will be made, in regard to put into effect without amending the legislation.

The Chairman: Are there any questions members of the Committee want to ask at this point?

Mr. Legault: Mr. Chairman, this concerns the correction which was made in the first brief about one-third of all recommendations. This is corrected to read that four-fifths of recommendations had been either accepted or accepted in a modified way. I think this should be put in the record because the brief was prepared prior to this information being available.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I do not think that should be pressed too hard. It is one thing to say that recommendations were accepted unchanged. That is clear; that is black and white. But these recommendations that have been accepted but modified, in many cases are vitiated. I think that actually there are only 40 out of the 149 that are accepted unchanged.

Mr. Legault: Mr. Chairman, the point that I bring up is not necessarily the details of it, but it is the figure of stating one-third and four-fifths. This is the only...

The Chairman: I think really we are into semantics here. Our own transcript of record will show, as we go along, those which are accepted and those which are modified. But in the interest again of being sure we hear as much as we can today, I would like to have you bear it in mind, Mr. Guay.

satisfaisante d'un écrit, d'une lettre par exemple, indiquant l'intention de faire une demande». Le rapport continue cependant en disant que l'emploi d'une formule appropriée pour toutes les demandes permettrait à la Commission des pensions de posséder de prime abord tous les renseignements. Le comité Woods y a probablement vu un avantage pour le requérant dans les cas où la Commission avait refusé une demande officieuse, la décision aurait peut-être été fondée sur une insuffisance de détails.

La Commission examine sans doute d'autres recommandations, ou en a peut-être même déjà appliquées mais jusqu'à maintenant nous ne possédons à leur sujet aucun renseignement précis. Nous n'avons donc pas le choix et devons nous abstenir de toute observation jusqu'à ce que nous ayons eu davantage l'occasion de voir le sort qui a été ou sera réservé à une foule de recommandations qui pourraient être appliquées sans modifier la loi.

Le président: Y a-t-il des questions que les députés aimeraient poser?

M. Legault: On a parlé dans le premier mémoire du tiers des recommandations. On a dit que $\frac{4}{5}$ des recommandations étaient acceptés sous leur forme actuelle ou sous une forme modifiée. Je crois que cela devrait être inscrit au compte rendu, parce que le mémoire a été préparé avant que l'on nous fournisse ces renseignements.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Monsieur le président, je ne crois pas que l'on doive insister trop sur cette question. On peut dire que les recommandations ont été acceptées sans modification. C'est clair comme le jour, mais les recommandations qui ont été acceptés sous une version modifiée, sont déformées dans plusieurs cas. Je crois donc qu'il n'y a en ce moment que 40 recommandations sur 149 qui ont été acceptés sans modification.

M. Legault: Il est possible que les chiffres que je cite ne soient pas exacts, je l'ai fait à titre d'exemple. C'est seulement...

Le président: Je crois vraiment que l'on s'éloigne du sujet. Le compte-rendu indiquera les recommandations qui ont été acceptées et celles qui ont fait l'objet d'une modification. De façon à ce que ces témoignages soient fructueux, j'espère que vous vous rappellerez cette précision. Monsieur Guay.

[Text]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): When we were given explanatory notes on the various recommendations, and in particular to the application form that, the reason, if I recall, why they did not really want to implement the proper application form was to make it easier for veterans to apply, whether it be by a letter or to make it easy to apply. But on page 56, I think that you have given me another light on the matter here, in that you say if there is a proper application form, the veteran, sometimes through no fault of his own, if he did not have the proper application form, might miss some important details which might benefit him. And by the fact that he would have the proper form, as you spelled out, then he would have to fill in possibly everything that he feels he should fill in, and possibly fill it all, in fact. So it might benefit him on his application, and possibly that is why you are showing your concern and you are requesting that the proper application form be available to all the veterans when they apply and then they would not miss any of the details which are required by the Commission, whoever is going to hear them. I think this is the reason for it, is it not?

[Interpretation]

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Lorsqu'on nous avait expliqué les diverses recommandations et en particulier la formule de demande, on nous avait dit, si je me rappelle bien, qu'on n'avait pas voulu donner suite à cette formule pour permettre aux anciens combattants de faire une demande par lettre ou autrement. Mais à la page 56, vous me donnez d'autres précisions en disant que s'il y a une formule de demande officielle, l'ancien combattant sans le vouloir pourrait, sans cette formule, ne pas fournir des détails importants qui pourraient tourner à son avantage. S'il possède cette formule, il devrait alors remplir toutes les rubriques qu'il croit nécessaires et même remplir la formule au complet. Il aurait peut-être avantage à remplir la formule officielle, alors voilà la raison pour laquelle vous avez exprimé cette préoccupation et demandé qu'on fournisse aux anciens combattants toute la formule officielle. Ils répondraient ainsi à toutes les questions de la Commission. Je crois que c'est la raison de son existence, n'est-ce pas?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes. Mr. Chairman. The Woods Committee did not suggest that the Commission stop taking informal applications. As a matter of fact, if I recall the recommendation, they said that you could use an informal application for the purpose of establishing the date on which he applied. But then you must go back and get all the details because otherwise what happens if the Commission turns down the informal application? It is quite feasible that the Commission may have turned it down because they did not get sufficient information, and it is only fair to the man that somebody go out and take the documents and complete it so that the full facts are in front of the Commission. That was the purpose of the recommendation in the Woods Committee Report, sir.

M. Chadderton: Oui, monsieur le président, le Comité Woods n'a pas proposé que la Commission refuse les lettres ordinaires. En fait, si je me rappelle bien le contenu de la recommandation, il est stipulé que vous pouvez vous servir d'une lettre pour établir la date à laquelle la demande a été présentée. Mais alors, il faut revenir en arrière et obtenir tous les détails possibles parce que autrement, qu'arrive-t-il si la Commission rejette cette demande? Il est plausible qu'elle le fasse à défaut de renseignements suffisants et il n'est que juste pour un homme que quelqu'un aille chercher les documents nécessaires afin de saisir la Commission de tous les renseignements possibles. Tel était le but de la recommandation du comité Woods, monsieur.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A very important point.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Un point très important.

The Chairman: Are there further questions? Mr. Stanley Knowles.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions à poser? Monsieur Stanley Knowles.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On that question which somebody referred to as semantics. I do not wish to indulge in semantics, but I wonder if this letter from Mr. Ward to Mr. Reynolds, copies of which were given to all of us, could be included in the record, or maybe you have already done this, Mr. Chairman.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je ne tiens pas à m'engager dans un débat sur la sémantique, mais je me demande si la lettre de monsieur Ward adressée à monsieur Reynolds, dont nous avons tous reçu la copie, pourrait être annexée au compte-rendu, ou peut-être l'avez-vous déjà fait, monsieur le président.

[Texte]

The Chairman: We did this first thing this morning.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you. There is nothing semantic about it.

The Chairman: No, and we did it for precisely the purpose you have in mind at this point. Is there any further question at this time, on this section?

Lt. Col. Lambert:

Conclusion:

The purpose of a separate submission from the War Amputations of Canada at this time is to emphasize some of the features of the Woods Committee Report which are of special import to the members of our Association. Many of these problems are of long standing, and a survey of our submissions to the government going back to the early 1930's indicates that the problems existed at that time. The fact that no remedies have been forthcoming, despite our constant pleadings over more than thirty years, should not be taken as an indication that the requests are invalid.

It must be borne in mind, firstly, that there has been no major study of the Canadian Pension Commission, and the legislation it administers, since 1932 by persons outside of Parliament. Moreover, despite the fact the Parliamentary Committees from 1946 onward have been responsible for a number of effective changes in the pension legislation, it is perhaps fair to say that such committees were hampered by two factors, as follows:

(1) Invariably, they had insufficient facilities to delve into the intricacies of the pension law and its administration; and

(2) A great deal of their time was taken up in dealing with the major areas such as the basic rate of pension and the benefit of the doubt, leaving little or no opportunity to study and make recommendations in regard to many supplementary matters which do not involved large numbers of people, but which nonetheless are of extreme importance to the individuals concerned.

The Woods Committee Report must be looked upon as a blueprint which, if followed, can bring about a belated—but nevertheless most necessary—revision in much of the pension program for Canada's war disabled.

We who speak for veterans are aware that there are many pressing matters before the

[Interprétation]

Le président: C'est la première chose que nous ayons fait ce matin.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Merci. Cela n'a rien de la sémantique.

Le président: Non, et nous l'avons fait exactement dans le but que vous suivez. Y a-t-il d'autres questions à poser à ce sujet?

Lieutenant-colonel Lambert:

Conclusion:

Si l'Association canadienne des amputés de guerre présente maintenant un mémoire distinct c'est dans le dessein de mettre en lumière certaines particularités du rapport du comité Woods qui ont pour les membres de notre Association une signification spéciale. Nombre de ces problèmes datent depuis longtemps et un examen des mémoires que nous avons présentés au gouvernement depuis le début des années 30 montre que ces problèmes existaient déjà à cette époque-là. Or le fait qu'on n'ait apporté aucun remède, en dépit de nos instances constantes depuis plus de trente ans, ne devrait pas être interprété comme l'indice du manque de validité de nos demandes. Il faut se rappeler d'abord qu'aucune étude d'envergure de la Commission canadienne des pensions n'a été entreprise depuis 1932 par des personnes étrangères au Parlement. En outre, même si depuis 1946 un certain nombre de modifications utiles à la Loi sur les pensions sont attribuables aux comités parlementaires, il est peut-être juste de dire que ces derniers ont été handicappés par les deux facteurs suivants:

(1) Invariablement, ils ne disposaient pas de moyens suffisants pour fouiller les dédales de notre Loi sur les pensions et de son application; et

(2) Une énorme partie de leur temps servait à l'examen des domaines essentiels comme le taux de base de la pension et le bénéfice du doute, ne permettant pas ou très peu d'étudier et de formuler des recommandations sur une foule de sujets complémentaires qui n'intéressent pas un bien grand nombre de gens, mais qui, néanmoins, sont d'une extrême importance pour les intéressés.

Il faut envisager le rapport du comité Woods comme un plan qui aboutira, si on l'applique, à une révision tardive, mais néanmoins impérieuse du programme de pensions pour les invalides de guerre du Canada.

Nous, les porte-parole des anciens combattants, savons que le parlement actuel est saisi

[Text]

Parliament of the day and we recognize that the prosperity—and perhaps even the very fabrics—of our nation is involved in many of these issues. Be that as it may, we wish to bring to the attention of those in positions of responsibility the obvious fact that Canada's veterans must remain as a "first charge" upon the economy of the country. We need only reflect back to the dark days of 1914-18 and 1940-45 to realize that, without the contribution of those who served in the armed forces, this country could not have survived to enjoy the high levels of economy which have existed in the 1950's and 1960's.

So, we come to you, this group of wonderful fellows, some of the most brilliant young fellows that ever served their country; one is named Lambert, one is named Butler, one is named Lemay, one is named Crowell, and the others are Alderdice, Bedard and Worling, and there is no better than Cliff Chadderton. And we thank you, sir. We have had a great day, and so have you, and you have also learned something about veterans today that you did not know before, and we thank you for the privilege of coming here. It has been a great joy to us and we look forward to the implementation through this Committee of many of the things that we hope for. We are sure, sir, that you will deal with them in your own way. We know you cannot deal with the raising of pensions, we know that you cannot deal with the question of pensions for widows, but we are for it. They lost the 15 per cent that was never paid, so we ask them to pay their bill, treat us as we should be treated as veterans, love the widows as we love the widows, love the children as we love the children, and in this way this country will never have forgotten the sacrifice of those who gave their lives and suffered for it. Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Lambert. Speaking for the Committee, I would like to thank you personally and all those people who attended in your delegation for their submissions today and for answering the questions which I think the members have placed quite freely to you. We very much appreciated the opportunity to meet with you.

We will adjourn now until tomorrow morning at 9.30 o'clock.

d'une multitude de questions pressantes et nous reconnaissons que la prospérité—et peut-être la structure même de notre nation—sont impliquées dans nombre de ces questions. Quoi qu'il en soit, nous tenons à signaler aux personnes en autorité un fait évident: Les anciens combattants du Canada doivent continuer à être «la premèrie charge» à retomber sur l'économie du pays. Il suffit de se reporter aux jours sombres de 1914-1918 et de 1940-1945 pour se rendre compte que, sans l'apport de ceux qui servaient dans les forces armées, notre pays n'aurait pas pu survivre pour connaître les hauts niveaux d'économie qui ont existé pendant les années '50 et '60.

Vous aviez devant vous un groupe de personnes composé de quelques jeunes gens brillants qui ont servi le pays, et qui ont pour nom Lambert, Lemay, Crowell et d'autres, Alderdice, Bédard et Worling et le meilleur d'entre tous, Cliff Chadderton. Nous vous remercions, messieurs, la journée a été agréable pour nous tout comme pour vous, et vous avez appris quelque chose au sujet des anciens combattants, des choses toutes nouvelles pour vous. Nous vous remercions d'avoir obtenu le privilège de venir témoigner devant nous. Cela nous a été très agréable et nous attendons de voir l'adoption de nombreuses recommandations que nous avons faites au Comité. Nous sommes certains que vous y donnerez suite à votre manière. Nous savons que l'augmentation des pensions ne relève pas de votre compétence, ni la question de la pension des veuves, mais nous y sommes en faveur. Elles ont perdu le 15 p. 100 qui n'a jamais été versé. Nous leur demandons donc de régler leur compte, de nous traiter comme des anciens combattants, d'aimer les veuves et les enfants comme nous les aimons, et de cette manière, le pays ne pourra jamais oublier le sacrifice de ceux qui ont donné leur vie et qui ont souffert pour lui. Merci.

Le président: Merci monsieur Lambert. Au nom du comité, je tiens à vous remercier vous-même ainsi que tous les membres de votre délégation d'être venus présenter ces mémoires et d'avoir bien voulu répondre aux questions des députés. Nous sommes heureux d'avoir pu faire votre connaissance.

La séance reprendra demain matin à 9h 30.

The Chairman: I will ask the Committee to come to order, please. We have with us this morning the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada and their national president, Mr. Brady, will present the brief. I think he would first like to introduce the delegation that is here. Mr. Brady.

Le président: A l'ordre. Nous avons parmi nous des membres de l'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong Kong et son président national, M. Brady, qui va présenter le mémoire. Peut-être M. Brady aimerait-il présenter la délégation qui l'accompagne? Monsieur Brady, vous avez la parole.

Mr. C. P. Brady (National President, Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will just go down the line here. On my immediate right is Maurice D'Avignon from Quebec, Branch President; John Stroud, First National Vice-President; Everette Denison, a Director from Montreal; Lionel Hurd, another Director from Montreal; Bert Delbridge, Manitoba Branch President; Bob Manchester, B. C. Branch; Leslie Shore, our National Secretary; Don Nelson, Southern Alberta-Saskatchewan Branch President; Cliff Royea of Montreal, Director and Treasurer; Howard Donnelly, Branch President of Northern Alberta-Saskatchewan; Peter MacDougall, our Ottawa representative; Art Lousier, our Winnipeg executive, and Mr. Chapman of Ottawa.

M. C. P. Brady (président national de l'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong Kong): Merci, monsieur le président. A ma droite, M. Maurice Davignon, président de la direction de Québec; M. John Stroud, premier vice-président national; M. Everette Denison, un des directeurs de notre bureau de Montréal; M. Lionel Hurd, un autre directeur de Montréal; M. Bert Delbridge, président de la direction du Manitoba; M. Bob Manchester, de la direction de la Colombie-Britannique; M. Leslie Shore, notre secrétaire national; M. Don Nelson, président de la direction du Sud de l'Alberta et de la Saskatchewan; M. Cliff Royea, directeur de notre bureau de Montréal et trésorier; M. Howard Donnelly, président de la direction du Nord de l'Alberta et de la Saskatchewan; M. Peter MacDougall, notre représentant à Ottawa; M. Art Lousier, notre exécutif de Winnipeg et M. Chapman, d'Ottawa.

The Chairman: We are delighted to have you with us and certainly the delegation is most welcome. We want to hear what you have to say about the Woods Committee recommendations.

Le président: Nous sommes heureux de vous compter parmi nous, ainsi que les personnes qui vous accompagnent. Nous aimerions entendre ce que vous avez à dire à propos des recommandations du Comité Woods.

Mr. Brady: It is always our aim when we have an important brief to present to always try to have representation from each branch across Canada and as National President I am mighty pleased to see the turnout we have here today from right across Canada. Before we get into the brief I just want to say that you hear a lot about Canadian unity these days and I think our association is a living example of this. We have boys in our association from coast to coast, and, as we say in French, and that is the way we operate. We are all for one and one for all. Another thing I certainly want to mention is that at the

M. Brady: Nous essayons, lorsqu'il s'agit d'un mémoire important, d'avoir des représentants de toutes les directions au Canada. En tant que président national, je suis heureux de constater que toutes les régions sont représentées. Avant de passer au mémoire, j'aimerais dire qu'on entend beaucoup parler d'unité nationale ces jours-ci et je crois que notre Association en est un exemple frappant. Nous comptons au sein de notre Association des personnes qui viennent de toutes les régions et, comme nous disons en français, et c'est ainsi que nous administrons notre Association. Nous travaillons tous pour un et un breakfast meeting Mr. Dube, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, very kindly invited us to have a representative there, and I was fortunate enough to be that representative. We were certainly very pleased with the news we received there about Recommendations 92 and 93 being accepted by the Cabinet. It still has to go through legislation, and whatnot, but as we say, it is in the bag. We told Mr. Dube that morning that it was certainly with a deep sense of relief and happiness that we heard the good news, because right off the bat we feel that 395 problems have been settled for us and 51 widows are going to be looked after. So, we are mighty pleased about this.

I want to go a step further and thank all the Members of Parliament, and especially the members of the Veterans Affairs Committee who, over the years, have been a tremendous help to us. I do not like to pick out names, but there are men like Chester MacRae and Jack Bigg and all these people who have been helping us over the years such as Stanley Knowles—you could name them all—so I will say all the members of the Veterans Affairs Committee. We also had the honour of having the Chairman of your Committee, Lloyd Francis, with us out in Winnipeg and he gave a nice talk to us at our national convention, and we know that we have a very good friend there too. Once again to all members of Parliament, especially you of the Veterans Standing Committee, may I say thank you very much for all the efforts you have put into our cause.

Is it all right to proceed, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Brady: This brief is a copy of the one we sent in on February 18. In the White Paper there are certain things such as the basic pension rates and multiple disabilities and matters of that kind, so we felt we would go along with this brief. We propose to talk about Recommendations 92 and 93, but we say that is a fait accompli and we will not worry too much about that.

Before I read the brief I would like to thank you, in the name of all members of our Hong Kong Veterans Association, for giving us the chance to come here this morning to present our brief.

I cannot forget that we have many French-speaking fellows in our regiment and in our Association.

Au nom des Canadiens-français de notre Association des anciens combattants de Hong-pour tous. M. Dubé, le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, nous avait invités à faire comparaître un représentant et j'ai le plaisir d'être ce représentant. Nous avons bien accueilli les nouvelles que nous avons reçus nous annonçant que les recommandations 92 et 93 avaient été adoptées par le Cabinet. Elles n'ont pas encore franchi toutes les étapes mais, comme on dit, c'est chose faite. Nous avons fait part à M. Dubé de notre enthousiasme et de notre joie parce qu'ainsi 395 problèmes auront été résolus et 51 veuves ne seront plus dans l'attente. Nous nous en réjouissons.

J'aimerais aller plus loin et remercier tous les députés et, spécialement, les membres du Comité des Affaires des anciens combattants, qui nous aident depuis tant d'années. Je n'aime pas citer de noms, mais je mentionnerai ceux de Chester MacRae, Jack Bigg et Stanley Knowles. Nous avons également eu le plaisir de compter parmi nous, à Winnipeg, M. Lloyd Francis, le président de votre Comité, qui nous avait parlé lors de notre convention nationale et nous reconnaissons en lui un grand ami.

Encore une fois, j'aimerais remercier tous les députés et spécialement les membres du Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants.

Puis-je passer au mémoire, monsieur le président?

Le président: Oui.

M. Brady: Ce mémoire est une copie de celui que nous avons envoyé le 18 février. Le Livre blanc traite de points tels que les taux de base des pensions et les invalidités multiples et d'autres questions du même genre, et nous avons cru bon d'envoyer notre mémoire. Nous voudrions discuter des recommandations 92 et 93; nous croyons être en face d'un fait accompli et nous ne nous en préoccuperons pas plus qu'il ne faut.

Avant de lire le mémoire, j'aimerais vous remercier, au nom de tous les membres de l'Association des anciens combattants de Hong Kong, de nous donner l'occasion de présenter notre mémoire.

Je ne puis oublier que nous comptons beaucoup de francophones dans notre régiment et dans notre Association.

On behalf of the French Canadians of our Association, the Hong Kong Veterans, we Kong, nous vous remercions sincèrement de nous avoir invités ici ce matin.

Mr. Lloyd Francis, M.P.,

Chairman, The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.
Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

On behalf of our Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada, we deem it a privilege to be given this opportunity to appear before the Veterans Standing Committee with regard to our brief concerning the recommendations of the Woods' Report relative to the Survey, the Work and Organization of the Canadian Pension Commission.

On several previous occasions over the years delegations from our Association presented briefs outlining Hong Kong Veterans' physical and mental status with respect to the residual effects of avitaminosis, to the standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Following our brief in 1963, the Veterans Standing Committee recommended that a special study be made on the status of the Hong Kong veterans. This study pertaining to residual effects of avitaminosis was headed by Dr. H. J. Richardson, Canadian Pension Commission. The "Richardson Survey" was a most commendable report and resulted in favorable action for Hong Kong veterans. At that time we expressed our thanks to the Veterans Standing Committee, The Canadian Pension Commission, and a special vote of thanks to Dr. Richardson and his staff of medical Advisers.

In 1966 our Association had the pleasure of appearing before the Woods' Committee on the Committee to Survey the Work and Organization of the Canadian Pension Commission.

Today we are pleased to be here to present our brief on the Woods' Committee Report. As an Associate Member of the Nationally Chartered Veterans' Organizations of Canada, we trust that utmost consideration will be given to the implementation of the recommendations of the Woods' Committee Report. The excellence of this report is held in high regard by all veterans. In the vital days ahead covering veterans' legislation and administration programs, we implore you Gentlemen for your support. We of the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada resolve that owing to the number of recent deaths of Hong Kong Veterans, and the fact that approximately 395, as of September 1968, are still receiving thank you sincerely for having invited us here this morning.

Monsieur Lloyd Francis, député, Président,
Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants,
Chambre des Communes,
Ottawa (Ontario)
Monsieur le président et messieurs,

Au nom de l'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong Kong, je veux vous remercier de l'occasion qui nous est fournie de venir témoigner devant le Comité permanent des anciens combattants et d'exposer notre mémoire concernant les recommandations du rapport Woods dans le cadre de l'enquête sur l'organisation et le travail de la Commission canadienne des pensions.

A plusieurs reprises, notre Association a présenté au Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants des mémoires sur l'état physique et mental des anciens combattants de Hong Kong engendré par les effets permanents de l'avitaminose.

A la suite de notre mémoire en 1963, le Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants avait recommandé une étude spéciale sur le statut des anciens combattants de Hong Kong.

Cette étude sur les effets permanents de l'avitaminose était dirigé par le docteur H. J. Richardson, de la Commission canadienne des pensions. Les résultats de l'enquête Richardson avaient été favorables aux anciens combattants de Hong Kong. Nous avions alors remercié le Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants, la Commission canadienne des pensions et, tout spécialement, le docteur Richardson et son équipe de spécialistes. En 1966, notre Association a eu le plaisir de témoigner devant le comité Woods chargé d'enquêter sur l'organisation et le travail de la Commission canadienne des pensions.

Nous avons aujourd'hui le plaisir de présenter notre mémoire sur le rapport du Comité Woods. En tant que membre associé des organismes nationaux des anciens combattants canadiens, nous espérons fortement que les recommandations du rapport du Comité Woods seront mises en application. Les anciens combattants accordent beaucoup d'importance à ce rapport. Nous vous demandons de bien vouloir supporter ces mesures législatives et ces programmes visant les anciens combattants. Vu le nombre de décès récents parmi les anciens combattants de Hong Kong et à cause du fait que 395, en septembre 1968, recevaient encore des pensions d'invalidité inférieure à 48 p. 100, l'Assodisability pensions of less than 48 per cent, the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada urges the Government to give early implementation to Recommendations Nos. 92 and 93 of the Woods' Report dealing, respectively, with basic minimum pension of 50 per cent for all members of the Hong Kong Force who were interned as prisoners-of-war by the Japanese, and that widows of ex-members of the Hong Kong Force be eligible for consideration of an award of widows pension under Section 25 of the Pension Act, where the ex-member has died prior to the inception of this legislation, and that this eligibility be based on the presumption that, unless rebutted, the death was attributable to service.

We the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada, cannot stress too strongly the importance that these Recommendations 92 and 93 of the Woods' Report be given priority due to the urgency of this.

We trust the Federal Government will give these Judge Woods' Committee Recommendations 92 and 93 favorable and quick action.

• 0945

Today we are happy to note that this has been done.

M. Maurice D'Avignon (Président de la section Québec-Maritimes):

Les Anciens Combattants de Hong Kong

Recommandation est faite pour qu'une loi spéciale soit promulguée pour prévoir une pension de base minimum de 50% à tous les anciens membres de la Force de Hong-Kong, telle pension étant fondée sur une compensation non seulement pour invalidité mais sur d'autres facteurs exceptionnels, dont les circonstances dans lesquelles cette force a dû servir, les privations endurées par ses membres, et la vraisemblable difficulté de faire une juste évaluation des effets médicaux résiduaires de leur emprisonnement Une autre recommendation est à l'effet que les veuves des anciens membres de la Force de Hong-Kong soient réputées éligibles en vertu des dispositions de l'Acte qui prévoient le cas où le décès d'un membre est présumément attribuable au service.

Mr. Brady:

The Basic Rate of Pension (Recommendation # 63)

The basic rate of 100 per cent pension is calculated on the earning power of a man in a class of untrained labor, sufficient to provide decent comfort for himself and his family. Taking a cost of living index based on day ciation canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong Kong prie le gouvernement d'adopter au plus tôt les recommandations 92 et 93 du rapport Woods qui proposent une pension de base minimum de 50 p. 100 pour tous les membres de la Force de Hong Kong faits prisonniers de guerre par les Japonais et qui accorderaient aux veuves des ex-membres de la Force de Hong Kong une compensation en vertu de l'article 25 de la Loi sur les pensions, dans le cas où un ex-membre serait mort avant la mise en application de cette mesure législative et qu'il soit présupposé, sauf en cas de preuve contraire, que le décès est attribuable au service.

L'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong Kong ne peut trop souligner l'importance qu'elle accorde la priorité à ces recommandations 92 et 93 du rapport Woods, vu l'urgence de la question.

Nous espérons que le gouvernement fédéral accordera aux recommandations 92 et 93 du comité du juge Woods une suite favorable et sans délai.

Nous sommes aujourd'hui heureux de constater que cela a été fait.

Mr. Maurice D'Avignon (President, Quebec Maritime Branch, Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada):

The Hong Kong Veterans

The recommendation is made that a special Act be promulgated providing a basic minimum pension of 50% to all ex-members of the Hong Kong Force, this pension being based on a compensation not only for disability but on other exceptional factors such as the circumstances under which this Force was called upon to serve, the privations suffered by its members, and the apparent difficulty in making a true assessment of the residuary medical effects of their imprisonment. Another recommendation is to the effect that Hong Kong Force veterans' widows be considered eligible by virtue of those provisions of the Act dealing with cases wherein the death of a member is presumably attributable to Service.

M. Brady:

Taux de base des pensions (Recommandation n° 63)

Le taux de base de 100 p. 100 est calculé d'après le pouvoir de gain d'un homme sur le marché du travail non spécialisé et doit être suffisant pour assurer un confort normal pour lui-même et pour sa famille. Si l'on prend to day necessities of living, food, clothing, shelter, and compare the 1919 index figures with 1968 index figures, it can be readily realized that war disability pensions have fallen drastically behind what it costs to provide the necessary basic essentials of living in 1968 for a man and his family. We are of the belief that the unskilled labor market is the only practical formula on which pensions can be based. We agree wholeheartedly with the Woods' Committee recommendation that unskilled labor market formula be kept. We, the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada, go along most emphatically with the Nationally Chartered Veterans' Organizations of Canada and endorse that the basic rate of pension for a single war disabled pensioner—100 per cent disability—be established and we will let that figure go for now.

M. D'Avignon:

Taux de Base

Le principe servant à établir le montant de la compensation pour invalidité de guerre continuerait d'être celui du revenu sur le marché du travail non spécialisé et à être déterminé par le salaire moyen pour ce genre d'emploi à la Fonction publique du Canada. Les salaires dans cette catégorie de la Fonction publique se maintiendront au diapason des conditions économiques et n'auront que peu de différence d'une région géographique à l'autre. Il n'existe aucune classification spécifique de la main-d'œuvre non spécialisée, mais l'usage de l'employé non spécialisé classifié dans la Fonction publique suppléerait à la tentative de déterminer une échelle représentative des salaires gagnés par les non-spécialisés sur le marché du travail.

Mr. Brady: We now come to another very important matter, multiple disabilities.

Multiple Disabilities (Recommendation # 64665)

In respect to assessment for multiple disabilities, the Hong Kong Veterans Association goes along with the Woods' Committee comment, "that the necessity to provide some form of supplementary pension for multiple disability casualties seems evident. The absence of adequate provision in this regard appears as a major flaw in the existing system for war disabilities".

To those veterans who have incurred multiple disabilities while in the service, the present way of assessing by the Pension Commission is unjust. This is a most important l'index du coût de la vie basé sur les besoins quotidiens, soit l'alimentation, les vêtements et le logement, et si on compare les chiffres de l'indice de 1919 à ceux de l'indice de 1968, on se rend compte que les pensions d'invalidité de guerre sont très inférieures au coût de subsistance en 1968 pour un homme et sa famille. Nous croyons que le marché du travail non spécialisé est la seule formule pratique qui puisse servir à évaluer les pensions. Nous sommes entièrement d'accord avec les recommandations du Comité Woods qui veulent que la formule du marché du travail non spécialisé soit maintenue. L'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong Kong, en accord avec les organismes nationaux des anciens combattants canadiens, demande que le taux de base des pensions pour un pensionné célibataire invalide de guerre—invalidité à 100 p. 100—soit établi; nous ne nous préoccuperons plus de ce chiffre pour le moment.

Mr. D'Avignon:

Basic Rates

The principle used in assessing the amount of compensation for war disability would continue to be based on unskilled labour market income and to be determined by the average wage for this type of employment in the Public Service of Canada. Wages in this category of the Public Service of Canada will be maintained in keeping with economic conditions and will differ but little from one geographic region to another. There is no specific classification of unskilled labour, but the use of unskilled labour specified in the Public Service would make up for the attempts at determining a representative wage scale earned by unskilled workers on the labour market.

M. Brady: Passons maintenant à un autre point très important, les invalidités multiples.

Invalidités multiples (Recommandation n° 64665)

En ce qui a trait à l'évaluation des invalidités multiples, l'Association des anciens combattants de Hong Kong est en accord avec le commentaire du comité Woods, qui dit que «la nécessité d'accorder une forme quelconque de pension supplémentaire dans les cas d'infirmités multiples semble évidente. L'absence d'une disposition appropriée à ce sujet est une grave lacune du régime actuel de pensions pour invalidités de guerre.»

Le présent mode d'évaluation de la Commission des pensions est injuste envers les anciens combattants qui ont subi des invalidités multiples en cours de service. Ce point est area because for war veterans severely disabled from more than one disability the pension assessments are drastically inadequate. Pensions for certain multiple disability types are assessed higher in other countries so are consequently more generous.

Canada's reputation has always been second to none in dealing with her war veterans with war-incurred disabilities. Gentlemen, on multiple disabilities assessments we back the Woods' Committee to the hilt.

M. D'Avigon:

Invalidités Multiples

Des dispositions devraient être prises pour une pension supplémentaire aux amputés de plusieurs organes, aux paraplégiques et aux pensionnés complètement aveugles, en vertu du principe que l'allocation à 100% est basée sur la perte des moyens de gagner sur le marché du travail non spécialisé, et que la pension supplémentaire devrait être accordée où d'autres facteurs existent à un degré substantiel, tels la souffrance, difformité, perte de la jouissance de la vie et raccourcissement de la vie.

L'absence de dispositions adéquates pour les estropiés multiples semble être une faille d'importance dans le système présent des pensions. Le tableau des répartitions de la pension jusqu'a 100% semble satisfaisant. Conséquemment, la solution ne réside pas dans la tentative d'un réarrangement des répartitions pour que 100% représente la catégorie la plus sérieuse de pensionnés, suivi par une revision décroissante des autres répartitions. Le système le plus réalisable serait de maintenir toutes les répartitions en-deçà du 100% lorsque justifiable. La répartition maximale suggérée pour la paraplégie est de 350%.

Mr. Brady:

Pension Appeal Board

Our Association sees the need for some form of appeal board beyond the Pension Commission. As it stands now, appeals are heard by Commissioners who are working every day with the Pension Commission people who have already worked on a claim. No appeal can be made to an independent body. When an applicant's claim is turned down, there is no other recourse. In all sense of fairness and justice, we go along with the Woods' Committee suggestion of having a proposed pension appeal board. We, the Hong Kong Veterans' Association, are decidedly in favor of an appeal board resulting in an independent point of view.

[Interpretation]

très important parce que les évaluations de pension sont très insuffisantes pour les anciens combattants qui souffrent de plus d'une invalidité. Les pensions pour certains genres d'invalidités multiples sont supérieures dans d'autres pays, et donc plus généreuses.

La réputation du Canada a toujours été mauvaise dans le cas des anciens combattants devenus invalides en cours de service. Pour ce qui est des évaluations d'invalidités multiples, messieurs, nous sommes en parfait accord avec le Comité Woods.

Mr. D'Avignon:

Multiple Disabilities

Provisions should be made for a supplementary pension for multiple disability casualties, paraplegics, and totally blind pensioners, by virtue of the principle that the 100% allocation is based on the loss of the means of earning a living on the unskilled labour market, and that the supplementary pension should be awarded where other factors exist to a substantial degree, such as suffering, deformity, loss of the ability to enjoy life, and shortening of life.

The absence of adequate provisions for veterans having incurred multiple disabilities appear as a major flaw in the present pension system. The scale of pension allocations up to 100% appears to be satisfactory. Consequently, the solution is not to be found in an attempt at rearranging allocations whereby 100% would represent the most seriously disabled category of pensioners, followed by a decreasing revision of the other allocations. The most workable system would be to maintain all allocations below 100% when justifiable. The suggested maximum allocation for paraplegia is 350%.

M. Brady:

Tribunal d'appel

Notre Association sent le besoin d'un tribunal d'appel indépendant de la Commission des pensions. Actuellement, les appels sont entendus par les commissaires qui travaillent tous les jours avec les personnes qui font partie de la Commission des pensions et qui ont déjà analysé les demandes. Il n'y a aucun recours possible à un organisme indépendant. Lorsqu'on refuse la demande d'un requérant, il n'y a aucun autre recours. En toute justice et équité, nous appuyons la proposition du Comité Woods sur la création d'un tribunal d'appel. L'Association des anciens combattants de Hong Kong serait favorable à un tribunal d'appel qui pourrait rendre une décision indépendante.

[Texte]

M. D'Avigon:

Tribunal d'appel

Une recommandation majoritaire du Comité est l'insaturation d'un tribunal d'appel pour les pensions qui agirait en qualité d'arbitre dont la décision serait finale dans l'attribution des pensions. Présentement, le seul recours d'appel est à l'intérieur même de la Commission. Des tribunaux d'appel composés de trois commissaires tiennent des audiences pour entendre les réclamations sur des décisions antérieures, mais seulement en regard des cas d'éligibilité. Il n'existe aucune procédure en regard des bénéfices supplémentaires.

Les réclamations devraient être entendues par le tribunal proposé tant sur l'éligibilité que sur les bénéfices supplémentaires, le tribunal devant consister de cinq personnes ou plus, à être désignées d'une façon et pour une durée similaires à celles pour les commissaires de la pension. Le tribunal agirait indépendamment de la Commission canadienne des pensions et ferait rapport au ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, mais sans y être assujetti. Des groupes consultatifs spéciaux seraient à leur disposition pour les renseigner sur les points légaux et médicaux. Les réclamants pourraient être aidés par le Bureau des anciens combattants, des organismes d'anciens combattants et autres individus. La Commission des pensions n'aurait pas voix aux audiences mais aurait la permission de présenter un exposé écrit des raisons de sa décision.

Le proposé tribunal d'appel pour les pensions déciderait aussi les interprétations de l'Acte. Le tribunal serait obligé de prendre les décisions en dedans d'une limite de trente jours lorsque étudiées pour revision, soixante jours s'il y a audience de représentations du réclamant, et six mois où le cas est entendu depuis l'origine.

Mr. Brady:

(Automatic Age Increases)

Under existing conditions assessment is increased automatically for gunshot wounds and amputation due to direct result of enemy action. This basic scale is as follows:

A 50 per cent pensioner is entitled to three 10 per cent increases at two-year intervals at age 55 until he reaches 80 per cent.

A 60 per cent pensioner receives two 10 per cent increases every two years at age 55.

A 70 per cent pensioner is increased to 80 per cent at age 55.

[Interprétation]

Mr. D'Avignon:

Pension Appeal Board

A majority recommendation of the Committee is the setting up of a Pension Appeal Board which would act as an arbitrator and whose decision would be final in allocating pensions. At present, appeals can be heard by the Commission only. Appeal Courts made up of 3 Commissioners hold hearings dealing with claims in connection with previous rulings, but only regarding eligibility cases. There is no procedure regarding supplementary benefits.

Claims should be heard by the proposed Board with regard to both eligibility and supplementary benefits. The proposed Board should consist of 5 persons or more, to be appointed in a manner and for a duration similar to that of the Pension Commissioners. The Board would act independently of the Canadian Pension Commission and would report to the Minister of Veterans' Affairs, but without being subject to his authority. Special consulting groups would be at their disposal to inform them on legal and medical points. Claimants could receive assistance from the Veterans' Bureau, Veterans' organizations and other individuals. The Pension Commission would not be entitled to give an opinion during hearings but would be permitted to present a written report regarding the reasons for its decision.

The proposed Pension Appeal Board would also rule on the interpretations of the Act. The Board would be obliged to rule within the limits of 30 days when these are examined for revision, within 60 days should there be a hearing for a claimant's representations, and within 6 months where the case is heard from the very beginning.

M. Brady:

Augmentation systématique selon les âges

En vertu des dispositions présentes, l'attribution est systématiquement augmentée pour les amputations et mutilations qui sont le résultat direct d'un acte ennemi, dans la base de l'échelle suivante:

Un pensionné à 50 p. 100 a droit à trois augmentations de 10 p. 100 à intervalles de deux ans à l'âge de 55 ans jusqu'à concurrence de 80 p. 100.

Un pensionné à 60 p. 100 reçoit deux augmentations de 10 p. 100 à tous les deux ans à l'âge de 55 ans.

Un pensionné à 70 p. 100 est augmenté à 80 p. 100 à l'âge de 55 ans.

The recommendation is made that automatic age increases be made applicable to 80 per cent and 90 per cent pensioners, so that they can reach 100 per cent. Also that such automatic age increases apply to all disabilities resulting from injuries or wounds which have been assessed as apparently permanent, rather than be limited to those that have arisen only from direct action with the enemy.

As the residual effects of Avitaminosis are of a permanent nature, our Association urges that our disabilities fall into this category of permanent injuries. Once the awesome effect of malnutrition started to show its ugly head amongst our men in the early months of imprisonment, this affliction, avitaminosis, is still with all our group to this date—23 years later. For our Hong Kong members alive today, we know that there is no cure for avitaminosis at our present age of life. It is unfortunate but true—at our age it is too late; we are still putting up with the after-effects of malnutrition caused by prolonged starvation, coupled with nigh on to 4 years of forced labor. To us Hong Kong men this is most definitely a permanent injury caused by "War" while in the service of our country. At this point we would like to stress that World War I veterans be given special consideration also.

M. D'Avignon:

Augmentations systématiques selon les âges

En vertu des dispositions présentes, l'attribution est systématiquement augmentée pour les amputations et mutilations qui sont le résultat direct d'acte ennemi, sur la base de l'échelle suivante:

> Un pensionné à 50 p. 100 a droit à trois augmentations de 10 p. 100 à intervalles de deux ans à l'âge de 55 ans jusqu'à concurrence de 80 p. 100.

• 0955

> Un pensionné à 60 p. 100 reçoit deux augmentations de 10 p. 100 à tous les deux ans à l'âge de 55 ans.
> Un pensionné à 70 p. 100 est augmenté à 80 p. 100 à l'âge de 55 ans.

Il est recommandé que les augmentations systématiques selon l'âge s'appliquent aux pensionnés à 80 p. 100 et 90 p. 100 afin qu'ils puissent atteindre le 100 p. 100. Aussi que telles augmentations systématiques relatives à l'âge s'appliquent à toutes les invalidités résultant de blessures ou dommages qui auraient été jugés présumément permanents, plutôt que de les limiter uniquement à ceux résultant d'action ennemie.

[Interpretation]

Il est recommandé que les augmentations systématiques selon l'âge s'appliquent aux pensionnés à 80 p. 100 et 90 p. 100 afin qu'ils puissent atteindre le 100 p. 100. Aussi que de telles augmentations systématiques relatives à l'âge s'appliquent à toutes les invalidités résultant de blessures ou dommages qui auraient été jugés présumément permanents, plutôt que de les limiter uniquement à ceux résultant d'action ennemie.

Comme les effets de l'avitaminose sont permanents, notre Association aimerait que les invalidités qui en résultent fassent partie de la catégorie des blessures permanentes. Nos invalides ont ressenti les effets de la malnutrition dès les premiers mois de leur emprisonnement et ils en souffrent encore, vingt-trois ans après. Nous savons qu'il n'y a encore aucune cure pour nos membres de Hong Kong qui sont encore en vie. Il est malheureux, mais vrai, qu'il en soit ainsi; nous sommes encore aux prises avec les effets de la malnutrition causée par une longue privation de nourriture, accompagnée de près de quatre ans de travaux forcés. Pour nous, les hommes de Hong Kong, il ne fait aucun doute qu'il s'agit d'un dommage permanent causé par la guerre alors que nous étions au service de notre pays. Nous aimerions souligner ici que les anciens combattants de la Première Guerre mondiale méritent également une attention particulière.

Mr. D'Avignon:

Automatic Age Increases

Under present provisions, allocations are automatically increased for amputations and mutilations due to direct result from enemy action, on the basis of the following scale:

> A 50% pensioner is entitled to those 10% increases at two-year intervals at age 55 until he reaches 80%.
> A 60% pensioner receives two 10% increases every two years at age 55.
> A 70% pensioner is increased to 80% at age 55.

The recommendation is made that automatic age increases be made applicable to 80% and 90% pensioners, so that they can reach 100%. Also that such automatic age increases apply to all disabilities resulting from injuries or wounds which have been assessed as apparently permanent, rather than be limited to those which have arisen from direct action with the enemy only.

Mr. Brady:

Income Tax Exemption

The Royal Commission on taxation had recommended the removal of this exemption of pension from income tax; our Association wants to stress most strongly that we are in full agreement with the Woods' Report recommendation that exemption be continued.

M. D'Avignon:

Impôt sur le revenu

Le Comité a fait un sérieux examen sur la validité de la présente exemption de la pension d'impôt sur le revenu, notant que la Commission royale sur la taxation avait recommandé la révocation de cette exemption. Le Comité recommande que cette exemption soit maintenue, commentant que la base sur laquelle la pension est payée au Canada est suffisamment unique pour soustraire cette pension de la catégorie "revenu", car elle sert à décrire les argents reçus par un individu assujetti à l'impôt. L'étude du Comité indique que, en effet, la pension est un prolongement de la solde d'en temps de guerre, laquelle, traditionnellement, a été exempte de l'impôt sur le revenu sur le fondement que la solde militaire ne fut jamais destinée à remplacer le revenu qui aurait pu être gagné dans le civil en temps de guerre.

Mr. Brady:

Stabilization

The Hong Kong Veterans Association request a practical and justifiable stabilization policy for our survivors' War Pensions.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do not know what arrangements were made prior to the Hong Kong Veterans presenting their brief this morning. Did you intimate that they would read their entire brief before any questions were put to them?

The Chairman: It is up to them to decide what they want to do. I would like them to go through their brief. If members wish to interrupt to ask questions as they do so...

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Are we going to give them the same attention that we have given others who have appeared before us? Yesterday, for example, we sat all day with the War Amputations. We had a wonderful day with them. We took their brief chapter by chapter on each specific issue. I feel that this gives the members of the Committee a better recollection because as we are leaving a chapter we can go right into it by question-

Impôt sur le revenu

La Commission royale sur la taxation avait recommandé la révocation de cette exemption de la pension d'impôt sur le revenu; nous aimerions souligner avec force que nous sommes en parfait accord avec cette recommandation du rapport Woods qui vient conserver cette exemption.

Mr. D'Avignon:

Income Tax

The Committee has carried out a serious examination regarding the validity of the present income tax exemption of the pension, while noting that the Royal Commission on Taxation had recommended the removal of this exemption. The Committee recommends that this exemption be maintained, seeing as the basis on which the pension is paid in Canada is sufficiently unique to remove this pension from the "income" category because it serves to describe the money received by an individual who is subject to income tax. The Committee's study indicates that, in fact, the pension is an extension of war-time pay which, traditionally, has been exempt of income tax because of the basic fact that military pay was never intended to replace that income which could have been earned in civilian life in war-time.

M. Brady:

Stabilisation

L'Association des anciens combattants de Hong Kong demande une stabilisation pratique et justifiable des mesures touchant les pensionnés de guerre encore en vie.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): J'invoque le règlement, monsieur le président. Allez-vous laisser les anciens combattants de Hong Kong lire leur mémoire en entier avant qu'on puisse leur poser des questions?

Le président: C'est à eux de décider. J'aimerais qu'ils lisent leur mémoire. Si des membres désirent les interrompre pour leur poser des questions...

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Nous allons leur accorder la même attention qu'aux autres qui sont venus témoigner devant nous. Hier, par exemple, nous avons écouté pendant toute la journée les amputés de guerre. Nous avons passé une belle journée en leur compagnie. Nous avons étudié leur mémoire chapitre par chapitre.

Je crois que cette dernière façon est la meilleure puisqu'elle nous permet de poser ing the delegation. If you go through an entire brief like this when one comes to question the delegation one has to go back over many pages of notes that one has made. This is only a suggestion. I am not going to burden the Committee with the point, but what was the intention?

The Chairman: The brief is not long, and no doubt we will want to discuss it section by section. I thought possibly we would let the delegation complete their brief and then we could go through it and make our comments on it section by section. Certainly it is not a brief of the length of some of the others we have received, which makes it easier to proceed in this way.

What is the wish of the Committee?

Some hon. Members: Proceed.

M. D'Avignon:

Stabilisation

La recommandation est pour que les pensions découlant du service au cours de la IIe Guerre soient stabilisées lorsqu'elles ont été en vigueur depuis trois ans ou plus. Le rapport note, qu'en effet la stabilisation avait été accordée pour les pensions de la Ire Guerre mondiale en 1936—approximativement 18 ans après la fin de la Ire Guerre. Donc, vu qu'il s'est écoulé un laps de 21 années depuis la fin de la IIe Guerre mondiale, il serait maintenant pratique et justifiable de mettre en vigueur une politique de stabilisation des pensions se rapportant aux forces en temps de paix à certaines conditions.

Mr. Brady:

Benefit of the Doubt

If the benefit of the doubt clause in the Pension Act means anything at all, it should be invoked to ensure that the members of this Force and their dependents are afforded the maximum protection possible under the Pension Act. Speaking of protection, as to the cost to the Government for the establishment of a basic 50 per cent pension for the 395 survivors of the Hong Kong Force who are still under the basic 50 per cent, bearing in mind that many of these men are presently carrying a pension somewhere between 25 per cent to 40 per cent it seems safe to assume that the cost to the Canadian taxpayer, of bringing the entire Hong Kong Group to 50 per cent, would represent a minor expenditure.

des questions sur ce que nous venons tou juste d'entendre. S'il faut attendre que l mémoire ait été lu en entier, celui qui veu poser des questions devra consulter de nombreuses pages de notes qu'il a écrites. J'ai cru bon de proposer cette méthode. Je ne veux pas insister davantage, mais j'aimerais savoir quelle sera notre façon de procéder?

Le président: Le mémoire n'est pas long et nous voudrons certainement en discuter article par article. Je crois qu'il serait préférable de laisser les témoins terminer leur mémoire et nous pourrons ensuite passer à nos commentaires sur les différents articles. Le mémoire n'est pas long et il sera donc assez facile de l'analyser de cette dernière façon.

Qu'est-ce que le Comité désire faire?

Des voix: Continuer.

Mr. D'Avignon:

Stabilization

The recommendation is made that pensions arising from service during World War II be stabilized when they have been in force three years or more. The report notes that, in fact, stabilization had been granted in 1936 for World War One pensions, that is approximately 18 years after the First World War. Therefore, seeing as 21 years have elapsed since the end of World War II, it would now be practical and justifiable to enforce, under certain conditions, a pension stabilization policy concerning the peacetime Forces.

M. Brady:

Bénéfice du doute

La clause du bénéfice du doute dans la Loi sur les pensions devrait assurer aux membres de cette Force et à leurs personnes à charge le maximum de protection possible en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions. Le coût qu'il en coûterait au gouvernement pour établir une pension de base de 50 p. 100 pour les 395 survivants de la force de Hong Kong dont la pension est inférieure à ce taux de base de 50 p. 100, dans plusieurs cas, entre 25 p. 100 et 40 p. 100, ne représenterait qu'une dépense légère pour leurs contribuables.

M. D'Avignon:

Bénéfice du doute

Le rapport traite longuement de la clause du «Bénéfice du doute», laquelle a été le sujet de sérieux reproches depuis qu'elle fait partie de la législation sur les pensions en 1930. Le rapport suggère que la plus grande difficulté réside dans l'inaptitude d'interprétation de la clause telle qu'elle existe dans la Loi et propose une nouvelle clause qui dirait que, de fait, le réclamant ne serait pas requis de présenter une évidence prépondérante pour supporter sa réclamation, quand des déductions raisonnables s'avèrent en sa faveur.

Le rapport remarque que ladite clause du bénéfice du doute en est venue à être acceptée comme étant, en fait, à tous égards, l'expression de l'Acte. En conséquence, il est recommandé qu'un nouvel article soit arrêté promulguant que les but et objet soient de pourvoir «à toute considération raisonnable pour les mutilés et invalides de guerre». Cet article toucherait tous les aspects de la Loi et de son administration.

Mr. Brady:

Conclusion:

Of the total of 1956 Canadians who went to Hong Kong, 290 were killed in action or died of wounds,—267 died in Japanese prisoner-of-war camps. Post war developments,—some 160 deaths since our return to Canada. Having regard for their age group, this can be considered premature death. Dr. Richardson, Deputy Chief Medical Adviser, Canadian Pension Commission, in a letter dated October 21, 1968, reads in part,—"As requested, as of September 30, 1968, of the 1,228 Hong Kong disability pensions,—395 veterans are below 48 per cent". Since the start of the Richardson Survey, January 1, 1964 to September 30, 1968,—61 deaths reported. This Association is deeply concerned today with the mounting number of our surviving Hong Kong veterans who cannot cope with their every day work,—who have to retire prior to "retirement age". The men who have to earn their living by manual labour are the hardest hit. Let us face it,—this is the legacy left our men to live with daily,—the residual effects of malnutrition caused by starvation and abetted by brutal forced slave labour, physical violence, inadequate clothing and shelter,—for an agonizing 44 months.

Since the war many deaths were due to heart disease. The Canadian Pension Commission would rule that death was not attributa-

Mr. D'Avignon:

Benefit of the Doubt

The Report deals at length with the Benefit of the Doubt clause which has been seriously blamed since it became part, in 1930, of legislation dealing with pensions. The Report suggests that the major difficulty resides in the inaptitude of interpreting the clause that exists in the Act, and it proposes a new clause which would state that, in fact, the claimant would not be required to present preponderant evidence in order to support his claim, when reasonable deductions prove to be in his favour.

The Report notes that said "Benefit of the Doubt" clause has come to be accepted as being, in fact, in all regards, the expression of the Act. Consequently, it is recommended that a new clause be drawn up promulgating that the aim and object be to make provision "for all reasonable consideration of war cripples and invalids". This clause would have a bearing on all aspects of the Act and its administration.

M. Brady:

Conclusion

Du nombre des canadiens qui sont allés à Hong Kong en 1966, 290 sont morts sur le champ d'honneur ou par suite de blessures, 267 sont morts dans les camps de prisonniers au Japon et 160 sont morts après notre retour au Canada. Si l'on tient compte des groupes d'âges, on peut considérer qu'il s'agit de morts prématurées. Le docteur Richardson, adjoint au médecin en chef de la Commission canadienne des pensions, disait, dans une lettre datée du 21 octobre 1968, que le 30 septembre 1968, 395 des 1,228 pensionnées de Hong Kong recevaient une pension inférieure à 48 p. 100. Depuis le début de l'enquête Richardson, du 1er janvier 1964 au 30 septembre 1968, 61 personnes sont mortes. Notre Association s'inquiète du nombre toujours croissant de nos anciens combattants de Hong Kong encore en vie qui ont pris leur retraite avant l'âge prévu et qui ne peuvent satisfaire aux exigences du travail quotidien. Les personnes les plus atteintes sont celles qui doivent gagner leur vie par un travail manuel. Le legs quotidien laissé à nos hommes se constitue des effets permanents de la malnutrition causée par la faim et associée à des travaux forcés d'esclavage, à la violence physique à un habillement et à un logement insuffisants, et ce depuis 44 mois.

Depuis la guerre, beaucoup de décès provenaient de défaillance cardiaque. La Commission canadienne des pensions décidait que le ble to service,—being below 48 per cent, the widow and dependents lost out completely. In Dr. Richardson's report of recent years he tells us that imprisonment under such harsh conditions experienced by the Hong Kong force can cause heart disease. When the surviving Hong Kong veterans arrived back in Canada in the fall of 1945, they were suffering from the hideous effects of hunger, misery, compulsory work, captivity due to nearly 4 years of deprivation, absence of medical supplies, sanitation non-existent. Under these appalling conditions it is a miracle there were any survivors. When the survivors started reporting to DVA across the country for medical check-ups and treatment, the irony of the whole thing was the lack of knowledge by medical personnel on the residual effects and complexities of avitaminosis. In prison camps our boys were subjected to a diphtheria epidemic,—losing 7 to 10 men a day at its height,—this is in the records.

The following diseases prevailed at the camps,—malnutrition, pellagra, wet beriberi, dry beriberi, hot feet, numbness, dysentry, beriberi heart, pneumonia, acute enteritus, t.b., malaria, acute gastroenteritis, mental disease, endocarditis, colitis, beriberi heart failure, paralytic beriberi, lung problems, kidney failures. These prevailing ailments throughout our stay in prisoner-of-war camps under the Japanese are actually recorded as causes of death in the Printer to the King's Most Excellent Majesty, Ottawa, 1945, corrected to the 18th of September 1945. This book entitled "Canadian Prisoners-of-War and Missing Personnel in the Far East", Part 1 lists prisoner-of-war,—Part 2—missing personnel,—Part 2-E, refers to Canadian Army personnel who died in prison camps,—and causes of deaths (the above-mentioned diseases),—there it is in black and white, no need of medical evidence to substantiate. This is not our report, it was put out by the Canadian government.

What we want to put across is this, our boys were broken down both physically and mentally when they came back. As our medical people took a "wait and see" attitude, we the survivors took the short end of the stick when it came to assessing war disability pensions at that time.

décès n'était pas attribuable au service et comme il s'agissait de pensionnés à moins de 48 p. 100, la veuve et les personnes à charge se retrouvaient complètement dépourvues. Dans son rapport, le docteur Richardson révèle que l'emprisonnement dans des conditions pénibles telles que celles qu'ont eu à subir les anciens combattants de Hong Kong peut entraîner une insuffisance cardiaque. Lorsque les anciens combattants de Hong Kong survivants sont arrivés au Canada à l'automne de 1945, ils souffraient des effets néfastes de la faim, de la misère, du travail obligatoire, d'une captivité de près de 4 ans d'absence de fournitures médicales et de services médicaux. C'est un miracle qu'il y ait eu des survivants. Lorsque les survivants ont commencé à se présenter au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants pour des examens et des traitements médicaux, la chose la plus surprenante a été le manque de connaissances du personnel médical sur les effets permanents et les divers aspects de l'avitaminose. Dans le cas de prisonniers, nous avons été aux prises avec une épidémie de diphtérie et les pertes atteignaient de 5 à 10 hommes par jour; vous trouverez toutes ces données dans les régistres.

Voici les maladies qui ont sévi dans les camps: malnutrition, pellagre, béribéri œdémateux, béribérie sec, brûlement des pieds, engourdissement, dysenterie, cœur béribérie, pneumonie, entérite aigu, tuberculose, malaria, gastro-entérite aigu, affectation mentale, endocardite, colite, insuffisance cardiaque secondaire au béribéri, paralysie secondaire au béribéri, troubles pulmonaires, insuffisance rénale. Ces maladies qui ont sévi dans les camps de prisonniers au Japon figurent comme causes de décès dans une publication de l'Imprimeur de Sa Très Excellente Majesté le Roi, Ottawa, 1945, édition revisée au 18 septembre 1945. Ce livre s'intitule «Canadian Prisoners-of-War and Missing Personnel in the Far East»; la Partie 1 énumère les prisonniers de guerre, la Partie 2 le personnel manquant, la partie 2-E traite du personnel des Forces canadiennes mort dans les camps de prisonniers et les causes de décès (les maladies susmentionnées); c'est écrit en noir et blanc et aucune preuve médicale n'est nécessaire. Il ne s'agit pas d'un de nos rapports, mais bien d'un rapport du gouvernement canadien.

Ce que nous voulons souligner, c'est que nos hommes sont revenus physiquement et mentalement dérangés. Comme le personnel médical qui s'occupait de nous a préféré attendre avant de faire quoi que ce soit, nous avons été défavorisés dans l'évaluation des pensions d'invalidité de guerre.

Today, 23 years later, we are appealing to you gentlemen, to carry out in all haste the implementation of the Woods' Report Recommendations 92 and 93—dealing with the Hong Kong veterans,—that is, 50 percent minimum was disability for all surviving Hong Kong veterans and full pension benefits for widows and dependents.

• 1005

To the men who made up the Woods Committee—Judge Woods, Judge Lindal, and Colonel Nantel—thanks for a job well done.

To the Royal Canadian Legion—thanks for allowing use of French extracts from their Legionary magazine.

In closing, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen—we will be pleased to answer any question you may have.

To members of Parliament—thanks for giving us the time and opportunity to present our brief. We know we can rely on your support.

We added an appendix to this because of those happy developments on September 9.

When our association was presented with a copy of the White Paper, September 9, 1969, by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, Hon. J. E. Dubé, it was with relief and happiness when it was announced that Hong Kong Veterans will receive a minimum 50 per cent pension and that widows and orphans of the Hong Kong veterans are to be assured of pensions.

As a member association of the National Veterans Organization of Canada we concur with the priorities as outlined in the "Joint Statement" meeting of Thursday, September 18 before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs: Order of priorities basic rate, multiple disabilities, independent pension appeal board. In the Woods Report—special act of Parliament recommended by the Woods Committee that the first 50 per cent of pension should be based on factors other than the assessable degree of disability and should be authorized as special legislation. The Woods Committee considers that pensions up to 50 per cent should be awarded to ex-members of the Hong Kong force in the form of an award for meritorious service, based on the following: (a) the circumstances under which this force served, (b) the privations experienced by these members in Japanese prison camps, (c) the seeming difficulty in making an accurate estimate of the residual medical effects of this imprisonment.

[Interprétation]

Aujourd'hui, 23 ans après, nous vous demandons d'adopter au plus vite les recommandations 91 et 93 du rapport Woods qui traitent des anciens combattants de Hong Kong, à savoir, une pension d'invalidité de guerre d'au moins 50 p. 100 pour tous les survivants des anciens combattants de Hong Kong et de pleines prestations pour les veuves et les personnes à charge.

J'aimerais remercier les personnes qui constituaient le comité Woods, à savoir le juge Woods, le juge Lindal et le colonel Nantel.

Je veux également remercier la Légion royale canadienne de nous avoir permis d'utiliser des extraits de sa revue française Le Légionnaire.

Enfin, monsieur le président et messieurs, nous serons heureux de répondre à toutes vos questions.

Je remercie également les députés qui nous ont accordé le temps et l'occasion de présenter notre mémoire. Nous savons que nous pouvons compter sur vous.

Nous avons ajouté une annexe à la suite des évènements réjouissants du 9 septembre.

Lorsque notre Association a reçu un exemplaire du Livre blanc, le 9 septembre 1969, du ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, l'honorable J.-E. Dubé, c'est avec enthousiasme et joie que nous avons appris que les anciens combattants de Hong Kong allaient recevoir une pension minimum de 50 p. 100 et que les veuves et orphelins des anciens combattants de Hong Kong allaient recevoir une pension.

A titre de membre des organismes nationaux des anciens combattants canadiens, nous sommes d'accord avec les priorités soulignées dans le communiqué conjoint présenté le jeudi 18 septembre au Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants: taux de base, invalidités multiples, tribunal d'appel indépendant. Dans son rapport, le Comité Woods recommandait une loi spéciale du Parlement voulant que les premiers 50 p. 100 de la pension soient fondés sur des facteurs autres que le degré appréciable d'invalidité et que cette loi fasse l'objet de mesures législatives spéciales. Le Comité Woods considère que des pensions atteignant jusqu'à 50 p. 100 devraient être accordées aux ex-membres de la force de Hong Kong comme récompense de services méritoires, basées sur les points suivants: (a) les circonstances entourant le service, (b) les insuffisances auxquelles ont été soumis les membres dans les camps de prisonniers au Japon, (c) les difficultés apparentes à faire une juste estimation des effets permanents de cet emprisonnement.

We still have heart claims for some of our surviving members being turned down by the Canadian Pension Commission. These are men who may be receiving partial entitlement. They cannot cope with their work, so we urge most strongly that they be given 100 per cent disability.

Dr. Albert Haas, Director, Cardio-Pulmonary Laboratory, New York Medical Center, is a leading and world-wide specialist in this field. He is also an ex-P.O.W. who survived the dreadful concentration camps of Europe in World War II. Here is a man of experience who pointed out that hunger stress of prison life and slave labour can influence cardiac troubles, even in younger men. Dr. Haas is willing to appear before this Veterans Affairs Committee as a medical witness provided he can be given two weeks' notice. Dr. Haas told our National President, C. P. Brady, it would be an honour for him to come to Ottawa on an invitation from this Committee to substantiate our existing heart claims. Dr. Haas can be contacted by telephone at area code 212-679-3200, New York, University Medical Center, Institute of Rehabilitation Medicine, 400 East 34th Street, New York City, 10016, U.S.A.

We trust that the Woods Committee recommendation that confirmation of continuation of pension for child to age 25 when undergoing course of instruction will be implemented.

In conclusion, we are pleased to note that the government will take in future a more generous view of the benefit of the doubt clause, also to make pensions retroactive for up to five years prior to date of entitlement to improve the situation for the pension widow who remarries and to award pension for consequential disabilities.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Brady.

I know the members of the Committee have a number of questions and I thought we might just take it paragraph by paragraph from the beginning of your brief and invite comments. Are there any comments or question the members want to raise with respect to page 1?

Mr. MacRae: I have a question. I think it perhaps relates to page 1, Mr. Chairman. It is a general question and I will address it to Mr. Brady. In our discussion of this matter a few days ago the fact was brought out that there were eight Hong Kong veterans who were not receiving any disability pension whatsoever. We were led to believe that in some cases some of these chaps have just been lost track

[Interpretation]

Il y a aussi les demandes provenant d'insuffisance cardiaque qui ont été refusées par la Commission canadienne des pensions. Ces hommes ont droit à une compensation partielle. Ils ne peuvent s'acquitter de leurs travaux, et nous vous recommandons fortement de leur accorder l'invalidité à 100 p. 100.

Le docteur Albert Haas, directeur du laboratoire cardio-pulmonaire du centre médical de New York est un expert et une autorité reconnue dans ce domaine. Il est également un ancien prisonnier de guerre qui a connu les camps de concentration en Europe durant la Seconde Guerre mondiale. Il a démontré que la faim associée à l'emprisonnement et aux travaux d'esclavage pouvait entraîner des troubles cardiaques, même chez les jeunes. Le docteur Haas serait prêt à venir témoigner devant le Comité des Affaires des anciens combattants à titre d'expert médical pourvu qu'on l'avertisse au moins deux semaines à l'avance. Le docteur Haas a dit à notre président national, M. C. P. Brady, que ce serait un honneur pour lui de venir à Ottawa, à la demande de votre Comité, pour appuyer nos demandes d'insuffisance cardiaque. Vous pourrez communiquer avec le docteur Haas au numéro 212—679-3200, New York, University Medical Center, Institute of Rehabilitation Medicine, 400 East 34th Street, New York City, 10016 U.S.A.

Nous espérons que la recommandation du Comité Woods voulant que la pension ne soit pas retirée à un enfant de 25 ans encore aux études soit mise en application.

Nous sommes heureux de voir que le gouvernement interprétera plus largement la clause du bénéfice du doute et accordera des pensions avec rappel jusqu'à concurrence de 5 ans à partir de la date d'acceptation pour améliorer la situation de la veuve remariée et accorder des pensions pour invalidités subséquentes.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Brady.

Je sais que les membres du Comité ont des questions à poser et je crois que nous pourrions étudier votre mémoire, paragraphe par paragraphe, en commençant par le début. Y a-t-il des commentaires ou des questions au sujet de la page 1?

M. MacRae: J'aurais une question. Je crois que la question se rapporte à la page 1, monsieur le président. C'est une question générale que je poserais à monsieur Brady. Au cours de notre discussion, il y a quelques jours, on a mentionné que huit anciens combattants de Hong Kong n'avaient reçu aucune pension d'invalidité. Nous avions cru que, dans certains cas, certaines personnes n'avaient pu of entirely. Perhaps Mr. Brady might know of one or two who are not receiving a disability pension of any kind, not being assessed, and perhaps Mr. Brady could tell us about those eight. I am interested in this. If there is one man who is not getting a fair deal out of this, then we want to try to find him and see that he does.

• 1010

Mr. Brady: With respect to the question about the eight who have not been getting any pension, I think it is up to the fellow himself. I know of one case where a man turned down the financial end of things. Instead of getting $100 a month pension, he turned that down, he did not want it. However, he said, "I would like to keep the medical treatment". That is a case I know about. There are cases like that. I think some of them may be involved with men who are—I will put it this way—independently wealthy and they may not think they need it, or something to that effect, but it has nothing to do with the Canadian Pension Commission. With reference to these eight, it is up to the individual. Now that all our branch presidents are here today I think they should get their hotline going to find out from our members, if they know of any particular guys who do not get this.

Mr. MacRae: I think, Mr. Brady, too that through the department you would be able to get the names. Quite likely the records would be absolutely complete and you would be able to get the names and you would have something to work from there, too.

Mr. Brady: That is a very good suggestion and we will follow through on it.

The Chairman: I think part of the difficulty lies in the fact that these men have not been in touch with the department, Mr. MacRae.

Mr. MacRae: Yes, of course and some of them may be dead, too.

The Chairman: I have a similar question I would like to put. I received a letter from a Royal Canadian Air Force veteran who was in Singapore and was taken prisoner in Singapore and claims he went through substantially similar conditions to you. Do you have knowledge of any members of other forces who were incarcerated with you, went through imprisonment with you. Have you any idea of the numbers that might be involved?

Mr. Brady: I think Mr. Manchester may have some answer on that. Are there not some veterans out in British Columbia belonging to the British forces that are living out there, Bob?

être retracées. Peut-être M. Brady en connait-il un ou deux qui ne recoivent pas de pension d'invalidité, puisqu'il n'y a pas eu d'évaluation, et peut-être pourrait-il nous parler des huit personnes qui ont été mentionnées? Si un homme est lésé, nous corrigerons la situation.

M. Brady: Pour ce qui est des huit personnes qui ne recoivent aucune pension, je crois que c'est un état qui dépend d'eux. J'en connais une qui a refusé une pension de $100 par mois parce qu'elle n'en voulait pas. Toutefois, elle m'a dit qu'elle aimerait continuer à recevoir les traitements médicaux. C'est un cas que je connais. Il y a d'autres cas de ce genre. Je crois que ces personnes sont assez riches et ne veulent pas de cette pension ou d'une compensation quelconque, mais ceci n'a rien à voir avec la Commission canadienne des pensions. Pour ce qui est des huit personnes, cela dépend de chacun d'eux. Tous nos présidents de direction sont ici aujourd'hui et je crois qu'ils devraient essayer de savoir si, parmi nos membres, il y a des personnes qui ne recoivent pas de pension.

M. MacRae: Bien sûr, il faut chercher à avoir les noms par vos services je pense que d'après vos dossiers, vous pourriez obtenir les noms et retracer ces personnes. Ces gens n'étaient pas en rapport avec le Ministère, il ne faut pas l'oublier.

M. Brady: C'est une bonne idée, c'est ce que nous ferons.

Le président: Une partie de la difficulté provient de ce que ces personnes n'ont pas pris contact avec le ministère, M. MacRae.

M. MacRae: Oui et quelques-unes d'entre elles sont peu être décédées.

Le président: J'ai une question à poser, j'ai reçu une lettre d'un ancien combattant de l'Aviation canadienne qui était à Singapour et qui y a été fait prisonnier, cette personne était dans une situation semblable à la vôtre. Savez-vous s'il y a des aviateurs, ou d'autres membres des forces armées qui ont aussi été emprisonnés. Avez-vous une idée du nombre des aviateurs en cause?

M. Brady: Je pense que M. Manchester pourrait nous répondre; y a-t-il des aviateurs en Colombie-Britannique qui appartenaient à l'aviation britannique?

[Text]

Mr. Robert Manchester (President Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada British Columbia Branch): Mr. Chairman it does not really pertain to your question. There are members of the British forces who reside in British Columbia. They are not Canadian force members. In respect to the veterans of other services belonging to the Canadian Forces, I understand that there are groups of Air Force personnel and perhaps some Navy personnel scattered out through Canada. I have no figures on the numbers who may have served or were imprisoned in the camps in the Far East, but there are a few existing.

Mr. J. R. Stroud (President of Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada Ontario Branch): I think that pretty well this list that we refer to in our brief on page 12 indicates other forces that were prisoners of war in the Far East. It names the RCAF and the Navy personnel who were in Singapore, Malaya and various other camps. Some of them were prisoners of war right in our own camps in Japan, although they did not serve in Hong Kong. I can refer to Air Commodore Birchall whom we knew well. He was in our camp and he was shot down close to India. I think you will recall that.

Mr. Bigg: Were there any Canadian female prisoners in your organization?

Mr. Brady: Yes, sir.

Mr. Bigg: We had two nursing sisters.

Mr. Brady: Are they accounted for?

Mr. Bigg: They were repatriated if I remember correctly eight months after we were taken prisoner.

Mr. Brady: No, they came back. As a matter of fact, one of the nurses is our honorary president.

Mr. Bigg: Do you know whether they are being handled by separate legislation or are they included in your problem.

Mr. Brady: They would fall in with us, but I think they are coming to present a brief here, too.

Mr. Stroud: Yes later on. One of our nursing sisters will be with that delegation when they appear here.

[Interpretation]

M. Robert Manchester (Président de l'Association canadienne des Anciens combattants de Hong-Kong, Division de la Colombie-Britannique): M. le président, ma réponse ne se rapporte peut-être pas exactement sur votre question, il y a des aviateurs britanniques qui se sont installés en Colombie-Britannique. Ils ne sont pas membres des Forces canadiennes. Au sujet des anciens combattants des autres services qui appartiennent aux Forces canadiennes je crois savoir qu'il y a un certain nombre d'aviateurs et de marins dispersés à travers le Canada, mais je n'ai pas les chiffres des personnes qui ont pu servir ou être emprisonnées dans des camps en Extrême-Orient, il y en a un petit nombre.

M. J. R. Stroud (Président de l'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong, Division de l'Ontario): Je pense que cette liste à la page 12 indique qu'il y a des membres d'autres services de l'armée qui ont été faits prisonniers en Extrême-Orient. Il y a des membres de l'aviation et de la marine qui ont été dans les camps de prisonniers à Singapour, en Malaisie, et dans divers autres camps. Quelques uns d'entre eux ont subi la captivité dans nos propres camps au Japon bien qu'ils n'aient pas servi à Hong-Kong. Je pense en particulier à Birchall un capitaine aviateur que nous connaissions bien, il était dans notre camp et il a été tué tout près des frontières de l'Inde. Je pense que vous vous en souvenez.

M. Bigg: N'y a-t-il pas des Canadiennes qui ont subi la captivité dans votre organisation?

M. Brady: Oui, Monsieur.

M. Bigg: Nous avons deux religieuses infirmières.

M. Brady: Est-ce qu'elles sont en cause?

M. Bigg: Elles ont été rapatriées si je me souviens bien huit mois après que nous ayons été faits prisonniers.

M. Brady: Non, elles sont revenues. En fait l'une d'entre elles a été nommée présidente honoraire.

M. Bigg: Savez-vous si leur cas a été étudié grâce à une mesure spéciale ou distincte ou si elles sont comprises dans vos problèmes.

M. Brady: Elles sont comprises dans notre groupe mais je crois qu'elles ont aussi un mémoire à presenter.

M. Stroud: Oui, je pense que l'une de ces religieuses viendra ici présenter un mémoire plus tard.

[Texte]

Mr. Turner (London East): Mr. Chairman and Mr. Bigg whay type of pension do prisoners of war of other countries get? Have you any idea?

Mr. Brady: I may as well be frank with you, I would not know. I imagine the best source is the Canadian Pension Commission because we do not have those figures. We know pretty well about our own but we do not know what type of pension or what assessment other people get.

The Chairman: Any other questions? Mr. Guay?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make reference at the moment to page 12.

The Chairman: Yes. You are dealing with the general point that has been raised, is that it?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes.

The Chairman: Fine, because I am going to call the brief page by page.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Then I will wait until then.

The Chairman: Is that all right with you? Mr. Peters?

Mr. Peters: Do we have some information on this? As I understand it, the other countries that have veterans in our country in the main will supply them with our type of coverage. Though this may not be quite in line with what they would do if they were living at home as nationalists. What effect will this idea of our judging the medical disabilities to be 50 per cent have on these other nationals because of its, I suppose, lack of definition.

The Chairman: I am sure that is not easy to answer, Mr. Brady, but any comments would be interesting.

Mr. Brady: I think the CPC people here today may be able to comment on it. We know how it is going to affect our own group but how they are going to treat, say, a fellow who was in the British army in Hong Kong and is now living in Canada will be up to the discretion, I suppose, of the CPC and the government. If I remember correctly, I think there is some kind of a working agreement between the British and the Canadians. If a Canadian goes over to Britain a fellow can get medical treatment there and vice versa.

[Interprétation]

M. Turner (London East): Monsieur le président, et M. Bigg en ce qui concerne les prisonniers de guerre d'autres pays, quel genre de pension reçoivent-ils? Avez-vous une idée à ce sujet?

M. Brady: En toute franchise, je ne le sais pas. Je pense que la meilleure source c'est d'aller à la Commission canadienne des pensions pour obtenir ces renseignements. Nous savons assez bien ce qui se passe chez nous, mais ailleurs, nous ne savons guère, à vrai dire quel genre de pension et quelles évaluations ils obtiennent.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Monsieur Guay?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Monsieur le président, je voudrais poser une question relativement à la page 12.

Le président: D'accord, je pense que nous en sommes à une discussion générale pour l'instant.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Oui.

Le président: Ensuite, je demanderai des commentaires sur chacune des pages.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Alors, j'attendrai jusque-là.

Le président: Etes-vous d'accord sur ce point, Monsieur Peters?

M. Peters: Je crois savoir que d'autres pays qui ont des anciens combattants au Canada ont les moyens de les aider ou de leur donner des pensions, conformes aux nôtres ceci n'est peut-être pas tout à fait conforme à ce qu'ils feraient si les intéressés vivaient dans leur pays d'origine. A quoi rime de cette évaluation d'invalidité à 50 p. 100, pour les autres pays je pense qu'il y a ici un manque de définition.

Le président: Cette question est assez difficile à répondre, tout commentaire serait intéressant à entendre.

M. Brady: Je pense que les gens du CTC sont ici aujourd'hui pour faire des commentaires à ce sujet. Nous savons quelle sera la portée pour notre propre groupe, mais nous ne voyons pas comment ceci influera sur la situation, en ce qui concerne, par exemple, les militaires de l'armée britannique qui étaient à Hong Kong et qui vivent maintenant au Canada, je crois que ce sera à la discrétion du C.T.C. et du gouvernement. Si je me souviens bien je pense qu'il y a entente entre les Britanniques et les Canadiens là-dessus. Un

However, I do not know how far they take this, to what extent they will go with it.

The Chairman: This is a matter in which we may want to ask some questions later; the treatment that would be afforded to people who served in armed forces of allied countries and who are now in Canada.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask, in the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada, do you have other nationals who served with you in the prison camps?

Mr. Brady: We have some of them as members of our Association.

Mr. Peters: You represent them too, in some cases?

Mr. Stroud: Yes, we have some of them in the Toronto Branch, for instance, on whose behalf we made representations on pension claims. Some of these fellows had come to Canada, went back to England then came to Canada to live and joined our Association. We have had pension cases and we find, quite frankly, their health is just as bad as our own boys here and we have helped them. However, they come under The British Pension (Increase) Act even though they are in Canada.

Mr. MacRae: Are there some Americans too?

Mr. Stroud: We have no Americans. We have been in touch with American prisoners of war who were in our camps because we were working right with the Americans.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, without giving specific cases, in general, how are these British fellows treated compared to yourselves? I am not talking about medical treatment but in actual dollars and cents as far as pensions are concerned? The reason I ask this, Mr. Chairman, is that the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada will find during the day that they have every sympathy around this table from all political parties. It is not necessarily given in a sympathetic way. I mean we regard what you are getting as right and we are on your side. On the other hand, I think as Canadians we should have some pride in the fact that we are trying to do a little bit better than other countries have done. For this reason I am wondering if you could tell us just what they are doing in

[Interpretation]

Canadien peut aller en Grande-Bretagne, subir des traitements médicaux là-bas et l'inverse est également vrai pour un Britannique. Toutefois je ne sais pas jusqu'où cela peut aller et jusqu'où ils peuvent aller.

Le président: C'est une question sur laquelle nous devrons revenir plus tard en ce qui concerne le traitement accordé aux personnes qui ont servi dans des pays alliés et qui vivent maintenant au Canada.

M. Peters: Puis-je poser une question au sujet de l'Association des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong? Avez-vous d'autres nationaux qui ont été avec vous dans les camps de prisonniers?

M. Brady: Oui, nous en avons un certain nombre parmi les membres de notre Association.

M. Peters: Vous les représentez aussi parfois?

M. Stroud: Oui, nous en avons quelques uns à la section de Toronto, nous avons présenté des réclamations en leur nom en vue de la pension. Certains sont venus au Canada, sont retournés en Grande-Bretagne, puis sont revenus au Canada pour y vivre ils font maintenant partie de notre association. Nous avons constaté qu'il fallait les aider car leur santé est aussi précaire que celle de nos propres camarades mais ils relèvent de la Loi sur les pensions britanniques même s'ils vivent au Canada.

M. MacRae: Y a-t-il aussi des Américains?

M. Stroud: Nous n'avons pas d'Américains. Nous avons été en contact avec les Américains qui étaient prisonniers dans les mêmes camps que nous car nous poursuivons le même but.

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, sans nous donner des cas spécifiques, comment ces Britanniques ont-ils été traités en général comparativement avec vous? Je ne parle pas des traitements médicaux mais en ce qui concerne, par exemple, le montant de la pension? Si je pose cette question, monsieur le président, c'est que l'Association des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong pourra constater au cours de la journée qu'ils ont la sympathie de tous les partis politiques ici, mais ce n'est pas tout d'être sympathique. Nous considérons que ce que vous obtenez est un droit et nous vous appuyons. D'autre part, je pense, qu'à titre de Canadiens nous devons être fiers du fait que nous essayons de faire un peu mieux que les autres pays ont fait. Voilà pourquoi je me demande si vous pour-

England for the veterans who had identical conditions to your own?

Mr. Brady: I think I will call on Peter MacDougall to say a few words on that because he lived over in England for a while and maybe he talked to some of the British boys over there. Perhaps he could throw some light on it for us.

Mr. Peter L. MacDougall (Ottawa Representative of the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada): Gentlemen, I lived over there...

The Chairman: Please come to the microphone for purposes of recording the transcript please?

Mr. MacDougall: Thank you. Gentlemen, I lived for a period of about 5 years in England and we ran a very active Department of Veterans Affairs. They gave very sympathetic treatment to anything you took in to them. If you wished to reboard for increase in pension or treatment, they arranged that all this be done. However, I talked to my various associates who served with me in Hong Kong from the British Armed Forces and they came under the National Health Scheme, as I remember it. Once, the first time, I was sent by the Department of Veterans Affairs before the National Health Scheme in England. It was really disgraceful the manner in which I was treated. I went back to Veterans Affairs and complained, and from then on I was treated by specialists in the City of London. I do not think that same privilege is generally given to British prisoners of war resident in the United Kingdom, nor do I believe that their pension rate is anywhere near what we ourselves are receiving.

Mr. Bigg: I would like to suggest that we obtain further more detailed information on the way other veterans are treated. I do not think that this will affect what we are going to do for our Hong Kong boys, because we want to be proud of the treatment we give our own veterans. However, I would like to know comparative scales of payment, if they are available.

The Chairman: That will be considered, Mr. Bigg.

riez nous dire ce qu'on fait en Angleterre pour les anciens combattants qui sont dans les même conditions que les nôtres?

M. Brady: Je demanderai à Peter MacDougall de dire quelques mots à ce sujet parce qu'il a vécu en Angleterre et peut-être parlé avec les Britanniques. Je l'inviterai à commenter la situation.

M. Peter L. MacDougall (Représentant à Ottawa de l'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong): Messieurs, j'ai vécu là-bas...

Le président: Pourriez-vous vous approcher du microphone aux fins de la transcription?

M. MacDougall: J'ai vécu environ cinq ans en Angleterre, nous avions un ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants qui était très actif là-bas. Nous y avons été accueillis de la façon la plus sympathique, que ce soit pour demander une augmentation de pensions, pour obtenir des traitements médicaux, etc ils s'occupaient de tout. Toutefois, après avoir parlé avec mes divers camarades qui ont servi avec moi à Hong Kong dans les Forces britanniques, ils relèvent maintenant du Régime national de santé. Une fois que j'ai été envoyé par le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants pour comparaître devant les gens du National Health Scheme en Grande-Bretagne, je n'ai pas été très bien traité, par eux, je suis retourné me plaindre au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et par la suite j'ai été traité par des spécialistes à Londres.

Je suis retourné au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants où je me suis plaint, puis je me suis fait traiter par des spécialistes de la ville de Londres. Je ne crois pas que de façon générale, on accorde les mêmes privilèges aux prisonniers britanniques, qui sont restés comme résidents dans le Royaume-Uni après la guerre ni que le taux de leur pension puisse se comparer avantageusement avec ce que nous recevons nous-mêmes.

M. Bigg: J'aimerais proposer que nous obtenions plus de détails à ce sujet. Je ne crois pas que cela modifiera ce que nous voulons faire dans le cas des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong, car nous voulons être fiers du sort que nous réservons à nos anciens combattants. Cependant, cela m'intéresserait de connaître les différentes échelles de pension, si elles sont disponibles.

Le président: Nous y penserons, monsieur Bigg.

[Text]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): There is one other point, Mr. Chairman. While some of the Hong Kong veterans may possibly say that Canada is treating them better, this does not mean that we should stop there.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I think that possibly it is because the people of Canada recognize their responsibility more than others, there may be a multiplicity of reasons. By all means, if we have gone this far, maybe we can still do better. I appreciate the comments of the gentleman on how he was treated in England, I appreciate his frankness in giving us that report, but at the same time I think that many members of the Committee are aware of this and were really asking the questions just to put it on the record.

The Chairman: Fine, we will take a five minute break at this point.

(Upon resuming)

The Chairman: We were discussing page 1 of the brief and there were some general comments. Are there any further general questions members want to raise?

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Brady for an opinion. I am sure there are veterans in Canada, not Hong Kong war veterans, who were in prisoner-of-war camps and suffered under the same conditions that Hong Kong war veterans suffered in Japanese war camps. How are these veterans covered?

Mr. Brady: We know how we ourselves stand. I think that is a very good point. I agree that all veterans who suffered, let us say, identical treatment as prisoners-of-war in Germany, should be given the same consideration.

They had a rough time too. I know of one case in particular. I always thought a friend of mine had a war pension but he did not. He was directed from one person to another and, finally, we heard his story and got behind him. He had a rough time of it. He was a prisoner of war for I think eight months. It does not sound long but in that eight months he had a real rough go of it because the Germans and the allies, being back and forth, criss-crossing and so on, did not have too much time to look after the POWs, they were

[Interpretation]

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je voudrais soulever une autre question, monsieur le président. Si quelques anciens combattants de Hong-Kong peuvent dire qu'ils sont mieux traités au Canada, cela ne veut pas dire qu'il faille se croiser les bras.

Des voix: Non, non.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): C'est peut-être parce que le peuple canadien connaît mieux, pour toutes sortes de raisons, quelles sont ses responsabilités. En tout cas, si nous sommes allé si loin, peut-être pouvons-nous aller encore plus loin. Je remercie le monsieur qui nous a livré ses commentaires sur la façon dont il a été traité en Angleterre. Je le remercie de sa franchise, mais je crois que beaucoup de membres qui siègent au Comité connaissent la situation et qu'ils posaient les questions tout simplement pour que le témoignage figure dans le compte-rendu.

Le président: Bien, nous ferons maintenant une pause de cinq minutes.

Le président: Nous étions à la page 1 du mémoire. Y a-t-il d'autres questions générales que les députés aimeraient poser. Monsieur Marshall.

M. Marshall: J'aimerais demander l'opinion de M. Brady. Il y a des anciens combattants au Canada, selon moi, qui n'étaient pas des prisonniers de guerre mais ce sont d'anciens combattants qui ont subi les mêmes privations que ceux qui ont été emprisonnés dans les camps japonais. Est-ce qu'ils bénéficient des mêmes conditions et comment sont-ils protégés par la loi?

M. Brady: Pour répondre à cette question, je pourrais dire que nous connaissons notre position personnelle à nous, mais c'est une très bonne question que vous avez soulevée, et j'aimerais que tous les anciens combattants qui ont subi les mêmes privations bénéficient des mêmes conditions.

Ils ont connu de durs moments aussi parce que je connais un cas en particulier où un ami à moi qui devait avoir une pension de guerre et qui ne l'a pas obtenue. On le renvoyait de l'un à l'autre et enfin nous avons entendu son histoire et nous avons appuyé sa demande. Il a été prisonnier de la guerre, je crois, pendant huit mois il a connu de durs moments; parce que les Allemands et les alliés avançant et reculant s'entrecroisant et ainsi de suite, on n'avait pas le temps de s'occuper des prisonniers de guerre on les being shunted all over, their diet was bad and they put them on forced labour. We were very much surprised when we found out he did not get a pension at all. So we started the ball rolling by getting him on veterans allowance just to get him going. Then he was brought into hospital and had a leg operation which I am sure was due to his war service. Then we initiated a pension claim for him which, today, is in the hands of the Canadian Pension Commission and we are waiting for a decision on it.

This is the type of man you are talking about, a veteran who had a rough time—imprisonment, forced labour and things like that. We go along with you 100 per cent: those veterans should be looked after and fall into the category that we are—fortunate in having.

Mr. Marshall: Would you say that it would be reasonable for this Committee to recommend that something similar to the disability pensions that your veterans are getting be put in the legislation to cover such veterans?

Mr. Brady: Speaking for all our branches here, I know the fellows would jump in behind it and would go along with that one hundred per cent.

Mr. Marshall: Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there other questions? If not, are there any questions on page 2 of the brief?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would like to ask a question. I suppose they will tell me that somebody in the Department has to answer it.

The point has been made by Mr. Brady that it may be that some of these eight that Mr. MacRae referred to earlier, which we are all aware of, actually do not want a disability pension. I am told there are one or two who say they are healthy and fine, do not want it but are interested in the medical. Is there any way that that protection can be covered. I realize that medical usually comes in relation to an assessable disability. If a veteran does not have an assessable disability can he have the medical coverage?

I realize, Mr. Chairman, this is a rhetorical question, I do not suppose you can answer it and I do not suppose they can answer it, but is this something that his Committee should look into?

mettaient sur des voies de dérivation, leur régime alimentaire était mauvais et on les mettaient aux travaux forcés. Nous avons été tout surpris d'apprendre que cette personne n'avait pas reçu de pension, alors nous avons amorçé des démarches pour lui obtenir une allocation d'ancien combattant et lui permettre de survivre, puis elle a été hospitalisée, elle a eue une opération de la jambe qui j'en suis sûr, résultait de ses services de guerre. Ensuite nous avons reclamé une pension en sa faveur. Aujourd'hui le cas est soumis à la Commission des pensions, nous attendons la décision à ce sujet. Dans le cas dont vous parlez, c'est un ancien combattant qui a connu de durs moments, des privations, qui a été prisionnier quia été mis aux travaux forcés et nous appuyons totalement la demande de ces anciens combattants qui devraient faire partie de la catégorie privilégiée existente.

M. Marshall: Pouvez-vous dire si le Comité devrait recommander un article de la loi—pour protéger ces anciens combattants, pour leur verser une pension d'invalide comme celle que vous et les anciens combattants touchez.

M. Brady: Oui, parlant au nom de toutes nos sections, nous partageons entièrement cette recommandation.

M. Marshall: Merci.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions à poser? Sinon y a-t-il des questions à propos de la page 2 du mémoire?

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): J'aimerais poser une question et c'est peut-être un délégué du Ministère qui pourrait y répondre mais M. Brady a déclaré qu'il y a peut-être, parmi ces huit anciens combattants mentionnés plus tôt par M. Brady dont nous connaissons tous l'existence, certains qui ne veulent pas une pension d'invalide. On me dit qu'il y en a un ou deux qui se disent assez prospère et qui n'ont pas besoin de cette pension mais qui veulent avoir un traitement hospitalier. Y a-t-il une formule qui pourrait assurer cettte protection? Je me rends compte que le traitement hospitalier doit résulter d'une invalidité évaluée. Pourrait-il avoir une protection médicale sans invalidité évaluée et je sais, M. le président, qu'il s'agit d'une question hypothétique et je ne pense pas que vous puissiez y répondre ni qu'ils puissent y répondre mais c'est une question que le comité devrait examiner.

[Text]

The Chairman: I suggest, Mr. Knowles, that you make a note of this. We can certainly ask this question of Departmental witnesses and explore it further. I myself would not hazard a reply.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I might also add that some in this age group who feel that they do not want the pension might leave widows who would have a different view about the matter.

Mr. Brady: Along those same lines, this one particular chap I was talking about wanted the entitlement we were talking about for medical but he did not want any money. That is his own prerogative. You mentioned about the widows and their dependants. When legislation does come about and some man still insists that he does not want it and something happens to him, we would like to see his widow and dependants covered.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, perhaps, we could flag this matter and have the Department give us the facts they have about those eight.

The Chairman: Fine, Mr. Knowles. Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I think the White Paper and the pending legislation for the Hong Kong veterans would give Mr. Brady and his people a good excuse to search out these eight people and to make them aware particularly of the pending benefits for their widows and orphans. It might be that they thought they just had a ten per cent disability and did not bother to apply because they are doing all right in ordinary life. But now that their widows will be covered for the first time if they had small disabilities, perhaps it would be a good excuse, Mr. Brady, to try to trace down these people to see if they are fully aware of what the new legislation will give to them and, more particularly, their widows.

Mr. Brady: We are definitely going to follow this through with the Candian Pension Commission people, find out who these eight are, and whatever area in Canada they live in we will have our branch presidents there track them down, see what the setup is and outline to them the protection available for their widows and dependants.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Monsieur Knowles l'on pourra transmettre cette question au ministère et examiner le cas plus à fond. Je n'aimerais pas personnellement répondre à une telle question.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): On pourrait ajouter aussi que certaines personnes de ce groupe d'âge qui ne veulent pas de pension peuvent laisser des veuves qui peuvent avoir des opinions différentes là-dessus.

M. Brady: Dans le même contexte, la personne que je mentionnais voulait avoir droit aux avantages médicaux que nous mentionnions mais ne voulait pas de rémunération financière. Alors c'est son droit, mais nous espérons que les personnes à charge et les veuves reçoivent des avantages même dans le cas qu'il arrive quelque chose au mari.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Peut-être, monsieur le président devrions-nous faire mousser cette affaire et demander au ministère de nous donner des détails concernant ces huit personnes.

Le président: Bien, M. Knowles. A vous, M. Weatherhead.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, le Livre blanc et les nouveaux projets de loi en faveur de l'Association des anciens combattants de Hong Kong donneront à M. Brady et à ses collègues l'occasion de retrouver ces huit personnes et de leur faire connaître les avantages latents qui sont accordés aux veuves et aux orphelins; car il est fort possible que celles-ci pensaient n'avoir droit qu'à une pension de 10 p. 100 d'invalidité et ne se sont pas préoccupées de présenter de demande, car elles gagnent bien leur vie comme civils; mais maintenant, du fait que leurs veuves pourront, pour la première fois, devenir bénéficiaires au cas où leurs maris soient invalides à 10 p. 100, ce serait peut-être bien là l'occasion de retrouver ces huit personnes pour leur demander si ces dernières sont entièrement au courant de ce que la nouvelle législation leur accorde et, en particulier, de ce qu'elle accorde à leurs veuves.

M. Brady: Nous allons très certainement, à la Commission des pensions, nous occuper de retrouver ces huit personnes et demander à nos présidents de section, quels que soient les secteurs où celles-ci se trouvent, de voir quelle est leur situation et de leur exposer quelle est la protection légale qui est accordée à leurs veuves et à leurs personnes à charge.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. MacDougall has something he would like to say. Would you come forward, Mr. MacDougall.

Mr. MacDougall: I would like to ask Mr. Stroud to answer this question. We have a veteran living in the United States, the Department of Veterans Affairs have written registered letters, we know where he lives, the registered letters are returned unopened, and I think that Mr. Stroud can go into this in more detail. I think that some of these eight people may be mental cases and you just cannot get through to them.

Mr. Stroud: This is one of the cases that came to our attention through the Canadian Pension Commission, particularly the medical adviser in the Canadian Pension Commission who asked whether we could do something. The Department has written letters and they have come back unopened with "refused" marked on the envelope. So we took it on ourselves to have our representative, who is in the Windsor-Detroit area, visit this chap. I might say that we were unsuccessful in making contact. He just refuses to have anything to do with hospitals or anyone in authority. I discussed this with Dr. Richardson, I said I knew this chap when he was in Toronto convalescing and also in camp and he does definitely, in my estimation, have a mental disorder, a disability. The Doctor agreed that this was the case but he said he did not know how to get this man in, that they had done everything possible. But here is a man with a mental condition and he just refuses to come into any type of hospital whatsoever or have anything to do with anyone in authority. That is one of our eight cases.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask how he is doing financially and socially?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is probably doing very well.

Mr. Whicher: He is probably happier than we are.

Mr. Stroud: The only way to answer it is that he is in a world of his own. That is the report I got back.

Mr. Peters: I think that there might be an obligation on our part if he is not able to look after himself. If he becomes a ward or a public charge, or is close to that level, then we would have a responsibility. Even if we could legitimately say he had a mental problem I think we would have a responsibility.

Le président: Monsieur MacDougall a quelque chose à dire; pouvez-vous vous approcher M. MacDougall?

M. MacDougall: J'aimerais que M. Stroud réponde à cette question: Nous avons un ancien combattant qui habite aux États-Unis et le ministère des Anciens combattants lui a envoyé des lettres recommandées; nous savons où il demeure mais les lettres recommandées nous sont retournées sans avoir été décachetées; sans aucun doute M. Stroud en sait plus long que moi sur cette affaire; je pense que certaines de ces huit personnes peuvent être atteintes de maladie mentale et que nous ne pouvons tout simplement pas nous mettre en rapport avec elles.

M. Stroud: C'est une question que la Commission des pensions a portée à notre attention et, en particulier, qui a été examinée par le conseiller médical de la Commission qui nous a demandé si nous pouvions faire quelque chose à ce sujet. Le Ministère a alors écrit des lettres qui lui ont été retournées non décachetées mais avec la mention «refusée» indiquée sur l'enveloppe. Alors nous avons pris la liberté de demander à notre représentant de la région de Windsor et de Détroit de visiter cette personne et nous avons pu la rencontrer, mais elle ne voulait pas entendre parler de traitements hospitaliers ou de parler à des représentants attitrés, alors j'en ai parlé au docteur Richardson et je lui ai exposé avoir connu cet homme alors qu'il était convalescent à Toronto et au camp aussi et que je pensais qu'il avait des troubles mentaux certains et le docteur a admis que c'était vrai, mais qu'il ne voyait aucune possibilité de faire hospitaliser cette personne. Voici un homme qui a des troubles mentaux et qui refuse d'être hospitalisé quelque soit l'établissement ou de traiter avec les autorités et cet homme represente un des huit cas.

M. Peters: Puis-je demander quelle est sa situation financière et sociale?

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Il gagne probablement fort bien sa vie.

M. Whicher: Il est probablement plus heureux que nous.

M. Stroud: La question c'est qu'il habite dans son propre univers d'après ce que l'on m'a dit.

M. Peters: Ça devient une obligation de notre part s'il ne peut pas subvenir à ses propres besoins, s'il tombe en tutelle ou devient un fardeau pour le public. Alors nous avons une responsabilité à son égard. Même si nous pouvons légitimement affirmer qu'il est frappé de troubles mentaux.

The Chairman: But he still has some rights too, the right to do as he chooses with his own life.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, let us not interfere with him and make him unhappy. It would be like what we did with the Indians.

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg had his hand up

Mr. Bigg: On this same point, a day or two ago I was suggesting that we need more flexibility in the Act, at the same time granting statutory rights. Now the numbers were covered very carefully. We got as far as the fact that there are 395 who will automatically benefit, if this legislation is implemented and there are only eight that are not. I would like to go on record as saying that I think we should give them the statutory right, which will clear up these very difficult borderline cases. Now they do not have to come forward and claim the statutory right but I know, from my experience in handling cases, that where the widow later is claiming her rights under the veterans charter she is not tied by the red tape of saying that her husband did not apply. It is very difficult also for the family, we do not want the family to have to prove that the father was non compos mentis just before he died. There is no need to drag that skeleton out of the closet in order for her to get her pension. If we were to say that she has the pension as of right now, it would be very helpful. Perhaps some of these people are hiding because of the very fact that the family knows that he is not mentally capable and if it came before a pension board he would immediately be claimed as being of unsound mind, and in this superstitious age in which we still live most people would rather starve to death than have their father claimed to be a mental case. We can get around this by putting a piece of sensible legislation on the statute book saying the family has a right whether or not they claim the monetary benefits under the Act.

The Chairman: Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): I do not have any question, Mr. Chairman. I would say, however, that the progress that has been made in the last five, six or seven years in respect of bringing a satisfactory basis of settlement as far as the Hong Kong veterans are concerned is really tremendous. I think we are basically in agreement with the various points that have been brought up in this

[Interpretation]

Le président: Mais il lui reste tout de même le droit de chosir sa vie.

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président n'allons pas nous en mêler et les rendre malheureux, rappelons-nous ce que nous avons fait aux Indiens.

Le président: Monsieur Bigg.

M. Bigg: Dans ce contexte, je pense que nous avons besoin d'une législation plus souple tout en accordant des droits statutaires. Nous avons étudié soigneusement les cas et nous avons été jusqu'à établir que 395 anciens combattants bénéficieront automatiquement de cette mesure si cette législation est mise en vigueur et que seules y font exemption ces huit personnes. J'aurais aimé pouvoir ajouter que nous devrions leur accorder un droit statutaire, ce qui éclaircirait ces cas-limites. Mais ces personnes n'ont pas à s'avancer et à réclamer ce droit statutaire et je sais par expérience, pour m'être occupé de certains cas, que lorsque la veuve doit plus tard réclamer ses droits, on ne l'oblige pas à prouver, administrativement parlant, que son mari n'a pas présenté de demandes. Nous n'aurions pas que la famille se voit obligée de prouver que le père était malade mentalement avant sa mort. Il n'y a aucun raison de faire revivre des événements pénibles, pour obtenir à la veuve la pension à laquelle elle a droit. Nous préférerions affirmer tout de suite qu'elle a droit à la pension. Certaines de ces personnes se cachent peut-être en ce moment pour cette même raison qu'elles savent que le père était malade mentalement et que ceci apparaîtrait immédiatement si la cause était portée devant une commission des pensions et qu'en ce siècle de superstition, et que malgré tout nous vivrons toujours, la plupart des gens préféreraient mourir de faim que d'admettre que leur père souffrait de troubles mentaux. Nous pouvons certainement surmonter ce problème en passant une législation raisonnable donnant à la famille ce droit même dans le cas où celle-ci n'a pas réclamé d'avantages financiers en vertu de la loi.

Le président: M. Thompson?

M. Thompson (Red Deer): Je n'ai aucune question à poser, M. le président, mais j'aimerais dire que les progrès enrégistrés depuis cinq, six ou sept ans pour établir une formule satisfaisante de règlement des cas des anciens combattants de Hong Kong sont immenses. Je pense que nous sommes, au fond, d'accord sur les différents points qui sont exposés dans ce mémoire, mais qu'en brief. However, I think that our responsibility as Members of Parliament, and your responsibility as members of the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada National Council, now focuses upon the expected legislation, and as this legislation comes up we must be very careful to follow through on these points that are brought up and not be too concerned about those who are able to take care of themselves, or who, on the basis of their own wishes and rights, do not expect the help. But we must make sure that every veteran and every veteran's dependant is properly cared for, in terms of the legislation, and that we maintain a close liaison when the legislation does come up, when it is dealt with and when it actually becomes law.

I would just say further that I believe the veterans have shown an excellent example of democracy and responsible participation in the job they have done in bringing to the attention not only of we who are responsible for legislation, but of the general public as well, their particular needs and the responsibility the government has towards them as veterans. In view of our discussion at this point, in view of the White Paper, in view of the commitments the Minister has made and in view of the general agreement there is between Association and legislators, we have to make sure we carry through and finish the job. I think this is the most important thing that is before us at the present time.

The Chairman: Mr. Weatherhead?

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I wish to state how sorry my friend, David Groos, the member of Parliament for Victoria, is that he could not be with us today. As you know, he was present last week but he had to go out West to attend some functions on the Coast. However, as I am sure the delegates from the Hong Kong Council know, David has for a great number of years—since long before he became a member of Parliament—taken a great interest in the problems of the Hong Kong veterans. He was very sorry that he could not meet his old friends today and take part in these discussions.

Mr. Chairman, I gather that Hong Kong Canadian veterans, no matter where they live in the world today, receive the same benefits. Is that the case?

Mr. Brady: Canadian veterans.

Mr. Weatherhead: If, for instance, they have gone to the United States and become American citizens they do not lose their benefits?

[Interprétation]

tant que députés, nous avons la responsabilité et vous aussi en tant que membres de l'Association des anciens combattants du Conseil national du Canada, de nous préoccuper de la loi qui sera présentée. Nous devons être prudents et examiner ces arguments sans trop nous préoccuper de ceux qui peuvent subvenir à leurs propres besoins ou ceux qui décident de leur plein gré de se passer de notre aide. Mais nous devons nous assurer que tous les anciens combattants et leurs familles peuvent bénéficier des dispositions de cette loi; nous devons garder le contact lorsque le projet de la loi sera présenté et étudié avant son entrée en vigueur.

Je pourrais ajouter qu'il s'agit-là d'un parfait exemple de la démocratie et d'une participation responsable de la part des anciens combattants et des efforts qu'ils ont faits, parce qu'ils ont signalé non seulement à nous-mêmes, qui sommes chargés de prendre les mesures législatives, mais aussi à l'attention publique leurs besoins particuliers et les responsabilités qui incombent au gouvernement envers eux. A la suite de notre discussion à ce sujet dans le cadre du Livre blanc, des promesses faites par le ministre et de l'accord général entre l'association et les législateurs, nous voulons donner suite à cette intention et achever le travail. C'est là la chose la plus importante à l'heure actuelle.

Le président: Monsieur Weatherhead.

M. Weatherhead: Je voudrais tout d'abord vous dire combien mon ami David Groos, le député de Victoria, est désolé de ne pas pouvoir être avec nous aujourd'hui. Il était avec nous la semaine dernière mais il a dû se rendre dans l'Ouest pour affaires sur la côte. Je suis certain que les anciens combattant de Hong-Kong savent que David a consacré bon nombre d'années, avant même d'être député, à se préoccuper du sort des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong, il regrette de ne pouvoir être présent aujourd'hui et de ne pouvoir participer à cette discussion.

Monsieur le président, j'en conclus que ces anciens combattants, là où ils habitent partout dans le monde, reçoivent les mêmes avantages. Ai-je raison?

M. Brady: Les Canadiens, oui.

M. Weatherhead: Alors ceux qui sont partis aux États-Unis et qui sont devenus citoyens américains ont-ils perdu leurs avantages?

[Text]

Mr. Brady: No, they would still be entitled to it.

Mr. Weatherhead: So if they were Canadian soldiers at the time of the fall of Hong Kong they will be receiving the same benefits that we are giving to them now. Is this the situation?

Mr. Brady: That is right.

Mr. Whicher: If they were serving with the Canadian army the Canadian government looks after them. Is that not true?

Mr. Brady: That is right.

Mr. Stroud: Yes.

Mr. Brady: We had a couple of fellows who had just come out of the Canadian army due to service—they retired—and they came in for a war pension and were assessed and everything is fine.

On the subject of Mr. David Groos, I was planning to talk about him later on. Now that you have brought up his name, may I say I was talking to him on Friday morning of last week. As you have mentioned, he has been a terrific help to us over the years. We were going to mention his name anyhow, because he has been a very good friend of ours.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is still an active politician! He has not passed away!

Mr. Brady: One further name I would like to mention before I forget is that of Bill Herridge.

Mr. Bigg: Are there merchant-seamen members of your organization, as well. Were there any of them in your camp?

Mr. Brady: There were some Americans in the camp, but they do not fall in line with us; they were in the prison camp, though.

Mr. Bigg: There were no Canadian merchant seamen?

Mr. Brady: No.

• 1055

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): As a matter of interest may I ask about the Dutch merchant seamen who were with you in camp? A number of them, as you will recall, are sharing the same cemetery with Canadians. Are there any Dutch?

Mr. MacDougall: Excuse me for interrupting.

The Chairman: No; you are very welcome. Go ahead, please.

[Interpretation]

M. Brady: Non. Ils auront toujours droit à ces allocations.

M. Weatherhead: Alors s'ils étaient des soldats canadiens au moment de Hong-Kong, ils recevraient les mêmes allocations que nous versons maintenant.

M. Brady: C'est exact.

M. Whicher: S'ils ont été membres de l'armée canadienne le gouvernement canadien s'occupe de leur sort, n'est-il pas vrai?

M. Brady: C'est j uste.

M. Stroud: Oui.

M. Brady: Nous avons plusieurs de nos collègues qui ont terminé leur période de service, qui ont pris leur retraite et qui touchent une pension de guerre et tout va bien. Pour revenir au cas de M. Groos, j'avais pensé vous en parler plus tard maintenant que vous avez mentionné son nom, je lui ai parlé, vendredi matin la semaine dernière, et comme vous l'avez mentionné il nous a énormément aidés au cours des années. Il a été un très bon ami de notre cause et nous ne l'oublierons pas.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Il est toujours un politicien bien actif, il n'est pas encore mort!

M. Brady: J'aimerais aussi mentionner le nom de Bill Herridge avant que je l'oublie.

M. Bigg: Dans votre organisation, y a-t-il des marins de la marine marchande. Y en avait-il dans votre camp?

M. Brady: Il y avait quelques Américains dans le camp, mais non pas aux mêmes conditions que nous, mais ils étaient dans le même camp de prisonniers.

M. Bigg: N'y avait-il aucun marin de la marine marchande?

M. Brady: Non.

M. Thompson (Red Deer): Quel était le cas de ce marin hollandais qui était emprisonné avec vous? Vous vous rappelez il en a quelques-uns qui sont enterrés dans le même cimetière que les Canadiens. Y a-t-il eu beaucoup d'Hollandais?

M. MacDougall: Excusez-moi de vous avoir interrompu.

Le président: Non, je vous en prie monsieur McDougall.

[Texte]

Mr. MacDougall: To clear up the point, the only seamen who came into our prison camp after the fall of Hong Kong were members of one Dutch submarine crew. I believe these are the Dutch sailors you are referring to.

Mr. Bigg: And they were navy?

Mr. MacDougall: They were navy; they were not merchant seamen.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on page 2 of the brief? Page 3 raises the question of the basic rate of pension. As I have said to other associations, the terms of reference of the Committee raise problems in dealing with basic rates. The Committee will probably be making further statements on this matter. We have heard representations from your association and from others, but the degree to which we are free to make recommendations on this matter is open to some doubt.

Mr. Brady: All we wish to say is that we back up the national chartered veterans organizations. Perhaps Don Thompson is in the room. He is the national secretary. Bob Kohaly, the Chairman of the National Veterans Organizations, did a terrific job on Thursday afternoon of going over the basic rate of pension and the appeal board. We do not want to keep repeating what you have already heard. We go along with what they submitted as a joint statement of policy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, we would like to commend this delegation for being concerned not only about the matter that directly affects them but about these other matters. I am sure we welcome their endorsation of the priorities that Mr. Kohaly stated last week.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Brady: We go right along with Bob Kohaly on those three top priorities of basic rate, mulitiple disabilities and appeal board.

The Chairman: Page 4? Page 5 raises the problem of multiple disabilities. Are there any questions on this? Yes, Mr. Brady?

Mr. Brady: I would like to make a statement on this problem of multiple disabilities. I know this concerns people such as the war

[Interprétation]

M. MacDougall: Pour mettre les choses au clair, les seuls marins qui sont venus partager notre captivité dans notre camp après la chute de Hong-Kong faisaient partie d'un équipage de sous-marin hollandais. C'était peut-être les marins hollandais dont vous parlez.

M. Bigg: Et ils étaient marins de la marine de guerre.

M. MacDougall: C'était des marins de la marine de guerre, mais pas de la marine marchande.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions à poser à propos de la page 2? Page 3. Pour ce qui est des taux de base des pensions j'ai dit aux autres associations que le mandat accordé au Comité soulève le problème, mais le Comité fera probablement d'autres déclarations là-dessus. Nous avons entendu les représentants de votre association, et ceux des autres. Mais nous doutons que nous puissions faire d'autres recommendations là-dessus.

M. Brady: Tout ce que nous pouvons dire c'est que nous appuyons la position des associations nationales d'anciens combattants. Don Thompson qui est ici, il est le secrétaire national et Bob Kohaly le président des associations des anciens combattants ont fait des efforts louables jeudi après-midi en proposant de nouvelles recommandations au sujet du nouveau taux de base et du bureau d'appel mais nous ne voulons pas répéter ce que vous avez déjà entendu. Nous sommes entièrement d'accord avec leurs propositions, qui ont déjà été soumises, et qui feront l'objet d'une déclaration commune.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Monsieur le président, nous aimerions féliciter cette association qui se préoccupe non seulement des cas particuliers mais aussi de tout le reste. Nous approuvons, j'en suis sûr, la liste des priorités qu'a énoncé M. Kohaly, la semaine dernière.

Le président: Oui.

M. Brady: Nous sommes d'accord avec M. Kohaly lorsqu'il traite de ces priorités, c'est-à-dire, le taux de base, les invalidités multiples et le Conseil d'appel.

Le président: Page 5. Y a-t-il des questions à poser au sujet des invalidités multiples.

M. Brady: J'aimerais commenter un peu cette question d'invalidités multiples. Nous voulons préciser une nouvelle fois, comme amputees and the war-blinded. We want to repeat for the record as we say in our brief, that we back the Woods recommendations to the hilt. I do not want to be repetitious, but we are a member of all veterans associations and all our fellows support it. We would like to see those with multiple disabilities get a good break, because actually I was amazed at the figure mentioned on Thursday afternoon, that there are only 420 multiple disabilities. Is this correct?

The Chairman: Something like that; I cannot quite remember the correct figure.

Mr. Brady: That is a very small number. That is why we would like to go all out. Anything you people can do in your legislation to help them we would appreciate immensely.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think that figure is for those whose multiple disabilities are 100 per cent or more.

The Chairman: Yes, I think that is so. It was qualified in some way, but I cannot quite recall it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad we have been given that figure. Earlier we were given a figure of 5,000 for multiple disabilities, but that included those with two things wrong that might have added up to only 10 or 15 per cent. But in terms of double amputees and multiple disabilities that amount to more than 100 per cent I think the figure is...

The Chairman: Who would be affected by the proposal relative to the 100 per cent ceiling. Yes, I think that is right, Mr. Knowles.

Mr. Bigg: I think the answer clarifies that if you had multiple disabilities below the 100 per cent they were added up arithmetically already. Therefore, it would be only when it was a total over 100 per cent that it would become a problem for us to straighten out.

Mr. Brady: Am I correct that as it stands now the most that a man with multiple disabilities can get is a 100 per cent pension?

Mr. Bigg: Yes.

Mr. Brady: And he gets an attendance allowance, or something like that?

The Chairman: Yes.

[Interpretation]

dans notre mémoire, nous sommes entièrement en faveur des recommandations contenues dans le Rapport Woods. Nous ne voulons pas rabâcher mais nous sommes très en faveur de l'amélioration du sort des anciens combattants nous adhérons à ce principe et nous aimerions qu'on se préoccupe du sort de ceux qui souffrent d'invalidités multiples. J'ai été surpris d'apprendre jeudi après-midi qu'il n'y avait que 420 anciens combattants qui entraient dans cette catégorie. Ce chiffre est-il exact?

Le président: Quelque chose comme cela, je ne peux me souvenir du chiffre exact.

M. Brady: C'est un très petit nombre. Voilà pourquoi nous aimerions appuyer tous les efforts que vous comptez faire sur le plan législatif pour nous aider, et nous vous en serions très reconnaissants.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je crois que ce chiffre se rapporte à ceux dont les invalidités multiples sont évaluées à 100 p. 100 et plus.

Le président: Oui je crois que c'est cela. Il en a été question mais je me rappelle pas des détails.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je suis satisfait que ce chiffre nous soit donné. Plus tôt il avait été question de 5,000 anciens combattants avec infirmités multiples mais ce chiffre comprenait ceux qui ont deux problèmes ce qui aurait pu augmenter le nombre de 10 ou 15 p. 100 seulement. Au sujet des amputés de deux membres et de ceux qui souffrent d'invalidités multiples d'un pourcentage de plus de 100 p. 100 je crois que le nombre s'élève à...

Le président: Qui seraient touchés par la proposition relative au plafond de 100 p. 100. Oui M. Knowles, je crois que c'est cela.

M. Bigg: Je crois que la réponse c'est que si vous souffrez d'infirmités multiples au-dessous du niveau de 100 p. 100 elles s'ajoutent déjà automatiquement. Par conséquent c'est seulement si le total dépasse 100 p. 100 qu'il nous faudrait résoudre le problème.

M. Brady: D'après ce que je vois la situation présente est telle que le plus que peut espérer un ancien combattant qui souffre d'infirmités multiples c'est une pension à 100 p. 100?

M. Bigg: Oui.

M. Brady: Et il reçoit une allocation de soins ou quelque chose de semblable?

Le président: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Brady: We would like the Woods Committee recommendation to take effect, so that if a man is lacking two arms and a leg he gets 200 per cent or 150 per cent. I think the Woods Committee recommended a maximum of 350 per cent. We would like to see it along those lines, where such people would get the benefit.

The Chairman: What do you think of the White Paper recommendations which take a different approach to the problem but do allow additional payments?

Mr. Brady: That was left open on Thursday afternoon, was it not—the $400 to $1,200 maximum?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Brady: There was the question of who was going to qualify for the $400 and who was going to qualify for the $1,200. There is a range there. I think you were discussing that. Has anything been decided, or have any suggestions been made since we last met?

The Chairman: We are inviting your comments, Mr. Brady. What do you think of the alternative proposal? This is one of the concerns the Committee has. There are two ways of dealing with the problem, and the principle, or the method of approach, is different in each—substantially different.

Mr. Brady: Mr. Stroud wants to say something along this line.

Mr. Stroud: Gentlemen, we have discussed this prior to coming here and we feel that definitely the recommendations of the Woods Report should be considered, rather than the White Paper because there is such a small number in this category. I might say that some of our own boys are affected by this multiple disability. It has probably been brought up before, but we have quite a number of war blind who are also war amputees. These fellows run into this multiple disability, this 420 figure. Now 420 people are not very many to be involved and I think this consideration that Woods recommended should be definitely considered rather than the White Paper. I do not think that is ample pension for these people who are in this category. We know of them in Toronto; we know they are handicapped and they have a terrific handicap. I am sure everyone here agrees that the Woods recommendation is much more generous and I think it should be implemented.

The Chairman: I am sure every member of the Committee is completely sympathetic with this group. The question is what is a recom-

[Interprétation]

M. Brady: Nous aimerions que les recommandations du Comité Woods soient mises en vigueur de façon que si un ancien combattant a perdu deux bras et une jambe il reçoive une pension d'un pourcentage de 200 ou 150 p. 100. Je crois que le Comité Wood recommandait un maximum de 350 p. 100. Je voudrais que ces mutilés bénéficient de ces mesures.

Le président: Que pensez-vous des recommandations du Livre Blanc où le problème est abordé de manière différente mais qui autorise des versements supplémentaires?

M. Brady: La question qui est restée en suspens jeudi après-midi n'était-ce pas le maximum de $400 ou $1,200?

Le président: Oui.

M. Brady: La question c'était qui allait avoir droit à $400 et qui allait avoir droit à $1,200, cela fait une différence. Je crois que la discussion portait sur ce sujet. A-t-on décidé quelque chose ou a-t-on proposé quelque chose depuis notre dernière rencontre?

Le président: Dites-nous ce que vous en pensez M. Brady. Que pensez-vous de l'autre proposition? C'est une des préoccupations de notre comité. Il y a deux façons d'aborder le problème et le principe de l'une est très différent de l'autre.

M. Brady: M. Stroud a quelque chose à dire.

M. Stroud: Eh bien! nous avons discuté de cette question avant de venir ici et nous avons estimé qu'il fallait tenir compte des recommandations du rapport Woods plutôt que des recommandations du Livre blanc. Je dirais que nos propres membres sont touchés par cette disposition sur l'invalidité multiple et ceci tient compte des aveugles de guerre qui sont aussi des amputés de guerre. On peut dire 420, c'est-à-dire un nombre pas très considérable et je pense qu'il faut tenir compte de cette recommandation plutôt que de la recommandation du Livre blanc. Je ne crois pas que ces gens reçoivent une pension suffisante. Nous sommes au courant à Toronto, nous savons qu'il s'agit d'invalides atteints de graves invalidités et de grands mutilés et je pense que vous serez tous d'accord que les recommandations du rapport Woods sont plus généreuses que l'autre et il faut donc lui donner suite.

Le président: Je ne doute pas que tous les membres du comité sont sympathiques à l'égard de ce groupe et ils accepteront toute mendation which is reasonable that can be accepted. If you were to go to the $4,100 base then take 350 per cent of the $4,100 base and add the attendance allowance on top of that, that would set something like $17,000 or $18,000 pensions for those cases. Is this the objective?

Mr. Stroud: No, not quite, but we definitely feel that the percentage should go higher than 100 per cent. However, there is no doubt there has to be a maximum ceiling. We have some old chaps who actually have over 200 per cent pension disability but of course are receiving 100 per cent of the present basic rate. I am sure when thinking of the legislation there should be a ceiling set. As you say it could be $16,000 or $18,000, but again we stress that there is no amount of money that could ever compensate these fellows for the loss of their sight and their arm.

The Chairman: There is no disputing that. Money will never compensate; this we know. Many of us are veterans here and we realize there is no way you can compensate for the suffering, especially of this group in monetary terms. However, the question in terms of setting up the structure which has some sort of internal consistency to it and which has a reasonable prospect of being accepted, is the kind of problem the Committee has to cope with. The White Paper has proposed a very different approach in principle to the recommendations. What I am trying to do is see if there is any interest whatsoever in your group in the alternative approach which has been put forward in the White Paper.

Mr. Stroud: We prefer not to mention dollars and cents, but there definitely should be some consideration over and above the 100 per cent and over and above the dollars and cents in the White Paper. We still maintain it should be on a percentage basis and not on a dollar basis.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr Chairman, previous delegations made the point that it was not the amount they were concerned with, but the principle that it should be as of right, rather than on a welfare basis.

The Chairman: This again is a fundamental point, Mr. Knowles, and it is a question of principle which is, as you say, the Committee should be thinking about at this point; the method of approach and the principles behind it. Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Bigg: There is a very great doubt, and this may sound strange coming from me, because I think over the years I have been recommandation raisonnable, mais si on tient compte du $4,100 de base alors prenons 350 p. 100 de $4,100 et ajoutons l'allocation de présence en sus et nous obtiendrons une pension de $17,000 ou $18,000. Est-ce là l'objectif?

M. Stroud: Non, pas tout à fait. Je pense que ceci pourrait aller au-delà de 100 p. 100 mais il n'y a pas de doute qu'il doit y avoir un plafond maximum. Nous avons des pensionnés qui sont invalides à 200 p. 100 et qui reçoivent une pension de 100 p. 100 du montant de base. Je ne doute pas que lorsqu'on songera à une loi, il faudra établir un plafond mais nous savons qu'il n'y a aucune somme d'argent, évidemment, qui peut compenser la perte d'un membre ou de la vue.

Le président: Bien sûr, l'argent ne compensera jamais pour la perte d'un membre, ou une invalidité grave. Il n'y a pas de façon de compenser ou de réparer les souffrances subies par ces gens. En ce qui concerne une structure à établir, je pense qu'il faut considérer que le comité doit faire face ici à un problème grave. Nous cherchons à voir si votre groupe aurait des solutions de rechange à proposer par rapport à ce qui est énoncé dans le Livre blanc.

M. Stroud: Eh bien! en ce qui concerne l'argent, je pense qu'il faut songer à donner plus que le 100 p. 100 ainsi que le rapport du Livre blanc l'indique. Il faut tenir compte d'un rapport de pourcentage plutôt que du rapport d'argent à verser.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Ce n'est pas le montant qui est mis en question mais le principe, c'est un droit et non pas une mesure de bien-être.

Le président: Oui, c'est un point tout à fait fondamental que vous venez de signaler, M. Knowles, c'est un point de principe, une question de principe que notre comité doit étudier. Il s'agit des méthodes d'approche et des principes qui appuient ces recommandations.

M. Bigg: Il y a certains aspects qui peuvent sembler bizarres ici d'autant plus que j'étudie depuis des années la question des Anciens very sympathetic to all claims from veterans; however, we claim on the one hand to remain consistent and base everything on the ability to make your living as a labourer, yet this White Paper, I think generously, has suggested that the taxpayer of Canada is willing to go beyond that in extreme cases of suffering and sacrifice.

What we, in the Committee, are worrying about is to try to bring these two conflicting elements together and that is why we ask the question. We have our own private views on it, but we are wondering just how much thinking you people have done on it when you ask us on the one hand to be consistent and on the other hand to be inconsistent. It is something which we have to resolve. The White Paper, as I have said, has broken the ice at least and said we consider something over and beyond the labouring level.

The Chairman: Recognition of a problem and saying that something should be done, yes.

Mr. Bigg: Another principle on which we can work in limited cases.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Except that I do not think that it is inconsistent to recognize the special handicap that goes with several disabilities.

The Chairman: I do not think anyone is disputing that. The problem is what is a recommendation that will give a consistent range of awards of pensions to everyone receiving a pension. If you were to take a small group and put them through to a very high ceiling what would this do to the structure of pensions? The ceiling proposed is 350 per cent of basic and there are additional allowances beyond that. Mr. Whicher.

Mr. Whicher: You, and others, have emphasized that no amount of money can possibly pay these fellows for the pain and suffering—

The Chairman: There is no way.

Mr. Whicher: —for what they have done. But the question to the gentleman at the head table and the delegation is: what is a figure that can be described, for no other word probably, as reasonable?

Adopting what is given in the White Paper some chaps are going to get about $10,000 a year. Certainly I would not take their position if I got $50,000 a year and I am sure that the other members of the Committee agree with that too, but what is a reasonable figure? We, and I am sure the government, want to be fair, that they get roughly $10,000 a year combattants, d'une part, nous voulons rester logiques et fonder toutes nos recommandations sur la possibilité de permettre à ces gens de gagner leur vie et, d'autre part, le Livre blanc, nous suggère que, les contribuables du Canada sont prêts à aller plus loin dans les cas d'extrêmes souffrances et d'invalidités graves. Ce qui nous inquiète au comité, ou ce que nous cherchons à faire en fait, c'est de concilier les deux éléments opposés. Voilà pourquoi nous posons la question, nous avons nos vues personnelles à ce sujet mais nous voulons savoir jusqu'à quel point vous avez étudié la question et comme il faut être logique, il faut résoudre le problème ici parce que le Livre blanc, nous a permis d'aller au-delà du niveau de travail.

Le président: Oui, reconnaître le problème et déclarer qu'il faut faire quelque chose.

M. Bigg: Je pense que nous pouvons étudier ces questions dans certains cas limités.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je crois qu'il serait opportun de reconnaître le désavantage particulier qui accompagne plusieurs invalidités.

Le président: Non, personne n'est contre ce principe. Il s'agit de savoir quelle est la recommandation qui permettra de donner une pension raisonnable à toutes les personnes qui reçoivent des pensions. Quelle serait l'influence de cette recommandation par rapport à la structure des pensions? Le plafond proposé est de 350 p. 100 de l'allocation de base et il pourrait y avoir des allocations au-delà de cette allocation.

M. Whicher: Vous avez souligné qu'aucune somme d'argent ne peut compenser les Anciens combattants qui sont invalides ou qui ont souffert pendant la guerre.

Le président: Il n'y a pas moyen.

M. Whicher: Mais, nous voudrions savoir des délégations, quel est le chiffre qui peut être considéré comme un chiffre raisonnable et, en adaptant ce qui est donné dans le Livre blanc, certains membres obtiendront $10,000 par année et certes, je ne voudrais pas me mettre à leur place même si j'avais $50,000 par année. Je pense que tous les membres du comité sont d'accord avec moi là-dessus mais quel est donc le chiffre ou la somme raisonnable? Je pense que le gouvernement veut être juste et, si c'est $10,000 par année sans augmenter la pension de base, sans impôt, diriezwithout increasing, I might add, the basic pension at all along with their care allowance with no tax on it. The Chairman has pointed out that if we went up to what was suggested by some associations, then perhaps these fellows would be getting $16,000 to $17,000 a year. Yes, and I am trying to be somewhat conservative as far as the figures are concerned, tax free. Many people could say this is not enough.

Why not give them $50,000? What is a fair figure? Surely a fair figure is one where they have all the wants of life satisfied that they are capable of having. They should have no financial worries whatsoever. They would be able to have a car and so on. It was also suggested by the War Amps yesterday that the $250 care allowance per month not be taken away while the veteran goes into the hospital. With that I think that the Committee as a whole agrees but this is another benefit that we have to think about in the over-all picture. Therefore the question is: Somewhere along the line you have to get at a figure. I know you do not want to mention that, but the government has to think about these figures and we have to think about it and the taxpayer has to think about it too. There is just not a big enough dollars and cents figure to pay these fellows, we all agree with that. There is a reasonable one somewhere. Some of these chaps are getting roughly $10,000 a year now without any increase with what is suggested in the White Paper. How high can we go? Can you give us any suggestions at all?

Mr. Brady: Well I can give you a suggestion. I will not give you a figure, because we belong to the national chartered veterans organizations and they are studying the White Paper, really digging into it, and Don Thompson is here today. I am sure when their turn comes up, the Royal Canadian Legion, they will be throwing a figure at you. Therefore we do not want to say one figure and have them say something else. We will put it this way: Why not take the best of the Woods Report and the best of the White Paper and we will buy that for them, because after all there are only a few war amps.

The Chairman: What about people who are just under 100 per cent? Would they not immediately feel that there was far too great a gap between the rate of pension that they were receiving and the other amounts that a small few would get?

Mr. Brady: You will run into that, that is human nature, so to speak. I think all and all no matter what veteran, whether he belonged to the Army, the Air Force or the Navy, will vous comme le président l'a dit, si nous acceptons cette suggestion, tous les membres pourraient obtenir peut-être $16,000 ou $17,000 par année et je suis prudent quand il s'agit de chiffres, et ce n'est pas soumis à l'impôt et, on pourrait même dire que ce n'est pas assez.

Pourquoi ne pas donner $50,000 à ce compte-là. Qu'est-ce que c'est un chiffre raisonnable? Certes, c'est un chiffre qui permet à tout le monde, qui permet aux Anciens combattants de ne pas avoir de soucis financiers, d'avoir une voiture, etc. Il a été suggéré par les amputés de guerre, que la somme de $250 par mois pour l'allocation de soins ne soit pas retenue au cours d'un séjour à l'hôpital par le pensionné. Je pense que le comité est d'accord que c'est un chiffre raisonnable mais il y a également d'autres avantages dont il faut tenir compte. Donc, voici la question globale, à un certain moment, il faudra déterminer un chiffre. Je sais que vous ne voulez pas le mentionner mais le gouvernement devra tenir compte de certains chiffres ainsi que le comité et le contribuable canadien également. Donc, nous savons tous que l'argent ne suffit pas pour compenser ces gens mais, en tous cas, il faut arriver à un montant. Ce que le Livre blanc propose, c'est $10,000 par année sans augmentation mais jusqu'où pouvons-nous aller? Pouvez-vous nous proposer un chiffre?

M. Brady: Eh bien! je ne vous donnerai pas de chiffres parce que nous appartenons à une association d'Anciens combattants et nous avons étudié à fond le Livre blanc et M. Don Thompson est ici, je suis certain que lorsque le tour de la région canadienne arrivera elle pourra nous communiquer un chiffre. Nous ne voudrions pas établir de chiffre, et qu'ils en établissent un autre. Nous préférons attendre. Mais, voici ce que je propose. Pourquoi ne pas prendre ce qu'il y a de mieux dans le rapport Woods et ce qu'il y a de mieux dans le Livre blanc, car après tout, il n'y a que quelques amputés de guerre.

Le président: Eh bien! que dire des gens qui ont juste moins de 100 p. 100. Est-ce qu'il y aura un écart trop grand entre la pension qu'ils reçoivent et les autres montants que les quelques autres toucheront?

M. Brady: Eh bien! Il faut tenir compte de la nature humaine bien sûr mais je pense que les amputés de guerre obtiendront 100 p. 100, parce qu'il s'agit, comme John Stroud l'a men-go along 100 percent to see the war amps being treated fairly because these fellows are, as John Stroud mentioned, basket cases and people such as that. They are very few in number, so what if you even gave them $20,000 a year, let them enjoy it. Like you say, that will help him with a car, and all that. He will not live that high off the hog. He will have a car and may get better attention, and things like that, but looking at it through the eyes of a war amp and a basket case, I think we should give him all the enjoyment we can.

Mr. Whicher: We all agree with that. What about the poor fellow who has a real bad heart which was brought about by war service—and this has happened on many occasions—who may only be drawing a 90 per cent pension and we know darn well he cannot work and he cannot enjoy life at all, he cannot drive a car and there are many things he cannot do.

Mr. Brady: Now that you have brought up the heart claims, that is going to be dealt with later on in our brief. Do you want to carry on?

The Chairman: I appreciate that, and we are asking difficult questions, Mr. Brady. We are interested in your views on the problem. Mr. Thompson had his hand up.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): I would just like to comment that I think the amount is going to be taken care of. I am not so concerned with the amount or with the man whose multiple disabilities can be measured by the loss of an arm or a leg or his eyesight. I am concerned about—and in my opinion this delegation has a better understanding of this than any other group of war veterans—the residual effects of certain conditions that cannot be measured in terms of the loss of a limb. In your brief you speak of avitaminosis and malnutrition, and all the rest of it that was involved, that brings out disabilities that you cannot measure and heart conditions are one of them. I have at least three pensioners who are not Hong Kong veterans, although I will use this as an example, who are positively being turned down by the Advocate General. I got into a very bitter exchange on a couple of these cases, and he sauced me back by saying, "If some of you parliamentarians would wake up and change some of the regulations so that we could take care of these people, perhaps we would, but we have to go by the regulations", and this is where I think some attention should be given.

tionné, d'invalides. Ils sont en somme assez peu nombreux. Si on leur accorde $20,000 par année, permettez-leur d'en jouir. Comme vous le dites, cela les aidera à se procurer une voiture et de l'aide. Il faut donner aux amputés de guerre et aux invalides toutes les possibilités de jouir de la vie.

M. Whicher: Nous sommes tous d'accord. Que dire des personnes qui ont des affections cardiaques par suite de leur participation à la guerre? Nous savons très bien que certaines personnes qui reçoivent seulement une pension de 90 p. 100 ne peuvent pas travailler, ne peuvent pas jouir de la vie et qu'elles ne peuvent même pas conduire une automobile, qu'il y a des choses qu'elles ne peuvent pas faire.

M. Brady: Bon! alors, vous parlez des personnes qui ont des affections cardiaques. C'est une autre question. Voulez-vous poursuivre le débat là-dessus, monsieur le président?

Le président: Oui. Il s'agit de questions difficiles, M. Brady. Nous désirons connaître vos vues sur le problème. M. Thompson, vous avez une question à poser?

M. Thompson (Red Deer): Je voudrais faire tout simplement un commentaire. Je pense qu'on tiendra compte du montant. Je ne m'inquiète pas tellement du montant ou des invalidités multiples qui peuvent être évaluées, par exemple, la perte d'un bras, d'une jambe ou de la vue, ce qui me préoccupe ici, (à mon avis, la délégation a une meilleure compréhension de cette situation que tout autre organisme d'anciens combattants) ce sont les conséquences résiduelles qui ne peuvent pas être mesurées en fonction de la perte d'un membre. Dans votre exposé, vous parlez d'avitaminose, de sous-alimentation et de tout ce qui cause des invalidités qui ne peuvent être évaluées. Par exemple, les maladies cardiaques. Je vais me servir d'un exemple. Je connais le cas de trois pensionnés qui ne sont pas des anciens combattants de Hong Kong. Leur cas n'est pas reconnu par l'avocat général. J'ai eu de très violentes discussions avec lui au sujet de deux de ces cas. Il m'a répliqué: «Nous nous occuperions de ces gens, si certains d'entre vous, membres du Parlement, preniez la peine de vous réveiller et de modifier les règlements de façon à nous permettre de tenir compte de ces gens. Nous, nous devons nous en tenir au règlement. C'est

[Text]

I agree with you, whether it is $20,000, $10,000, or whatever is considered a decent, respectable standard of living. It is for some of the multiple disabilities that show up in later years, as you say in your brief, which the Pension Commission say are not attributable to service.

Mr. Bigg: But they die.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Worse than that is the living death that some of them have and death is a release from it. I think this is the kind of problem that we have to be very careful about and very attentive to. I do not know the answer but I am sure that it is the responsibility of the Committee and of those who are drafting the regulations to make sure that the new regulations that come out are not going to restrict those people who actually are in need of help and who have multiple disabilities that you cannot just measure in terms of a cliché.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments? There are a number of other points in the brief. Pages 5 and 6 deal with multiple disabilities and on page 6 the question of the Pension Appeal Board is raised and this has been the subject of discussion on previous occasions.

Mr. Brady: As the representative of the Hong Kong Association I attended the opening meeting of the National Chartered Veterans Organization on Thursday and I would like to go on record as saying that we back what Dominion Chairman Kohaly said on Thursday afternoon. For the benefit of our fellows we gave our point of view on the Pension Appeal Board, that we would like to see an independent appeal board, but I do not think we will delve into all this again because you fellows went over it very carefully on Thursday afternoon and we do not want to be repetitive. You know our feelings on it; they were given out pretty well by Chairman Kohaly at that meeting on Thursday, unless our fellows have something to say on it.

The Chairman: Are there any question anyone wants to ask? Pages 6 and 7 also deal with the Appeal Board. Page 8 raises the problem of automatic age increases. Are there any questions on this subject? Mr. Weatherhead.

là un point qui doit faire l'objet d'une certaine attention.

Je suis de votre avis, que le montant soit de $20,000, de $10,000 ou tout simplement une somme permettant d'avoir un niveau de vie raisonnable. Les invalidités multiples qui se manifestent plus tard, comme vous l'avez dit, dans votre mémoire, lorsque la Commission des pensions décide que ce n'est pas une conséquence du service militaire constituent un problème dont il faudra tenir compte et étudier très attentivement.

M. Bigg: Mais, ils meurent.

M. Thompson (Red Deer): Pis que cela. Pour certains d'entre eux, la vie est pire que la mort. La mort les délivre de leurs peines. Je ne connais pas la réponse à ce problème, mais je suis sûr qu'il incombe au comité et à ceux qui rédigent les règlements, de voir, de veiller à ce que les nouveaux règlements n'imposent pas de restrictions aux gens qui ont besoin de soins et qui souffrent d'infirmités multiples, qui ne peuvent pas être mesurées ou évaluées de façon simple.

Le président: Désirez-vous faire d'autres observations? Les pages 5 et 6 du mémoire traitent des infirmités multiples. La page 6 parle de la Commission d'appel des Pensions qui a fait l'objet de discussions au cours de rencontres précédentes.

M. Brady: A titre de représentant de l'Association des anciens combattants de Hong Kong j'étais présent à l'assemblée d'ouverture de l'Organisme national des anciens combattants tenue jeudi. Je dois dire que nous approuvons ce qu'a dit M. Kohaly, président d'une association du Dominion, jeudi après-midi. Nous avons exprimé notre point de vue au sujet de la Commission des appels, nous avons dit que nous aimerions cela s'il existait une Commission d'appels indépendante. Nous ne reviendrons pas sur cette question parce que jeudi après-midi vous avez étudié toute cette question à fond et il est inutile de se répéter je pense. Vous savez quelles sont nos idées à ce sujet; notre président, M. Kohaly, vous les a fait connaître à la réunion de jeudi, à moins que nos compagnons auraient quelque chose à ajouter.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions messieurs? Les pages 6 et 7 traitent de la Commission d'appel. A la page 8, il s'agit des augmentations automatiques en ce qui concerne l'âge des anciens combattants. Y a-t-il d'autres questions? M. Weatherhead.

[Texte]

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Brady, are you recommending that all 80 and 90 per cent pensioners be automatically increased to 100 per cent at a certain age?

Mr. Brady: That is correct. We are going along with the Woods Committee Report. They opened it up. Before it used to be that the automatic age increase was just because of gunshot wounds or direct enemy action, and the way we read the Woods Report it opened it up for permanent injury and not necessarily direct enemy action, so we figured—being in a prison camp for nearly four years—that avitaminosis is permanent injury, none of the fellows have yet been cured of it, so we would like to fall into this group. When our fellows get to be 55, or ages like that, they would get an automatic age increase. We have classified avitaminosis as a permanent injury.

Mr. Weatherhead: Does the White Paper recommend at the present time that all permanent disabilities be put into this category and not just gunshot wounds?

Mr. Brady: As I understand it, yes.

Mr. Weatherhead: Is there some question about whether avitaminosis would fall in this category or not?

Mr. Brady: This is actually the first time we have had a chance to talk about this permanent injury and we are hoping that you people or the CPC will classify people with avitaminosis in the category of permanent injury.

Mr. Weatherhead: At the present time you are not sure whether they will classify it that way or not?

Mr. Brady: At the present time we are not sure. As far as we know, we are not in that category.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could have Mr. Reynolds or someone make a note of that and we might question the Canadian pension officials on this later on.

The Chairman: Yes, I think it is a matter on which we will be asking further questions. Certainly the White Paper does not appear to grant the request in the form in which it is put before us.

On page 9 income tax exemption is referred to I think we stated to the group the

[Interprétation]

M. Weatherhead: M. Brady, est-ce que vous recommandez de porter automatiquement à 100 p. 100 la pension de ceux qui reçoivent 90 p. 100 de la pension, dès qu'ils atteignent un certain âge.

M. Brady: Oui. Nous suivons le rapport du comité Woods. Autrefois, les augmentations automatiques pour raison d'âge ne s'appliquaient que dans le cas des blessés de guerre. Le rapport Woods vise les lésions de nature permanente, pas nécessairement les blessures subies au combat. C'est pourquoi nous pensons que l'avitaminose dont souffrent ceux qui ont séjourné presque quatre années dans un camp de prisonniers est une lésion de nature permanente. A notre connaissance, personne n'en a été guéri. Nous aimerions donc être classés dans ce groupe et obtenir une augmentation automatique pour raison d'âge à 55 ans ou à un âge semblable. Nous avons classé l'avitaminose parmi les lésions de nature permanente.

M. Weatherhead: Est-ce que le Livre blanc propose en ce moment que toutes les invalidités permanentes soient classées dans cette catégorie?

M. Brady: D'après ce que je crois comprendre, oui.

M. Weatherhead: Est-ce qu'on s'est demandé si l'avitaminose doit faire partie de cette catégorie?

M. Brady: C'est la première fois que nous avons l'occasion de discuter cette lésion de nature permanente. Nous espérons que les membres du comité et les membres du CPC classent l'avitaminose dans cette catégorie également.

M. Weatherhead: En ce moment, vous n'êtes pas tout à fait certains qu'elle peut l'être.

M. Brady: En tous les cas, nous ne sommes pas dans cette catégorie je pense, en ce moment.

M. Weatherhead: Non. Monsieur le président, on pourrait peut-être prendre acte de cette question puis on pourrait peut-être interroger ensuite les agents de la commission canadienne des pensions plus tard.

Le président: Oui, bien sûr, nous poserons des questions supplémentaires à ce sujet. Certes, le Livre blanc ne semble pas donner droit à cette demande. A la page 9, il est question de la déduction d'impôt sur le revenu. Je pense, M. Brady, que nous l'avons dit aux autres l'autre jour, qu'il y aurait des other day, Mr. Brady, that there will be public hearings on the publication of the White Paper on taxation and that an opportunity will be given for various veterans' groups to appear and make representations in so far as the proposed changes in the tax law affect them. I question whether it is within the terms of reference of this Committee as given to us by the House to deal with this problem. We are interested in your views and we certainly do not want to stop you from putting on the record what you are concerned about, but I think in terms of the task of this Committee it falls a little outside our scope.

Mr. Brady: I would like to go on record as saying that as far as the income tax exemption goes we feel that we should be exempted; it should remain as it. That we should pay no income tax on it because the pension is a right and the fellows did it for the service of their country and when they came back they had their disability pensions for what they suffered for their country, and all that. I guess the only thing we can say is that we would like to see it remain as is—all war pensions exempted from income tax.

The Chairman: Mr. Whicher?

• 1120

Mr. Whicher: The other day, or yesterday, when we were talking with The War Amputations of Canada, it was suggested if they did go before a committee on taxation to express this view—and you might also wish to express it—it would be a good idea if you let members of the Veterans Affairs Committee know when you are appearing so that we could be there to give you not only oral but moral support. I feel that the majority of us agree with you on this particular subject. I do, I might add.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): This is what I had in mind yesterday, Mr. Chairman, when I brought this matter up.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Guay. In other words, if you decide to make a representation, or to join with other veterans groups in making a representation, I am sure there are members of the Committee who would like to be informed so that they could attend and lend their moral assistance to you, because I am sure that most of those here are in agreement with that view.

Mr. Brady: We thank you for that support. No doubt Mr. Don Thompson, the National audiences publiques et la publication d'un Livre blanc sur la fiscalité, que les différents groupes d'anciens combattants auront l'occasion de se présenter au cours des audiences en vue de faire connaître leurs idées sur la fiscalité. Je me demande si le mandat de notre comité, qui nous a été donné par la Chambre des communes, nous permet d'étudier ce problème, Nous ne voudrions pas dire que cette question ne nous intéresse pas, mais la tâche du comité n'est pas, ne comprend pas tout à fait ce problème-là; c'est un peu à l'extérieur de la portée du travail du comité.

M. Brady: En ce qui concerne les déductions d'impôt ou les exemptions d'impôt, nous pensons que nous devrions avoir des exemptions parce que la pension est un droit, les gens qui sont allés à la guerre pour défendre leur pays ont acquis des droits à la pension d'invalidité. Tout ce que nous pouvons ajouter c'est que nous voudrions que la disposition reste telle qu'elle est, que tous les pensionnés de guerre soient exempts d'impôt.

Le président: Monsieur Whicher.

M. Whicher: L'autre jour ou hier, je pense, lorsque les amputés de guerre du Canada sont venus témoigner on a proposé que s'ils allaient se présenter devant un comité sur la fiscalité pour exprimer leur opinion, ce que vous aimeriez peut-être faire, ce serait une bonne idée de faire connaître aux membres du Comité des affaires des anciens combattants, la date de votre témoignage afin que nous puissions y assister pour vous donner un appui verbal et moral. Je pense que la plupart d'entre nous partage votre avis là-dessus. Je dois dire que je fais partie de cette catégorie.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): C'est ce que je pensais hier lorsque j'ai soulevé la question.

Le président: Oui monsieur Guay. Autrement dit, si vous décidez de présenter des instances ou de vous joindre à d'autres groupes d'anciens combattants pour le faire, je suis convaincu que certains membres du Comité aimeraient en être informés, afin d'assister à ces réunions et de vous apporter leur appui moral, car je pense que la plupart des personnes qui se trouvent dans cette enceinte partagent cet avis.

M. Brady: Nous vous remercions de cet appui. Il ne fait aucun doute que monsieur

[Texte]

Secretary of The National Veterans Organizations of Canada, will be in touch with us about this.

The Chairman: On page 10 the point raised is stabilization of pensions. There are two paragraphs, in English and in French. Has any member any question on pension stabilization?

Page 10-a, "Benefit of the Doubt": It is my understanding that the proposals of the White Paper would meet a good part of what you are discussing in this section, Mr. Brady. What is your understanding?

Mr. Brady: We are pleased with what we hear is supposed to happen. The CPC officials are supposed to have a more generous view on the benefit of the doubt. We certainly hope they do, because we have some claims before the CPC at the moment. Mr. Thompson was talking a while ago about heart conditions and claims such as that. We hope they will open it up so that the benefit of the doubt will be given with that generous consideration to the applicant. This is what we want to go on record for.

Mr. Stroud: I believe one of the reasons for our concern about the benefit of the doubt—I am speaking for the Toronto branch—is that we have produced a number of Hong Kong cases that are suffering from arthritis, as an example; and there were several with heart conditions, who appeared before the Canadian Pension Commission and were denied entitlement and pensions; and there are also cases of defective hearing among our Hong Kong boys in their middle and late forties, and they have been denied entitlement. This is why we are concerned about the benefit of the doubt.

After all these years they go back to what we originally complained about when we were discharged. They say, "There is no mention on your file". We have no medical records on many of our prisoner-of-war camps that we can refer to for these heart conditions. This is why we want a more generous interpretation of the benefit of the doubt for those who are suffering from these disabilities which are showing up among our men at this age.

The Chairman: The automatic 50 per cent pension will meet a good part of these, will it not?

Mr. Stroud: I think so, yes.

[Interprétation]

Don Thompson, secrétaire national des organisations nationales des anciens combattants du Canada communiquera avec vous à ce sujet.

Le président: A la page dix, on soulève la question de la stabilisation des pensions. Il y a deux paragraphes, en anglais et français. Y a-t-il des questions sur la stabilisation de la pension?

A la page 10a, il y a la question du bénéfice du doute. Je crois savoir que les propositions du Livre blanc permettraient de répondre dans une large mesure à ce que vous demandez, monsieur Brady. Comment interprétez-vous cette disposition?

M. Brady: Nous sommes très heureux d'entendre vos prévisions. Les fonctionnaires supérieurs de la Commission canadienne des pensions sont censés avoir une opinion plus large sur le bénéfice du doute. Nous l'espérons parce que nous avons présenté certaines plaintes à la Commission canadienne des pensions. Vous vous rappelerez que monsieur Thompson parlait, il y a quelques instants, de troubles cardiaques et de plaintes de ce genre. Nous espérons que ces gens se montreront généreux et qu'on accordera le bénéfice du doute, et portera une attention bienveillante à l'égard du requérant. C'est ce que nous voudrions insérer au compte rendu.

M. Stroud: Une des raisons pour lesquelles nous nous sommes intéressés à cette question,—je parle au nom de la succursale de Toronto—c'est qu'un certain nombre d'anciens combattants de Hong Kong, qui souffrent d'arthrite et plusieurs de troubles cardiaques qui se sont présentés devant la Commission canadienne des pensions, se sont vu refuser la pension. Il y a aussi des cas d'audience d'anciens combattants de Hong Kong entre 45 et 50 ans à qui on a refusé toute pension. Voilà pourquoi nous nous intéressons à la question du bénéfice du doute. Après toutes ces années, on revient à ce qu'on s'opposait lorsqu'on a été libéré. Ils disent qu'on n'en fait pas mention sur le dossier. Pour plusieurs camps de concentration, il n'existe pas de dossiers médicaux qui soulignent ces troubles. C'est pourquoi nous demandons une interprétation plus large de l'article du bénéfice du doute pour les personnes qui ont souffert des infirmités qui se manifestent chez nos hommes à cet âge.

Le président: La pension automatique de 50 p. 100 répondra en grande partie à ces questions, n'est-ce pas?

M. Stroud: Je le crois, en effet.

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg had a question.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Stroud, do you have any lawyers in your Association working on these legal problems such as the interpretation of the Act, and so on? Does your association have any legal advice?

Mr. Stroud: No, actually we do not. We are just all Hong Kong veterans in the organization. We just have our Ottawa representative, Mr. MacDougall. Sometimes we are not too sure and we have to get him to hunt out the information either from the Canadian Pension Commission or other departments.

Mr. Bigg: The reason I ask is that I have a further question, whether you thought that the new presumption might be more valuable than presumptions in favour of the veteran written into the Act, and might be more valuable than a mere pious hope that the Act would be interpreted in favour of the veteran? Presumptions a lawyer can handle generally with much more assurance of success on the particular point.

For example, in the case of medical evidence the Commission is seized with trouble when they are giving the veteran the benefit of the doubt, but they cannot do other than weigh the evidence before them. The doctors will only bring certain types of evidence before them. For instance, they refuse to discuss cardiac problems and then the Commission is handcuffed in making a decision in favour of the veteran under Section 70. Whereas a presumption that cardiac trouble could be caused by being a prisoner-of-war, as our Chairman has said, is covered for the Hong Kong veterans under the blanket 50 per cent, and very rightly, I think, too.

Not only of that; you are representing other veterans groups by being part of them. Perhaps only soldier because of his service might have cardiac trouble. Therefore if we had that presumption we would have a presumption which the Crown would have to destroy rather than forcing the veteran to prove it. In this way, apart from Section 70, you have a much better first entry into the whole question. Otherwise he is out in the cold. These nervous and cardiac troubles are the most difficult cases and up until now I feel that the presumption has not been on the right side of the fence.

Mr. Stroud: Exactly; actually another consideration in relation to the benefit of the

[Interpretation]

Le président: Monsieur Bigg avait une question à poser.

M. Bigg: Dans votre Association, avez-vous des avocats qui étudient des questions d'ordre juridique, telles que l'interprétation de la loi et autres? Votre Association fait-elle appel aux conseils d'un avocat?

M. Stroud: Non, pas en ce moment. L'Association n'est formée que d'anciens combattants de Hong Kong. Nous avons un représentant à Ottawa, monsieur MacDougall. Parfois, nous ne sommes pas certains d'une chose et nous devons lui demander d'obtenir le renseignement soit de la Commission canadienne des pensions ou des autres ministères.

M. Bigg: Je vous pose cette question parce que j'aimerais savoir si la nouvelle hypothèse serait peut-être plus valable que celles qui sont en faveur des anciens combattants, dans la Loi et si elle serait plus valable que le simple désir que la loi soit interprétée en faveur des anciens combattants? Ces présomptions peuvent être traitées avec beaucoup plus de chances de succès par un avocat. Par exemple, dans le cas de la preuve médicale, la Commission est saisie du trouble lorsqu'elle donne à l'ancien combattant le bénéfice du doute, mais elle ne peut pas décider de la preuve devant eux. Les médecins lui présenteront certains genres de témoignage. Par exemple, ils refusent de traiter des troubles cardiaques et ainsi, la Commission n'est pas libre de rendre un jugement favorable à l'ancien combattant en vertu de l'article 70. Les troubles cardiaques qui peuvent provenir d'un emprisonnement de guerre, comme l'a dit monsieur le président, sont protégés pour les anciens combattants de Hong Kong par le 50 p. 100 et en toute justice, je le crois.

Pas seulement cela, par essence, vous représentez d'autres groupes d'anciens combattants. Il est possible que tout soldat puisse avoir des affections cardiaques par suite de son service. S'il y a donc ce préjugé, la Couronne devrait le détruire au lieu de forcer l'ancien combattant à prouver son cas. De cette manière, à part l'article 70, vous pouvez mieux comprendre toute la question. Autrement, il est laissé à lui-même. Ces cas de troubles cardiaques et nerveux sont difficiles et jusqu'à maintenant, l'hypothèse ne parlait pas du bon point de vue.

M. Stroud: En effet, en ce moment, nous nous intéressons à une autre question qui a doubt clause about which we are concerned is the entitlement to treatment. We actually have case histories of men having gone to Department of Veterans Affairs hospitals, having been diagnosed as having arthritis, or having a heart condition, and having been turned down because they had no entitlement to it. These are definite cases. I presented 12 such cases to the Canadian Pension Commission on arthritis. They admit they have been diagnosed as having arthritis, but they have been refused.

An hon. Member: I know of a couple of cases that were diagnosed as being arthritis and they ended up as cardiac trouble. In one case they did not know for 10 years that it was really his heart that was bothering him and now unfortunately he is on his death bed and is not capable of making even a satisfactory submission or application; he is too sick to sign the papers, and all hopes of using Section 70, or the presumption, are gone. Have you had similar experiences? Have they been reported to you?

Mr. Stroud: The only case that I recall was one—and it is interesting—that happened only about a year ago. We had a case of a man who was receiving entitlement and a pension for a stomach ulcer condition. Modern medicine is now able to detect hiatus hernia. When he came into Sunnybrook Hospital they said he had a hiatus hernia and did not have this ulcer. Consequently, his entitlement for his ulcer was taken away from him. Six months later that man had a perforated ulcer. Apparently it was in a part of his stomach where it would not show up on X-rays. Fortunately we got him to the hospital and they were able to operate within six hours, or he would have been dead. Here is indecision. One minute they give you the entitlement and then they come along and detect something else. How can we blame the doctors. This did not show up on the X-rays there is no doubt about that; there was no ulcer on the X-ray. It was in the pit of his stomach and was active, and he did have it.

Mr. Bigg: I might make the presumption that if you ate army food for five years you might have ulcer.

Mr. Stroud: Very true.

An hon. Member: Or no stomach!

The Chairman: Mr. MacRae?

Mr. MacRae: I have a very brief question for Mr. Stroud on a point he raised a moment ago. When the Hong Kong force returned to trait au bénéfice du doute, le droit aux traitements. Nous possédons des cas de personnes qui sont entrées aux hôpitaux du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, dont le diagnostic a décelé des traces d'arthrite ou de maladies cardiaques et ont dû être refusées parce qu'elles n'avaient pas droit. Il s'agit de cas bien précis. J'ai présenté 12 cas d'arthrite à la Commission canadienne des pensions. Ils admettent qu'on a diagnostiqué chez eux de l'arthrite, mais ils ont été refusés.

Une voix: Je connais une couple de cas dont on avait diagnostiqué des traces d'arthrite qui, après coup, se sont révélés des troubles cardiaques. Une personne en particulier, pendant dix ans n'a pas su que son cœur était à la source de ses difficultés et malheureusement aujourd'hui il est sur un lit de mort, incapable de faire une demande satisfaisante. Il est trop malade pour signer des documents et tout espoir de se référer à l'article 70 s'est évanoui. Avez-vous connu des cas semblables. Vous en a-t-on parlé?

M. Stroud: Le seul cas dont je me souviens est aussi un cas assez intéressant qui s'est produit l'an dernier. Il y avait le cas d'un homme qui a reçu une pension pour un ulcère d'estomac. La médecine moderne peut maintenant déceler une hernie de l'hiatus. Lorsqu'il est entré à l'hôpital Sunnybrook, on a dit qu'il avait une hernie, mais pas d'ulcère. Par conséquent, la pension à laquelle il avait droit à cause de son ulcère lui a été retirée. Six mois plus tard l'ulcère crevait. Apparemment, cela se trouvait dans une section de l'estomac qui était invisible aux rayons X. Heureusement, nous l'avons transporté à l'hôpital où on a pu l'opérer dans les six heures qui suivirent, sans quoi, il serait mort. Voilà un cas d'indécision. On accorde la pension un jour et ensuite, on trouve autre chose. Pouvons-nous jeter le blâme sur les médecins. C'était impossible de voir l'ulcère au rayon X. Cela se trouvait dans le creux de son estomac.

M. Bigg: Je serais porté à croire que si vous aviez mangé de la nourriture de l'armée pendant cinq ans, vous développeriez peut-être un ulcère.

M. Stroud: En effet.

Une voix: Ou vous n'auriez pas d'estomac.

Le président: Monsieur MacRae.

M. MacRae: J'aimerais poser une brève question à monsieur Stroud sur un sujet qu'il a soulevé plus tôt. Lorsque le contingent de Canada in 1945 I take it they brought back no medical records at all. That is, neither the medical officer nor any of the other officers were permitted to keep medical records. No provision was made for that. Therefore, you are not in the same position as the rest of us who have files. You have no medical records for the internment there?

Mr. Stroud: That is right. Actually, we were spread out in various camps in Japan. For example, at the beginning, in Niigata, Japan, we had no medical staff. All we had were the ordinary fellows who had taken a first aid course. They were our so-called medical doctors.

Mr. MacRae: There were no doctors?

Mr. Stroud: No doctors; later on, American doctors did come into our camp, but when we were first taken to Japan we had no medical doctors; just orderlies. They were the only ones.

The Chairman: Mr. Shore wishes to say a word of two. Mr. Shore.

Mr. Leslie W. Shore (National Secretary, Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada): At the camp I was in in Japan we had a Dr. Reid who was sent in with about 500 prisoners. Dr. Reid did a wonderful job. I can assure you he brought back all the records from Japanese prisoner-of-war camps. I saw those records. I made a copy of them and gave them to my medical orderly when I had to go north. As far as I know, they were presented to the Canadian government when that man returned. I know for sure that Dr. Reid flew over to Canada as soon as he could and that these records were given to the Canadian Government.

• 1130

The Chairman: But that would only cover a certain limited number of POW's, would it not.

Mr. Shore: We had 500 in our camp, sir, and we were the largest camp in Japan. From the time we arrived, as soon as he could get paper together, he made a record of every man. I read those records, I made a copy, and as far as I know my medical orderly gave these records to the Canadian Government—I think he did. At least Dr. Reid did. And up to the time I left Dr. Reid, in April, 1945, there was a very good record kept. Where these

Hong Kong est revenu au Canada en 1945, je crois qu'il n'avait pas rapporté de dossiers médicaux. Ainsi aucun officier n'avait le droit de tenir des dossiers médicaux. Aucune disposition n'a été prévue dans ce sens. Par conséquent, vous n'êtes pas dans la même position que nous qui possédons des dossiers. Vous ne possédez aucun dossier médical d'internement à Hong-Kong?

M. Stroud: En effet. Les militaires étaient internés dans divers camps au Japon. Ainsi, au début, à Niigata au Japon, nous n'avions pas de personnel médical. Nous avions tout simplement des gens qui avaient suivi un cours de premiers soins. On les appelait nos médecins?

M. MacRae: Il n'y avait pas de médecins?

M. Stroud: Non, plus tard, des médecins américains sont venus au camp, mais au début nous n'avions pas de médecin, mais uniquement des ambulanciers. C'était tout ce qu'il y avait.

Le président: Monsieur Shore voudrait faire un commentaire à ce sujet-là. Monsieur Shore.

M. Leslie Shore (secrétaire national de l'Association canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong): Au camp où j'étais prisonnier au Japon, le docteur Reid a été envoyé avec 500 prisonniers. Il a fait un travail merveilleux. Je puis vous assurer qu'il a rapporté tous les dossiers de prisonniers des camps du Japon. J'ai vu ces dossiers d'ailleurs, j'en ai fait une copie et je l'ai donnée à mon infirmier quand j'ai dû aller dans le Nord. Autant que je sache, ces dossiers ont été présentés au gouvernement canadien lorsqu'il est revenu au pays. Je suis certain que le docteur Reid est revenu au Canada aussi rapidement que possible pour veiller à ce que ces dossiers soient remis au gouvernement canadien.

Le président: Mais cela ne comprend qu'un certain nombre de prisonniers de guerre, n'est-ce pas?

M. Shore: Nous étions 500 dans ce camp et nous étions le plus gros camp de prisonniers au Japon. Et cet homme a dressé un dossier de tous les prisonniers de ce camp dès qu'il a pu se procurer de quoi écrire. J'ai lu ces dossiers, j'en ai pris une copie et pour autant que je sache, mon infirmier a envoyé ce rapport au gouvernement canadien. En tout cas, le docteur Reid l'a fait et quand j'ai quitté le docteur Reid en avril 1945, un excellent dos-records went to, I do not know, but Dr. Reid flew over especially.

Mr. MacRae: Did you say he was an American?

Mr. Shore: Dr. Reid is in Vancouver today.

Mr. MacRae: But was he an American?

Mr. Shore: No, he was a Canadian, one of our Canadian doctors—one of the four doctors. I know he turned those records in. Now what happened, I do not know. But he made a special trip, and he was the first out of Japan at the time.

Mr. Bigg: Do you have your copy of these records?

Mr. Shore: Unfortunately, no. I gave it to my medical orderly because I was afraid that when I went north they would be confiscated. All I had left was a diary which the Canadian Government did get, and I have a copy of that. There is no medical record in that, just a bunch of day-by-day records and the men who died. But I assure you Dr. Reid turned in his records.

Mr. Lionel Hurd (Past President, Quebec Branch, Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada): I served a certain period of time as the National President and during that time I tried to get all the information about what happened to the medical records. I am sure what Mr. Shore has told you is true in his case. I asked about the records that are kept at Bowen Road Hospital, where most of our bad cases received medical attention. That was originally the British Army hospital in Hong Kong and it became the prison hospital during our internment. I was given to understand that a few days before the surrender the Japanese doctor, who was a war criminal, went in and had those destroyed. That was given to me. I cannot prove this but I have to take the word of the source of this information. In Argyle Street Camp there were 20 Canadian officers put in the British officers camp. That was strictly for officers. I happened to be one of those 20 that were taken there. Those doctors there kept records for 20 of us. I had a copy, I brought mine home and I think Doctor Richardson photostatted it. As far as I know, that is the only copy in that camp that survived. Twenty is only a small number but they would all be helpful. Every one of them would be helpful. It would be like a survey, it would paint quite a good sier était établi. Où sont passés ces dossiers, je ne le sais pas, mais le docteur est venu spécialement en avion pour remettre ces dossiers.

M. MacRae: Était-il Américain?

M. Shore: Le docteur Reid habite actuellement à Vancouver.

M. MacRae: Mais était-il Américain?

M. Shore: Non, il était Canadien. C'est un des quatre médecins canadiens. Je sais qu'il a déposé ces dossiers. J'ignore où ces dossiers sont passés, mais il a fait le voyage spécialement et il a été le premier à quitter le Japon à l'époque.

M. Bigg: Avez-vous des exemplaires de ce rapport?

M. Shore: Non, je ne les ai malheureusement pas. Je les ai confiés à mon infirmier parce que j'avais pour qu'on les confisque quand je suis allé vers le Nord. Ce que j'ai gardé c'est un journal que j'ai pu remettre au gouvernement canadien et j'en ai une copie. Mais il n'y a pas de dossiers médicaux dans ce journal qui consiste en comptes rendus journaliers et où je notais le nom des prisonniers décédés. Mais je vous assure que le docteur Reid a remis ces dossiers.

M. Lionel Hurd (Président honoraire pour le Québec de l'Association Canadienne des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong): J'ai été pendant un certain temps le président national de l'Association et pendant tout ce temps j'ai voulu me renseigner pour savoir ce qui était arrivé aux dossiers médicaux. Je puis vous assurer que ce que M. Shore nous a expliqué est exactement ce qui s'est passé. Je me suis renseigné au sujet des dossiers qui sont conservés à l'hôpital Bowen Road où on a donné des soins à la plupart de nos prisonniers qui étaient sévèrement atteints. C'était en fait l'hôpital de l'armée britannique à Hong-Kong qui a servi d'hôpital de la prison pendant notre période d'internement. J'ai cru comprendre que quelques jours avant la capitulation, le médecin japonais qui était un criminel de guerre a fait détruire ces dossiers. Je ne peux pas le prouver, mais c'est ce qu'on m'a laissé entendre. Au camp Argyle Street, il y avait vingt officiers canadiens qui étaient internés dans les camps des officiers britanniques. Ce camp était uniquement réservé aux officiers.

J'étais un de ces vingt officiers. Les médecins du camp ont établi des dossiers pour chacun d'entre nous. J'ai eu une copie que j'ai rapportée à la maison et c'est, je crois, le docteur Richardson qui l'a photocopiée. Pour picture of the other people as well because we all suffered much from the same causes. I never could find out what happened to those 20. Why they did not come back with our people, I do not know, and I could not find out.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters had his hand up. Mr. Brady has something he would like to put on the record here too.

Mr. Brady: We were talking about loss of medical records and so on. If you refer to page 12 of our brief, you will note that we brought up a point there about this book that was put out by the Canadian Government, Printer to the King, entitled Canadian Prisoners-of-War and Missing Personnel in the Far East. Now in this book they list the fellows that came back, the fellows that died in prison camps and these diseases that we listed on there are all marked in there. The fellows that died in the prison camps, what they died of—beriberi heart, pellagra and things like that—are right in the government's record books. So proof that these diseases did exist are the records of our own Canadian Government in 1945.

The Chairman: There must be some medical records which were used for that purpose but no doubt in many cases records did not exist. It has been interesting to hear the comments of the delegation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, did the Hong Kong Veterans organization make representations to the Woods Committee at all and, if so, were they similar to the representations you are making to us today?

Mr. Brady: Yes, we did, and they were similar.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And did you also make the various statements pertaining to medical evidence?

Mr. Brady: We had three members before the Judge Woods Committee. There was John Stroud, Everette Denison and myself. We were before him I think in April, 1966. As a matter of fact we have a copy of the brief here that we presented at that time.

Mr. Bigg: Were available photographs also permitted, Mr. Brady?

Mr. Brady: Yes, they were.

[Interpretation]

autant que je sache, c'est le seul exemplaire du camp qui ait survécu. Vingt officiers n'est évidemment pas beaucoup, mais ils peuvent tous aider à retracer ce qui s'est passé. Cela pourrait aider le sort des autres prisonniers parce que nous avons tous connu des privations. J'ignore ce qui est arrivé à ces vingt, s'ils sont revenus ou non, je l'ignore et je ne pourrais le savoir.

Le président: M. Peters veut dire quelque chose. M. Brady a aussi quelque chose à verser au compte rendu.

M. Brady: Au sujet de la perte des dossiers médicaux vous noterez à la page 12 de notre mémoire, nous avons parlé d'un livre publié par le gouvernement canadien, chez l'imprimeur du Roi et intitulé «Canadian Prisoners-of-War and Missing Personnel in the Far East». Dans ce livre, on donne la liste des militaires qui sont revenus et de ceux qui sont morts dans les camps de prisonners, ainsi que de la cause de leur mort: le béribéri, les maladies de cœur, la pellagre et autres; tous les détails se trouvent dans ce livre. Et les dossiers de 1945 du gouvernement canadien peuvent confirmer que ces maladies existaient bien.

Le président: Il doit bien y avoir des dossiers médicaux qu'on a utilisé à cette fin, mais dans de nombreux cas, il n'existait pas de dossiers. Il a été fort intéressant d'entendre les commentaires de la délégation.

• 1135

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Cette organisation a-t-elle fait des instances au comité Woods, les mêmes instances que vous nous avez soumises aujourd'hui?

M. Brady: Oui, elles sont semblables.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Avez-vous aussi fait des déclarations à propos des témoignages médicaux?

M. Brady: Nous avons fait comparaître trois membres devant le juge du Comité Woods; il s'agissait de M. Stroud, M. Everette Denison et moi-même. C'était en avril 1966. Nous avons même une copie du mémoire que nous avons présenté à l'époque.

M. Bigg: Pouvait-on présenter des photographies disponibles, monsieur Brady?

M. Brady: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Peters: You said you believe some of these documents were available in Canada. Has a veteran in individual cases been able to use this limited documentation that was indicated for one of the camps, and has it occasionally gone against him in some cases?

Mr. Brady: Just the other day one of the doctors in the Canadian Pension Commission—I am not going to go into details—had a glucose case or something like that and he wanted to find out if a certain treatment for malaria was given. One prison camp doctor said that it was not and another doctor told us it was. So we are still working on this case and we are going to turn this information over to the medical advisor who requested it. So it is such information as that that we pick up as we go along.

Mr. Peters: But are they ever used against a veteran.

Mr. Brady: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Stroud: No. We have had cases where definitely some records were available. Actually they were put on toilet paper and tissue and they were very difficult to make out. But such documents were brought back from Hong Kong in some cases. I can personally say that in no case have such records ever been used against the veteran. On the contrary these definitely have helped our cause. When we have made a pension claim for entitlement; once these documents were made available we had no trouble in getting the man his entitlement. However, cases where we had no camp medical records, no proof other than from, say, one of the man's buddies that he recalled John Jones having such and such, have not always been accepted by the Pension Commission, and this is where we are having our trouble?

Mr. Peters: In this regard Mr. Brady mentioned a specific case where I presume it is going to make some difference in treatment if certain procedures were carried out in relation to malaria. Because you represent a very specific kind of group which has had specific types of diseases, has the Pension Commission been able to get sufficiently advanced treatment procedures and information to do all we should be doing for some of the people who have suffered from diseases that we normally have no knowledge of in our Canadian medical profession?

Mr. Brady: Well I would like to answer that on the basis of Dr. Richardson's survey. That was a terrific survey. He called in a lot of people who had experience. Treating mal-

[Interprétation]

M. Peters: Vous avez dit que vous croyez qu'on pourrait trouver quelques-uns de ces documents au Canada. Cette documentation peut-elle servir aux différents anciens combattants ou joue-t-elle en leur défaveur en certains cas?

M. Brady: L'autre jour, un des médecins de la Commission canadienne des pensions, je ne veux pas entrer ici dans le détail, le médecin voulait savoir si on donnait certains soins pour guérir la malaria; un médecin du camp a dit que non et un autre a prétendu le contraire. Alors, nous examinons toujours ce cas et nous voulons soumettre ces renseignements au conseiller médical qui nous les avait demandés. Ce sont de tels détails que nous recueillons au fur et à mesure de nos enquêtes.

M. Peters: Arrive-t-il qu'on se serve de ces renseignements au détriment d'un ancien combattant?

M. Brady: Pas à ma connaissance.

M. Stroud: Non. Il y a eu des documents qu'on pouvait trouver mais en fait, ils étaient rédigés sur du papier hygiénique et il était très difficile de les déchiffrer. Ce sont de tels documents qui ont parfois été ramenés de Hong Kong. Je dois ajouter qu'on ne s'est jamais servi de ces documents au détriment des anciens combattants. Au contraire, ils ont servi notre cause. Lorsque nous avons demandé une pension, une fois que ces documents ont été fournis, nous n'avons pas eu de problème à obtenir satisfaction, mais lorsqu'il n'y a pas de dossiers médicaux nous n'avons aucun témoignage, aucune preuve. Ces témoignages n'ont pas toujours été acceptés par la Commission des pensions. Voilà l'origine des difficultés.

M. Peters: M. Brady a parlé d'un cas précis où il y aura des conditions différentes selon que des formalités ont été prises au cours de la malaria. Étant donné que vous représentez un groupe précis où les prisonniers avaient contacté des maladies spéciales, la Commission des pensions a-t-elle pu selon vous obtenir tous les renseignements nécessaires sur les soins qu'on aurait dispensés aux malades qui souffraient de maladies que nous ne connaissons pas ici au Canada.

M. Brady: J'aimerais répondre en m'appuyant sur l'enquête faite par le docteur Richardson, enquête qui était magnifique. Il a convoqué bon nombre de personnes qui nutrition and so on and our association as a group really benefited from that survey. He dug up a lot of information. That is why we said in the opening of our brief that we owe Dr. Richardson a lot of credit because of the way he carried it out and the way the Pension Commission followed through on it.

The Chairman: Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, following Mr. Peters' initial line of argument, do I understand that there are many Hong Kong veterans who have really no medical record from their prisoner-of-war days?

Mr. Stroud: Two or three are here from the Niigata Camp: Fred Chapman, Bob Manchester and myself. As I stated earlier, we had no medical staff when we first went to that camp. I might say that 90 per cent of our boys were in pretty rough shape because we travelled to Japan underneath the hull, in the hole of a coal ship, with very little food or water. As I say, these men were in very bad condition when we arrived in Niigata, Japan and the only medical staff were orderlies—two Canadians who had a first-aid course. Approximately eight months later the first Americans coming in from Bataan and Corregidor came to our camp, subsequent drafts came in by Americans. Eventually we did get an American doctor, but for the first year we did not have even a medical staff. The fellow who looked down our throats was just a first aid attendant and could not tell us whether we had diphtheria, diarrhea or what it was.

An hon. Member: Did you have dental care or anything like that?

Mr. Stroud: There was no dental care. We did not even know what a dental chair looked like.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, what sort of proof do you use for medical disabilities incurred during these years before there were records?

Mr. Stroud: I guess that word "avitaminosis" came out eventually and I think we can state that they are recognizing now that this was responsible for a man's general weakness which comes under the avitaminosis entitlement. They will not recognize, however, a étaient compétentes dans le domaine de la malnutrition et notre association a bénéficié de cette enquête. Le docteur Richardson a pu recueillir bon nombre de renseignements. Nous lui sommes très reconnaissants d'avoir fait cet effort et d'avoir donné suite à nos demandes.

Le président: Monsieur Weatherhead.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, pour faire suite aux explications de M. Peters, dois-je comprendre qu'il y a bon nombre d'anciens combattants de Hong-Kong qui n'ont pas de dossier médical remontant à leur séjour dans des camps de concentration?

M. Stroud: Oui. Nous avons ici deux ou trois prisonniers qui ont été incarcérés au camp de Niigata: MM. Fred Chapman, Bob Manchester et moi-même. Comme je vous l'ai expliqué, nous n'avions pas de personnel médical lorsque nous avons été emprisonnés; 90 p. 100 des prisonniers avaient subi des privations parce que nous avons voyagé en train avec très peu de vivres et ces hommes étaient dans un état déplorable lorsqu'ils sont arrivés au Japon. Nous avions voyagé dans le fond de la cale d'un bateau transportant du charbon, avec très peu d'eau et de vivres. Comme je vous l'ai expliqué, ces prisonniers sont arrivés en très mauvaise condition à Niiagata, au Japon et le personnel médical ne se composait que de deux infirmiers canadiens qui avaient suivi des cours de premiers soins. Environ huit mois plus tard, les premiers Américains sont arrivés de Bataan et Corregidor. On obtint éventuellement les services d'un médecin américain, mais nous n'avions aucun personnel médical durant la première année. Celui qui nous examinait la gorge n'était qu'un préposé aux premiers soins qui ne pouvait nous dire si nous souffrions de diphtérie, de diarrhée ou d'autres maladies.

Une voix: Aviez-vous des soins dentaires? Prenait-on soin de vous?

M. Stroud: Aucun soin dentaire, de quelque nature que ce soit.

M. Weatherhead: Comment s'y prend-on pour établir que ces infirmités sont survenues durant cette période, vu qu'on ne tenait pas de dossier?

M. Stroud: On imagina, je crois, le terme «avitaminose». On peut dire maintenant qu'il faut lui attribuer la faiblesse générale dont une personne peut souffrir. Il ne faut pas lui attribuer les maladies cardiaques ou les cas d'arthrite. Si l'on veut parler de cas spéciaux, heart condition as being caused by avitaminosis and they will not recognize arthritis as avitaminosis. When it comes to a specific case such as the man who had a heart attack in Niigata, Japan, they say there is no medical evidence to prove it, and there is no medical evidence, because there are no medical records.

[Texte]

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): You should not have to do this. This is where we are wrong. You should not have to do this.

Mr. Weatherhead: In your experience with the prisoners of war from the European theatre of war, do they have, by and large, pretty good medical records of their activities in camps?

Mr. Stroud: I only can go by one of the briefs that they presented. This point did come up and in talking to men in my own city with whom I have quite close contact, they said there were records kept which helped them tremendously in this way.

Mr. Weatherhead: Yes, but what I am trying to establish, Mr. Chairman, is whether these Hong Kong veterans are really in a special category as far as loss of records are concerned. They are in a special category for a lot of other reasons, too, but from your general experience, Mr. Chairman, perhaps you can help me here. As far as the European prisoners of war were concerned did they have pretty adequate medical records in their camps?

The Chairman: I believe—I am thinking of the time—there is one other aspect that the delegation would like to touch on, Mr. Weatherhead. I do not know whether they are prepared to comment further on the question you have raised.

Mr. Weatherhead: I just will change that to the "benefit of doubt" situation. Mr. Bigg, I think, said that perhaps the presumption should be changed in certain circumstances and this, of course, would change around the whole law, but I am just a bit doubtful whether situations such as the heart conditions which we may be coming to and others will be taken care of under the "benefit of doubt" clause because it seems the White Paper mentions, first of all, you have to submit credible evidence, whatever this means. However, if there is no evidence at all in the records of heart trouble, say, or other matters during the war years, how do you initially get under the credible evidence situation? It may be that for certain situations the presumption should be changed, should go back to a neutral position or something like this.

nommément celui du cardiaque de Niigata, Japon, il n'y a pas de preuves médicales dans ce sens, ni aucun registre.

M. Thompson (Red Deer): Vous n'avez pas à vous préoccuper de ces choses. C'est là que vous avez tort.

M. Weatherhead: En ce qui a trait aux prisonniers de guerre en Europe, disposons-nous de dossiers médicaux satisfaisants?

M. Stroud: Je ne puis m'appuyer que sur un seul des mémoires présentés. On y a soulevé ce point et il en a été question avec des gens que je connais bien. On nous a appris qu'il y avait des dossiers et c'est ce qui les a aidés énormément.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais savoir si les anciens combattants de Hong Kong forment une catégorie spéciale, vu qu'on a perdu leurs dossiers. Ils appartiennent à une catégorie spéciale pour d'autres raisons aussi. Monsieur le président, pourriez-vous nous dire si, dans le cas des prisonniers de guerre européens, on a tenu des dossiers médicaux satisfaisants dans les camps?

Le président: Le temps presse. Il y a un autre point qu'aimerait toucher la délégation, M. Weatherhead. J'ignore si l'on veut approfondir la question que vous avez soulevée.

M. Weatherhead: J'en viens maintenant au «bénéfice du doute». M. Bigg a déclaré qu'un changement de circonstances pourrait motiver une modification totale de la loi, mais je doute, pour ma part, que le cas des cardiaques puisse entrer dans le cadre de la clause «bénéfice du doute». Le Livre blanc prévoit qu'il faut soumettre des preuves irréfutables, quelle que soit la portée de ce mot. Cependant, si aucune preuve de trouble cardiaque n'a été versée aux dossiers durant la guerre, comment peut-on déterminer la crédibilité d'un témoignage? Dans certaines situations on devrait partir d'une nouvelle hypothèse, et débuter d'une position neutre.

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, as my name has been brought into the discussion here and I am glad it has, I think we have changed as I read the White Paper, a very, very important presumption in that you were medically fit when you joined the army and in my experience this has not been interpreted broadly enough throughout the Pension Commission's deliberations. From now on, I understand, the veterans' charter is going to be seriously changed in this regard and if the presumption is that you were medically fit when you joined the army because they took you as an A-1 soldier, unless you had made certain statements, then, even to heart attacks...

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They might find something wrong with you in the first six months.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, but I said, subject to certain qualifications, which I objected to, as you will remember, in the Committee a day or two ago. However, if this presumption can be changed adequately—that is another lawyer's word, of course—and some of these presumptions I feel should be changed in toto—one of them being that you were medically fit when you joined the army—then the onus at all times must be upon the Crown to produce credible evidence why you were not fit. Of course, a signed statement given at the time you joined might be taken as conclusive evidence, but I know of cases and so does everybody in this room where veterans lied about their age in order to enlist and serve their country and this is the type of lie, if you will pardon me for saying so, which I think is admirable, if not moral. Having lied about his age, then the Crown perhaps could say, "Well, you were 70 years old when you joined the army and, therefore, you are beyond a useful age and you are no longer fit to work." Nevertheless, I think even in a case such as that it is up to the Crown to prove that he lied about his age due to his birth certificate or other evidence about him and I think he should be given the benefit of the doubt about his age if he served his country for four years in the front lines, carried his rifle, saved his officers and did all his duties according to Hoyle. There is many a man at the age of 70 I would rather have with me in the front line than the zombie at the age of 20 years.

Mr. Brady: Before closing we would like to get into these heart claims because we have —is it all right to continue, Mr. Chairman?

[Interpretation]

M. Bigg: Monsieur le président, comme mon nom a été mentionné dans la discussion—et j'en suis heureux d'ailleurs—je dois dire que le Livre blanc porte une modification, en ce sens qu'il doit y avoir une forte présomption selon laquelle vous devez être en bon état de santé quand vous entrez dans l'armée. A mon sens, les délibérations de la Commission des pensions n'ont pas donné une assez large interprétation à cette situation. A compter de maintenant, la charte des anciens combattants sera beaucoup modifiée sous ce rapport, me dit-on. S'il y a présomption que vous étiez en bon état de santé quand vous êtes entré dans l'armée, vu qu'on vous a accepté comme soldat A-1 et à moins que vous n'ayez fait certaines déclarations, alors vous l'êtes, même au point de vue cardiaque.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Il se peut qu'on découvre chez-vous quelque faiblesse au cours des premiers six mois.

M. Bigg: La chose est vraie, mais sous réserve de certaines conditions auxquelles je me suis opposé, vous vous rappelez, il y a quelques jours. Cependant, si cette présomption peut être modifiée d'une façon adéquate, selon l'expression juridique, ici, j'estime que certaines présomptions devraient être modifiées du tout au tout, l'une d'elles veut que vous devez être en bon état de santé quand vous vous enrôlez dans l'armée et il revient à la Couronne de produire une preuve concluante que vous ne l'étiez pas. Il va de soi qu'une déclaration signée au moment de l'enrôlement peut servir de preuve concluante, mais je connais des cas—et je ne suis pas le seul—où des gens n'ont pas dit leur âge véritable pour pouvoir s'enrôler et servir leur pays. C'est là un mensonge bien pardonnable en l'occurrence. Si quelqu'un ne dit pas son âge véritable, la Couronne pourra peut-être lui dire: «Eh bien! vous aviez 70 ans lors de votre enrôlement. Vous n'êtes pas capable de travailler.» Dans une situation pareille, il appartient à la Couronne de prouver l'âge d'une personne, sur la foi de son certificat de naissance ou avec autres preuves à l'appui. Il faut accorder le bénéfice du doute à un ancien combattant, au sujet de son âge, s'il a servi son pays pendant quatre ans, s'il a combattu, s'il a sauvé des officiers et accompli son devoir de soldat, selon Hoyle. J'aimerais mieux avoir, comme compagnons d'armes, bon nombre d'anciens de 70 ans que des zombis de 20 ans.

M. Brady: Avant de terminer, nous aimerions examiner certaines demandes importantes qui nous ont été transmises. Monsieur le président, pouvons-nous poursuivre?

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Peters has a question, but I would ask the members of the Committee to bear in mind that the delegation would like to make one final point and if we could, to keep as much time as possible for it.

Mr. Peters: In another field, the medical aspect of it is unusual, I suppose, but it is probably symptomatic in that everyone of the veterans who are here today—everyone, no exception—is wearing glasses. Now, the Canadian average does not work out that way.

A Witness: It does under avitaminosis.

The Chairman: You should look at a number of people who are crowding 40.

Mr. Peters: I wear them sometimes as I am supposed to wear them for reading, but it is interesting to look around and see everyone wearing them. It is 100 per cent. In attempting to establish this pension, I wonder if one of these eight does not live in a rural area where he can go to a district office only to see a doctor who really does not know anything about any of the problems that affected Hong Kong veterans—the malnutritional effects and the other effects. Is there a presumption in this case put out to them or a criteria of presumption of certain disability that they can recognize without knowing all the intricate details of what the—

The Chairman: Mr. Peters, I think the delegation might have a little difficulty answering your question. It is quite a question, I think you will agree, in terms of instructions given to the medical profession.

Mr. Peters: I am curious how the medical profession make a decision on the subject that they know nothing about.

The Chairman: Maybe the way politicians do, Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: Maybe with the same results.

Mr. D'Avignon: I can give you an example of a case similar to the one you have been discussing, Mr. Peters. When I was in prison camp I suffered from malnutrition, as did the rest of the prisoners, as well as from night blindness which is not on record because for three and a half months there were no medical records in my prison camp. To prove that this was caused by malnutrition, we started hunting snakes and we ate them. After eating them my eyesight returned not as good as it was before, but I could see, while before this I could not see with artificial light—I could

[Interprétation]

Le président: Vous avez une question à poser, M. Peters? Je voudrais rappeler aux membres du Comité que la délégation a une dernière déclaration à faire. Il faudrait lui réserver un peu de temps.

M. Peters: Je note un fait un peu inusité. Tous les vétérans, sans aucune exception, portent des lunettes alors que la moyenne des Canadiens n'en portent pas.

Un témoin: Il faut en imputer la cause à l'avitaminose.

Le président: Vous devriez jeter un coup d'œil sur les gens de plus de 40 ans.

M. Peters: Je suis censé porter des verres quand je lis. Il est intéressant de noter ceux qui en portent. Ces anciens combattants en portent tous. Je me demande si l'un des huit ne demeure pas dans une région rurale et n'a pas consulté, pour obtenir sa pension, un médecin totalement ignorant du problème des anciens combattants de Hong Kong; je veux parler des effets de la malnutrition et autres maux. Y a-t-il présomption dans ces cas ou applique-t-on quelque critère d'invalidité sans connaître toutes les particularités du cas.

Le président: M. Peters, la délégation peut difficilement répondre à votre question, parce que c'est une question assez difficile. Je crois qu'il faut accepter les critères médicaux.

M. Peters: Je voulais savoir comment les médecins peuvent rendre des décisions sur des cas qu'ils ne connaissent pas?

Le président: Peut-être de la même façon que les politiciens, M. Peters.

M. Peters: Peut-être aussi avec les mêmes résultats.

M. D'Avignon: Je vous apporterai l'exemple d'un cas identique à celui qui nous occupe. Lorsque j'étais prisonnier, j'ai souffert de malnutrition comme tous les prisonniers d'ailleurs. Je souffrais également de nyctalopie. Les dossiers n'en parlent pas, parce qu'il n'y avait aucun dossier dans le camp d'internement pendant trois mois et demi. Pour prouver que ce mal était causé par la malnutrition nous avons commencé à chasser des serpents que nous avons mangés. C'est ainsi que j'ai recouvré ma vue, peut-être pas comme auparavant, mais j'en étais rendu au point où je recognize someone, but he would look like a little white dot about 40 feet away—which shows that it was due to malnutrition. When I ate snakes I got my eyesight. I did not get any pills; there was none available.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Was that the fat of the snake or the lean meat?

Mr. D'Avignon: We used the skin for belts and the meat to eat.

Mr. MacRae: Actually a protein deficiency was the cause.

The Chairman: I do know Mr. Brady is anxious to make a point on the heart problems of this group. I wonder if we could go to this now with the consent of the Committee. Mr. Brady.

Mr. Brady: We are very happy with Recommendations 92 and 93 as they will eliminate a lot of our problems. However, we still have one big problem with us today and that is the fellows with heart claims. We have about 10 on file now with the CPC and these are men who, we would say, had to retire prior to retirement age. Some of the boys were told that they could not cope with their work and were laid off. These men have filed claims with the CPC and we are trying to get these fellows up to the 100 per cent complete disability pension. The fellows are going through a lot of stress and we have had a lot of letters from their wives. We have had some of them approved, but we still have about a dozen or more on which we are still awaiting a decision. There was one good decision the other day for Brigadier Holmes. His heart claim was accepted and we have had a few more, but we still have these other 12 veterans whom we are trying desperately to help because they cannot go back to work and they need our help. I think I will call on President Donnelly of Saskatchewan because he has their files.

A Witness: From Alberta.

Mr. Brady: From Alberta, I am sorry.

The Chairman: Mr. Donnelly.

Mr. Howard Donnelly (Northern Alberta Branch, Hong Kong Veterans): I will use as an illustration one of our cases in Edmonton of a man who is 47.

His latest pension ruling, which was made on March 13, 1969, was avitaminosis with ne pouvais pas voir la lumière artificielle. Je pouvais distinguer une personne; mais elle m'apparaissait comme un petit point blanc à 40 pieds de distance. La chose était certes imputable à la malnutrition, car j'ai recouvré la vue en mangeant des serpents. Je n'ai pas absorbé de pilules parce qu'il n'y en avait pas.

M. Guay (Saint Boniface): Était-ce le gras ou la viande maigre?

M. D'Avignon: Avec la peau des serpents, nous nous faisions des ceintures, mais nous mangions la viande.

M. MacRae: Insuffisance de protéine.

Le président: Je sais que M. Brady a quelque chose à nous dire sur la question des cardiaques si le Comité veut bien l'entendre. M. Brady.

M. Brady: Nous sommes heureux des recommandations 92 et 93 qui ont réglé bon nombre de nos problèmes. Mais nous avons un problème majeur qui nous préoccupe. Le cas de ceux qui souffrent de maladies cardiaques. La CCP a présentement en dossiers dix cas. Ce sont des hommes qui ont dû prendre une retraite prématurée. Quelques-uns ne pouvaient pas accomplir leur travail et on les a licenciés. Ils ont présenté des réclamations à la Commission. Nous essayons de leur obtenir une pension d'invalidité complète, une pension de 100 p. 100. Bon nombre d'anciens combattants en souffrent énormément. Nous avons reçu beaucoup de lettres écrites par leurs femmes. Quelques-unes des réclamations ont été approuvées, mais il y en a une douzaine et même plus qui attendent encore une décision. Une décision favorable a été rendue récemment. Il y a toujours le cas de ces 12 anciens combattants qui ne peuvent pas reprendre leur travail et qui ont besoin de secours. Je demanderais au président Donnelly de la Saskatchewan de nous expliquer leur cas.

Un témoin: D'Alberta.

M. Brady: D'Alberta.

Le président: M. Donnelly.

M. Howard Donnelly (Association des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong, Section du Nord-Alberta): En guise d'exemple, j'apporterai le cas d'un homme d'Edmonton, âgé de 47 ans.

Voici la dernière décision concernant sa pension, en date du 13 mars 1969, avitaminose residual effects and beriberi, and he was increased from 35 per cent to 50 per cent. On a second renewal on November 14, 1956, they ruled that cholinesterase is not assessed. It was a post discharge condition and not attributable to war services. Hypertension was his first pension ruling, he was pensioned for hypertension. Hypertension is now no longer assessed. Myocardial ischemia was ruled not related to the pension condition nor attributable to war services. This was the pension ruling, and it is a pretty adverse situation for him because he is sort of a nervous type as well.

There is another case in Edmonton of a man 46 years of age who was raised from a 40 per cent pension to 52 per cent and I would like to read a letter which was written by his doctor to the Pension Commission:

> The above-named ex-service man an ex-Japanese prisoner of war was brought to the emergency department of the University Hospital because of an attack of shortness of breath and tightness in the chest and when he arrived in the emergency department, he suffered a cardiac arrest.
> After 40 minutes of resuscitation he regained heart beat and was transferred to the coronary observation unit at the University Hospital.
> In this unit he has been under my observation and his electro-cardiogram shows a myocardial infarction and diffuse damage to the heart muscle. It is altogether likely and indeed almost certain that the severe vitamin B_1 deficiency for which he is pensioned has resulted in permanent changes in his heart muscle which would render him more susceptible to serious consequences from the coronary artery disease which most of us develop with advancing years.
> I do not know at the present time what this man's outlook is, but I suspect it is poor. I think he should be placed on a 100 per cent pension on the basis of his avitaminosis and I am willing to defend this opinion at a hearing. I think the situation however is critical enough that immediate steps should be taken lest the pension board and all the rest of us find we are offering too little too late.

That letter is dated April 10. On April 16 another letter was sent to the Pension Commission:

> This ex-service man is now on a coronary observation unit at the University Hospital having been brought into the Emergency Department with a cardiac arrest about 2½ weeks ago.

[Interprétation]

avec effets résiduels et béribéri. Sa pension a été porté de 35 p. 100 à 50 p. 100. D'après le renouvellement, du 14 novembre 1956, on a décidé qu'on ne devait pas évaluer la cholinestérose étant un état subséquent au licenciement et non attribuable au service. L'hypertension qui était le cas pour lequel il avait bénéficié d'une pension ne jouait plus. La Commission des pensions a décidé que l'ischémie myocardiaque ne se rapportait pas aux conditions de pension et n'était pas attribuable au service militaire. Cela le place dans une situation très défavorable, car c'est un homme nerveux en plus.

L'autre cas, à Edmonton, est un homme de 46 ans. J'aimerais vous lire une lettre que son médecin a envoyée à la Commission des pensions. Sa pension a passé de 40 p. 100 à 52 p. 100.

> L'ancien combattant ci-dessus mentionné qui a été prisonnier de guerre au Japon, a été transporté d'urgence à l'Hôpital universitaire souffrant d'essoufflement et de douleurs à la poitrine. A son arrivée à l'hôpital il a subi un arrêt cardiaque.
> Après 40 minutes de réanimation le cœur s'est remis à battre et on l'a transporté au service d'observation cardiaque de l'hôpital.
> Il a été confié à mes soins et son électrocardiogramme a indiqué un infarctus du myocarde avec lésion non localisée du muscle cardiaque. Il est tout à fait vraisemblable que la déficience de Vitamine B pour laquelle il reçoit une pension soit responsable de cette maladie coronarienne.
> A l'heure actuelle, je ne peux me prononcer sur ses chances de guérison mais j'estime qu'elles sont plutôt minces. Il devrait recevoir une pension à 100 p. 100 en fonction de son avitaminose et je suis prêt à défendre ce point en audience. La situation est critique et les mesures nécessaires devraient être prises immédiatement.

Cette lettre était en date du 10 avril. Une deuxième lettre datée le 16 avril est parvenue à la Commission des pensions.

> Cet ancien combattant est au service d'observation cardiaque à l'Hôpital de l'université depuis deux semaines et demie.

[Text]

He was successfully resuscitated and was convalescing slowly until the night of April 15, when he again arrested, was resuscitated and is now on a respirator with a tracheotomy. This man was a prisoner of war of the Japanese for nearly four years and when taken prisoner suffered a bayonet wound of the chest and also was kicked in the chest and it appears from his story that at that time he suffered from a fracture of the sternum of the sternal clavicular junction.

He developed beriberi.

On these various accounts he is pensioned at 40 per cent.

• 1155

My contention is that our problems in this man's convalescence and indeed perhaps in the precipitation of his original arrest are complicated by both the Vitamin B_1 deficiency which he suffered (known to result in the degree of miocardial fibrosis) and also probably direct trauma to the heart suffered at the time of his rupture.

I would like to make a plea to have this pensioner's disability rated at 100 per cent and I think his circumstances are so precarious that this should be done as expeditiously as possible.

On May 7 another letter was sent:

This patient continues to make slow progress convalescing from his heart attack and numerous resuscitations.

The longer I know him, the more apparent it is to me that he has suffered from myocardial damage for a long long time and we now have evidence that he was experiencing angina at least three years ago—actually this predates his shortness of breath.

I want to state categorically that this man will be completely disabled and prevented from gainful employment for at least one year's time from his discharge date and even then I doubt that we will be able to get him back to work.

I very strongly urge that his pension be maintained at 100 per cent for at least a year and then I be allowed to review his circumstances again.

The point in this, gentlemen, is that they raised his pension to 52 per cent. Thank you.

Mr. Brady: To add to that, we are still going for these heart claims, as you will notice from page 13A of our brief. In the event that the members of this Committee want an independent medical point of view, Dr. Haas is prepared to come here at your

[Interpretation]

Il était en convalescence lorsque dans la nuit du 15 avril il a subi un autre arrêt cardiaque. On l'a ranimé et il a subi une trachéotomie. Il respire à l'aide d'un masque respiratoire. Cet homme a été prisonnier des Japonais pendant 4 ans. Il a reçu une blessure de bayonnette à la poitrine ainsi que des coups à la poitrine. Il dit avoir subi une fracture du sternum à la jonction de la clavicule sternale.

Par la suite, il a contracté le béribéri.

Pour ces raisons il reçoit une pension à 40 p. 100. Je soutiens que sa convalescence se complique du fait qu'il ait subi une déficience de vitamine B et un traumatisme du cœur au moment de la rupture.

Je demande que l'invalidité de ce pensionné soit évaluée à 100 p. 100 et son état est si précaire que la chose doit être faite le plus vite possible.

Le 7 mai on a envoyé une autre lettre.

Ce malade se rétablit lentement. Il est évident qu'il souffre de lésion myocardiaque depuis très longtemps et nous avons la preuve qu'il souffrait d'engine depuis au moins 3 ans.

Cet homme sera totalement invalide et ne pourra travailler pour au moins une année après sa sortie de l'hôpital et même alors je ne sais s'il pourra se remettre au travail.

J'insiste fortement pour que sa pension soit maintenue à 100 p. 100 pour au moins une année après quoi je l'examinerai de nouveau.

Ils ont porté sa pension à 52 p. 100.

M. Brady: Vous avez remarqué à la page 13 a) de notre mémoire, que si vous voulez avoir une opinion médicale indépendante le Dr Haas est prêt à venir à deux semaines d'avis. Il a été fait prisonnier lui-même et a perdu beaucoup de poids dans le camp de conceninvitation and he said that all he needs is two weeks' notice. He is an ex-P.O.W. himself, he was in concentration camp and he lost a lot of weight. He has been sent over to Europe a few times on call for the war veterans in France and he has pleaded their cases and he told me things about it. I feel that we have quite a job on our hands with this heart claim business, and we are very pleased that Dr. Haas offered his services. If you gentlemen of the Veterans Affairs Committee would like more medical evidence, as I say you can call on him and just give him two weeks' notice and he would be glad to appear.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, was Dr. Haas involved in this last case that the witness presented?

Mr. Donnelly: No, sir.

Mr. Peters: In relation to that, he appears to relate this back to a vitamin B deficiency, which I presume is connected with malnutrition and other vitamin deficiencies that arise from dietary deficiencies. What argument does the Pension Commission use in refuting this kind of a claim, where a doctor who is involved in a specific case will stake his reputation, as this doctor has, on his professional ability and diagnosis? They are really saying that he is not right.

Mr. Donnelly: In this particular case the pension board granted him 60 per cent for a heart condition, but only one-fifth of that is attributable to war service. That is why he was increased 12 per cent over the 40 per cent. One-fifth of 60 per cent is 12 per cent.

Mr. Peters: But how do they justify this? I am sure they have absolutely no knowledge themselves, and they are probably not competent in this field.

An hon. Member: They have doctors.

• 1200

Mr. Peters: Yes, but the people who are running the intensive care heart clinic are a little more than just ordinary doctors and one of them was willing to state that this arose from a vitamin B_1 deficiency. He did not say that it was congenital, he did not say that it predated military service and that a kid of 19 years of age had a heart condition. He did not say that, and yet the board is really saying that. They are saying that this man either had a congenital or a pre-enlistment heart condition at 19 years of age. It seems to me that this is really a decision of the Pension Commission which in this particular case they are not capable of making.

[Interprétation]

tration. On l'a envoyé en Europe plus d'une fois au sujet des anciens combattants français dont il a plaidé la cause. Nous sommes heureux que le Dr Haas ait offert ses services. Et si vous voulez avoir d'autres preuves, d'autres témoignages médicaux, vous pouvez le convoquer deux semaines à l'avance et il se présentera avec plaisir.

M. Peters: Est-ce que le Dr Haas a eu affaire au dernier cas présenté?

M. Donnelly: Non monsieur.

M. Peters: A ce propos il semble rattacher à un cas de déficience de vitamines qui je suppose, découle de la sous-alimentation et d'autres déficiences vitaminiques qui proviennent de déficiences alimentaires. Pour quelles raisons la Commission des pensions a-t-elle refusé cette demande, alors qu'un médecin qui avait traité ce cas particulier a mis sa réputation professionnelle en jeu, sur sa compétence professionnelle et son diagnostic? Comment la Commission des pensions peut-elle décider que le médecin se trompe?

M. Donnelly: Dans ce cas, la Commission avait décidé qu'il bénéficiait de 60 p. 100 pour défaillance cardiaque, mais dont seulement 1/5 serait attribuable au service militaire. Alors voilà pourquoi on a hausser sa pension de 12 p. 100.

M. Peters: Comment peuvent-ils justifier ceci? Ils ne sont pas compétents dans ce domaine.

Une voix: Ils ont des médecins.

M. Peters: Oui, mais, en tout cas, les gens qui dirigent des cliniques cardiaques sont tout de même plus que des médecins généralistes. Et l'un deux a déclaré qu'il s'agit de déficiences vitaminiques il n'a pas dit que ceci était une maladie congénitale, ou qu'un enfant de dix-neuf ans pouvait avoir, par exemple, une maladie cardiaque. Mais toutefois, la Commission dit que cette personne avait, soit une maladie congénitale ou avait eu une maladie cardiaque à l'âge de dix-neuf ans. Il me semble donc que c'est là une décision de la Commission des pensions qui ne relève pas de sa compétence.

[Text]

Mr. Brady: I would like to make a statement on this heart business. I have talked this over with the medical advisers to the Canadian Pension Commission and I put it right to them. I will not mention any doctors' names, but they claim that if you were in a prison camp and you have what they call beriberi heart trouble, well, you have it. If you live through it you are all right and when you come back perhaps you will not have any after-effects but being only ordinary laymen, we contest that ruling because it is like putting brand-new brake lining on a car. When you take it out and give it that first jar, that brake lining is not as good as it used to be. That is the way I consider beriberi hearts. They have been trying to tell us—you fellows who came back, you might have had beriberi heart trouble and all that but it has no bearing on today. That is the point that we are arguing about and that is why we would like to have people like Dr. Haas brought in and get independent points of view.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is raising a very fundamental point that I have always considered was involved. They are making an absolute decision on a pre-existing condition which they have no right to make. They do not have the right by law to make that decision. There would be absolutely no evidence that would support that contention. I do not know the doctor in this case and I am not sure how competent he is in the medical profession in Alberta but I would presume, since the guy was brought back to life after 40 minutes resuscitation attempt, that he is a fairly good doctor. They are making this decision that this man had a pre-enlistment condition and I gather he was about 19 years of age when he was involved—17 years of age. This is a case of malfunction as far as the Board is concerned. I think that this case should be pursued by the Committee. We have had many cases of the Hong Kong Vetcrans involving one particular doctor who made many bad recommendations and there has been considerable doubt raised as to his motives for these decisions.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters, I raise the question how far we can go on this kind of thing at this point.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the point I am making is that I do not think the benefit of the doubt is going to help in this case. I am not really sure that the changes in the White Paper relating to pre-enlistment conditions are going to make any difference because there was no pre-enlistment condition in this case. I am sure there was not.

[Interpretation]

M. Brady: Nous avons causé de ceci avec les conseillers médicaux de la Commission des pensions. Je ne mentionnerai pas le nom des médecins. Mais si vous avez été dans un camp de prisonniers et si vous avez contracté le béribéri, eh bien, si vous pouvez la supporter cette maladie ça va.

Si vous pouvez supporter cette maladie, ça va si vous revenez, vous n'aurez pas de maladie cardiaque subséquente, mais nous en tant que profanes contestons ce jugement parce que c'est comme lorsque vous mettez une nouvelle garniture de freins à une voiture, le freinage n'est pas aussi bon qu'avant. C'est la même chose pour le cœur de ces personnes qui ont été atteintes de béribéri. Ils ont essayé de nous faire croire que les camarades qui sont envoyés avaient peut-être eu des troubles cardiaques et à la suite du béribéri ou du reste mais qu'il n'en reste aucune trace aujourd'hui. C'est sur ce point que nous discutons et nous aimerions avoir l'opinion de spécialistes comme le Docteur Haas et obtenir un point de vue indépendant.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, cela soulève un point absolument fondamental, j'ai toujours estimé que c'était la base de tout. Ils rendent une décision sans appel sur un état antérieur et ils n'ont pas le droit légal de prendre une décision semblable. On n'a pas de preuve pouvant justifier cette décision. Je ne connais pas le médecin dont il est question dans ce cas. J'ignore sa compétence professionnelle en Alberta, mais je présume qu'il est certainement bon puisque cette personne a été ramenée à la vie après un processus de ressucitation qui a duré quarante minutes. Sa décision rendue c'est que cette personne a déjà été malade avant l'enrôlement à l'âge de 19 ans, ou à 17 ans peut-être, ils dépassent leur autorité en autant que le Bureau est concerné. Je voudrais que le Comité poursuive l'étude de ce cas car nous avons eu nombres de cas semblables parmi les anciens combattants de Hong Kong où leur médecin en particulier avait rendu des recommandations mauvaises et on pouvait s'interroger sur ses motifs pour rendre des décisions semblables.

Le président: Eh bien! jusqu'on pouvons-nous aller à ce sujet?

M. Peters: Ce que je dis ici, c'est que le bénéfice du doute n'aidera personne dans ce cas, je ne suis même pas certain si la modification dans le Livre blanc relative à l'état de santé avant l'enrôlement permettra de modifier la situation parce qu'il n'y avait pas de déficiences avant l'enrôlement. J'en suis sûr.

[Texte]

The Chairman: And he is over 50 per cent now.

Mr. Peters: He was 40 per cent and he was raised 12 per cent, as I gather, by the Board. What they really said was that he had a bad condition and therefore they had better give him a little bit more but they did not do it honestly. They obviously did not do it honestly because they either should not have given him anything or for the disability he now obviously has, his pension should be 100 per cent.

Mr. Brady: Well, the big problem in this specific case—and we have had eight or nine others—is that the guy cannot go back to work and has to keep his family going. We would like to see them get to the fellows who have heart problems amongst the Hong Kong boys who, actually, in a few months' time will be up in the fifties. Anybody between 50 and 100 and totally disabled and only getting 50 or 60 per cent we would like to see brought into the full disability pension rate.

The Chairman: I believe Mr. Donnelly has something he wants to say.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not see how we can correct this by legislation. This is an interpretation the Pension Commission apparently put on facts that do not meet the old criteria of legislation and they do not meet the new criteria of legislation either. We should be thinking about some method of medical appeal in this case. It is an argument between two doctors and I do not see how we are correcting it either in the White Paper or in the Woods Commission Report.

• 1205

The Chairman: I think your comment...

Mr. Peters: I think this is a very important thing because we are probably doing a disservice to many people by not being able to correct this.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Do the Hong Kong veterans and other veterans feel that under the new set-up in the White Paper whereby they can appeal these previous decisions they will have a better case and will be given more consideration? I do not say they feel that this is going to be the case, but is it your feeling that you may be given more consideration under the new terms of the White Paper?

[Interprétation]

Le président: Il est au dessus de 50 p. 100 maintenant.

M. Peters: Non, il était à 40 p. 100 et on l'a augmenté de 12 p. 100 d'après ce que le Bureau nous a dit. En fait ce qu'ils ont dit c'est qu'il était vraiment en mauvais état de santé et par conséquent ils lui ont donné un peu plus mais ils ne l'ont pas fait en toute honnêteté car ou ils auraient tout lui donner pour sa maladie évidente et sa pension devrait être à 100 p. 100 ou rien lui accorder du tout.

M. Brady: La question qu'il faut se poser dans ce cas particulier et nous en avons 8 ou 9 autres semblables c'est: est-ce que cette personne peut travailler et faire vivre sa famille? Ceux qui ont des maladies cardiaques parmi les anciens combattants de Hong-Kong sont dans la cinquantaine bientôt, ils sont complètement invalides, et ils ne reçoivent que 50 ou 60 p. 100, nous voudrions qu'ils touchent la pension d'invalidité complète.

Le président: Je crois que M. Donnelly a quelque chose à dire.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, je ne vois pas comment nous pouvons corriger cette situation par des lois. Vous voyez de loin parce qu'il s'agit d'une interprétation de la Commission canadienne des pensions qui ne répond pas à l'ancien critère de la loi ni au nouveau critère d'ailleurs. Je pense qu'il faudrait songer à quelque méthode permettant d'en appeler médicalement de ces questions. C'est un argument entre deux médecins et je ne vois pas comment nous pouvons corriger la situation, soit dans le Livre blanc ou soit dans la rapport de la Commission Woods.

Le président: Je crois que votre commentaire...

M. Peters: Je pense qu'il s'agit là d'une chose importante et nous donnons un piètre service à nombre de gens si nous ne pouvons corriger cette situation.

M. Guay (Saint Boniface): Est-ce que les anciens combattants de Hong-Kong ou autres estiment, aux termes du Livre blanc, qu'ils pourront en appeler de la décision de la Commission et qu'on pourra étudier leur cas sous un jour plus favorable? Est-ce qu'ils estiment qu'on pourra mieux tenir compte de leur situation d'après les dispositions contenues dans le Livre blanc?

Mr. Brady: Do you mean an independent appeal board?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Well, anything. We will take the case in question that has been mentioned by your member from Calgary. You are not leaving it there. I am sure you must be appealing the decision, are you?

Mr. Brady: Oh, definitely. Even though we get turned down on a second claim or something, we go right back again and try to pick up as much medical evidence as we can. That is why we got Dr. Haas here. If we can get an independent point of view, especially a medical man's point of view, naturally it is going to help. We have to throw a bouquet to one of our doctors who was in the prison camp with us.

The Chairman.: Is Dr. Haas a Canadian?

Mr. Brady: No, he is from Europe.

The Chairman: I see. Mr. Donnelly.

Mr. Donnelly: There is a very small point I would like to make. When the Pension Commission ruled on this man and gave him this amount of 12 per cent—normally they date it from the date of his entry into hospital. This man went in on April 3 with his heart condition and the Pension Commission dated it April 10. Why they would take these five days at that 12 per cent away from this man I do not know. We have requested, and we are hoping to get his 100 per cent pension because he is unable to work and he is going to lose his home if he does not get the pension, and that pension backdated to the maximum possible under the present Act.

The Chairman: Mr. Stroud.

Mr. Stroud: Gentlemen, speaking on the same subject, this is almost identical. We have a current case in Toronto which I will give you quickly. This man had been going into Sunnybrook Hospital complaining of his legs. He was admitted to hospital for two weeks in 1966. He was asked to come back in 1967 and was given more vitamin pills. Now this man's legs have deteriorated to the extent that just four months ago he was rushed into hospital for emergency treatment in his own area, which was Scarborough at the time, and they found he had stoppages in both his legs and also blood clots which they did not diagnose to be a coronary. That man is now in St. Michael's and he has had the left leg amputated just below the knee. Now

[Interpretation]

M. Brady: Voulez-vous dire devant une commission indépendante d'appel?

M. Guay: Oui devant n'importe qui; prenons le cas mentionné par votre membre de Calgary, vous allez certainement en appeler de cette décision?

M. Brady: Oui certainement. Même si on refuse notre seconde demande, nous parviendrons et nous chercherons à obtenir le plus de témoignages médicaux possibles. C'est ce que nous avons cherché à faire. C'est pourquoi nous avons demandé au Dr Haas de venir. Nous cherchons à obtenir une opinion indépendante, en particulier de médecins. Nous avons le témoignage d'un médecin qui était dans un camp de prisonniers avec nous.

Le président: Le Docteur Haas est-il Canadien?

M. Brady: Non, il est Européen.

Le président: Je vois. M. Donnelly.

M. Donnelly: J'ai une brève question que je vais poser ici. Quand la Commission des pensions rend une décision à ce sujet et accorde cette augmentation de 12 p. 100, normalement elle le fait à compter de la date où la personne entre à l'hôpital. Cette personne est entrée le 3 avril avec une maladie cardiaque et la Commission de la pension a daté cette entrée du 10 avril. Je ne sais pas pourquoi ils ont fait cela, enlever cinq jours à 12 p. 100, je ne sais; on a posé des questions et nous espérons que cette personne aura une pension de 100 p. 100 parce qu'elle ne peut pas travailler du tout et elle va perdre sa maison si elle ne reçoit pas cette pension qui devrait être rétroactive à compter de la date d'entrée à l'hôpital en vertu de la loi actuelle.

Le président: Monsieur Stroud.

M. Stroud: Messieurs sur le même sujet, je voudrais vous parler d'un cas presque identique que nous avons eu à Toronto. Cette personne avait une jambe malade, en 1966 elle a été admise à l'hôpital pour deux semaines. Elle a dû revenir en 1967 où elle a eu des traitements de vitamines. Maintenant cette personne est entrée à l'hôpital d'urgence de Scarborough pour traitement car l'état de ses jambes avait empiré. On a constaté qu'elle souffrait d'une thrombose dans les deux jambes et qu'elle avait des caillots de sang dans les vaisseaux coronaires. Cette personne a dû se faire amputer une jambe, juste au-dessous du genou. Maintenant cette personne de 47 ans qui a une famille de quatre personnes reçoit seulement 30 p. 100 de pension pour here is a man 47 years old with a family of four receiving only 30 per cent pension for avitaminosis. I have been in touch with the officials of Sunnybrook Hospital and when I mentioned the clot they said that would be a heart condition. We are trying to get him under Section 5. "Well," they said, "he should have come to Sunnybrook Hospital. We could have admitted him perhaps under Section 5, but since he is under avitaminosis outside we do not know how we can grant it." Now that man has a coronary. There is no doubt about it. He has blood stoppage. They operated on both legs. They were unable to open the clot in the left and it was amputated. Just before I left Toronto they were cutting his leg again because it is not healing up. This is one case I am bringing up to the Pension Commission while I am in Ottawa. There is a coronary but there is no hope of ever getting recognition for him the way their interpretation is for that man.

The Chairman: He will automatically go to 50 per cent on these proposals.

Mr. Bigg: Do you feel that more research should be done on heart disease as it refers to a pension right and perhaps we could leave it there for now and pursue the idea of more information being brought forward and more emphasis being put on it and more information from other veterans, people?

Mr. Brady: That is right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, surely you have a prima facie case. You have these 17-and 18-year-old kids who surely did not have heart conditions when they went out. Facing these conditions now, I would say the presumption is that the Hong Kong experience did it to them and 50 per cent, Mr. Chairman, is not good enough.

• 1210

The Chairman: No. The point is that without any further argument, under one of the proposals it goes to 50 per cent. Whether the benefit of doubt clause will operate beyond that is the question we have to look at but I am pointing out that it automatically would go from 30 to 50 per cent without any further question. This gentleman is only on 30 per cent pension.

Mr. Bigg: But surely the Hong Kong experience is not going to alter these presumptions. This is a separate and blanket thing.

The Chairman: In the brief the way it has been presented, the discussion has related to avitaminose. Quand j'ai mentionné qu'il y avait des caillots de sang ils ont dit à l'hôpital qu'il s'agissait d'une maladie cardiaque. Nous essayons de le faire admettre aux termes de l'article 5 mais il aurait dû aller à l'hôpital Sunnybrook. On aurait pu l'admettre aux termes de l'article 5 mais puisqu'il est traité ailleurs pour avitaminose nous ne sevons si nous pouvons l'accorder. Maintenant cette personne a une maladie coronarienne. Il n'y a aucun doute là-dessus. Il a des caillots de sang. Ils ont dû l'opérer des deux jambes. Il a été impossible d'atteindre le caillot dans la jambe gauche et on a dû l'amputer. Juste avant mon encore fallu l'opérer car la cicatrisation ne départ de Toronto j'ai appris qu'il avait se faisait pas. J'ai porté ce cas à l'attention de la Commission canadienne des pensions à Ottawa. C'est une maladie coronarienne mais il n'y a pas moyen de faire en sorte que ces cas soient reconnus.

Le président: D'après ces propositions il obtiendra automatiquement 50 p. 100.

M. Bigg: Estimez-vous qu'il faut faire plus de recherches dans le domaine des maladies du cœur lorsqu'elles impliquent un droit à pension? Nous pourrions peut-être laisser la question à ce point pour l'instant et obtenir plus de renseignements à ce sujet en ce qui concerne la recherche sur les maladies du cœur de la part des autres groupes d'anciens combattants?

M. Brady: Oui, c'est une bonne idée.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Monsieur le président, vous avez un cas bien évident quand il s'agit de jeunes gens de 17 ou 18 ans qui ne souffraient certainement pas de troubles cardiaques quand ils sont partis. D'après leur état présent il y a une forte présomption que l'expérience de Hong-Kong y est pour quelque chose et je dirais monsieur le président que 50 p. 100 est insuffisant.

Le président: Je suis d'accord. Mais d'après l'une des propositions ça pourrait être jusqu'à 50 p. 100. Est-ce que la clause du bénéfice du doute pourra s'appliquer au-delà de ce montant, c'est ce qu'il faudrait étudier. Mais je fais remarquer que la pension passera automatiquement de 30 à 50 p. 100, sans autre question. Cette personne reçoit seulement une pension de 30 p. 100.

M. Bigg: Mais sûrement les présomptions ne pourraient être changées au sujet de Hong-Kong. C'est une question distincte.

Le président: Dans le mémoire qu'on nous a présenté, la débat portait sur le benefit of the doubt on the basic 50 per cent. This is in the brief that we received today. I point out that there is another operative provision proposed in the White Paper which would deal with various types of cases. I think the cases that have been presented illustrate the problem that this group is concerned about, and illustrate it very well.

Mr. Brady: We would like to go a step further here. A few years ago we had a chap who died November 11, 1965, from a heart problem, and we thought he was more or less looked after until his widow brought up the thing that she was more or less destitute. So we got going on it; we brought up the claim and we were very fortunate in getting one of the ex-doctors from the POW camp, and he wrote a statement saying that beriberi heart problems did exist in this particular prison camp, and we brought this up before the Pension Commission and they granted the pension to the widow. This is going back three years ago.

So then we thought we had something good here. So we ran off photostats and wanted them to be attached to all our other heart claims, but unfortunately they came back on some of our cases and said that just because a man had a beriberi heart condition in the prison camp does not mean that today's heart troubles relate back to that. So we, being ordinary laymen and not understanding all this medical stuff, ask how come they can give it to one but do not to the other on the same basis. There is the problem we are running into.

The Chairman: All the widows, again, will qualify automatically for pension but it is a question of how much. But they will qualify under the proposal.

Mr. D'Avignon: In this particular case, it took 11 years to decide, and she had to live in the meantime.

The Chairman: Yes. Are there any other questions the members of the Committee want to raise? If not, I would like to thank you, Mr. Brady, Mr. D'Avignon, Mr. Stroud, and other members of the delegation, for your presentation today. I know the Committee has enjoyed having the opportunity to meet with you and to hear what you had to say.

Mr. Brady: Thank you very much for having us all.

The Chairman: I would like to call on Mr. Reynolds to say a word or two about the agenda. Mr. Reynolds, would you speak for a minute on what we will be doing later?

[Interpretation]

bénéfice du doute relativement aux 50 p. 100. C'est dans le mémoire reçu aujourd'hui. Je signale qu'il y a là une autre clause proposée dans le Livre blanc qui permettrait de tenir compte de divers cas. Je pense que les cas qui ont été présentés illustrent la situation assez clairement.

M. Brady: J'irais plus loin. Il y a quelques années, nous avons eu quelqu'un qui est mort le 11 novembre 1965 d'une maladie cardiaque. Nous pensions que quelqu'un s'en occupait jusqu'à ce que sa veuve nous fasse constater qu'elle était complètement dénuée de toutes ressources. Nous avons étudié toute l'affaire et nous avons cherché et obtenu les services d'un ancien médecin qui avait séjourné dans un camp de prisonniers. Il a déclaré que des problèmes cardiaques dus au béribéri existaient dans ce camp en particulier; nous avons soumis l'affaire à la Commission et la pension a été versée à la veuve. Il y a trois ans de cela. Nous avons un résultat concret ici et nous avions des photocopies, je pense qu'il faudrait justifier toutes les réclamations relatives aux maladies du cœur de la même façon, mais malheureusement, ils sont revenus sur certains de nos cas et ils prétendent qu'il n'y a aucune relation entre les troubles cardiaques d'aujourd'hui et le béribéri de jadis. Aussi étant des gens bien ordinaires et ne comprenant rien à ces questions médicales nous nous demandons comment pouvez-vous donner une pension à quelqu'un en la refusant à un autre, voilà le problème auquel nous faisons face.

Le président: Évidemment, toutes les veuves auront automatiquement droit à des pensions, il s'agit de savoir quel montant elles pourront avoir mais elles y auront droit d'après la proposition.

M. D'Avignon: C'est un cas qui n'a pu être tranché qu'après onze ans et dans l'intervalle il a fallu qu'elle vive.

Le président: Oui. Y a-t-il d'autres questions messieurs que vous voudriez poser sinon, je voudrais remercier M. Brady, M. D'Avignon et M. Stroud et les autres membres de la délégation qui ont présenté des mémoires intéressants aujourd'hui. Je sais que le Comité a été heureux de les entendre.

M. Brady: Je vous remercie messieurs de nous avoir si bien reçus.

Le président: Je voudrais demander à notre secrétaire M. Reynolds de nous présenter l'ordre du jour. M. Reynolds voulez-vous nous dire quelques mots à ce sujet.

[Texte]

Mr. P. E. Reynolds (Director, Legal Services, Department of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Chairman, this afternoon at 2 o'clock Mr. Ward will be here, with your permission, to continue with his explanation of the Woods Committee recommendations, and he will carry on. I hope he may be able to finish this afternoon. But if he cannot, tomorrow morning at 9.30 we will have the National Dieppe Prisoners of War Association. And if Mr. Ward does not finish this afternoon, I would like to suggest that he be allowed to finish tomorrow afternoon.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A further point. We were supposed to receive an itinerary of the Committee for this week and next week and I have not received mine. I was wondering if it has gone out at all. I would like to know what our program will be for next week.

Mr. Reynolds: There is an agenda which is available for distribution.

The Chairman: Have we not been given copies?

Mr. Reynolds: I think Mr. Levesque has the copy here which he can give you of what we are proposing. There is nothing scheduled for Thursday or Friday of this week and should we be through witnesses at noon tomorrow, we would adjourn at that time. If Mr. Ward still has testimony to present, we shall continue.

• 1215

• 1415

The Chairman: Will the Committee please come to order. Mr. Ward has been giving testimony on the specific recommendations in the Woods Committee Report. For the convenience of members we have been referring to this summary document on the recommendations and have been asking questions as we go along on specific sections. I propose to follow the same procedure. Members are perfectly free to ask Mr. Ward questions at different stages of the review for clarification. We had hoped that Mr. Ward would be able to complete his review of the 148 recommendations this afternoon. I believe he got up to 110.

Mr. D. K. Ward (Deputy Chief Pension Advocate): I was proceeding to 111.

[Interprétation]

M. P. E. Reynolds (Directeur, services juridiques, Ministère des affaires des anciens combattants): Monsieur le président, cet après-midi à deux heures, M. Ward sera ici, il continuera son explication sur les recommandations du Comité, je pense qu'il pourra terminer sa présentation cet après-midi s'il ne peut pas le faire, demain matin à 9h30, nous aurons l'Association des prisonniers de guerre et si M. Ward n'a pas terminé cet après-midi, je voudrais qu'on lui permette de terminer demain après-midi.

Le président: Monsieur Guay.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Autre chose. Je pensais que nous pourrions avoir l'ordre du jour du Comité pour cette semaine et la suivante. Je n'ai rien reçu. Je me demande si tout a déjà été distribué. J'aimerais bien connaître notre programme pour la semaine prochaine.

M. Reynolds: Nous avons là un ordre du jour qui peut être distribué.

Le président: Est-ce que nous en avons eu des exemplaires.

M. Reynolds: Je pense que M. Lévesque ici a un exemplaire qu'il peut vous donner, un exemplaire de l'horaire. Il n'y a rien de prévu pour jeudi et vendredi de cette semaine; si nous avons terminé l'audition des témoins à midi demain, nous ajournerons à ce moment-là. Si M. Ward a encore quelque chose à dire nous continuerons.

SÉANCE DE L'APRÈS-MIDI

Le président: Messieurs, s'il vous plaît, la séance est ouverte. M. Ward a temoigné au sujet des recommandations du rapport Woods. Pour faciliter la tâche aux membres, nous nous sommes reportés à ce document qui résume les recommandations et nous avons posé des questions sur les diverses clause. Je me propose de suivre la même procédure. Les membres sont parfaitement libres de poser à M. Ward les questions qu'ils voudront en vue de clarifier certains points. Nous avions espéré que M. Ward pourrait cette après-midi terminer la revue des 148 recommandations. Nous en sommes, je crois, à la 100e.

M. D. K. Ward (l'adjoint de l'avocat en chef des pensions): Je passais à la 111e.

[Text]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am sorry to interrupt the witness. I appreciate the fact that he is here this afternoon on short notice.

We have the recommendations from the Department as to whether they were rejected, adopted or otherwise. Will there by an change in this regard while Mr. Ward is speaking to us this afternoon? Is he going to give us only an explanation with regard to each of the recommendations? In other words, is there a possibility of any change taking place in the statement you sent us as to whether they were accepted, adopted or otherwise?

The Chairman: Do you have any comment, Mr. Ward?

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, the disposition, as I might indicate this afternoon, would coincide completely with the tabulation given to the members of this Committee.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Thank you.

The Chairman: Will you continue, Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward: Recommendations 111 and 112 deal with widows' claims in which women prior to the death of their husband had unfortunate domestic differences resulting in divorce, judicial separation, or separation pursuant to written or other agreements and in essence the Woods Committee recommendation pertaining to this group is that such widows should receive pension in the amount of elementary allowance awarded by a court or pursuant to the written or other agreement prior to the pensioner's death, and that Section 36(6) of the Pension Act be repealed so that such divorced and separated wives must establish maintenance rights prior to the pensioner's death before qualifying for widow's pension.

Existing legislation, Section 36(5) of the Pension Act provides that a woman who has been divorced is not entitled to pension unless she was awarded alimony, in which case she is entitled, if she is in a dependent condition, to the equivalent of the widows' pension or the equivalent of alimony, whichever is the smaller amount. If the amount is smaller than widows' pension it may be increased to full widows' pension at the discretion of the Commission. The same applies to women judicially separated or separated pursuant to written or other agreements.

Furthermore under Section 36(6) of the present Pension Act, notwithstanding the provisions of Section 36(5) such a women may be awarded pension in the discretion of the

[Interpretation]

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je m'excuse d'interrompre le témoin. Je sais qu'on lui a demandé à la dernière minute de se présenter ici cet après-midi. Nous avons la recommandation du ministère, quant au fait qu'elles ont été rejettées, adoptées, ou autrement. Y aura-t-il sur ce point des modifications tandis que M. Ward s'adresse à nous cet après-midi? S'en tiendra-t-il à une simple explication sur chacune des recommandations? Autrement dit, est-ce qu'il peut encore survenir des modifications, dans le document que vous nous avez fait parvenir, quant au fait qu'elles ont été adoptées, rejettées ou autrement.

Le président: Avez-vous quelque remarque à faire, M. Ward

M. Ward: Monsieur le président, les dispositions auquelles je pourrai me reporter cet après-midi coincideront entièrement avec la documentation qui a été remise aux membres du comité.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Merci.

Le président: Voulez-vous poursuivre, monsieur Ward.

M. Ward: Les recommandations 111 et 112 traitent des réclamations de veuves qui, avant la mort du mari, ont éprouvé de déplorables difficultés de ménage, entraînant le divorce, la séparation par décision judiciaire ou la séparation en vertu d'un accord, écrit ou autre, et le comité Woods recommande en substance que ces veuves reçoivent la pension élémentaire qui a été accordée par un tribunal ou en vertu d'une entente, écrite ou autre, antérieure au décès du pensionné, et que l'article 36 6) de la Loi sur les pensions soit abrogé de sorte que lesdites femmes divorcées et séparées doivent établir des droits d'entretien avant la mort du pensionné, avant d'être admissibles à une pension de veuve.

L'article 36 5) de la présente Loi sur les pensions stipule que la femme divorcée, n'a pas droit à la pension sauf s'il lui a été accordée une pension alimentaire, et dans ce cas, elle a droit, si elle ne peut elle-même subvenir à ses besoins, à l'équivalent de la pension de la veuve ou de la pension alimentaire, suivant le montant qui est le moindre. Si le montant est moindre que celui de la pension de la veuve, il peut, à la discrétion de la Commission, être porté à la pleine pension de la veuve. Il en est de même des femmes séparées par décision judiciaire ou séparées en vertu d'un accord, écrit ou autre. En outre, en vertu de l'article 36 6) de la présente Loi sur les pensions, et nonobstant les dispositions de l'article 36 5), cette femme peut se voir

Commission even though she was not awarded alimony if in the opinion of the Commission she would have been entitled to an award of alimony had she made application therefor under due process of law.

• 1420

As I see it, the major difference between the Woods Committee proposals and the current situation is that under the Woods recommendation a right to widows' pension in these cases would only apply if there had been an award of alimony during the pensioner's lifetime and, furthermore, regardless of whether or not the woman is in a dependent condition. The other major difference is that such a widow must establish her right to maintenance during the pensioner's lifetime. That is opposed to the current system by which the widow must be in a dependant condition and she may, if she was not awarded alimony, endeavour to convince the Canadian Pension Commission that she ought to have been awarded alimony had she applied during her husband's lifetime. There is merit in both systems, as I see it, gentlemen.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have a case which you might perhaps clarify for me. If a woman has been living common law with a man prior to his joining the armed service, because it has become known by everyone that she is more or less his wife she is entitled, I presume, to all the rights and privileges of being married. That is one case.

The other case is that of a legal wife and through some misunderstanding the parties have separated. It may be that they were willing to separate because they just could not get along. I will not talk about any alimony for the moment; I will just say they have separated. He then dies and she does not derive any benefits whatsoever. Is this in part what they are referring to here?

Mr. Ward: On the first part of your question, sir, in relation to the irregular union there is provision under other sections of the Pension Act for deeming the woman in such an irregular union to be the widow of the pensioner.

On the second aspect of your question, sir, in the case in which I understood you to say there may have been a separation without agreement, under the present provisions of the Pension Act it is quite possible that such a woman would qualify for full widow's pension; because if there is any question of her having been unjustifiably deserted by her accorder une pension, à la discrétion de la Commission, même si elle ne s'est pas vue accorder une pension alimentaire, si, de l'avis de la Commission, elle aurait eu droit à une pension alimentaire, si elle avait, à cet effet, soumis une demande dans les formes prescrites par la loi.

A mon avis, les propositions du comité Woods diffèrent surtout de la situation actuelle en ce que, selon la recommandation du comité Woods, le droit à la pension de veuve n'existerait que dans les cas ou il y aurait eu une pension alimentaire du vivant du pensionné, que l'épouse puisse ou non subvenir elle-même à ses besoins. Elles diffèrent aussi du fait que la veuve doit établir son droit à une pension du vivant du pensionné. Mais je pense qu'aux termes de l'entente actuelle la veuve doit être une personne à charge et elle doit, si elle n'a pas droit à une pension alimentaire, convaincre la Commission qu'elle aurait dû obtenir cette pension alimentaire lorsqu'elle l'a demandée au cours de la vie de son conjoint. Ainsi, il y a du bon dans les deux systèmes, messieurs.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Je pense que l'on pourrait clarifier un peu la situation ici, si c'est une femme qui vit aux termes du droit commun avant l'engagement de son mari, puisqu'il est connu qu'elle est plus ou moins sa femme, elle doit avoir droit à la pension tout comme si elle était vraiment mariée. Si la femme qui pour une raison connue des conjoints seulement, à la suite d'un malentendu entre les deux parties se sépare soit de propos délibérés parce que les deux personnes ne peuvent pas s'entendre et nous ne parlerons pas de la pension alimentaire pour l'instant, mais si le mari meurt, elle ne reçoit aucune pension? C'est à quoi l'on se réfère ici?

M. Ward: Je pense qu'en ce qui concerne le premier point, pour ce qui est des unions irrégulières il y a des dispositions aux termes d'autres articles de la loi qui traitent de ces unions irrégulières selon lesquelles la femme peut-être considérée comme la veuve du pensionné.

En ce qui concerne le deuxième aspect de votre question dans le cas que vous mentionnez il peut y avoir séparation sans entente, aux termes des dispositions actuelles de la loi des pensions, il est tout à fait possible qu'une femme dans ce cas-là puisse avoir droit à toute la pension de veuve parce que si l'on croit que son mari l'a quittée, je pense que le husband she would be entitled to be maintained notwithstanding the separation and would not be barred from full widow's pension.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I purposely did not use the word "deserted," Mr. Chairman. My example was rather that because they just could not live under the same roof they had to separate; and we will say that between the time they separated and the time he died there had been no financial arrangements, if I may so put it.

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, under the Woods Committee recommendation, as I see it, such a widow would be barred from widow's pension because during her husband's lifetime she did not establish her right to maintenance. Whereas, under the current legislation, she could appear before the Canadian Pension Commission and endeavour to convince that body that she would have been awarded some maintenance had she applied in the proper place.

The Chairman: In other words, in this respect the Woods Committee recommendation appears to be more restrictive than the present practice?

Mr. Ward: Yes; the Woods Committee recommendations, as I see them, are more restrictive. The present legislation provides the Commission with more discretion and is more flexible, and perhaps you could even say it is more favourable.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay and Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I just want to add butter to the toast, sir. I am saying they separated because they just could not get along. I want to emphasize that. Possibly the wife, on the other hand, has been trying to establish their position. She may have been communicating with her husband rather than taking him to court. We must bear in mind that women will say very little against their husbands, in many cases. I know that as a fact, from experience. They will make this attempt. At the same time in the case that I am citing, she may have wanted to teach him a little lesson—not that she was going to "skylark" around—so she said "Well, all right, we will separate." But in the meantime, while this is going on—and I am suggesting she still had no intention of leaving him, otherwise she would have taken him to court—he dies let us say, of a heart attack. We were talking about heart this morning. He was not aware of it. This can happen, and has happened.

[Interpretation]

droit ouvrant à pension peut être maintenu, peu importe s'il y a eu séparation, et cette femme aura toujours le droit à la pension.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Je n'ai pas employé le mot déserté, car je parlais simplement de conjoints qui ne peuvent pas vivre sous le même toit. Disons qu'entre le moment où ils se séparent et le moment de la mort du conjoint, il n'y a pas eu d'arrangements financiers si vous voulez.

M. Ward: Monsieur le président, aux termes des recommandations du Comité Woods, d'après ce que je peux comprendre une veuve n'aurait pas droit à la pension de veuve parce qu'elle n'a pas établi son droit à la pension mais elle peut par ailleurs, se présenter devant la Commission canadienne des pensions pour persuader ou convaincre cette Commission qu'elle aurait obtenu une pension alimentaire si elle avait demander cette pension en temps et lieu.

Le président: En d'autres mots, les recommandations du Comité Woods dans ce domaine sont plus restrictives.

M. Ward: Oui, le Comité Woods, d'après ce que je peux voir est plus restrictif à ce sujet-là car la Loi donne une plus grande latitude et une plus grande souplesse à la Commission et on peut même dire je pense, que la Loi est peut-être plus arrangeante.

Le président: Monsieur Guay et monsieur Bigg.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Le facteur temps est important ici entre le moment de la séparation et le moment où la femme d'autre part cherche à clarifier sa position, elle peut parfois communiquer avec son mari plutôt que de s'adresser à un Tribunal.

On a vu que dans bien des cas, je le sais par expérience, que des gens chercheront à adopter cette position, les gens se disent parfois on peut très bien se séparer et accepter une entente à l'amiable et puis ensuite on songe à aller se présenter devant les Tribunaux et puis tout à coup le mari meurt d'une attaque. Nous avons parlé des maladies de cœur ce matin. Le mari n'est pas au courant de sa maladie. Si cela arrive, alors vous allez me dire que dans un cas pareil la veuve n'aurait droit à aucune pension. Je ne comprends pas.

Je me fonde ainsi sur le cas d'une personne qui n'est pas mariée à un soldat et qui vit avec lui a droit à la pension de veuve une fois

[Texte]

You tell me she would not be entitled to anything at all.

This is the point which, for the life of me, I cannot understand. I am comparing her with the other woman who is not even married to the soldier but just has an arrangement. Because she is still with him when he dies she gets full benefit, whereas the other one, because of some high principles she may have, is going to be completely disowned.

The Chairman: It seems to me that Mr. Ward has answered this by pointing out that the Woods Committee recommendation is more restrictive. There is more discretion at the present time in the present section of the Pension Act. Is that right, Mr. Ward?

Mr. Ward: That is my understanding.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Except, Mr. Chairman, that I want to make it clear that I am not making reference only to the Woods Committee Report. I am also referring to the present policy under the Pension Act, of which I think Mr. Ward is aware.

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg?

Mr. Bigg: First of all, we are bound neither by the White Paper nor by the Woods Committee Report. I think that in some cases this Committee is probably going to come up with a better compromise, or even a better new idea, than either of them.

In this case I think probably the Woods Committee Report was concentrating on preventing a woman from, shall we say, leaving her husband without a good excuse.

I am thinking of a very serious case I know of where a woman deserted her husband, rather than the reverse. He was blind and she deserted him.

After he died she tried to get a widow's pension. I think the Woods Committee recommendation is trying to plug that hole in that type of case and say that as she deserted him then, in a way, she is being punished for treating a veteran badly.

I see that point, and no doubt we should protect against it, but I would like to see enough flexibility and good judgement left to the discretion of the pension board that for a woman who has been deprived of pension rights because of this kind of regulation and red tape, there is a safety valve, or a kind of son conjoint mort. Et si une femme, à cause de ses principes ne se sépare pas, elle est complètement spoliée.

Le président: Il me semble que M. Ward a répondu à cette question en mentionnant que le rapport Woods était plus restrictif à ce sujet-là que les présentes dispositions de la Loi sur les pensions.

M. Ward: Sauf erreur, monsieur le président.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Excepté, monsieur le président, que je tiens à dire bien précisément que je ne parle pas simplement du Comité Woods, je parle de la politique actuelle aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions et je pense que M. Ward est bien au courant de cela.

Le président: Monsieur Bigg?

M. Bigg: Je pense que dans certains cas, nous sommes ni liés par le Livre blanc ni par le rapport Woods. Je crois que dans certains cas où il faudra présenter des recommandations nouvelles, il faudra peut-être aussi présenter des compromis et à la lumière de ceci je pense que le Comité Woods empêcherait peut-être qu'une femme quitte son mari sans avoir une bonne excuse.

Je pense actuellement à un cas, très sérieux, une femme par exemple, qui a quitté son mari aveugle. Après sa mort elle a cherché à obtenir une pension. Voilà le type de cas que le Comité Woods a cherché à définir. La femme a quitté son mari puis a cherché à obtenir une pension. Je voudrais qu'il y ait suffisamment de souplesse et de jugement et qu'on accorde à la Commission des pensions suffisamment de liberté d'action pour que l'on puisse octroyer une pension à une femme de bonne foi, afin d'éviter toutes les lourdeurs administratives.

On pourrait faire appel, par exemple, à un Ombudsman dans un cas comme cela et ceci pourrait être laissé à la discrétion du ministre qui pourrait faire appel à la disposition du ombudsman quality about the pension board itself, so that this type of glaring inequity can be righted by using a benefit of the doubt rule perhaps in favour of the widow in the same manner as we asked for it in favour of the pension.

Mr. Ward: If I might comment, Mr. Chairman, these domestic-difficulty cases resulting in divorce and separation are often "sticky"; they are seldom black or white. I feel there should be a large element of discretion in the adjudicating body to deal with these types of cases.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions? Mr. Ward?

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 113: The Woods Committee recommended certain procedures in irregular union cases. This recommendation is accepted unchanged.

Recommendation 114: The Woods Committee recommended that periodic reviews in irregular union cases be discontinued. This recommendation is accepted unchanged.

Recommendation 115: The Woods Committee recommended that departmental and commission staff be authorized to advise and assist potential section 34 (5) and 34 (6) beneficiaries. This recommendation has been accepted unchanged, and I understand it has been implemented.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have a point to raise, if you will allow me, Mr. Chairman, relating to application forms, which in part affect this recommendation. Although, you gave us an explanation of the application form the other day and said you felt that a properly appropriate form should not be enforced, we were told yesterday that one of the reasons for their asking for a standard form and yet, at the same time, leaving the door open as you have suggested—so that they could also apply by letter, for example—was that to an applicant who would apply or appeal, or whatever the case may be, the form, and all the various questions that must be answered on the form, may be helpful to the veteran to apply properly to make sure that he has all the information, that he has followed possibly the form and has all the information at hand. Otherwise, if he does not do that, he might miss out on many items only to have to go back and delay the whole thing. Would you care to say something about that?

bénéfice du doute de la même façon que pour les pensions

M. Ward: Puis-je commenter cette question, monsieur le président? Ces différends de ménage qui résultent en divorce et en séparations sont souvent inutiles, c'est rarement noir et blanc et je pense que l'on doit accorder une grande liberté d'action à la Commission qui rendra la décision.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions à poser?

M. Ward: Recommandation n° 113. Le Comité Woods recommande certaines procédures au sujet de cas particuliers concernant des unions non légalisées et cette recommandation a été acceptée sans modification.

Recommandation n° 114. Le Comité recommande qu'on supprime la révision périodique des unions non légalisées et qu'on mette fin à de telles procédures. Cette recommandation a été acceptée sans modification.

Recommandation n° 115. La Commission Woods avait recommandé que l'on autorise le personnel du ministère de la Commission à donner conseil et avis aux bénéficiaires des articles 34(5) et 34(6). Cette recommandation a été acceptée sans modification et je crois comprendre que cette recommandation a été appliquée.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Si vous me le permettez, monsieur le président, pour ce qui est des formules de demande, vous m'avez donné l'autre jour une explication au sujet de cette formule de demande. Vous avez estimé que l'on ne devrait pas appliquer cette recommandation dans cette forme. Vous avez dit que La raison pour laquelle on demandait des formules normalisées tout en permettant, comme vous l'avez proposé de faire une demande par lettre. Pour le requérant qui présente une demande ou qui fait un appel ou autre, la formule qui contient diverses questions peut aider l'ancien combattant à répondre de façon satisfaisante, et l'assurer qu'il a fourni tous les renseignements, et qu'il a fait parvenir la formule. Autrement, s'il ne suit pas cette procédure il peut oublier plusieurs rubriques uniquement et devoir revenir en arrière et retarder tout le reste. Aimeriez-vous faire des commentaires à ce sujet?

[Texte]

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, I think, by and large, the Woods Committee, and shall I say the Department and the Canadian Pension Commission, are fairly well ad idem in this matter. That is to say, when forms are necessary, particularly for the purpose you outline, to assist the person in setting forth certain standard requirements that will assist the adjudicators in ascertaining whether he has met the requirements of the Act forms of that nature are quite acceptable. Also, other application forms where you are dealing with a generally vague sort of thing as to whether a disability was service-related, are acceptable, but we do not wish to be bound, to be inflexible. That is to say, we would like to retain the flexibility of people initiating claims at any stage by a letter, by a telephone call, or a visit, or by completing a form. I think we are pretty well ad idem in this matter.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Thank you.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 116. The Woods Committee recommended that the Act be amended to provide that an award of pension be retroactive from a date not more than five years prior to the date of grant or form the date of original application, whichever period of time is lesser.

The current situation is that there is provision for up to 12 months retroactive award with additional provision for six months in case of hardship and distress, and a further additional 18 months where there is delay in obtaining records or through administrative difficulties beyond the applicant's control.

This recommendation is modified. It is recognized that there is need to extend the retroactive provisions of the Pension Act, and it is proposed that an award of pension entitlement be retroactive from a date not more than three years prior to the date of the grant or from the date of the original application, whichever period is the lesser.

It is further proposed to extend the present 18 months retroactive award feature to two years in cases of delay through administrative difficulty beyond the applicant's control.

Mr. Bigg: Does that mean five years in total then, that they could get back three years—you might say by statute—and two years under these special circumstances beyond that?

[Interprétation]

M. Ward: Monsieur le président, en général, le Comité Woods et devrais-je dire le ministère, ainsi que la Commission canadienne des pensions ont bien examiné cette question, c'est-à-dire que lorsque les formules sont requises, surtout aux fins que vous avez exposées pour aider l'ancien combattant à répondre à certaines exigences ordinaires qui pourraient éclairer l'arbitre dans sa décision, de la Loi, s'il a répondu aux exigences de telles formules sont satisfaisantes. En outre d'autres formules de demande sont acceptables s'il s'agit de questions plutôt vagues comme la relation qui existe entre l'invalidité et la période de service militaire, mais nous ne voulons pas être forcés d'être intransigeants. Ainsi, nous aimerions conserver la souplesse des personnes qui présentant des demandes par voie de lettre, de téléphone en se présentant elles-mêmes ou en remplissant une formule. Je crois que nous sommes plutôt d'accord à ce sujet.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Merci.

M. Ward: Recommandation 116. Le Comité Woods préconise que la Loi soit modifiée, afin que l'attribution d'une pension ait un effet rétroactif à compter d'une date qui ne soit pas plus de cinq ans antérieur à la date de l'attribution ou à compter de la date de la requête initiale, selon la plus récente de ces deux dates.

A l'heure actuelle, on prévoit une rétroactivité qui va jusqu'à 12 mois, une période de 6 mois dans les cas d'épreuves ou de détresse et 18 autres mois lorsqu'il y a des retards qui retardent l'obtention des dossiers ou d'autres problèmes administratifs qui échappent à la volonté du requérant.

Alors, cette recommandation est modifiée. Il est reconnu qu'il faut élargir la disposition relative à la rétroactivité dans la Loi sur les pensions et on a décidé que l'attribution d'une pension est rétroactive à compter d'une date qui ne dépasserait pas trois ans avant la date de l'attribution, ou la date de la demande originale, selon la plus récente de ces deux dates.

On préconise ensuite de porter la période actuelle de rétroactivité de 18 mois à 2 ans dans le cas de retards administratifs, qui échappent à la volonté du requérant.

M. Bigg: Est-ce que cela sous-entend cinq ans en tout; ils pourraient recevoir trois ans, dirions-nous, par statut et deux ans en raison des circonstances spéciales qui échappent à leur volonté?

Mr. Ward: It would be possible to receive what is the equivalent to five years retroactive pension.

Mr. Bigg: That is the White Paper suggestion.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 117. The Woods Committee recommended retroactivation from date of application regardless of the proposed five-year limit if there was error in administration and procedure, or other performance of the adjudicating body.

There is no similar provision in the Pension Act at the present time. This recommendation is not accepted. Recommendation 118.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the witness would care to give the reasoning behind that. Surely if an administrative error has been made, and not the fault of the veteran, he should not be penalized because this error has been made.

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is felt that the proposals relating to retroactive awards are sufficient to generally take care of retroactivity needs, and as pointed out earlier, could very well be the equivalent of five years pension award. There is provision for extending the present 18 months additional pension to 2 years in cases of delay or loss of records and administrative difficulties.

Mr. Whicher: You regard this as somewhat of a duplication, then.

Mr. Ward: It could be viewed in that way, sir.

Mr. Weatherhead: Do you know of any cases, Mr. Ward, where it has gone on for more than five years, from start to finish?

Mr. Ward: Yes, sir, there are a few cases. By and large, I think it is reasonable to say that the average time lapse—and when I speak of average, we have not by any means gone through all the cases that have ever been dealt with—from the initial application to the final disposition of a case, is running around two years and seven months, when a random sampling was taken. But there are cases that extend many years and there are some that are dealt with from beginning to end in much less time than I have outlined.

Mr. Weatherhead: Would there be any extending beyond the five years that would fall within Recommendation 117, was it?

Mr. Ward: I do not know of any personally, sir, but I have no doubt there would be some such case if you dug enough.

[Interpretation]

M. Ward: On pourrait recevoir l'équivalent d'une pension rétroactive à 5 ans.

M. Bigg: C'est ce que propose le Livre blanc.

M. Ward: Recommandation 117. Le Comité Woods avait préconisé la rétroactivité à compter de la date de la requête, sans considération de la limite de cinq ans, s'il y avait une erreur administrative, une procédure ou d'autres formalités d'un organisme d'appel.

Il n'y a aucune disposition de ce genre dans la Loi sur les pensions actuelle. La recommandation est rejetée. Recommandation 118.

M. Whicher: Le témoin pourrait-il nous expliquer la logique qui a justifié cette décision. On a certainement commis une erreur administrative, ce qui n'est pas la faute de l'ancien combattant. Il ne devrait pas être victime d'une telle erreur.

M. Ward: Monsieur le président, on estime que les propositions, portant sur les allocations rétroactives, sont assez généreuses pour répondre aux besoins en matière de rétroactivité. Comme je l'ai signalé auparavant, cela pourrait bien correspondre à une pension de 5 ans. On prévoit l'élargissement de 18 mois à 2 ans en cas de retards, de pertes de documents ou d'autres difficultés administratives.

M. Whicher: Vous admettez qu'il y a double emploi dans ce processus?

M. Ward: On pourrait l'interpréter de cette manière.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur Ward, connaissez-vous des cas où la période a été portée à plus de 5 ans, du commencement à la fin?

M. Ward: Oui, il y a quelques cas, mais, en général, on peut dire que la période moyenne, et lorsque je parle de période moyenne il ne s'agit pas de récapituler tous les cas qui ont été réglés, de la présentation des demandes jusqu'au jugement, compte environ deux ans et sept mois, quand l'échantillonnage est pris au hazard. Mais il y a eu des cas qui ont duré pendant plusieurs années et d'autres procédures qui ont duré beaucoup moins longtemps.

M. Weatherhead: Y a-t-il eu une prolongation au-delà de cinq ans qui aurait trait à la recommandation 117?

M. Ward: Je ne connais aucun cas personnellement, mais je ne doute pas qu'il y en ait, si on cherche vraiment à les retracer.

[Texte]

Mr. Weatherhead: But in any event, this is not being accepted at the present time.

Mr. Ward: No, sir.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I am always doubtful of these deadlines. Although I realize that in some cases we feel bound to put them in, I still would like what I call a safety valve. I would like to have somewhere in the Act at least a ministerial discretion.

I will give an example. Supposing that a man had been taken prisoner in World War I and for some reason or other has been forgotten in some prison in Germany. This has happened before. This is a very rare case, but a man has been found 15 years later. He has never been able to get justice. He has been mistaken for somebody else and been put in jail, and after 20 years somebody admits to the crime. The man then admits his real identity, because of the disgrace involved, so you re-identify him as Private so-and-so who has been now in jail for 20 years and he has been blind perhaps from war service. Now he comes up and wants a pension, and he would ask for a pension and I understand that under the existing Act, no matter what happens, no matter what the circumstances were, it would be impossible to pay pension back more than five years.

This does not seem to me—although it is a very rare case—to be completely just, and I would just like to see that somewhere in the Act there is a safety valve for this thing, because in this type of case it is extremely onerous. He might even have been awarded a Victoria Cross, and all sorts of things. You could trot out the horrors forever. He would have no recourse other than strictly on a monetary basis and he would not be entitled to what you might almost call back pay. Is there an outlet for this type of extreme case or would it require an Order in Council or a special Act of Parliament for him to get redress?

• 1440

Mr. Ward: I do not believe under the present legislation there is any remedy for that particular case. The terms of the Act are quite clear as to the effective date an award may be payable. If a person was awarded an entitlement soon after discharge and he disappeared for perhaps 15 years and then they found him and his disability was assessed and there was evidence that the disability had been present over the years, it

[Interprétation]

M. Weatherhead: De toute façon, la recommandation est rejetée.

M. Ward: Non, monsieur.

M. Bigg: Je doute toujours de ces délais. Même si je constate que dans certains cas, nous sommes obligés de les prévoir, j'aimerais encore que la Loi prévoie une clause laissée à la discrétion ministérielle.

En guise d'exemple, je vous parlerai du cas d'un homme qui a été fait prisonnier pendant la Première Guerre mondiale et, pour une raison quelconque, on l'a oublié dans un camp de prisonniers en Allemagne. Cela s'est déjà produit. C'est un cas très rare, mais l'homme a été retrouvé 15 ans plus tard. On n'a pas pu obtenir justice parce qu'on s'était trompé d'identité et, après 20 ans, le criminel s'est rendu et a admis sa véritable identité. Ainsi, il devient le simple soldat untel, emprisonné depuis 20 ans et aveugle, à cause de ses services militaires peut-être. Maintenant, s'il réclame une pension je crois comprendre qu'en vertu de la Loi actuelle, quelles que soient les circonstances, on ne pourrait pas lui rembourser une pension qui remonterait à plus de 5 ans.

Même si c'est un cas très rare, cela me semble injuste et j'aimerais seulement que dans la Loi, on prévoie une garantie pour ce genre de chose, parce que des cas comme ceux-là sont très graves. On aurait pu même lui décerner une Croix Victoria et autres choses du genre. Vous pourriez pousser plus loin la liste des horreurs. Il n'aura aucun recours pour obtenir satisfaction autre que sur le plan financier. On pourrait presque appeler cela une paie rétroactive. Y a-t-il des dispositions qui pourraient régir ces cas extrêmes ou faut-il un décret du Conseil ou une loi spéciale du Parlement?

M. Ward: Pour moi, je ne pense pas qu'il y ait de remède dans ce cas particulier et, en vertu de la loi actuelle, celui-ci ne pourrait pas faire l'objet d'un recours parce que les dispositions de la loi sont claires et nettes pour ce qui est de la date à laquelle on doit verser une allocation, mais si cette personne bénéficie d'un avantage peu après avoir quitté les Forces armées, et qu'après être disparue pendant 15 ans, par exemple, on la would be paid right back, but that is a different matter.

Mr. Bigg: In this case everybody agrees that had he come in front of a board his blindness, of course, would automatically have been recognized, and there is no doubt at all from the records and everything—even medical records—that he was in fact blinded at the Battle of Amiens in 1917 or 1918. He then disappeared and he has been blind ever since and by rights he should be paid his blind allowance back to the day he came out of the army or the day the pension board sat. In the final analysis I do not think it would cost a lot of money, but in principle should there not be the right somewhere to give him what he would have been given? I do not know why we have to have this arbitrary deadline. It is the same as giving him six months to prove that he did or did not have a pre-enlistment condition.

Mr. Ward: You point up the fact that one of the difficulties that I think is found in any legislation in which you produce a pension act or an equivalent act is that by legislation you cannot possibly cover every conceivable case that will arise, and that is why in this particular act a great deal of discretion rests upon the Commission. It is possible and I would not disagree that there is room for even more discretion.

Mr. Bigg: I think the Committee is pretty well agreed, with respect to the three-month period which you have to establish or not establish your medical condition, that in a great many cases it might cause an injustice.

The Chairman: Five years is quite a bit longer than six months, Mr. Bigg, and we might ask the veterans associations as they appear if they have encountered any cases of hardship under this rule. I am not aware that any have commented on it or have had any hardship cases that they have presented under this rule. If there are none...

Mr. Peters: In view of the case that he cited—although it was probably hypothetical—I would think this would be a place for an Order in Council or special dispensation because it would be such an exception to the rule that it would warrant exception to the rule treatment.

Mr. Bigg: This, by the way, is a hypothetical case but to me it would be fairly simple to put some discretion into the Act to deal with retrouve et que son invalidité a été évaluée et que l'on peut prouver que celle-ci existait, depuis des annés, c'est alors qu'on paierait une pension rétroactive; mais il s'agit là d'une tout autre affaire.

M. Bigg: Dans ce cas, je ne doute pas que si cette personne devait comparaître devant une commission, sa cécité serait naturellement immédiatement reconnue et les dossiers médicaux etc. prouveraient qu'en fait elle avait perdu la vue à la bataille d'Amiens en 1917 ou en 1918. Ensuite, cette personne a disparu et depuis elle est aveugle et devrait de droit bénéficier d'une allocation qui remonterait au jour où elle a quitté l'Armée ou au jour où la Commission aurait siégé. En fin de compte, ça ne coûterait pas cher de vérifier, mais en principe, ne devrait-il pas y avoir inscrit quelque part le droit pour cette personne de recevoir l'allocation qu'elle aurait dû recevoir? Je ne comprends pas pourquoi il y aurait un délai arbitraire d'établi. Ce serait comme si la personne s'était ou ne s'était pas enrôlée avant la date d'enrôlement.

M. Ward: Cette difficulté peut ressortir dans toute loi, dans la Loi des pensions ou dans toute loi similaire. On ne peut pas prévoir dans une loi tous les cas imaginables, et voilà pourquoi dans cette loi on accorde une vaste latitude à la Commission. J'admets qu'il peut y avoir de la place pour une plus large liberté de décision.

M. Bigg: Je pense que le présent Comité admet que cette condition exigée d'une période de trois mois pendant laquelle vous devez prouver votre état de santé, peut, dans bien des cas, être injuste.

Le président: Cinq ans serait une période que l'on pourrait proposer et qui serait donc plus longue M. Bigg et nous pourrions demander aux associations d'anciens combattants, lorsque celles-ci comparaîtront, si cette règle a eu des applications malheureuses dans certains cas. Je n'ai pas, à ma connaissance, entendu de plaintes à ce sujet. S'il n'y en a pas...

M. Peters: A la suite de ce cas exposé, bien qu'il s'agisse très probablement d'une hypothèse, je pense qu'il y aurait lieu ici d'établir un décret du Conseil ou une dispense spéciale car le cas serait si exceptionnel qu'il devrait bénéficier d'un traitement exceptionnel.

M. Bigg: Pour moi, il s'agit d'une pure hypothèse, mais ce ne serait pas très difficile de permettre une certaine latitude dans la loi cases of extreme hardship or where there is an obvious case which does not involve the benefit of the doubt rule or any of these other difficult involvements. Where there is a case of blindness that goes back six years it seems to me that it would not be too difficult to get around the red tape.

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg, I think you have made your point. The only concern I have now is that we still have 30 more recommendations and we are trying to get Mr. Ward's evidence on record. If you wish, you can flag this and come back to it at a later point in the proceedings. I suggest you may want to do that.

Mr. Ward: I do not want to have the last word, but there are people who wish more discretion and there are veterans organizations that want things spelled out and tied down and perhaps even less discretion. It is difficult.

Mr. Bigg: I am not talking about specific cases, I am talking about principles. I am wondering whether the Act cannot be tailored broadly enough to handle this.

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg, I am sure we are all sympathetic but I think most of us feel that we would like to hear some evidence that this particular rule had worked a hardship in a certain situation. If there is no evidence of anyone being affected, then the problem is academic. If there is evidence...

Mr. Bigg: If you want a specific case, it is not as bad as the one I outlined—I did that for dramatic purposes—but I know of a case where a man was denied a pension for 20 years—in fact, he never did get it, he died, and I do not think his widow is going to get it either—and part of the difficulty arose because of some of these time limits that are allowed to produce the evidence, and so forth. I am quite sure that with the proper amount of discretion in this particular case—and I will go and get it if the Committee wants it—where for 20 years this man had been fighting this case...

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg, is this the time you want to do this? This is the only point I am making. We are trying to get a review of the recommendations and the general scope of them on the record. Presumably this will be one of the key transcripts for the members of the Committee. I wish to assure the members of the Committee that there is no intention to cut off discussion. I think you should flag the lorsque se présente un cas très malheureux ou qui n'implique pas le bénéfice du doute ou toute autre implication difficile à démêler ou dans le cas d'un homme qui est devenu aveugle après une période de six ans, il me semble qu'il ne serait pas difficile d'éviter les difficultés administratives.

Le président: Monsieur, vous vous éloignez de la question parce qu'il s'agit maintenant de passer en revue les 30 recommandations ou plus qui nous sont soumises. Nous aimerions consigner les témoignages de M. Ward. Vous pourrez, si vous le désirez, y revenir plus tard au coure des délibérations. Je vous propose de le faire.

M. Ward: Je ne désire pas avoir le dernier mot, mais il y a des gens qui veulent plus de latitude pour la Loi. Il y a des associations d'anciens combattants qui voudraient que tout soit bien précisé et qu'on accorde peut-être même un peu moins de latitude dans la législation. Alors, c'est très difficile de concilier ces deux points de vue.

M. Bigg: Je ne parle pas de cas particuliers. Je parle de principe. Je me demande si l'on ne pourrait adopter la Loi pour prévoir ces cas.

Le président: Monsieur Bigg, nous comprenons très bien votre point de vue, mais la plupart d'entre nous aimerions obtenir des témoignages portant sur ces cas malheureux. Mais s'il n'y a pas de preuve dans ce sens, alors le problème est théorique, sinon . . .

M. Bigg: J'ai un cas à l'esprit qui n'est pas aussi dramatique que celui que j'avais exposé précédemment. Une personne qui a attendu pendant vingt ans une pension jusqu'à sa mort et je ne pense pas que sa veuve ne l'obtiendra non plus et la difficulté avait été causée en partie à cause de ces dates limites pour présenter les témoignages et ainsi de suite. Je suis bien certain que s'il y avait eu une latitude suffisante dans ce cas particulier où cette personne a lutté pendant vingt ans... Et je vais, si le Comité me le permet, m'occuper d'obtenir cette mesure...

Le président: Ce n'est pas le moment de le faire. Pour nous ici, nous passons en revue les recommandations et leur portée générale; il s'agira ici d'une copie clef à l'intention des membres du Comité et j'aimerai les rassurer en leur disant que nous ne tenons pas du tout à raccourcir la discussion, je pense que vous devriez réexposer cette question qui vous préoccupait au cours des délibérations du points about which you are concerned and return to them in the course of the Committee hearings, and there will be an opportunity to do this. Would this be agreeable to you?

Mr. Bigg: Everything is agreeable to me.

The Chairman: I know that, Mr. Bigg. I do not want to be difficult, either, but I am trying to...

Mr. Bigg: That is fine.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, we will still have an opportunity to hear the Deputy Minister again, will we not, and people such as this?

The Chairman: The Committee will have the opportunity of calling any witnesses of the Department that in its discretion it wants to call. I presume it is very likely that the Deputy Minister will be called by the Committee. There is no intention to cut it off but there is a desire at this point to get a general view of the approach taken on all of these recommendations on the record and this will be a kind of basic document for members of the Committee. I am suggesting that if we take up a fair amount of time on this kind of thing now rather than later, it will make it more difficult to complete the testimony today.

Mr. MacRae: I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I concur completely with what you are attempting to say.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation No. 118. The Woods Committee recommended that applicant not be penalized for delay even if it is his fault. There is no equivalent provision in the Pension Act. This recommendation has not been accepted.

Recommendation No. 119. The Woods Committee recommended that the Canadian Pension Commission give automatic consideration to retroactivation and give reasons if full retroactivation not awarded. Under the current policy of the Commission I understand they almost invariably give automatic consideration to the question of retroactivity in so far as section 31(1) of the Pension Act is concerned. That is the provision that permits up to twelve months retroactivity. Also on occasion the Commission also applies on its own volition the provisions of Section 31(2), which is an additional six months in the case of hardship and distress, and also the provision of section 31(3), which relate to administrative delay or difficulty beyond the applicant's control.

[Interpretation]

Comité et d'ailleurs vous en aurez l'occasion. Êtes-vous d'accord?

M. Bigg: Oui, nous sommes d'accord.

Le président: Je le sais, M. Bigg, je ne veux pas me montrer exigeant mais j'essaie de...

M. Bigg: Très bien.

M. Weatherhead: M. le président, nous aurons, n'est-ce pas, l'occasion à nouveau d'entendre témoigner le sous-ministre et d'autres témoins comme lui...

Le président: Le Comité pourra convoquer à son gré tous les témoins du ministère et le sous-ministre sera très probablement convoqué par le Comité. Il ne s'agit pas du tout de mettre fin aux discussions, mais pour le moment nous voulons avoir une opinion générale sur les principes qui ont été appliqués à propos de toutes ces recommandations consignées dans le compte rendu et il s'agira là d'un document fondamental pour les membres du Comité. Alors, maintenant, il conviendrait de nous préoccuper de la question soumise au Comité et si nous nous occupons de cette précédente question, il nous sera difficile de finir aujourd'hui.

M. MacRae: J'avouerai que je suis entièrement d'accord avec vous, M. le président.

M. Ward: Recommandation 118. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé que les candidats ne soient pas victimes d'un retard, même s'il s'agit de leur propre faute. La Loi des pensions ne prévoit rien à propos de cette recommandation, alors la recommandation n'a pas été acceptée.

Recommandation 119. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé que la Commission des pensions examine immédiatement la rétroactivité et donne immédiatement ses raisons pour refuser l'entière rétroactivité de la paie. Dans la politique actuelle de la Commission, je crois comprendre qu'ils examinent automatiquement la question des rétroactivités dans la mesure où l'article 31 (1) de la Loi des pensions s'applique. Vous pouvez avoir une rétroactivité allant jusqu'à 12 mois. Et la Commission a même, de son propre gré, mis en application les dispositions de l'article 31 (2) qui prévoient une période supplémentaire de six mois dans les cas malheureux et même l'article 31 (3) qui parle de retard administratif et des difficultés qui échappent au contrôle du candidat.

[Texte]

Usually, however, in applications for the Section 31(2) and Section 31(3) type of benefit the application is initiated by the applicant's representative, who makes specific arguments in favour of whatever retroactivity he is seeking.

This recommendation has not been accepted.

Recommendation No. 120. The Woods Committee recommended that retroactivity provisions apply to degree of aggravation and assessment. Under the current policy of the Canadian Pension Commission degree of aggravation is now a question of entitlement and all the provisions of the Act relating to retroactivity apply to degree of aggravation. With regard to assessment, pension is awarded in accordance with the extent of disability found on medical examination from time to time. As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Bigg, it may extend back many, many years and even beyond the scope envisaged by the Woods Committee recommendation. The recommendation is not accepted.

Recommendation 121. The Woods Committee recommended that in retroactive award cases assessment not be reduced below 50 per cent of the amount deemed to exist at the date of the award.

This recommendation is modified and it is proposed that where a retroactive award of entitlement is made in the absence of assessment having been made at the time of application, or in the event of lack of medical evidence covering the retroactive period, assessment should be based upon the best medical judgment available having regard to the type of disability under consideration. However, where medical evidence does exist assessment should be based upon this evidence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And where it does not exist?

Mr. Ward: On the best medical judgment available on the facts that are available, sir.

Recommendation 122. The Woods Committee recommended pension medical examinations while pensioner in hospital for treatment and assessment to be retroactive. This recommendation is accepted unchanged.

Recommendation 123. The Woods Committee recommended that World War II pensions be stabilized after three years. Under current Commission policy stabilization applies only to World War I pensioners and no reductions in the assessment of disability are made provided such assessment has been in effect for three years or more. The Woods Committee recommendation is modified so that it is

[Interprétation]

Mais dans les cas où il y a demande de prestations en vertu des articles 31 (2) et 31 (3), la demande émane du représentant du candidat qui doit présenter des arguments bien précis en faveur du genre de paie rétroactive qu'il requiert. Cette recommandation n'a pas été acceptée.

Recommandation 120. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé que la rétroactivité s'applique au degré d'aggravation et à l'évaluation. Notre politique actuelle au sein de la Commission des pensions, au sujet du degré d'aggravation est actuellement une question d'éligibilité dans toutes les dispositions de la loi qui régissent la rétroactivité s'appliquant au degré d'aggravation. En ce qui a trait à l'évaluation, la pension est accordée selon la validité constatée par voies médicales. Alors cela pourrait prendre de nombreuses années et cela dépasserait même le cadre envisagé par le rapport de la Commission Woods. La recommandation n'a pas été acceptée.

A la recommandation 121, le comité avait recommandé, dans les cas d'allocations rétroactives, de ne pas réduire l'évaluation à moins de 50 p. 100 du montant qui doit être versé le jour même du versement. Cette recommandation a été modifiée et on propose, lorsqu'une allocation rétroactive est accordée sans qu'une évaluation soit faite au moment de la demande ou dans le cas d'une absence de décision médicale, de fonder l'évaluation sur le meilleur jugement médical disponible, compte tenu du genre d'invalidité en cause. Toutefois, lorsqu'il existe une décision médicale, elle doit servir de base à l'évaluation.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Alors l'évaluation devrait reposer sur cette décision?

M. Ward: Sur le meilleur jugement médical, sur les faits, monsieur.

Recommandation 122: Le comité Woods a recommandé de faire des examens médicaux en vue de la pension pendant que le pensionné est à l'hôpital et a recommandé aussi que l'évaluation soit rétroactive. Cette recommandation a été acceptée sans modification.

Recommandation 123. Le comité a recommandé que les pensions de la deuxième guerre mondiale soient stabilisées après trois ans. Notre politique prévoit que la stabilisation s'applique seulement aux pensionnés de la première guerre mondiale, mais qu'il n'y ait pas de réduction dans l'évaluation de l'invalidité qui est en vigueur depuis au moins trois ans. La recommandation du comité a été intended to extend the stabilization benefit to all post World War I disability pensioners when the assessment has remained unchanged for 10 years and the pensioner has reached the age of 60 years. It will apply equally to disability pensioners based on World War II service, service in a theatre of operations, Korea for instance, special duty areas, regular force and reserve army service. World War I pensioners are in a separate category with regard to this benefit. Since they have had stabilization benefits since 1948 it is not proposed to extend the three year fixed assessment to 10 years in their case.

The age requirement of age 60 will apply to World War I pensioners but, as you know, they have all long since passed over the age of 60 and so it has no limiting effect whatsoever.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, might I ask a question. Obviously there is a different here—World War II veterans are being treated on a different basis than World War I veterans. Is there any reason for this?

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, I might point out that when the stabilization policy was brought into being for World War I pensioners in 1948 the average age, as I understand it, of such pensioners at that time was 59 years of age. In bringing in the similar benefit for the World War II or post World War I pensioners, limiting it to age 60 is fairly close to what had been applied to World War I pensioners. Now with regard to the 10 years, undoubtedly in considering the proposals it was felt that the adjudicating authorities, those responsible for assessment of disabilities, should have sufficient time to observe the progress of disabilities to determine whether or not this was going to be a fixed disability within a certain time. And the Woods Committee did in fact recommend that such a 10 year time limit be applied in regular force cases for the same reason.

• 1455

Mr. Whicher: Why would you pick the 10th year? Why not pick 8 or 12? If one had it for six years that would be a pretty good indication that he was going to have it for the rest of his life. Also, there is the mental worry that this is going to be cut off at any time and I feel that we should think about the veterans who may experience this mental worry.

[Interpretation]

modifiée de telle sorte qu'il soit possible d'accorder les avantages de la stabilisation à tous les pensionnés de la première guerre mondiale lorsque l'évaluation n'a pas été modifiée après dix ans et que le pensionné a atteint l'âge de soixante ans. Cela s'appliquera aussi aux bénéficiaires de pensions d'invalides qui ont fait du service pendant la deuxième guerre mondiale, sur un théâtre de guerre, en Corée par exemple, dans les troupes régulières ou dans l'armée de réserve. Pour ce qui est des pensionnés de la première guerre mondiale, ils sont dans une catégorie spéciale, à propos de ces avantages. Vu qu'ils jouissent des avantages de la stabilisation depuis 1948, nous ne voulons pas prolonger cette évaluation de trois ans à dix ans.

L'âge obligatoire de soixante ans s'appliquera aux pensionnés de la première grande guerre, mais comme vous le savez, il y a longtemps qu'ils ont dépassé l'âge de soixante ans. Par conséquent, cette restriction ne les touche pas.

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, il est évident que les vétérans de la Deuxième guerre mondiale ne sont pas traités de la même façon que ceux de la Première. Y a-t-il des raisons pour cette distinction?

M. Ward: Monsieur le président, je pourrais signaler que lorsque la politique de stabilisation a été appliquée en faveur des pensionnés de la première guerre en 1948, l'âge moyen des pensionnés à l'époque était de 59 ans. Alors en accordant les mêmes avantages aux pensionnés de la deuxième guerre ou à ceux qui ont eu leur pension après la première guerre mondiale, l'âge limite étant de soixante ans, on accorde des avantages passablement semblables à ceux qui ont été établis pour les pensionnés de la première guerre. Il est certain, lorsqu'on examine les propositions au sujet de la limite de 10 ans que l'adjudicateur, ceux qui sont responsables de l'évaluation de l'invalidité, devraient pouvoir observer l'évolution de l'invalidité suffisamment longtemps pour déterminer si l'invalidité sera permanente ou temporaire. Alors le comité Woods avait recommandé que ce délai de dix ans soit prévu pour les soldats des forces régulières pour la même raison.

M. Whicher: Pourquoi choisir dix ans? Pourquoi pas huit ou douze? Si quelqu'un est invalide six ans, il se peut fort bien qu'il le reste jusqu'à la fin de sa vie. Il y a aussi l'inquiétude que cela produit chez l'ancien combattant. Nous devons en tenir compte.

[Texte]

Mr. Ward: Speaking for myself right at the moment, I can agree with Mr. Bigg when he implied that time limits, stated periods of time and so on are odious and that a great deal of discretion should be exercised in these matters. I have no doubt that the authorities will be prepared to listen and listen carefully to recommendations from any source pertaining to matters of this sort when we are dealing with the question of whether it should be 5, 6, 7 or 10 years.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, when The War Amputations of Canada association were before us yesterday, at page 49 of their brief, referring to stabilization of pensions, they referred to the fact that World War I veterans pensions were stabilized in 1936. You will recall that they made quite a submission, one of the main points being that World War I veterans were stabilized within 18 years after World War I. Mr. Ward has now indicated a date of 1948 and I wonder just which date is correct. Could you comment on that.

Mr. Ward: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there was a parliamentary committee on veterans affairs in 1948 that recommended implementation of a stabilization policy and the Canadian Pension Commission acted upon that recommendation in 1948.

Mr. Weatherhead: So the 1936 date is just not correct, as far as you know?

Mr. Ward: I have not seen the brief of the organization you mentioned, but it may be that there were extenuating circumstances that would explain why they said 1936. For instance, there may have been a semi-policy in effect.

The Chairman: Mr. Ward, would it be in order to ask you to check into this later and then pass the information on to the Committee? Would you be prepared to do that?

Mr. Ward: Yes, I would be very pleased to do so, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I have two or three members who wish to speak.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, this question has come up many times before and it has been my understanding—I think Mr. MacRae will probably back me up—that the rationalization behind this stabilization was as follows: Like the Hong Kong veterans, World War I veterans fought a war under standard conditions of

[Interprétation]

M. Ward: Pour ma part, je parle en mon nom personnel. Je me range à l'avis de Monsieur Bigg qui a dit que les délais sont odieux et qu'il faut faire montre de beaucoup de discernement dans ces questions-là. Je suis certain que les pouvoirs publics accepteraient d'entendre et de peser les recommandations qui émanent de n'importe quelle source à propos de tels cas, lorsqu'on parle de la question d'une période de temps ou d'un nombre d'années quelconque.

M. Weatherhead: Lorsque l'Association des amputés de guerre témoignait hier au sujet de la stabilisation des pensions mentionnée à la page 49 de leur mémoire ils ont déclaré que les pensions de la première guerre mondiale avaient été stabilisées en 1936. Vous vous rappelez qu'ils ont bien insisté sur cette question. Nous savons que les vétérans de la première guerre mondiale ont vu leurs pensions stabilisées 18 ans après la fin de la guerre. Maintenant monsieur Ward a mentionné la date de 1948. Je voudrais savoir quelle date est la bonne. Pourrait-on m'éclairer là-dessus.

M. Ward: Je crois savoir monsieur le président, qu'un comité parlementaire des affaires des anciens combattants établi en 1948 avait recommandé l'établissement d'une politique de stabilisation pour la Commission des pensions.

M. Weatherhead: Alors l'année 1936 n'est pas exacte selon vous?

M. Ward: Je n'ai pas lu le mémoire de l'Association que vous avez mentionné, mais il est possible qu'il y avait des circonstances atténuantes pour expliquer pourquoi ils ont parlé de l'année 1936. Il y avait peut-être un début de politique en vigueur. L'amorce d'une politique.

Le président: Monsieur Ward, pourriez-vous vérifier cette question et communiquer le résultat de vos recherches au Comité.

M. Ward: Oui, je me ferai un plaisir de le faire, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je crois que certains députés désirent témoigner.

M. Bigg: Monsieur le président, cette question a été soulevée plusieurs fois et je crois connaître que monsieur MacRae pourra m'appuyer également, le principe de cette stabilisation. Par exemple, les anciens combattants de la première guerre, comme les anciens combattants de Hong Kong, ayant fait la certain purposes was that they fought an entirely different war than we did in World War II.

Although I believe in stabilization payments too I think perhaps they would have to be based on different terms of reference than either the Hong Kong veterans or the World War I veterans. I agree that World War I veterans were aged because of trench warfare to a much greater extent across the board than we were. That is the rationalization that has been put before the Committee over the years. As to the arbitrary time of 10 years, I am not prepared to say whether it should be 8—

Mr. Whicher: You see, I was just as scared as any World War I veteran.

Mr. Bigg: But very few of us spent three years in the mud at Flanders.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments?

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I have just been handed a piece of paper which indicates the stabilization policy was effective in June 1948 for World War I veterans I think it is unfortunate, therefore, that the brief we heard yesterday referred to 1936 but it would be interesting to know what they were basing that '36 figure on because perhaps it was, as somebody mentioned, partially in effect or was the unwritten rule or something like that at that time.

Mr. Ward: I believe there is mention, Mr. Chairman, in that portion of the Woods Committee Report dealing with his comment relating to this recommendation. I am searching my memory but I think there was reference to 1936 in the report and I believe there was an unofficial policy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think there was a reference to the fact that this was in the middle of the depression and some of the men were getting worried about it and that in an unofficial way they started stabilizing most pensions.

The Chairman: I think we can check this and introduce something into our proceedings later dealing with this. Do you want to proceed Mr. Ward?

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 124. The Woods Committee recommended that regular guerre des tranchées, une forme de guerre totalement différente de celle que nous avons connue durant la Deuxième guerre mondiale, nous les plaçons dans un groupe à part pour certaines fins.

Bien que je croie moi aussi à la stabilisation, elle devrait peut-être être fondée sur des critères autres que ceux qui s'appliquent aux anciens combattants de Hong-kong ou de la Première Grande guerre. Par exemple, la première guerre était une guerre de tranchées. C'est le principe énoncé au Comité depuis nombre d'années. En ce qui concerne le délai arbitraire de dix ans, je ne suis pas prêt à dire que c'est le bon délai.

M. Whicher: Bon.

M. Bigg: Très peu ont passé trois ans dans la boue des Flandres.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires?

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, j'ai un document ici qui indique que la politique de stabilisation était en vigueur en juin 1948 pour les anciens combattants de la première guerre et que le mémoire qu'on a entendu hier parlait de 1936. Peut-être quelqu'un a-t-il mentionné que cette mesure était partiellement en vigueur à l'époque.

M. Ward: Je crois, monsieur le président, que la commission Woods a traité ou commenté diverses questions pour proposer cette recommandation. J'essaye de me souvenir, mais je pense qu'on a parlé de 1936 dans le rapport et je crois qu'il s'agissait d'une politique non officielle.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je crois qu'on a dit que c'était au milieu de la dépression économique et que certains s'inquiétaient et que cela constituait en somme une façon officieuse de stabiliser les pensions de façon non officielle.

Le président: Je pense que nous pourrions approfondir cette question afin d'avoir plus de détails à inclure dans notre compte rendu. Voudriez-vous poursuivre, monsieur Ward?

M. Ward: A la recommandation 124 le comité Woods propose que les pensions des force pensions be stabilized after three years if more than 10 years since release from the forces.

At the present time there is no stabilization for regular force pensioners and this recommendation is modified to the extent, as I outlined with regard to Recommendation 123.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, could I ask if the recommendation is for extensions for any disability suffered or is it only for disability in a theatre of war in the regular forces since 1946? Does that cover the Korean war and the Cyprus situation?

Mr. Ward: Under existing Commission policy, there is only stabilization with respect to World War I pensioners at the present time. The proposals I have outlined are that the stabilization policy will apply equally to all periods of service post World War I.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But we are talking about pensions under the Pension Act, not pensions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act.

Mr. Ward: No, it is limited to pensions under the Pension Act, sir.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments? Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 125 is the Woods Committee recommended procedure for dealing with split pensions. Under the present Section 34(1) of the Pension Act there is provision for payment of additional pension direct to a wife in certain cases. In the main, divided pensions have been paid under the provisions of Section 18 of the Pension act, either at the request of the pensioner or at the request of one or more dependants or the public trustee in certain cases where it seems clear the pensioner is not maintaining the members of his family to whom he owes the duty of maintenance. I understand the philosophy of the Canadian Pension Commission with regard to dependants is that dependants hold no entitlement to any pension payments during the pensioner's lifetime. Pension is paid to the veteran with an additional payment to enable him to provide for those to whom he owes the duty of maintenance.

• 1505

The Commission apparently has always held that additional pension on behalf of dependants must be paid where such dependants are maintained. The Commission must forces régulières soient stabilisées après trois ans s'ils ont été libérés des forces depuis plus de dix ans. A présent, la pension des forces armées régulières n'est pas stabilisée et cette recommandation est modifiée dans la mesure que j'ai mentionnée en ce qui concerne la recommandation 123.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, pourrais-je savoir si la recommandation préconise des prolongations pour toute invalidité ou seulement pour invalidité causée pendant la guerre dans les forces armées régulières depuis 1946? Ceci englobe-t-il la guerre de Corée, la guerre de Chypre?

M. Ward: Aux termes de la politique actuelle de la Commission, il y a une stabilisation seulement pour les pensionnés de la première guerre mondiale. Les propositions que j'ai signalées sont les suivantes: la politique de stabilisation s'appliquera également à toutes les périodes de service militaire après la première guerre mondiale.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Mais nous parlons des pensions aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions et non pas de la Loi sur la pension de retraite des forces canadiennes.

M. Ward: Nous traitons uniquement des pensions qui tombent sous le coup de la Loi sur les pensions.

Le président: Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres commentaires à ce sujet? Monsieur Ward

M. Ward: A la recommandation 125, le Comité Woods a proposé une procédure pour traiter des pensions séparées. L'article 34 (1) de la loi actuelle stipule qu'il faut verser des pensions additionnelles directement à l'épouse dans certains cas. Mais de façon générale, des pensions séparées ont été versées aux termes de l'article 18 de la Loi sur les pensions, soit à la demande du pensionné ou à la demande d'une ou plusieurs personnes à charge ou des fiduciaires, dans certains cas où il semble clair que le pensionné n'entretient pas sa famille. Je crois savoir que la Commission canadienne des pensions adopte le principe suivant à l'égard des personnes à charge; les personnes à charge n'ont pas de droit direct sur la pension d'un ancien combattant du vivant de celui-ci. En somme, c'est le pensionné qui reçoit l'argent et qui a une somme supplémentaire pour faire vivre les personnes qui sont à sa charge.

La Commission a toujours soutenu que cette pension supplémentaire pour les personnes à charge ne doit être versée que quand ces personnes bénéficient en fait de cette pen-establish that the pensioner has made an honest effort to wholly or to a substantial extent maintain his dependants or there must be evidence that a court of competent jurisdiction has declared that his dependants are entitled to be maintained. This practice has led to some complaints, particularly in those cases where the Commission has required a pensioner to contribute from his own funds, either through pension or other sources, to justify the continuing payment of additional pensions. This has been a particularly vexing problem where a veteran is in receipt of a very small pension.

In essence the Commission has declined in the absence of a court order, to pay additional pension unless there is some attempt on the part of the veteran to make a worthwhile effort, as far as he has funds available, to contribute at least up to the level of additional pension to the maintenance of any or all of his dependants.

The Woods Committee recommendation is generally acceptable in principle but it is modified to the extent that paragraphs (b) and (c) of Recommendation 125 are not accepted.

The remaining paragraphs and the provisions contained in those paragraphs, I should say, are completely acceptable.

Mr. Bigg: Where do they vary or are you going to tell us that? Could you suggest where they differ from the Woods Report?

Mr Ward: In essence, the Woods Committee recommended that there be no split pension in the absence of a court order. However, the Woods Committee did make provision that if a person desired, or was willing, to get a court order but for one reason or another was unable to get a court order of maintenance, then there would be provision made. By deleting paragraphs (b) and (c) it means in effect that in all cases of split pension the wife must obtain a court order for maintenance.

Recommendation 126. The Woods Committee recommended authority for divided pensions be removed from Section 18 and incorporated into Section 34(1). This recommendation is accepted unchanged.

Recommendations 127 and 128. The Woods Committee recommended that improper conduct should not apply if member of the forces totally disabled and also that venereal disease sion. La Commission exige qu'il y ait une preuve qui établisse que le pensionné a fait des efforts raisonnables pour aider à faire vivre les personnes qui sont à sa charge. Ou alors on doit avoir une preuve fournie par un tribunal compétent à l'effet que les personnes à charge ont bien le droit de l'être. Ceci a entraîné certaines réclamations, par exemple quand la Commission exigeait qu'un pensionné paie de sa poche pour justifier cette pension supplémentaire. Ceci est un problème particulièrement délicat pour les anciens combattants qui ne reçoivent qu'une très petite pension.

Donc, la Commission se refuse à verser une pension supplémentaire à moins d'être munie d'un ordre du tribunal et à moins qu'il y ait la preuve que l'ancien combattant a fait des efforts raisonnables pour aider les personnes qui sont à sa charge en versant au moins une somme correspondant à la pension supplémentaire pour une ou toutes ses personnes à charge. Ce comité Woods a donc présenté des recommandations acceptables d'une façon générale, mais par contre, le paragraphe b) et le paragraphe c) de la recommandation 125 sont rejetés. Les autres paragraphes et les dispositions de ces paragraphes sont tout à fait acceptables.

M. Bigg: Est-ce différent des recommandations du comité Woods; allez-vous nous dire cela? Pourriez-vous nous dire ce qui est différent du Rapport du comité Woods.

M. Ward: Le comité Woods recommande qu'on ne divise pas la pension à moins d'avoir l'ordre du tribunal. Mais le comité Woods a pris les dispositions nécessaires pour que toute personne qui désire obtenir un ordre du tribunal en vue d'obtenir une pension et qui pour une raison ou pour une autre ne peut pas avoir satisfaction du tribunal, puisse quand même obtenir sa pension. En supprimant les alinéas (b) et (c) en fait dans tous les cas où il y a une pension séparée, la femme doit avoir un ordre du tribunal pour obtenir une pension.

A la recommandation 126, le comité Woods préconise que l'autorisation de verser des pensions séparées soit incluse dorénavant dans l'article 34(1) au lieu de l'article 18. Cette recommandation est adoptée sans modification.

Recommandations 127 et 128. Le comité Woods recommande que la clause relative à la mauvaise conduite ne s'applique pas pour les membres des Forces armées qui sont totalenot be considered improper conduct under the Pension Act.

Under current legislation, Section 14 of the Pension Act provides that pension shall not be awarded when the death or disability of the member of the forces is due to improper conduct. Improper conduct has been defined in the Pension Act and includes wilful disobedience of orders, wilful self-inflicted wounding and vicious or criminal conduct.

Under Section 14(2) of the Pension Act, the Commission has the discretion to award pension in any event if the applicant is in a dependent condition.

Under Section 14(3) of the Pension Act it is provided that the provisions of Section 14 barring pension because of improper conduct do not apply in cases where death of a member of the forces occurred during World War I or World War II. There is also a provision in Section 14(4) of the Pension Act providing for pension in cases of pre-enlistment venereal disease aggravated during service, provided you served overseas and provided that the pension will be paid for that amount of disability that existed at the time of the man's discharge and will never be increased beyond that amount but can be decreased if the condition improves.

The Chairman: Mr. Whicher.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, may I ask for an explanation. Does this mean that a man who contracted venereal disease in France in the Second World War, as an example, and was disabled or died because of it, gets a pension or not?

Mr. Ward: If he contracted venereal disease during service, there is no provision in the Pension Act for payment of pension except that if he is in a dependent condition, the Commission may, in its discretion, award him such pension as they deem fit.

Mr. Whicher: This is a rather touchy subject, of course, Mr. Chairman. It reminds me of the pills that we had to take when we were overseas to take our minds off the opposite sex and it is something that the people do not like to talk about. As far as those pills are concerned, I am sure that everyone around the table will agree that they are the best pills I ever saw in my life because I have not ment invalides et que les maladies vénériennes ne soient pas considérées comme mauvaise conduite aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions.

L'article 14 de la Loi sur les pensions prévoit que la pension ne doit pas être donnée si la mort ou l'invalidité d'un militaire résulte de sa mauvaise conduite. Ceci a été défini dans la Loi sur les pensions et comprend la désobéissance volontaire aux ordres, conduite criminelle et vicieuse ainsi que des blessures infligées par soi-même. En vertu de l'article 14(2) de la Loi sur les pensions, la Commission a le pouvoir de donner une pension dans tous les cas où le pensionné se trouve dans une condition particulière.

Au terme de l'article 14 (3) de la Loi sur les pensions, les dispositions de l'article 14 qui empêchent le versement de la pension dans le cas de mauvaise conduite ne s'appliquent pas dans les cas où il y a mort évidemment des militaires au cours de la Première ou de la Deuxième guerre.

Les dispositions prévues dans l'article 14 (4) de la Loi sur les pensions stipulent que dans le cas de maladies vénériennes qui s'aggravent pendant les années de service militaire outre-mer, la pension sera payée pour le pourcentage d'invalidité qui existait au moment de la libération; elle ne sera jamais augmentée, mais elle pourra être diminuée si l'état de santé du pensionné s'améliore.

Le président: Monsieur Whicher.

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, puis-je vous demander une explication? Cela veut-il dire qu'une personne qui a contracté une maladie vénérienne en France au cours de la Seconde Guerre mondiale par exemple et qui est atteinte d'une invalidité ou qui meurt par suite de cette maladie, reçoit une pension?

M. Ward: S'il a contracté une maladie vénérienne au cours de son service militaire, la Loi sur les pensions ne prévoit aucune disposition visant à payer une pension, sauf s'il est dans un état de dépendance, la Commission peut à discrétion lui donner une pension.

M. Whicher: C'est un sujet assez délicat, monsieur le président. Ceci me rappelle que nous devions prendre des pilules pour nous enlever les femmes de l'esprit, mais les gens n'aiment pas en parler. Je pense que tout le monde autour de la table reconnaîtra que ce sont les meilleures pilules que j'ai vues car je n'en ai pas pris depuis 25 ans et elles commencent à faire effet.

had one for 25 years but they are starting to work.

The Chairman: I think we shall change the subject.

Mr. Whicher: This question of venereal disease is also a rather touchy subject, but I feel that a person is entitled to a pension. I think it is one of the hazards of service life.

The Chairman: And are you concerned about the retroactive feature?

Mr. Whicher: No, I am not involved in this myself, you will be glad to know, but I feel that in such instances they should be pensionable.

Mr. Ward: The recommendation is modified, Mr. Chairman, to the extent that it does take some of the sting out of the present situation. It is proposed to introduce legislation completely removing the bar to pension on the grounds of improper conduct in all death claims under the Pension Act.

Mr. Peters: How extensive is this problem?

Mr. Ward: There have been, over the years, a fair number of cases involving venerial disease; much more following the First World War than the Second World War, primarily, I suppose, because the medical treatment was more effective during and following the Second World War, and for other reasons. It is virtually impossible for me to give you any meaningful figure as to the number of cases that have applied in the past and have been turned down by virtue of the prohibition.

Mr. Bigg: Surely you met with other misconduct as well. There are some very grievous cases where widows' pensions have been stopped because a young airman broke aeronautic regulations or standing orders, even in cases where they were killed not in wartime but in training or flying out of Cold Lake air base and even on duty. Mr. Chairman, there have been documented cases where the widow was not allowed pension because he presumably had broken aeronautic regulations. It is very difficult to prove when the aircraft is burnt and wrecked. Whether or not venereal cases are worthy of attention, surely in this type of case where the man has broken standing orders and his wife and children are deprived of pension there is a grievous miscarriage of justice. We are very Le président: Je pense que l'on devrait changer de sujet.

• 1515

M. Whicher: La question des maladies vénériennes est délicate, mais j'estime qu'une personne a droit à une pension. Je pense que c'est un des dangers de la vie de militaire.

Le président: En connaissez-vous les effets rétroactifs, monsieur?

M. Whicher: Je ne fais pas partie de ces cas, vous serez heureux de l'apprendre, mais je crois qu'en de telles circonstances, ils devraient avoir droit à une pension.

M. Ward: La recommandation est modifiée, monsieur le président, dans la mesure où elle assouplit la situation actuelle et il est proposé de présenter une loi qui enlève tout à fait le droit à la pension, en tenant compte de la mauvaise conduite dans toutes les plaintes de décès en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions.

M. Peters: Quelle proportion prend ce problème?

M. Ward: Au cours des années, il y a eu un bon nombre de cas de maladie vénérienne, beaucoup plus après la Première guerre mondiale qu'après la Seconde, tout d'abord parce que je pense que les traitements étaient beaucoup plus efficaces au cours de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, et pour d'autres raisons aussi. Il est à peu près impossible pour moi de vous donner des chiffres sur le nombre de cas de maladies vénériennes, qui se sont présentés ou par suite de la prohibition.

M. Bigg: Vous rencontrez sûrement une autre mauvaise conduite. Il y a quelques cas très pénibles où la pension de la veuve a été arrêtée parce qu'un jeune aviateur a dérogé aux règlements aéronautiques ou aux directives, même s'ils ont été tués, non pas en temps de guerre, mais en période de formation ou de vol, à partir de la base aérienne de Cold Lake, alors qu'ils étaient même en service. Monsieur le président, il y a eu des cas bien documentés où la veuve n'a pas eu droit à la pension parce que, semble-t-il, il n'avait pas respecté les règlements de l'aéronautique. C'est très difficile de le prouver lorsque l'avion s'est écrasé et a brûlé. Que les cas de maladies vénériennes soient dignes d'attention, il ne fait aucun doute que lorsque l'homme déroge au règlement et que sa femme et ses enfants sont privés de la pension, il s'agit d'une malheureuse erreur judi-pleased—I am at least—to see that we envisage a change in this section of the Act.

Mr. Ward: Mr. Bigg, it will make it a great deal easier for the applicant's representative to present the case and will make it easier, I believe, for the adjudicators to consider the case. I might say that some of the cases you mention of regular force have gone on the appeal and many of them have been granted, but they have always been very difficult to deal with from both sides of the table.

The Chairman: I am sure the Committee will be glad to hear that, Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation number 129. The Woods Committee recommended that applications on behalf of Newfoundland veterans be considered first by British Pension Authority the applicant to be assisted by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Canadian Pension Commission, and the Commission to minimize delay in processing applications. Under the current legislation, briefly the situation is this: that Newfoundlanders who served in Newfoundland forces during World War I and World War II may come direct to the Canadian Pension Commission and have their claims adjudicated upon just as if their service had been in Canadian forces during either of those wars.

However, Newfoundlanders who served in—what shall we say—British forces in the sense of the Royal Air Force, the Royal Navy, the Royal Artillery, must first present their claims to the British authorities. If they are successful, then the Canadian Pension Commission under the Pension Act can supplement their pensions to Canadian rates. If such applicants are unsuccessful before the British authorities, they may then come before the Canadian Pension Commission under a discretionary clause in the Act which permits the Commission to adjudicate. To my knowledge, to this date the Commission has never refused to adjudicate.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ward indicates that a Newfoundland veteran applies to the British Social Registry in the United Kingdom. In 1949 it was agreed by the Canadian Government and the Minister of Veterans Affairs that Newfoundland veterans would be treated as if they had served in the Canadian forces. Is it reasonable to expect that all the records of the Newfoundland vet-ciaire. Nous sommes très heureux tout au moins, je le suis, de constater qu'on envisage de modifier cet article de la loi.

M. Ward: Monsieur Bigg, à mon avis, cela facilitera la tâche du représentant du requérant et des juges. Je dois ajouter que certaines personnes des forces régulières dont vous avez fait mention sont allées en appel et plusieurs d'entre elles ont été acceptées, mais il y a toujours été difficile d'étudier la question en se mettant aussi à la place du requérant.

Le président: Je suis certain que le Comité aimerait bien entendre vos commentaires à ce sujet.

M. Ward: Recommandation 129. Le Comité Woods recommande que les demandes faites par les anciens combattants de Terre-Neuve soient d'abord étudiées par les autorités britanniques sur les pensions, et que le ministère des Affaires des Anciens combattants et la Commission canadienne des pensions aident le requérant et que la Commission des pensions minimise le retard relatif aux demandes de pensions. Aux termes de la loi actuelle, la situation est la suivante: en deux mots, les Terre-neuviens qui ont servi dans les forces de Terre-Neuve pendant les deux guerres mondiales peuvent s'adresser directement à la Commission canadienne des pensions, et cette Commission peut régler leur cas comme si c'était des militaires canadiens qui avaient servi pendant les deux guerres.

Toutefois, les Terreneuviens qui ont servi, comment allons-nous dire cela, dans les forces britanniques comme la marine, l'artillerie ou l'aviation britannique, doivent d'abord présenter leurs revendications aux autorités britanniques. S'ils obtiennent satisfaction, la Commission canadienne des pensions peut en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions rajouter de l'argent pour atteindre les taux canadiens. Mais si ces personnes ne réussissent pas auprès des autorités britanniques, elles peuvent s'adresser à la Commission canadienne des pensions, aux termes d'une disposition discrétionnaire de la Loi qui permet à la Commission de porter un jugement. A ma connaissance, la Commission n'a jamais refusé de juger des cas semblables.

M. Marshall: Monsieur le président, monsieur Ward indique que l'ancien combattant de Terre-Neuve s'adresse au ministère de la Sécurité sociale du Royaume-Uni. En 1949, il y avait une entente entre le gouvernement canadien et le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants pour que les anciens combattants de Terre-Neuve soient traités comme s'ils avaient servi dans les Forces erans, or photostatic copies of the same, could be brought back to Canada, and that these veterans could apply direct to the Canadian Pension Commission and avoid delay?

Mr. Ward: I am not sure that I am competent to comment very much on the statute law amendment in the Newfoundland Act and the terms of union leading up to that Act, but I think I can say that by and large we do now possess most of the records pertaining to Newfoundlanders. We now have them in the Department of Veterans Affairs because over the years we have been getting these records from the British authorities, photographing them and placing them on our files.

Mr. Marshall: Then why are they still applying to Britain?

Mr. Ward: Because they have the right, under British legislation, to apply for pension and they did serve in British forces. Of course, because they joined Canada in 1949 they were then given I think as much as possible—and I believe the Woods Committee Report confirms that—equivalent benefits as if they had served in the Canadian forces. In fact they are to some extent at an advantage as they have a double opportunity. They can go to the British and they may very well receive an award there for which the Canadian Pension Commission could not award entitlement, yet we would then supplement that pension award.

• 1520

Mr. Marshall: I agree with that but when they apply to the U.K. and the application is accepted and approved, does the Canadian Government not bring that rate up to equal it?

Mr. Ward: Up to the equivalent rate for that particular disability and assessment under the Canadian scheme.

Mr. Marshall: Are the U.K. still charged with the initial payment of the pension disability?

Mr. Ward: I am afraid I do not know just what the saw-off is, how they decide who pays what, but the net result is that the pensioner receives the equivalent of Canadian pension rates.

Mr. Marshall: But is he getting part from Britain and part from Canada?

[Interpretation]

canadiennes. Est-ce que l'on peut s'attendre à ce que tous les dossiers des Terreneuviens, ou leurs photocopies soient ramenés au Canada, et que les Terreneuviens puissent s'adresser à la Commission canadienne des pensions et éviter ainsi les retards?

M. Ward: Je ne suis pas certain d'avoir la compétence nécessaire pour commenter cette modification statutaire à la Loi de Terre-Neuve, ainsi que les conditions de l'union qui a conduit à cette Loi, mais je puis dire, je crois, qu'en gros, nous avons maintenant la plupart des dossiers des Terreneuviens. Nous les avons au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, parce qu'au cours des années, nous avons obtenu ces dossiers des autorités britanniques et nous les avons photographiés et placés ensuite dans nos dossiers personnels.

M. Marshall: Mais pourquoi s'adressent-ils toujours à la Grande-Bretagne?

M. Ward: Parce qu'aux termes de la Loi britannique ils ont le droit de demander des pensions à l'Angleterre s'ils ont servi dans les forces britanniques. Naturellement, comme ils font maintenant partie du Canada, depuis 1949, on leur a donné autant que possible, et je pense que le Comité Woods le confirme bien, les mêmes avantages que s'ils avaient servi dans les forces canadiennes. En réalité, ils sont traités d'une façon avantageuse en quelque sorte, parce qu'ils peuvent s'adresser à deux endroits: ils peuvent s'adresser en Grande-Bretagne, d'où ils peuvent toucher une pension que la Commission canadienne des pensions ne pourrait accorder, mais nous ajouterions ensuite un supplément à la pension.

M. Marshall: Oui, je suis d'accord, mais lorsqu'ils s'adressent au Royaume-Uni et que la demande est acceptée et approuvée le gouvernement canadien ne ramène-t-il pas le taux au taux canadien?

M. Ward: Oui, jusqu'au taux correspondant à cette cote d'invalidité déterminée en vertu du régime canadien.

M. Marshall: La prestation initiale de la pension d'invalidité est-elle encore imputée à la Grande-Bretagne?

M. Ward: Je ne saurais vous dire où se trouve la ligne de démarcation, comment ils déterminent le montant versé et qui le versera, mais le pensionné reçoit en tout cas l'équivalent de la pension canadienne.

M. Marshall: Mais une part provient de la Grande-Bretagne et l'autre du Canada?

[Texte]

Mr. Ward: I do not know, sir. Perhaps one of the experts could answer that question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Marshall: I will ask it again, if that is all right.

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Marshall, make a note of it and you will have an opportunity to ask further questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are there any cases of veterans from parts of Canada other than Newfoundland who enlisted in the British forces and, if so, is the treatment comparable?

Mr. Ward: Veterans who enlisted, say, from British Columbia and who were domiciled in Canada at the outbreak of the war but served in British forces may approach the British authorities and also receive the same supplementation benefit and, if unsuccessful, may then come before the Canadian Pension Commission.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The position sounds exactly the same.

Mr. Whicher: What about Canadians who served in the American army?

Mr. Ward: I believe they are in the same position. I understand the current legislation applies to all our service in any of our allied forces.

The Chairman: No doubt there are reciprocal arrangements that have been worked out by the departments of the different countries.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Is it a problem for Newfoundlanders or those from British Columbia who served under the British forces to apply because of their applications having to be considered in England? Has this been a problem to the applicants?

Mr. Ward: Certainly, sir, it would be a problem in that he may have to encounter more delay in achieving the final result than his counterpart. Again, he has two chances and that may offset to some extent the fact that he may have to wait a little longer. However, he may not have to wait longer—it varies.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If they are called to appear do they pay their expenses to go over?

[Interprétation]

M. Ward: Je ne sais pas, monsieur. L'un des spécialistes du ministère pourrait peut-être répondre à cette question, monsieur le président.

M. Marshall: Je vais la poser de nouveau, si on n'y voit pas d'inconvénient.

Le président: Oui. Prenez-en note, car vous aurez l'occasion de poser d'autres questions.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Y a-t-il des anciens combattants de régions du Canada, autres que Terre-Neuve, qui ont servi dans les forces britanniques, et, si oui, la pension est-elle comparable?

M. Ward: Les anciens combattants, disons de la Colombie-Britannique, qui se sont enrôlés et qui étaient domiciliés au Canada au début de la guerre, mais qui ont servi dans les forces britanniques, peuvent s'adresser aux autorités britanniques et obtenir le même complément de pension. Si ces personnes n'obtiennent pas ce qu'elles veulent, elles peuvent alors s'adresser ensuite à la Commission canadienne des pensions.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): La situation semble exactement la même.

M. Whicher: Et les Canadiens qui ont servi dans l'armée américaine?

M. Ward: Ils sont, je crois, dans la même situation. Je crois savoir que la loi actuelle s'applique à tous nos militaires, dans toutes les armées de nos alliées.

Le président: Les ministères des divers autres pays en sont sans doute arrivés à des accords de réciprocité.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Les Terreneuviens ou les militaires de Colombie-Britannique qui ont servi dans les forces britanniques éprouvent-ils des difficultés à présenter leurs demandes du fait que ces demandes doivent être étudiées en Angleterre? Ce fait leur pose-t-il un problème?

M. Ward: Certainement, monsieur. Ceci leur pose un problème dans la mesure où ils tardent, plus que d'autres à obtenir un résultat. D'autre part, ils ont deux chances, ce qui peut compenser jusqu'à un certain point des délais qu'ils doivent subir. Parfois, il n'attendent pas plus longtemps que les autres; tout dépend.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): S'ils sont convoqués, doivent-ils assumer les frais de leur voyage outre-mer?

[Text]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The British Ministry of Pensions has offices here. They use our DVA facilities.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is all dealt with here then?

Mr. Bigg: Yes, on Elgin Street. They use our doctors and go to our hospitals if they have a problem.

Mr. Ward: The recommendation, Mr. Chairman, is accepted in principle; that part of the recommendation which relates to formal assistance being given to such applicants by the Veterans' Bureau is slightly modified, and since a foreign jurisdiction is involved any assistance given requiring formal representations to the British authorities would be limited to the extent authorized by such authorities. I might say that we have a fairly good working arrangement at the present time. We do offer assistance. Granted, it is unofficial assistance. We do not make any formal representations to the British authorities on behalf of these applicants but, short of it being a formal Veterans' Bureau submission, we do assist the applicants.

Mr. Whicher: What would a 100 per cent pension be over there.

Mr. Bigg: It is much smaller.

The Chairman: I think we might get some general information on their basic pension.

• 1525

Mr. Whicher: I would be surprised if those socialists over there could afford quite as much.

The Chairman: Mr. Ward, do you want to continue.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation No. 130. The Woods Committee recommended that the Canadian Pension Commission should act if British authorities are unable to process the claim after two years due to loss of documents. This recommendation is accepted in principle but it is modified to the extent that it is felt that the benefit of this recommendation should not be limited only to those claims where there were loss of documents but that it should be extended for any other reason, including loss of documents.

The Chairman: I am sure the Committee will be happy to hear that, Mr. Ward.

[Interpretation]

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Il y a ici un ministère des anciens combattants britannique qui utilise les installations de notre ministère.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Tout ce fait donc ici?

M. Bigg: Oui, sur la rue Elgin. S'il survient un problème, ils utilisent nos médecins et nos hôpitaux.

M. Ward: En principe, monsieur le président, on accepte que la partie de la recommandation qui concerne l'aide donnée à ces postulants par le Bureau des anciens combattants soit légèrement modifiée, et puisque l'on fait appel à une juridiction étrangère, toute assistance qui exige qu'une demande officielle soit adressée aux autorités britanniques, serait restreinte aux limites posées par les autorités britanniques. J'ajouterais que nous nous entendrons assez bien pour travailler. Nous offrons de l'aide. Pourvu que ce soit officieusement. Nous n'adressons pas de demandes officielles aux autorités britanniques à l'égard de ces demandeurs, mais nous les aidons de toutes les manières à adresser leurs demandes sans jamais engager officiellement le Bureau des anciens combattants.

M. Whicher: Quelle serait outre-mer la pension pour invalidité de 100 p. 100.

M. Bigg: Elle est bien moindre.

Le président: Il nous faudrait, je crois, nous renseigner sur leur pension de base.

M. Whicher: Je serais surpris si ces socialistes d'outre-mer pouvaient se permettre autant.

Le président: Monsieur Ward, désirez-vous poursuivre?

M. Ward: Recommandation 130. Le comité Woods recommande que la Commission canadienne des pensions agisse si, après deux ans, les autorités britanniques sont incapables de traiter la demande parce qu'elles ont perdu les documents. Cette recommandation est acceptée en principe, mais elle est modifiée dans la mesure où l'on a jugé qu'on en devait point restreindre la portée aux seules réclamations où il y a eu perte de documents mais l'appliquer à toutes demandes, y compris celles où il s'est produit la perte des documents.

Le président: Je suis certain, M. Ward, que le Comité sera heureux d'apprendre cette nouvelle.

[Texte]

Mr. Ward: Recommendation No. 131. The Woods Committee recommended that the special group of Newfoundland pensioners receive comparative increases and basic rate of pension under the Pension Act and that the effect of this recommendation be retroactive.

As members of this Committee know, there was a small group of special Newfoundland awards, I believe under 20 in number, that were taken over by Canadian jurisdiction at existing rates in 1949 following union. These pensions had been continued in payment but they had been continued at the rate then existing—that is to say, the rate existing in 1949 with no subsequent increases. I understand that these are in the nature of compassionate awards. In any event the recipients would not qualify under the British war pension scheme nor under our Pension Act. Indeed, the relevant cases were reviewed following union and it was found that they would not qualify under the British war pen- Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, this recommendation has not been accepted.

The Chairman: Did you say there were only 20 involved?

Mr. Ward: I believe there are less than 20.

Mr. Bigg: Do these involve service personnel or are these civilian awards which have not been kept in line?

Mr. Ward: I believe that they involve some persons who served in rescue-tug service and merchant marine, and some dependants.

Mr. Marshall: The pensions that these people are getting are so minimal—under the terms of union this was taken over by the Canadian government—that to say that in respect of these 20—I do not know how many of them are living now—that they would not adopt this retroactive clause is a bit ridiculous. But I apologize for saying that.

Mr. Bigg: The reason for my question is that it seems to me that we have our hands full handling veterans problems, and that if this is a bona fide case a submission to Treasury Board might well handle these 20 cases quite apart from anything we could do.

The Chairman: The Committee may want to return to this.

[Interprétation]

M. Ward: Recommandation 131. Le comité Woods recommande que le groupe spécial des pensionnés de Terre-Neuve reçoive des augmentations et un taux de base de pension comparables en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions et que cette recommandation s'applique avec un effet rétroactif.

Les membres de ce Comité n'ignorent pas qu'il y a un petit groupe de pensions accordées aux terreneuviens, moins de 20 je crois, qui sont tombées sous la juridiction du Canada, aux taux existants alors, à la suite de l'union en 1949. Ces pensions ont continué d'être versées, mais aux taux qui existaient en 1949, sans augmentation subséquente. Je crois savoir qu'il s'agit de pensions de commisération. De toute façon, le pensionné n'aurait pas été admissible, en vertu du régime britannique ou de notre Loi sur les pensions. En fait, les cas pertinents ont été étudiés à la suite de l'union et l'on a constaté que ces personnes n'avaient pas droit à une pension aux termes de notre Loi sur les pensions.

De toute façon, monsieur le président, cette recommandation n'a pas été acceptée.

Le président: Avez-vous dit que seules 20 personnes étaient en cause?

M. Ward: Je crois qu'il y en a moins de 20.

M. Bigg: S'agissait-il de pensions de militaires ou civiles?

M. Ward: Il s'agissait je crois de quelques personnes affectées aux manœuvres de sauvetage sur un remorqueur ou en service dans la marine marchande et des quelques unes de leurs personnes à charge.

M. Marshall: Les pensions que touchent ces personnes sont si peu élevées—aux termes de l'union c'est le gouvernement canadien qui les assume—c'est-à-dire que en ce qui concerne ces 20 pensionnés dont j'ignore combien sont encore vivants qu'ils refuseraient d'adopter cette clause avec effet rétroactif semble un peu ridicule. Mais je m'excuse d'avoir dit cela.

M. Bigg: La raison pour laquelle je pose ma question est qu'il me semble que nos mains débordent de problèmes concernant les anciens combattants, et il me semble que s'il s'agit là de cas «de bonne foi», le Conseil du Trésor pourrait s'occuper de ces quelques vingt cas sans que nous puissions faire un geste.

Le président: Le Comité voudra peut-être revenir sur ce sujet.

[Text]

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 132: The Woods Committee recommended that commissioners of the Canadian Pension Commission need not be professional men; that some should be representative of veterans organizations, or veterans in general, and of the armed forces.

The current situation, as I understand it, is that the policy has been to appoint as commissioners persons who have served in the Candian armed forces during war time. There has been a reasonable attempt to have the number of commissioners proportionate, roughly one-third longers, one-third doctors, one-third laymen in the past in order that what many people consider to be an ideally constituted appeal board of one lawyer, one doctor and one layman could be continued.

This recommendation is accepted in principle. It has been modified very slightly to the extent that in making such appointments—that is to say, of the professionally-trained personnel—a practical ratio of the appropriate professions be considered in the light of the Commission's requirements; in other words, some flexibility.

Recommendation 133: The Woods Committee recommended appointment to the Commission on recommendation of the Chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission.

The current situation, of course, is that under Section 3 of the Pension Act appointment of commissioners is made by Governor in Council. I dare say that the Chairman may make recommendations from time to time about who should serve on the Commission, particularly as he has a desire I am sure to try to make sure, as much as it is possible for him to do so, that well qualified persons are asked to serve. In any event, this recommendation is not accepted.

Recommendation 134: The Woods Committee recommended that the Chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission have control and direction over the disposition of staff assigned by the department.

Under current legislation the Chairman of the Commission has the rank and powers of a deputy head of a department and has control and direction over the disposition of, and duties to be performed by, the other commissioners, as well as control over the duties to be performed by such staff as may be assigned to the Commission by the department.

Under the new proposals relating to administration and adjudication, as outlined in the White Paper, the Commission's new role, as an independent body confined more

[Interpretation]

M. Ward: Recommandation n° 132. Le Comité Woods a recommandé que les commissaires de la Commission canadienne des pensions ne soient pas tenu d'être des professionnels et que certains d'entre eux devraient être des représentants des associations d'anciens combattants et des représentants des forces armées.

A l'heure actuelle, selon moi, on a tenu a nommé des personnes qui avaient servi dans les forces armées canadiennes pendant la guerre. On a cru raisonnable autrefois de nommer ⅓ de médecins, ⅓ d'avocats, ⅓ de profanes pour qu'une personne tienne la constitution de la Commission comme idéale pour un conseil pour un tribunal d'appel. Cette recommandation a été acceptée en principe, on y a apporté une modification mineure, ainsi lorsqu'on décide de telles nominations de personnel qualifié pour établir une proportion raisonnable à la lumière des exigences de la Commission, il faut qu'une certaine latitude soit acceptée.

Recommandation n° 133. Le Comité Woods a recommandé que les nominations à la Commission se fassent sur recommandation du président de la Commission canadienne des pensions. A l'heure actuelle, en vertu de l'article 3 de la loi sur la pension, la nomination des commissaires dépend du gouverneur en conseil. Je dois dire que le président peut faire des recommandations de temps à autre pour le nom des candidats éventuels alors qu'il désire certainement recommander des personnes hautement qualifiées. Quoiqu'il en soit cette recommandation n'a pas été acceptée.

Recommandation n° 134. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé que le président de la Commission canadienne des pensions ait la haute main sur le personnel qui lui est confié par le ministère. En vertu de la loi actuelle le président de la Commission a le rang de sous-ministre et détient le contrôle la direction et les charges qu'il peut désigner à d'autres commissaires ou à d'autres membres du personnel qui sont affectés à la Commission par le ministère. En vertu de la nouvelle proposition concernant l'administration et les décisions à rendre telle qu'exposée dans le Livre blanc, le nouveau rôle de la Commission en tant qu'organisme autonome qui se préoccupe d'audiences et d'appels en vertu de l'article 73, le personnel administratif sera plus restreint et il serait beaucoup plus efficace si le ministère or less to entitlement board hearings and appeals and Section 7(3) assessment hearings, will be very small and its administrative support will be very small. It would be more efficient and less costly to continue the present policy of assigning support staff to the Commission. Therefore, the recommendation has not been accepted.

Recommendation 135: The Woods Committee recommended a quality control system for review of decisions.

• 1535

The question of a quality control system has been accepted in principle and is referred to in Recommendation 16. It is felt that Recommendation 135 is more or less a restatement of Recommendation 16 and, of course, is acceptable in principle, with the modifications as outlined relative to Recommendation 16.

Recommendation 136: The Woods Committee recommended certain measures to ensure standardization of adjudication, and these measures related to issuance of policy directives, memoranda to commissioners when there is some indication that they might be departing from policies established by the Commission, and filing systems to record relevant comments and decisions.

The Commission currently has a similar system, not as sophisticated as, nor to the extent envisaged by, the Woods Committee recommendation. In any event, the recommendation is accepted unchanged.

Recommendation 137: The Woods Committee recommended commissioners to have life appointment to age 70 and not require appointment every 10 years.

Under the present legislation each commissioner, except an ad hoc commissioner, holds office during good behaviour for a term of 10 years, or such lesser period as may be specified by the Governor in Council. This recommendation is not accepted.

Recommendation 138: The Woods Committee recommended posthumous assessment to determine a widow's eligibility under Section 36(3) of the Pension Act. This recommendation is accepted unchanged.

Recommendation 139: The Woods Committee recommended that the Commission publish an assets and income guide setting out permissible assets and maximum income ceilings in cases in which a discretionary award may be made and the decision depends upon the financial circumstances of the dependent or the pensioner.

maintient la politique d'affecter son personnel de soutien à la Commission. A cause de cela cette recommandation a été rejetée.

Recommandation nº 135. Le Comité Woods a recommandé un système de vérification des motifs pour la revision des décisions rendues. La question du contrôle de la qualité a été acceptée en principe et on l'a référée à la recommandation nº 16. On pense que la recommandation nº 135 est ni plus ni moins qu'une réaffirmation de la recommandation nº 16 et, par conséquent, on l'a acceptée en principe avec les modifications telles qu'exposées qui ont été apportées à la recommandation nº 16.

Recommandation nº 136. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé certaines mesures pour assurer une uniformisation des décisions; ces mesures seraient inscrites dans des mémorandums de directives destinés aux commissaires pour éviter qu'ils s'éloignent de la politique établie par la Commission, ainsi que pour assurer un système d'archives pour recueillir les commentaires et les décisions déjà rendues. La Commission emploie déjà un système semblable, pas aussi perfectionné que celui qu'envisage le Comité Woods, mais la recommandation a été acceptée sans modification.

Recommandation nº 137. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé que le commissaire soit nommé jusqu'à l'âge de 70 ans, au lieu d'être nommé pour une période de 10 ans. La loi actuelle prévoit que chaque commissaire, sauf un commissaire nommé par exception, dont le jugement est bon peut être nommé pour une période allant jusqu'à 10 ans, ou pour toute période plus courte spécifiée par le gouverneur en conseil. Cette recommandation n'a pas été acceptée.

Recommandation nº 138. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé une évaluation posthume pour déterminer l'admissibilité d'une veuve en vertu de l'article 36(3) de la Loi sur les pensions. Cette recommandation a été acceptée sans modification.

Recommandation nº 139. Le Comité Woods avait recommandé que la Commission publie un guide des biens et des revenus pour établir le maximum des biens ou des revenus permissibles dans les cas où l'on pourrait rendre une décision discrétionnaire qui dépende des conditions financières de la personne à charge ou du pensionné.

[Text]

Under the current system the Commission has some guidelines of this nature. I have in mind those that relate to dependent parents. But certainly their guidelines are not to the extent envisaged by the Woods Committee recommendation.

The principle of creating and publishing such guidelines is acceptable, but it is desired to make a modification because it is felt that these guidelines should be broad and flexible in order that they will not restrict the exercise of the statutory discretion which is given to the adjudicators. For instance, if the guideline sets forth maximum income ceilings it is possible that such a guideline would, in effect, become legislation and be slavishly followed, and then there would be no discretion exercised when the Act calls for the exercise of discretion. You may very well have a case where you wish to award pension to a person in a dependent condition who slightly exceeds the permissible income level established by the guideline. So the modification is that these guidelines be broad and flexible.

Recommendation 140: The Woods Committee recommended that the Commission published a suggested expenditure guide setting out permissible allowances for food, shelter, clothing and other necessities on an adjustable basis for each geographical area. Again the recommendation is accepted in principle, but it is modified to the extent that any such guidelines brought into being should be broad and flexible so that the statutory discretion will not be virtually eliminated by a fixed inflexible guideline setting forth specific amounts.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, is this not almost impossible to arrive at if it takes in not only the standard of living a person might be accustomed to, but area rates, housing costs, housing evaluations and urban versus rural standards of living. I just do not see how this can be arrived at in any case without saying that there is no discretionary power. I do not see how you can publish it; I cannot see any similarity between a guideline published for downtown Toronto and Northern Ontario—

An hon. Member: Or downtown Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Or downtown Timiskaming, yes. There would be such a variation, if you are really saying, as I am sure all the Members are, that this should not work undue hardship by having criteria. We have done this by allowing discretion to take these into

[Interpretation]

A l'heure actuelle la Commission applique quelques directives dans ce sens. Je pense à celles qui régissent le cas des personnes à charge, mais ces directives ne répondent pas aux normes envisagées par le Comité Woods.

Le principe de publier de telles directives est acceptable mais on a jugé bon d'y apporter une modification parce que ces directives devaient être assez larges et flexibles pour qu'elles ne restreignent pas l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire qui est accordé aux commissaires chargés de rendre une décision. Par exemple, si ces directives déterminent un plafond du revenu il est possible que de telles directives soient suivies en fait à la lettre, et qu'alors il n'y aurait plus de pouvoir discrétionnaire pouvant être exercé selon la Loi, quand la Loi exige un tel pouvoir discrétionnaire. Lorqu'il s'agit, par exemple, d'accorder une pension à une personne dépendante dont le plafond de revenu dépasserait légèrement, celui fixé par les directives. Ainsi la modification veut que ces directives soient larges et flexibles.

Recommandation n° 140. Le Comité Woods recommande que la Commission publie un manuel des dépenses pour prévoir les allocations pour l'achat d'aliments, le logement, les vêtements et d'autres nécessités, et les a adaptées au sein des région géographiques. Dans ce cas aussi, la recommandation a été acceptée en principe. Elle a été modifiée pour que toutes les directives soient assez souples pour que la discrétion statutaire ne soit pas éliminée par des directives rigides qui prévoient des montants précis.

M. Peters: C'est presque impossible d'établir une telle formule si on tient compte seulement du niveau de vie auquel une personne est habituée. Dans l'évaluation des besoins en logement, il faut tenir compte du coût des logements urbains par rapport à celui des logements ruraux. Enfin, je ne vois pas comment on pourrait déterminer une telle formule sans déclarer qu'il n'y a pas de pouvoirs discrétionnaires. Comment peut-on publier un tel manuel. Je ne vois pas de rapport entre une directive publiée pour le centre ville de Toronto et une autre directive pour le nord de l'Ontario.

Une voix: Ou le centre ville de Témiscamingue.

M. Peters: Oui, si vous déclarez que les critères devraient éviter de causer des épreuves aux éventuels bénéficiaires. Est-ce que les pouvoirs discrétionnaires doivent tenir compte des hauts et des bas? Je ne vois pas comment on pourrait appliquer une telle for-consideration. You would have a high and a low and it is likely that one of the ceilings, either the low ceiling or the high one, would be the norm. I just do not see how it can apply then. I would like to know if we are already using guidelines. Are guidelines available to district offices, for instance, at the present time, and if so, how how close are these, or what are the limits between Vancouver and Bonaventure Bay?

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, exercising discretion of this nature in the dark makes it very easy for adjudicators. However, people do want to know how you are reaching your decisions in these discretionary areas. There have been representations made that some guidelines should be published. It must be clearly understood that they are guidelines; they are not legislation contained in the Pension Act setting forth fixed ceilings.

I agree, it is very difficult and I can say that the veterans welfare services have a needs test formula which is very complicated I understand, but it does serve its purpose. I imagine they have their difficulties. The Canadian Pension Commission has guidelines and I mention they have them with respect to dependant parents, but I feel that the guidelines suggested by the Woods Committee recommendation go far beyond that now in effect. All I can say is that as long as it is understood that they are merely guidelines—even at that they will be difficult to administer, I daresay.

Mr. Peters: Well, Mr. Chairman, the witness has handled many of the cases where a decision on these factors has been made, would he say that in his experience it is not so much variation to publish them, one for either the low area or for the high area. It would almost make it impossible for somebody to use any discretionary power. In other words, if the discretionary power is going to be used it has to be based on a number of factors and the factors likely will be a community standard of living involving a certain class of housing and a certain standard of living in that area, but it will vary immensely with other areas. If you put a guideline in one you might get a very rich person in a very poor area and you would have to use the high limit and yet this is not equality at all.

Mr. Ward: My experience, Mr. Chairman, has been limited to that of asking for more on behalf of our client the pensioner. Mr. Anderson or Mr. Forman perhaps could answer that mule. J'aimerais savoir si on adopte de telles directives ou si ce sont des directives qui sont déjà émises dans les bureaux régionaux et quelles sont les différences entre Vancouver et la Baie de Bonaventure?

M. Ward: Lorsqu'on exerce le pouvoir discrétionnaire à l'aveuglette, cela rend la décision plus facile, mais les personnes peuvent savoir sur quoi se repose la décision dans ces secteurs discrétionnaires. On a reçu des instances voulant qu'on établisse et qu'on publie des directives. On doit établir clairement qu'il s'agit de directives et qu'il ne s'agit pas d'articles législatifs contenus dans la Loi sur les pensions aux anciens combattants.

J'admets qu'il est très difficile de les établir, mais le Service du bien-être social des anciens combattants ont des formules d'évaluation des besoins, formules très compliquées, mais qui répondent à ces besoins. Il y a peut-être des difficultés. J'imagine que la Commission établit des directives à propos des personnes à charge. J'estime que les directives prévues par les recommandations du Comité Wood dépassent la pratique actuelle. Tout ce que je puis dire c'est qu'aussi longtemps qu'on comprend qu'il ne s'agit que de directives et même dans ces cas, il sera difficile de les appliquer.

M. Peters: Le témoin pourrait-il dire que selon sa propre expérience, il est un des cas où une décision sera tenue sans tenir compte de tous ces éléments?

Il est donc presque impossible d'exercer un pouvoir discrétionnaire. Autrement dit, a-t-on l'intention d'utiliser, d'invoquer le pouvoir discrétionnaire en tenant compte d'un certain nombre de facteurs, par exemple, les normes de vie de toute une collectivité, certaines normes de logement, certaines normes de vie dans cette région? Cela pourrait varier grandement avec d'autres régions. Alors, si on établit une directive dans un tel cas, on pourrait avoir une personne très riche vivant dans un milieu pauvre et il vous faudra utiliser la norme élevée et pourtant cela ne correspond du tout pas à l'égalité.

M. Ward: Que je sache, l'intention était de demander des allocations plus généreuses pour nos pensionnés, mais M. Anderson ou M. Foreman pourrait vous donner une réponse question far more accurately than I could because I have no experience as an adjudicator.

Mr. Weatherhead: When Mr. Ward is asking for more, or trying to assess whether his client should be getting more, he must have some guidelines that he goes by himself as to how much he should ask for and this sort of thing, is this not the case?

Mr. Ward: We ask for the maximum and endeavour to present any and all argument that we can to support a request for the maximum.

Mr. Weatherhead: Even asking for the maximum you would have some guidelines in effect as to what the maximum would be, would you not?

Mr. Ward: No, we just ask for as much as we can get, if you like.

Mr. Weatherhead: I suppose the Woods Committee by putting these recommendations in were concerned that there were no guidelines at all and no one knew really how much they could get or how much they could not get, would this be correct?

Mr. Ward: Yes, that perhaps has been a difficulty and we have faced that difficulty. We are asking for more and we do not really know whether we have a good cause or not, because there may not be sufficient information indicating there is not a chance of more in this case because of certain guidelines relating to maximum income ceilings and things of that sort. There are some guidelines available but as I say not to the extent envisaged by this recommendation.

Mr. Weatherhead: So under the White Paper it is now proposed that there will be some general guidelines without tying it down too tightly? Is that so?

Mr. Ward: That is the proposal, to let people know but to make it clearly understood that it is merely a guideline, that the adjudicator still has discretion.

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg?

Mr. Bigg: It seems to me to be consistent you could say that these guidelines could be very simple. By putting this kind of a ceiling on it in no case will a compassionate grant which is what the nature of this sort of thing has turned out to be really, shall ever exceed the equal of 100 per cent pension or something of that nature and there is no need to put a basement on it. Obviously if there is no plus précise à ce sujet, parce que je n'ai pas l'expérience d'un commissaire.

M. Weatherhead: Les préposés doivent s'inspirer de certaines directives pour les montants qu'ils doivent verser aux pensionnés.

M. Ward: Nous demandons le maximum et nous présentons tous les arguments possibles pour appuyer notre demande.

M. Weatherhead: Mais même en demandant le maximum, il faut des directives pour établir le montant de ce maximum.

M. Ward: Non, nous demandons tout ce que nous pouvons obtenir, si on peut s'exprimer ainsi.

M. Weatherhead: Le Comité Woods craignait qu'il n'exista pas de directive, et personne ne savait au juste ce qu'il pouvait obtenir et ce qu'il ne pouvait obtenir.

M. Ward: C'est une difficulté à laquelle nous nous sommes heurtés et nous demandons davantage sans savoir si nous allons avoir gain de cause, parce qu'il peut y avoir une lacune dans les renseignements qui justifient le refus de cette demande parce que certaines directives régissent un plafond et d'autres facteurs similaires. Il y a certaines directives, mais pas les directives envisagées par ces recommandations.

M. Weatherhead: Le Livre blanc ne propose-t-il pas des directives générales sans préciser les éléments de ces directives?

M. Ward: Il a été proposé de renseigner les intéressés mais de leur faire savoir qu'il s'agit d'une simple directive qui laisse toute discrétion au commissaire.

Le président: Monsieur Bigg?

M. Bigg: Si aucune allocation n'est justifiée alors il est évident qu'on refusera la demande. La question est laissée à la discrétion du commissaire qui peut décider de verser quelque chose pour subvenir aux besoins immédiats comme la nourriture ou les soins médicaux et la liquidation de dettes. Il ne s'agit pas de besoins de luxe, mais bien de secourir les pensionnés sans qu'ils aient à mendier.

need for a grant at all the answer is going to be no. From there on if we are leaving discretion surely the Canadian Pension Commission will say, "We will give them as much as we can to relieve distress." This does not mean shortage of diamonds or shortage of the best imported Scotch whisky, it means a shortage of groceries and shortage of medical attention and debts and things which are causing undue hardship on people who deserve help from the public first without begging.

So I think we can leave it to the discretion of well-placed personnel to handle that as long as, if we have to have a statutory limit, we say that in no case shall this exceed 75 per cent of a pension or whatever some statutory thing is.

I think we are certainly running into danger to start talking about what is adequate for a certain branch of society in the way of assistance, and what is adequate for somebody who is used to being a labouring man.

Mr. Ward: It is the old conflict, Mr. Bigg, of too much discretion or too many specific things.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, I am afraid of those as I have pointed out many times. I think we can put a statutory ceiling on it which Treasury cannot go beyond. At the same time we do not expect the board to give the maximum where the maximum is not called for.

• 1550

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I wonder what Mr. Ward would think about where it says "on an adjustable basis", adding for each geographical area, also relate it to the cost of living and review it periodically. Would there be an advantage in having the cost of living spelled out as a guideline?

Mr. Ward: I think it would be reasonable, Mr. Chairman, that in administering anything of this nature, you keep an eye on the cost of living, particularly in certain different geographical areas so that when you are adjudicating you are not inadvertently giving someone less than they really should receive.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): That is the problem right now with so many veterans' pensions. As you well know, no doubt, they are caught in the inflation and the rise in the cost of living where their pensions remain stable. If something could be put in where they could be adjusted and spelled out in the Act it would be useful.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 141. The Woods Committee recommended that "de-

[Interprétation]

C'est sur ce point que peut s'exercer la discrétion.

C'est-à-dire, cela ne devrait pas dépasser 75 p. 100 d'une pension. Les besoins d'un certain groupe social peuvent dépasser les besoins d'un manœuvre, par exemple.

M. Ward: La question est de savoir s'il faut apporter une trop grande discrétion pour préciser les critères rigides.

M. Bigg: Je pense que si on met une limite statutaire, le Conseil du Trésor ne peut pas dépasser cette limite. Quoi qu'il en soit, nous ne pouvons pas obliger le Conseil à verser le maximum lorsque le maximum n'est pas justifié.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Adapter les pensions selon la région géographique et selon le coût de la vie. Conviendrait-il de préciser comme directive l'indice du coût de la vie?

M. Ward: M. le président, je crois qu'il serait raisonnable lorsqu'on s'occupe de ces choses de tenir compte du coût de la vie particulièrement dans plusieurs zones géographiques différentes. Lorsqu'on prend une décision, il faut pour éviter de donner moins, par inadvertance, que ce que la personne aurait récellement dû recevoir.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Ces pensionnés sont atteints par l'inflation et la hausse du coût de la vie alors que le montant de leur pension reste fixe. On pourrait concevoir une formule qui permettrait d'ajuster ces pensions. Si c'était écrit dans la loi ce serait très utile.

M. Ward: Recommandation 141, le Comité avait recommandé que l'état de dépendance pendent condition" mean without earnings or income or without assets capable of producing income.

The current definition of "dependent condition" in the Pension Act is that the term means the condition of being without earnings or income sufficient to provide maintenance. I might add that the current definition therefore does not include taking into consideration a pensioner's home.

The Woods Committee recommendation, as written, appears to make it possible that the person earning only $40 a month and nothing else may not be considered to be in a dependent condition.

It also appears from the Woods Committee recommendation, as written, that a dependant's home may very well be taken into consideration and valued in that if he sold it there would then be income from that asset. So the Woods Committee recommendation is modified, and it is proposed that the Pension Act be amended to provide that "dependent condition" means the condition of being without income or assets sufficient to provide maintenance, and such assets are not to include the home in which the applicant or pensioner resides.

Mr. Peters: What is the situation now where a person has assets other than—I cannot think of anything that would really be an example, unless it would be a farm and a house in town and they did not use the farm—can they make them get rid of the farm? It is not a producing asset, but it is an asset that they are not using either.

The Chairman: A summer cottage, someone said.

Mr. Peters: A summer cottage is probably a good example, because I know of a number of cases where that is true.

Mr. Ward: The present definition, Mr. Chairman, means the condition of being without earnings or income sufficient to provide maintenance. It does not mention assets. A good example might be a person with 200,000 mining shares which are non-dividend producing, but which may be worth a substantial sum of money—$50,000 on the market. The proposal to modify the Woods recommendation would take into consideration those assets.

Mr. Bigg: Does that mean we do not care how many of those kind of assets he has, or even if he owns his own home? Are we still going to consider those frozen assets or home independently of his ability to earn an signifie l'état d'une personne dépourvue de ressources ou de revenus suffisants. En vertu de la loi actuelle sur les pensions, le terme état de dépendance signifie ne pas avoir un salaire ou des revenus qui permettent de subvenir aux besoins.

Cette définition, par conséquent, n'inclut pas, ne tient pas compte de la maison du pensionné. La recommandation du comité telle quelle semble prévoir qu'une personne qui ne gagne disons que $40 par mois sans plus ne puisse pas être reconnue comme personne en état de dépendance. Cette recommandation telle qu'elle est rédigée, semble vouloir signifier que la maison de la personne à charge peut être incluse dans la valeur de ses biens. S'il vend cette maison, on pourrait dire qu'il touche un revenu provenant de ce bien. Alors, cette recommandation a été modifiée et on propose ou qu'on amende ou qu'on modofie la Loi sur les pensions pour définir l'état de dépendance comme il suit:

> C'est-à-dire l'état d'une personne dépourvue de ressources suffisantes pour pourvoir à son entretien, et ces ressources ne devraient pas inclure la maison où réside le demandeur ou le pensionné.

M. Peters: Quelle est la situation actuelle d'une personne qui a d'autres biens que, je ne vois rien qui puisse servir d'exemple, peut-être une ferme et une maison de ville et qu'elle ne s'occupe pas de la ferme. Peut-elle se débarasser de celle-ci. Ce n'est pas un bien qui produit des revenus mais c'est quand même un bien dont elle ne se sert pas.

Le président: Quelqu'un a parlé d'un chalet d'été.

M. Peters: Un chalet d'été est certainement un bon exemple. Je connais plusieurs cas de ce genre.

M. Ward: La définition actuelle signifie l'état d'une personne dépourvue de ressources y compris le salaire, et de revenues suffisants, pour pourvoir à son entretien. Les biens ne sont pas mentionnés. Un exemple parfait, prenons une personne qui possède des actions minières de $200,000 qui ne produisent pas de dividendes mais qui peuvent avoir une grosse valeur, une valeur peut-être de $50,000 sur le marché. La recommandation visant la modification de cette recommandation tiendrait compte de ce bien.

M. Bigg: Le gouvernement pourra peut-être tenir compte de ces biens ou même de la possession d'une maison. Nous tiendrons toujours compte de ces actifs gelés ou de la maison indépendamment de son aptitude à income? It seems to me this could be greatly abused if you got into a position where you wanted to be on the veterans' list of dependants by these preferred shares which do not pay dividends. They are merely a capital gain. Or put all your money into a home and then say, "Here I am without a source of income and I want to be looked after".

gagner sa vie? Il me semble que la situation prêterait à abus si vous étiez sur la liste des anciens combattants en état de dépendance tout en possédant ces actions préférées qui ne paient pas de dividendes, elles représentent seulement un gain de capital ou bien si vous investissiez tout votre argent dans une maison pour dire ensuite: «Voyez je suis sans revenus et je veux qu'on me fasse vivre.»

• 1555

Mr. Ward: I am not saying that under the present legislation—while it does not mention assets with regard to a dependent position—I am not saying that assets would not be taken into consideration by the Canadian Pension Commission in determining whether a dependent condition exists.

M. Ward: Je ne dis pas qu'en vertu de la loi actuelle bien qu'il n'y soit pas question de biens relativement à l'état de dépendance cela ne veut pas dire qu'il ne serait pas tenu compte de ces biens par la Commission canadienne des pensions pour déterminer si la personne est en état de dépendance ou non.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, but this is the difficulty that we as lawmakers have here. We want to know, if we can, ahead of time where we are going with this thing. I for one do not want to pass a law where a man who has a million dollars in frozen assets comes to the Pension Commission and works in on somebody's dependant list. I would want him truly dependent, in other words that he, through no fault of his own, is unable to earn his own living and has no large amount of assets. If we could write that into the statute, then I would like him to be considered. But I certainly do not want the juggling of his estate around to the point where he becomes a burden on the taxpayers just because he is clever.

M. Bigg: Oui, mais c'est là notre problème en tant que législateurs. Nous voulons savoir à l'avance si possible, où nous allons dans cette affaire. Personnellement, je ne désire pas passer une loi pour permettre à un homme qui possède des biens d'une valeur d'un million de s'inscrire comme bénéficiaire à la Commission des pensions. Il faut qu'il soit réellement en état de dépendance. C'est-à-dire, que, sans que ce soit de sa faute, il soit incapable de gagner sa vie et qu'il ne possède pas de biens importants. Si nous pouvions l'écrire dans la loi alors j'accepterais que sa demande soit étudiée. Mais je ne voudrais certainement pas qu'il devienne un fardeau pour les contribuables juste parce qu'il est né malin et qu'il sait administrer ses biens.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I gather from what Mr. Ward says that we are going to exempt the home from being a possible potential income-producing property.

M. Weatherhead: D'après M. Ward, il semble que nous allons exclure la maison comme étant un bien susceptible de produire des revenus.

Mr. Ward: This appears to be the goal, yes.

M. Ward: Oui, c'est l'objectif.

Mr. Weatherhead: But other than that, the situation Mr. Bigg mentions would not arise. If he had a lot of mining stock or some other stock that was not producing income, he would still have to sell that first of all before he would be entitled to consideration. He was only exempting the home, I think, at the present time.

M. Weatherhead: Mais la situation que M. Bigg a mentionnée ne se produirait pas. Car si la personne possède soit des actions minières ou toutes autres actions non productives d'intérêt il devrait les vendre avant qu'on puisse tenir compte de sa demande. Jusqu'ici il est seulement question d'exclure la maison.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Weatherhead has summarized it correctly.

Le président: Je crois que M. Weatherhead a parfaitement résumé l'affaire.

Mr. Bigg: I still think this can be abused. If you had $100,000 you could buy a $100,000 home you did not want against the time when you would sell it, become a public charge, and die rich. I think that this up until now has been envisaged by the lawmakers and I do not think this is a point badly taken.

M. Bigg: Je crois cependant qu'il peut encore y avoir des abus. Si vous possédez $100,000, vous pouvez acheter une maison de ce prix mais vous ne voulez pas jusqu'à ce que vous la vendiez être une charge publique et mourir riche. Je crois que jusqu'ici les législateurs en ont tenu compte et que cela n'a pas été un sujet de difficulté.

[Text]

The Chairman: I wonder if we could leave it at the moment, Mr. Bigg, and pass to the next one.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, summer cottage, as you yourself mentioned, is a good example where many of the pensioners who did not put a heck of a lot of money into a summer cottage but considered it as a kind of a way of life over a period of years with a house in town have found this summer cottage to be a real problem. The value has gone up more than that of the house because of summer cottage properties...

The Chairman: It is the kind of problem you can live with, though.

Mr. Peters: . . . and they cannot sell it and they cannot even rent it to do the repairs and they have a real problem with the thing. I know at least a dozen who are in that kind of category and they are getting too old. Their licences have been taken away from them and they cannot even drive to the blooming thing. It is a problem.

Mr. Ward: I might point out, Mr. Chairman, that by and large this does not affect the ordinary pensioner. It has nothing to do with him. It applies to a very limited group of persons with dependent parents and dependent brothers and sisters and certain divorced separated wives who become in a dependent condition. There are very few involved, but where the pensioner or the applicant resides we wanted his home to be his castle. Under the Woods recommendation it appeared that that might not be the case.

The Chairman: In other words, this is another case where the Woods recommendation is more restrictive than the present policy, and generally speaking you do not want to change it.

Mr. Ward: Yes.

The Chairman: All right, fine.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 142. The Woods Committee recommended that confidential information in veterans' files is not to be released to prospective employers and insurance companies.

Under the present situation, disclosure of information from veterans' files to prospective employers or insurance companies is governed by departmental instructions. These instructions have now been amended to provide that information will be disclosed only when in the opinion of the departmental officials the disclosure is in the best interest of

[Interpretation]

Le président: Est-ce qu'on pourrait réserver cette question M. Bigg et aborder la prochaine recommandation 142?

M. Peters: Un chalet d'été comme vous l'avez dit est un bon exemple alors que beaucoup de pensionnés n'y ont pas consacré beaucoup d'argent au départ c'était juste un endroit de repos alors qu'ils habitaient en ville maintenant c'est devenu pour eux un réel problème. La valeur a dépassé celle de la maison à cause de la plus-value des cottages...

Le président: C'est un problème supportable.

M. Peters: ...ils ne peuvent le vendre ni même le louer ils ont un vrai problème. Je connais au moins une douzaine de personnes dans cette situation, ils sont trop vieux, ils n'ont plus leur permis de conduire et ne peuvent même plus se rendre à leur chalet.

M. Ward: J'aimerais signaler, monsieur le président, que cela ne se rapporte pas aux pensionnés en général. Cela s'applique à un groupe bien restreint avec des personnes à charge, les frères et les sœurs ou des épouses qui ont divorcé et qui sont devenues à charge. Il n'y a que très peu de ces cas en cause. Mais nous voulons que la maison où demeure le pensionné ou le demandeur soit considérée comme son bien propre et intouchable. Aux termes de la recommandation du Comité Woods ce ne serait pas le cas.

Le président: En d'autres mots c'est encore un exemple où les recommandations du Comité sont plus restrictives que la politique actuelle et en règle générale vous ne voulez pas que celle-ci soit changée.

M. Ward: Oui.

Le président: C'est juste.

M. Ward: La recommandation 142, la Commission Woods recommande que des renseignements confidentiels contenus dans les dossiers des anciens combattants ne soient pas divulgués aux employeurs éventuels et aux compagnies d'assurance. Dans les circonstances actuelles, la divulgation des renseignements contenus dans les dossiers des anciens combattants aux employeurs ou aux compagnies d'assurance est régi par des instructions ministérielles. Ces instructions ont été modifiées. Elles prévoient maintenant que les renseignements ne seront donnés que si de l'avis the veteran when the consent of the veteran has been obtained.

I should point out that the basic fundamental rule governing disclosure of information from veterans' files is that these files are confidential and that by and large information is not released unless the veteran's consent has been obtained. That has always applied with respect to insurance companies or prospective private employers seeking information from these files—the veteran's consent has always been obtained in the past—but this recommendation has been modified to the extent that even although the veteran has given his consent, if the departmental officials feel that disclosure will not be in his best interests they will not disclose, to give him a little more protection.

• 1600

The Chairman: Mr. Guay?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, certain of the delegations have been concerned about this particular matter. I think it was yesterday that someone indicated to us that they particularly did not want the files made available to employers. You are still leaving it open that in certain circumstances—at least you lead me to understand—although it is not general, it could be that this information would be disclosed.

Mr. Ward: Never without the consent, or the request, of the veteran.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I see.

Mr. Bigg: It does not say that in the paper. This is your qualification of what is in the paper?

Mr. Ward: The departmental instructions have now been amended so that information...

Mr. Bigg: It certainly reads as though the Department feels they have the right to this information and can use it for any purpose they think is correct.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, may I ask if there have been in the past any instances of the situation that a departmental official wants to make a few bucks and provides this information to insurance companies for a fee?

Mr. Ward: I have never had any inkling or suspicion of anything of that nature.

du ministère la communication de ces renseignements est dans le meilleur intérêt des anciens combattants et lorsque le consentement de celui-ci a été obtenu.

Je signalerais ici que la règle fondamentale qui régit la communication des renseignements relatifs aux anciens combattants c'est que ces dossiers sont confidentiels et qu'en général, ces renseignements ou ces informations ne sont pas communiqués à moins que l'ancien combattant n'y consente. Cette règle a toujours été appliquée en ce qui concerne les compagnies d'assurance ou des employeurs du secteur privé qui veulent prendre des renseignements dans ces dossiers. Dans le passé on a toujours obtenu l'approbation de l'ancien combattant et cette recommandation modifie la situation en ce sens que même si l'ancien combattant accepte et d'autre part si le ministère estime que ce n'est pas dans le meilleur intérêt de l'ancien combattant de dévoiler ces renseignements, ces derniers ne seront pas divulgués afin de mieux protéger l'ancien combattant.

Le président: Monsieur Guay?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Monsieur le président, certaines délégations se sont préoccupées de cette question et je crois qu'hier un témoin nous a dit que la délégation ne voulait absolument pas que les dossiers soient remis entre les mains de l'employeur. Mais dans certains cas particuliers, ne dois-je pas comprendre d'après ce que vous me dites, qu'il pourrait arriver qu'on communique ces renseignements.

M. Ward: Jamais sans l'approbation de l'intéressé, de l'ancien combattant en cause.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je vois.

M. Bigg: Ce n'est pas ce que dit le Livre blanc. C'est votre interprétation, n'est-ce pas?

M. Ward: Les instructions du ministère ont été modifiées si bien que les renseignements...

M. Bigg: Il me semble pourtant que le Ministère estime qu'il a le droit d'utiliser ses renseignements comme bon lui semble.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, a-t-on jamais entendu dire que les agents du ministère s'étaient fait quelque argent en communiquant de tels renseignements aux compagnies d'assurance.

M. Ward: Eh bien, on ne m'a jamais dit une chose pareille. On n'a jamais soupçonné les agents de choses semblables.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Neither have I. I merely ask this...

Mr. Ward: I would hope not.

Mr. Bigg: That is what I was worried about.

Mr. Peters: I was wondering if that is why the Woods Committee went into this particular problem?

Mr. Ward: No; as I understand it—and one should really refer to the Woods report to get this information—persons seeking insurance, for instance, feel they are in an unfair position, because if they give consent to the Department to release information to the insurance company they might not receive their insurance after the company obtains the information.

Mr. Bigg: That is one.

Mr. Ward: There are others. That is one that comes to mind.

Mr. Bigg: In a case I have knowledge of the Department says that the man has a psychopathic personality. So far this is within the Department. If this information were released this man would be unemployable in a great many places, and yet it is only the opinion of one person who happens to have "M.D." after his name. But I know the gentleman on whom he gave this opinion—medical opinion though it may be—and I also happen to know the doctor. In my lay opinion it is the doctor who has the psychopathic personality and not the veteran.

In the one case the doctor is in no danger of not being employed—he happens to be employed by the Department of Veterans Affairs—but the other fellow is now seeking employment. If this information were to get out he would be unemployed permanently. This is not a light matter. To me, if the Department felt they had the right to broadcast this, they would make this man permanently unemployable.

The Chairman: Surely there has never been any suggestion of this information being broadcast or given out freely?

Mr. Bigg: How far does it have to go, Mr. Chairman? This should be privileged, as between client and lawyer. After all, the fellow could end the whole discussion by merely withdrawing his pension application. His reputation of being a psychopath would die in his file.

[Interpretation]

M. Peters: Moi non plus.

M. Ward: J'espère bien.

M. Bigg: C'est ce dont je m'inquiétais.

M. Peters: Je me demande si c'est la raison pour laquelle le comité Woods s'est attaqué à ce problème.

M. Ward: Non. D'après ce que je crois savoir, bien que je pense qu'il faille se reporter aux commentaires du comité Woods pour vérifier ces renseignements, une personne qui cherche à obtenir une police d'assurance, par exemple, peut juger qu'elle est dans une position injuste parce que si le ministère peut communiquer des renseignements à la compagnie elle ne pourra peut-être pas être assurée.

M. Bigg: Oui. C'est un cas qui peut se produire.

M. Ward: Il y a d'autres cas aussi, d'autres cas qui ne me viennent pas à l'esprit tout de suite.

M. Bigg: Dans un cas que je connais, le Ministère affirme que l'ancien combattant est un malade mental. Pour le moment, seul le Ministère est au courant. Mais si cela devait être divulgé, cet homme ne pourrait plus se trouver de travail dans beaucoup d'endroits. Et cette opinion n'est que celle d'une seule personne qui se trouve être médecin. Mais je connais personnellement le patient ainsi que le médecin et des deux, je crois que c'est le médecin qui est un malade mental. Mais dans un cas le médecin était employé par le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et l'ancien combattant cherchait à obtenir un emploi. Voilà le genre de problèmes qui se pose. Si ces renseignements transpiraient, l'ancien combattant ne pourrait jamais trouver du travail. Il ne faut pas prendre cela à la légère. Si le ministère estime qu'il a le droit de dévoiler ces renseignements cela voudrait dire que la personne ne pourrait plus le faire embaucher.

Le président: Il n'a jamais été question de divulguer ou de fournir ces renseignements facilement.

M. Bigg: Jusqu'où cela peut-il aller, monsieur le président? Cela devrait être privé comme entre un avocat et son client. Après tout, l'ancien combattant pourrait clore toute discussion en retirant tout simplement sa demande de pension. Sa réputation de malade mental irait dormir dans son dossier.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Again this is a point on which we may wish to query the veterans' organizations and in particular the Royal Canadian Legion.

Mr. Bigg: I am only trying to clear up the point at issue. I do not think I have gone too far.

Mr. Ward: Yes; the disclosure of the type you mention, Mr. Bigg, probably is not in the veteran's best interest, but now, in light of the amendment to the departmental instructions, the departmental officials would clearly recognize that such disclosure is not in the best interest of the veteran. Even if the veteran wanted it released they might very well decide not to release it because it might do more damage.

Mr. Bigg: I am happy about that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is your comment, Mr. Ward, on the kind of case that you yourself referred to? I believe you were giving the Woods Committee comment. What about the man who is applying for insurance and the insurance company says, "May we have access to your veterans file?" And he says, "No"?

• 1605

If the law said, as the Woods Committee Report recommended, that it could not be done even with his consent then he is in the same position as everybody else, but under these circumstances if he says, "No", in the eyes of the insurance company he is suspect, is he not?

Mr. Ward: I would think so. Mind you, he may still receive insurance; but on the other hand he may not receive insurance if he refuses to give his consent to release information of a medical nature that would assist the insurance company in determining what his insurable risk is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is in the light of that that I asked you if there was any further comment on the position of the Department in refusing to go along with the Woods Committee recommendation. It seems to me there is some merit to it in the kind of case we are talking about.

Mr. Ward: Of course, many veterans who want information disclosed from departmental files to other people for various reasons are quite adamant. They want that information disclosed and to say "No we will not disclose information", when it may very well

[Interprétation]

Le président: Vous soulevez une question au sujet de laquelle nous aimerions peut-être avoir l'opinion des organisations d'anciens combattants et en particulier la légion royale du Canada.

M. Bigg: Je veux simplement clarifier cette question litigieuse. Je ne crois pas être allé trop loin.

M. Ward: Oui, le fait de révéler ces renseignements n'est sans doute pas à l'avantage de l'ancien combattant mais à la lumière des nouvelles instructions ministérielles les agents du Ministère détermineront si oui ou non le fait de communiquer ces renseignements est à l'intérêt de l'ancien combattant. Même si l'ancien combattant veut que ces renseignements soient communiqués, le ministère pourra très bien le refuser si ce n'est pas dans l'intérêt de l'ancien combattant.

M. Bigg: J'en suis heureux.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Que pensez-vous, monsieur Ward, du cas dont vous avez parlé? Je crois que vous avez en fait donné le commentaire du comité Woods. Que se passe-t-il si un ancien combattant qui fait une demande d'assurance auprès d'une compagnie se voit refuser l'accès à son dossier?

Si la loi stipulait, comme le recommande le comité Woods, que tout ancien combattant, même s'il le désire ne peut avoir accès à son dossier, la compagnie ne trouverait cela nullement suspect, mais il en est bien autrement dans les circonstances actuelles, n'est-ce pas?

M. Ward: Évidemment ce qui ne veut pas dire qu'il ne puisse pas prendre une assurance; mais d'autre part, il se peut qu'on ne l'assure pas s'il refuse qu'on dévoile son dossier médical, ce qui permettrait à la compagnie de déterminer ses risques d'assurance.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): C'est la raison pour laquelle je vous ai demandé si quelqu'un avait des commentaires à faire au sujet du refus du Ministère de se conformer à la recommandation du comité Woods. Je crois que cela en vaut la peine.

M. Ward: Eh bien, un bon nombre d'anciens combattants qui veulent qu'on communique les renseignements des dossiers du Ministère, à d'autres personnes pour diverses raisons sont bien inflexibles. Ils veulent qu'on communique ces informations; le Ministère assist a veteran—and I understand it usually does—would be rather a high and lofty bureaucratic attitude for the Department to adopt.

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. Weatherhead?

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, the Committee seems to be on the horns of a dilemma, because following on from what Mr. Stanley Knowles said, what of the case when the veteran says, "Yes, I will consent to my material being disclosed"? In the Department's opinion the medical evidence would be damaging to his insurability and they would say, "No, we will not disclose it." Surely in that case the insurance companies will soon get to know that the veterans...

The Chairman: He is prejudiced just as much...

Mr. Weatherhead: The Commission will say yes if it is beneficial and say no if it is not beneficial, and they will not release it. They will think twice about insuring the man.

I suppose in our particular insurance case the insurers have their own doctors and they give them very thorough medical examinations, so perhaps they will take their own evidence. But it seems to me, in any event, that the Commission and those in charge would like to help the veterans out as much as they can by releasing good information, but when they do not it automatically means that the information is not good.

The Chairman: In other words, the veteran would be prejudiced just as much by his refusal to release it as he would be if the Department refused; and, therefore, you are inclined to the Woods Committee recommendation on this?

Mr. Weatherhead: I do not know. I agree with what you have said so far, but in relation to the recommendation, if Mr. Ward and others say that in most cases the information being released is very beneficial to the veterans you have to weigh the one against the other.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Ward: I base that on the fact that most veterans who ask the Department to release information probably have a fairly good idea of the nature of the information that will be released.

[Interpretation]

s'y refuse, même quand cela pourrait servir la cause des anciens combattants.

Cela aide bien souvent la cause de ces derniers montants. Je trouve qu'une telle attitude est trop rigide de la part du Ministère.

Le président: Monsieur Weatherhead?

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur le président, le Comité semble aux prises avec un problème insoluble, pour continuer la discussion que M. Stanley Knowles a entreprise. Que penser du cas où un ancien combattant consent à ce qu'on dévoile son dossier où le Ministère le refuse parce qu'il considère que ce serait nuisible à l'ancien combattant. Évidemment dans une telle situation, les compagnies d'assurances...

Le président: Il est autant logique...

M. Weatherhead: Le Comité pourrait dire que la communication de ces renseignements peut être dans l'intérêt de l'ancien combattant ou qu'elle peut lui être nuisible et il pourra donc ne pas divulguer les renseignements. La compagnie réfléchira deux fois avant d'assurer la personne.

Donc, dans le cas des assurances qui nous occupe les assureurs ont leurs propres médecins qui font passer un examen médical complet qui leur servira de preuve suffisante, mais il ne semble en tout cas que d'une part le Comité et les personnes qui s'occupent de l'ancien combattant aimeraient l'aider le mieux possible en communiquant de bons renseignements d'autre part, s'ils n'en communiquent pas, on peut en déduire que les renseignements seraient mauvais.

Le président: Donc, l'ancien combattant serait placé dans une situation défavorable tout comme s'il refusait lui-même. Donc, vous êtes d'accord avec la recommandation du comité Woods?

M. Weatherhead: Je ne sais pas. Je suis d'accord avec ce que vous avez dit jusqu'ici. Mais en ce qui concerne la recommandation du comité Woods, M. Ward nous a dit que dans la plupart des cas, les renseignements permettraient d'améliorer la situation de l'ancien combattant si on la communiquait. Il faut donc que nous fassions la part des choses.

Le président: Oui.

M. Ward: Eh bien, je pense que la plupart des anciens combattants qui demandent au ministère de communiquer les renseignements ont en somme une bonne idée des renseignements qui seront communiqués.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Stanley Knowles?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For what purpose do veterans usually ask? I know we get letters every week saying, "You can see my file," but it is for the purpose of advancing the veteran's case. Do veterans ask for their files to be shown to insurance companies or employers?

Mr. Ward: They may be asked by insurance companies and prospective private employers, "Do you mind if we obtain medical information about you from the Department of Veterans Affairs?" The veteran may have no objection. He may say yes and give to the Department written consent to the release of the information.

Mr. Bigg: I know what he does. If the veteran cannot get his pension he says, "I am going to win something." He wants the adjudication, and everything connected with it, to prove to his prospective employer that he is in good health. He has been turned down, or discharged from the army as in A-1 health—his heart and lungs are in perfect condition; he has suffered no trauma from beint a prisoner-of-war for 20 years; he is the best medical risk in the world. This is what he wants. He is asking this of the Department which has already said he is 100 per cent in good health and therefore not pensionable. He says, "I want that as an asset relative to my employment." I think the point is well taken. As this is part of his health bill I do not see why he should not be allowed to have it for that purpose.

On the other hand, I think he should be also protected, as I said, if, on the medical document, there is unsupported evidence that he is a psychopath, a near-lunatic or something else. He thinks he is being downgraded by the department, downgraded in civilian life, not getting a pension out of the deal, and is being called a crab or a psychopath. I want protection for such a person and I am glad you are going to provide it by not releasing documents which will do him harm. So this is a dilemma. I think this can be resolved by saying that the pensioner should be allowed to have his private file released where it may help him in terms of employment, security or character—

The Chairman: We have five more recommendations and we are running out of time.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I do not feel that the problem is as bad as some of us here probably have indicated. First of all, insurance companies are well protected through

[Interprétation]

Le président: Monsieur Stanley Knowles?

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je sais que nous recevons des lettres toutes les semaines à ce sujet dans lesquelles des anciens combattants permettent qu'on divulge leur dossier, mais, en général, c'est à leur avantage. Les anciens combattants demandent-ils qu'on montre leur dossier aux agents d'assurance ou à leurs employés?

M. Ward: Peut-être les compagnies d'assurance et certains employeurs éventuels demandent-ils aux anciens combattants s'ils veulent les autoriser par écrit à demander des renseignements médicaux sur eux au ministère.

M. Bigg: Je sais comment l'ancien combattant s'y prend: s'il ne peut obtenir sa pension, il veut avoir recours à l'arbitrage et il veut prouver à un employeur éventuel qu'il est en bonne santé. Il veut prouver qu'il a été libéré du service en parfaite condition physique, que ni son cœur ni ses poumons n'ont souffert de ses 20 années d'emprisonnement et qu'il ne présente pas de risque pour l'assurance. Je veux que le Ministère divulgue qu'il est en parfaite santé et qu'il n'a donc pas droit à la pension—en somme d'un certificat de santé. Je ne vois pas pourquoi on devrait cacher ces renseignements.

D'autre part, il doit être protégé si le document médical ne porte pas de preuve qu'il est psychopathe, un peu lunatique ou souffrant d'autres maladies. Il se croit en quelque sorte dégradé par le ministère et rabaissé aux yeux des siens parce qu'il ne touche pas de pension. Je tiens à protéger cette personne et je suis heureux du fait qu'on peut assurer sa protection en s'abstenant de communiquer des renseignements qui pourraient lui nuire. Ici se pose un dilemme, mais je crois qu'on peut le résoudre si l'on convient de ne révéler les choses personnelles du pensionné que pour l'aider dans l'obtention d'un emploi ou améliorer son état ou sa sécurité.

Le président: Il y a cinq autres recommandations et le temps fuit.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je ne pense pas que le problème soit aussi mauvais que certains d'entre nous semblent le croire. En premier lieu, les compagnies d'assurance sont the medical program they have, through their questionnaires and everything else. On the other hand I think it would be a good thing for the veteran to show his willingness to the company involved, by not minding if they saw his file, even though he might know that the department may not show it. At the same time, if he is looking for insurance himself he must feel that he is in pretty fair health, is a good potential buyer or else he would not be doing it just for a skylark. There is another aspect of it too that we often overlook. I think if any of you have a doubt in mind as to whether you are in good shape, just buy some insurance, go through their medical and, if they accept you, you are batting a doggone good average.

Mr. Ward: The department wants to find the best solution for this problem and we thought that it rested in the good judgment of the departmental officials in amending departmental instructions. These instructions can be further amended without great difficulty if the need arises, again in the constant search for the best way to deal with this particular type of problem.

The Chairman: You might proceed with the next point, Mr. Ward?

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 143. The Woods Committee recommended exemption of pension from income tax to be continued. This recommendation is accepted unchanged.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I would like to ask one question on that, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I this a budget leak?

The Chairman: I have grave doubt whether this is within the scope of our Committee's authorization.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Maybe the question I have is. Perhaps you would change your mind if I were to ask you the question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What is the average pension, the lowest and the highest? What are we talking about? Somebody suggested this afternoon that some pensions were in the vicinity of $10,000 a year. What is the range of pension that we are giving out to veterans, from $3,000 up to what maximum?

[Interpretation]

bien protégées, grâce à leurs programmes médicaux, à leurs questionnaires et aux autres moyens dont elles disposent. Je pense, d'autre part, que c'est une bonne chose que les anciens combattants manifestent leur bonne volonté et consentent à faire communiquer leurs dossiers. D'autre part, je pense que l'ancien combattant qui veut s'assurer estime qu'il est en bonne santé. C'est un acheteur en herbe, car il ne ferait pas ça pour rigoler. C'est là un autre aspect de la question et que nous oublions trop souvent. Je pense que si vous avez des doutes au sujet de votre santé et que vous voulez tirer la chose au clair, essayez de vous assurer. Si la compagnie d'assurance vous assure, vous êtes dans une bonne moyenne.

M. Ward: Le ministère veut trouver la meilleure solution à ce problème et je pense qu'on fait appel au bon jugement des agents du ministère dans les modifications à apporter aux instructions pertinentes. Ces instructions peuvent être encore modifiées, et cela sans trop de difficulté, si le besoin s'en fait sentir. On recherche constamment les meilleures façons qui s'offrent de résoudre ce genre de problème.

Le président: Vous pouvez procéder avec le point suivant, M. Ward.

M. Ward: Recommandation 143. Le Comité Woods recommande que la pension ne soit pas imposable. Cette recommandation est acceptée sans modification.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Monsieur le président, j'aimerais poser une question.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): S'agit-il d'une divulgation non autorisée sur le budget?

Le président: Je doute fort que cette question entre dans les attributions de notre Comité.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Peut-être que vous auriez changé d'idée si je vous avais posé la question.

Le président: Oui.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Quel est le montant moyen de la pension, le montant le plus bas et le montant le plus élevé? De quoi parlons-nous ici? Quelqu'un a dit cet après-midi qu'il y avait des pensions qui approchaient $10,000 par année. Quelle est la moyenne des pensions que nous versons aux anciens combattants, disons de $3,000 à combien? Quel est le maximum versé?

[Texte]

The Chairman: I think as a first approximation one could point out that the recommendation of the Woods Committee or the various Legion groups was $4,152 for 100 per cent basic and then they would go up to 350 per cent of that, which is $14,500. Presumably this would all be tax free. In addition there are the attendance allowances and other allowances.

Mr. Bigg: Those are not incomes; those are expenses—clothing and everything.

The Chairman: But I am pointing out that this does become fairly sizeable when combined with this income tax recommendation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I agree with the recommendation, I am not against it, it is just a matter of interpretation.

The Chairman: None of us are against it. However, I really think that it would be more appropriate to discuss such things when the White Paper on taxation is before another committee. I feel that it is beyond the scope of this Committee.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 144. The Woods Committee recommended repeal of Sections 33 (1) and 33 (2) of the Pension Act. Under the current legislation Section 33 of the Act provides for reduction of pensions while a pensioner is in receipt of treatment allowances from the department or under the care of the department for treatment.

• 1615

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Is this the $15 deduction that they were talking about?

Mr. Ward: Yes, sir. In effect, subsections of Section 33 are no longer operative because during treatment the pension continues to be paid and is brought up to the 100 per cent level less $15 per month through the veterans treatment regulations. However, if the pension in payment is excess of that net amount no reduction in pension is made. So the section in the Pension Act governing this particular provision is completely redundant.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in discussing this with another group it was pointed out the problem that we, Members of Parliament, run into is that when a person goes into hospital and this $15 is deducted there is a great delay in the pensioner's family getting any remuneration. So an accounting problem must develop during transfer from the pen-

[Interprétation]

Le président: Je crois qu'on pourrait souligner que la recommandation faite par le Comité Woods et les divers groupes de la Légion indiquait un montant de $4,152, pour la pension de base de 100 p. 100. Ce montant suit une escalade de 350 p. 100 et se situe à $14,500. Je présume que ce montant n'est pas imposable. Il faut y ajouter les allocations de soins et autres.

M. Bigg: Il ne s'agit pas de revenus, mais de dépenses pour le vêtement et autres articles.

Le président: Il s'agit là d'une somme assez considérable si l'on considère qu'il n'y a pas d'impôt à payer.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Nous ne sommes pas contre cette recommandation. C'est une question d'interprétation.

Le président: Personne ne s'y oppose, mais je crois que la chose devrait être examinée lors de l'étude du Livre blanc sur la fiscalité par un autre Comité. Je crois que l'étude de cette question n'entre pas dans les attributions de notre Comité.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Merci, monsieur le président.

M. Ward: Recommandation 144. Le rapport du Comité Woods recommande de biffer l'article 33(1) et (2) de la Loi sur les pensions. Aux termes de la Loi actuelle, l'article 33 permet la réduction des pensions, alors qu'un pensionné reçoit une allocation de soins du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Est-ce bien la déduction de $15 dont nous avons parlé?

M. Ward: Oui. En effet, les paragraphes (1) et (2) de l'article 33 ne s'appliquent plus. Pendant la durée des traitements, la pension continue d'être versée et atteint 100 p. 100, moins $15 par mois, en vertu du règlement sur les traitements des anciens combattants. Cependant, s'il y a une somme excédant ce montant net, il n'y a pas de réduction. Donc, l'article de la Loi sur les pensions, relatif à cette réduction est tout à fait superflu.

M. Peters: En discutant de la chose avec un autre groupe, on a signalé que le problème qui se pose et auquel doivent faire face les membres du Parlement est qu'à cause de cette déduction de $15 effectuée dans le cas du pensionné hospitalisé, sa famille doit attendre assez longtemps avant de toucher le chèque. Il s'agit ici d'un problème de comptabilité. Les sion accounting to the hospitalization accounting section, where they remove the $15. Also, time goes by and the pension does not arrive at the first of the month or whenever it is supposed to arrive.

Mr. Ward: There are adjustments and I understand there is a great deal of accounting. I really cannot say very much on that particular aspect, sir. Perhaps other witnesses could answer questions relating to that, if you so desire.

Mr. Peters: The veterans groups were not as interested in the $15 as they were in the fact that the chap does not get a pension that . . .

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I think we are concerned with both.

Mr. Peters: Yes, but my personal experience has been that the chap has been in hospital six or eight weeks and his family has not any money. If it involves only the $15 then I would suggest leaving it the way it was and make a separate upgrading from another accounting department altogether. If the $15 was deducted it could be done at that stage, but I would suggest that all the subsistence for the family not be cut off during this accounting procedure.

Mr. Ward: I could point out, sir, that the pension of those pensioners in receipt of a 100 per cent pension and at near levels to 100 per cent continues.

Mr. Peters: Ninety-five to one hundred?

Mr. Ward: Many of these pensioners that we are speaking about have 10 per cent and 20 per cent pensions, which are not very substantial, and they immediately go up to the equivalent of a 100 per cent pension less $15, so in effect they are getting far more than they ever got before.

Mr. Peters: But they may not get anything for a period of time. Let us use the example of 50 per cent. They were getting along on 50 per cent and they find that they do not get any payment. They must be marginal cases in the first place. In my own area this happens, particularly with First World War veterans. They are pretty well living on a small pension and when this is discontinued for a period of time right away there is a serious problem. This happens also in respect of compensation where the family for a period is without any money at all.

The Chairman: Again, let us bear in mind what we are trying to do: we are trying to écritures vont de la section de la comptabilité des pensions à celle de l'hospitalisation, où l'on déduit le $15. Le temps passe et le chèque de pension qui devait parvenir au foyer le premier du mois ou à une date arrêtée n'arrive pas.

M. Ward: Il y a certes des redressements qui s'imposent dans le secteur de la comptabilité. Je ne peux pas en dire très long à ce sujet. Peut-être que d'autres témoins pourraient ajouter des commentaires pertinents ou répondre aux questions, si vous le désirez.

M. Peters: Le point qui intéresse les groupes d'anciens combattants, ce n'est pas tant la déduction du $15 que le fait du pensionné qui ne touche pas son chèque à temps.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je crois que les deux nous concernent.

M. Peters: On m'a dit qu'il y avait des cas où le pensionné avait été hospitalisé durant six ou huit semaines, sans que la famille ne puisse toucher le chèque de pension. Je ne vois pas pourquoi on ne pourrait pas améliorer la situation du point de vue de la comptabilité. Cette déduction de $15 pourrait être faite à une autre étape. La famille pourrait ainsi toucher le chèque tous les mois, sans retard imputable à la comptabilité.

M. Ward: J'aimerais que dans le cas des anciens combattants qui touchent un chèque de pension de 100 p. 100 ou près, il n'y ait pas interruption.

M. Peters: Quatre-vingt quinze pour cent.

M. Ward: La plupart de ces pensionnés dont nous parlons ici touchent une pension de 10 ou de 20 p. 100, ce qui n'est pas un gros montant. Ils obtiennent, au moment du traitement une pension de 100 p. 100, moins $15, c'est-à-dire qu'ils touchent beaucoup plus d'argent que ce qu'ils ont l'habitude de recevoir.

M. Peters: Il se passe une période où ils ne reçoivent rien. Prenons le cas de l'ancien combattant admissible à une pension de 50 p. 100 et qui ne la reçoit pas. Il s'agit de cas marginaux, mais la chose s'est produite dans le cas de certains anciens combattants de la Première Guerre mondiale habitant ma circonscription. Si la petite pension dont ils doivent se contenter ne leur arrive pas, la situation devient grave.

En ce qui a trait aux indemnités, c'est la même chose qui se produit quand une famille ne reçoit rien pendant un certain temps.

Le président: Ne perdons pas de vue notre objectif. Nous cherchons à donner un outline the government's position. I would like to complete this as soon as possible. I know it is not difficult to get into very lengthy discussions on a number of these points. Is there anything else anyone wants to say?

Mr. Ward: Recommendation 145. The Woods Committee recommended that pension be increased to 100 per cent while under treatment for pensionable disability. If this recommendation were implemented it would have the effect of creating eligibility for widows pension under Section 36 (3) of the Pension Act for any widow whose husband died while on strength of the department for treatment regardless of the cause of death. For instance, the pensioner may have a 5 per cent pension for flat feet and be in a veterans hospital for a non-pensioned condition and, if his pension for flat feet were increased to 100 per cent and he died from a heart disease which was entirely unrelated to service, this widow would find herself in the fortunate position of receiving full widow's pension by virtue of this recommendation, if it had been implemented.

• 1620

The recommendation has not been accepted.

Mr. Bigg: To be fair, unless I am mistaken on this, I think that this is a badly worded recommendation, and what they envisaged was that where a man has been re-hospitalized for a minor thing and the indication was that he was 100 per cent disabled permanently, instead of all the reboarding his widow would be entitled to a full pension. That is what they are envisioning and I can see the danger of it.

The Chairman: That is not what the recommendation says.

Mr. Bigg: No, I know it is not, but to my knowledge that is what is behind the recommendation. It is badly worded.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation number (146). The Woods Committee recommended that in the discretion of the Canadian Pension Commission, pension may be reinstated to a widow if her second husband dies or deserts her, or if the marriage is dissolved or annulled and the woman is not the respondent in the court action.

Under present legislation, when a widow in receipt of widow's pension remarries, her pension ceases and she is paid one year's pension as a final payment. However, if the second husband dies within five years and the woman is left in a dependent condition, the Commission may in its discretion restore aperçu de la position du gouvernement, mais nous devons nous garder d'aller dans trop de détails. Y a-t-il autre chose, messieurs, que vous voudriez ajouter?

M. Ward: Recommandation 145. Le Comité Woods recommande que la pension soit portée à 100 p. 100, quand le pensionné est sous traitement pour cause d'invalidité. Si cette disposition était mise en vigueur, elle rendrait admissibles à la pension aux termes de l'article 36 (3) de la Loi sur les pensions, les veuves dont le mari pensionné décède alors qu'il est sous les soins autorisés par le ministère et quelle que soit la cause de sa mort. Ainsi un pensionné pourrait recevoir une pension de 5 p. 100 pour pieds plats et être à l'hôpital pour une condition n'ouvrant pas droit à pension. Si la pension qu'il touche pour pieds plats était majorée à 100 p. 100 et qu'il en vienne à mourir d'une attaque cardiaque, sa femme aurait pu recevoir la pleine pension en vertu de la présente recommandation, une fois mise en vigueur. La recommandation a été rejetée.

M. Bigg: En toute justice, à moins que je ne me trompe, cette recommandation est mal rédigée. On avait prévu que si un homme était hospitalisé à nouveau pour une affection d'ordre mineur, et si l'on indiquait qu'il était frappé d'une invalidité permanente évaluée à 100 p. 100, au lieu de porter le cas devant la Commission, la veuve aurait droit à toute la pension. C'est ce qu'on envisage de faire, mais j'en pressens le danger.

Le président: A ma connaissance, ce n'est pas ce que la recommandation stipule.

M. Bigg: Je le sais, mais à mon avis, c'est ce qui est latent dans la recommandation. Le texte est mal rédigé.

M. Ward: Recommandation n° 146. Le Comité Woods recommande qu'à la discrétion de la Commission canadienne des pensions, les pensions soient rétablies si le deuxième mari de la veuve meurt ou l'abandonne, ou si le mariage est dissous ou annulé, si ladite femme n'est pas la défenderesse.

En vertu de la loi actuelle, lorsqu'une veuve qui reçoit une pension se remarie, sa pension cesse d'être versée, et elle touche une pension d'un an à titre de paiement final. Mais si le deuxième mari meurt dans l'intervalle de 5 ans, et si la femme n'a pas de revenus, la Commission a la latitude de réta-widow's pension. There is no provision, however, in the current legislation to cover her if the second husband dies five years and five days after the second marriage.

Mr. Bigg: Is there any mention of dependent children? I am envisioning a case where the woman remarries with, say, five dependent children. Would she still have to wait five years to prove that she is in a condition where she needed help, or can she be reinstated as being the real mother of five veteran's children at this stage?

Mr. Ward: Under current legislation the pension for the deceased pensioner's children would carry on whether she remarried or not. I shall now proceed to the modification. It is considered desirable for the adjudicating authorities in this area to have discretionary power to grant relief in these cases. And it is proposed to add the following provision to Section 45 (2) of the Pension Act, or substantially similar. Provided that the Commission or the Directorate of Pensions, as the case may be, may restore the pension of a woman in cases which it considers to be specially meritorious.

(1) in which the five-year period has expired

(2) where the marriage is dissolved or the woman is judicially separated from bed and board.

Mr. Bigg: From the second husband?

Mr. Ward: Yes, from the second.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I ask Mr. Ward whether any comparison was made between this and the new provision in the Armed Forces Superannuation Act when we changed the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Mounted Police one and the Armed Forces one a year or so ago? We improved the position there and it seems to me it is more generous than in this case. It seems to me that the widow of a veteran under the Pension Act—in other words the widow of a disabled veteran—should be in at least as favourable a position in this regard as the widow of a permanent force man.

• 1625

Mr. Ward: The widow of a pensioned veteran, if he died from his pension condition or if death was otherwise attributable to service, or if he had a 50 per cent pension or higher, automatically goes on full widow's pension. Now we are talking about someone who has been on widow's pension but has subsequentblir la pension de la veuve. Dans la Loi actuelle, il n'y a pas de disposition visant à lui verser une pension si le deuxième mari meurt 5 ans 5 jours après le deuxième mariage.

M. Bigg: Est-ce qu'on tient compte des enfants qui sont sous sa dépendance? Je songe au cas où la femme se remarie et a, disons 5 enfants à sa charge. Devrait-elle encore attendre 5 ans pour prouver qu'elle a besoin d'aide ou peut-elle être rétablie en étant considérée comme la véritable mère des 5 enfants de l'ancien combattant?

M. Ward: Aux termes de la Loi actuelle, la pension des enfants du pensionné décédé ne cesse pas d'être versée, que la veuve se remarie ou non. Je vais maintenant passer à la modification. On estime qu'il est souhaitable que les juges aient le pouvoir discrétionnaire d'accorder des mesures de bien-être en pareil cas. Il est donc proposé d'ajouter la disposition suivante au paragraphe (2) de l'article 45 de la Loi sur les pensions, ou semblable en grande partie. Il est stipulé que la Commission ou la Direction générale des pensions, selon le cas, peut rétablir la pension d'une femme quand on estime que cette pension est particulièrement méritée.

(1) Quand la période de 5 ans est terminée;

(2) Quand le mariage est annulé ou que la femme fait l'objet d'une séparation de corps par décision judiciaire.

M. Bigg: Du deuxième mari?

M. Ward: Oui.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Monsieur le président, puis-je demander à monsieur Ward si on a comparé cette disposition et la nouvelle disposition relative à la Loi sur la pension de retraite des forces canadiennes lorsque nous avons modifié la Loi sur la pension de retraite dans la Fonction publique du Canada et la Loi sur la pension de retraite de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada et celle des forces armées l'an dernier, je crois? Nous avons amélioré leur situation et il me semble que c'est plus généreux que dans ce cas-ci. Il me semble que la veuve d'un ancien combattant, aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions, en somme, la veuve d'un ancien combattant invalide doit au moins être dans une position aussi avantageuse que la veuve d'un militaire.

M. Ward: La veuve d'un ancien combattant pensionné, qui meurt des séquelles de la guerre ou qui avait une pension de 50 p. 100 ou plus, doit toucher la pleine pension de la veuve. Nous parlons d'une personne qui a touche une pension de veuve et qui s'est remariée. Aux termes de la loi actuelle, sa pen-ly remarried someone else. Now under the present legislation her pension ceases and she is given a one-year payment of widow's pension, but if the second husband dies within five years, she may be reinstated if she is in a dependent condition.

It is recognized that this five-year time limit has produced hardship in some cases. When you have an arbitrary time limit of five years and you find that the second husband died five years and five months after the marriage, there is nothing that can be done. This will take care of that case because I would expect that that would be considered a specially meritorious case.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My point, Mr. Chairman, was that the widow of a permanent force veteran drawing pension under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act who marries again has her pension under that Act cut off. But if the second husband dies or if there is a divorce—I think we even amended it to cover straight, ordinary separation—she is automatically restored. There is no question of somebody having to exercise discretion. I am not asking you to go into full detail but I would like a comparison to be made to make sure that the one case is just as generous as the other.

The Chairman: This provision sort of promoted common-law unions in many cases, I am afraid.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman I must plead ignorance of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. I am not really in a position to give you any comparative comments on it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps it could be looked at in the meantime.

The Chairman: There are two more recommendations, Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward: Recommendation number (147). The Woods Committee recommended removal of the time limit of one year in the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act and this recommendation has been accepted unchanged.

Recommendation number (148). The Woods Committee recommended termination dates in the definition of "theatre of actual war" and this recommendation is also accepted unchanged.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments or questions?

sion cesse d'être versée et elle reçoit une pension d'un an, mais si le deuxième mari meurt dans les cinq ans, elle peut recevoir de nouveau sa pension si elle se trouve dans une situation de dépendance. On reconnaît que ce délai de 5 ans a pu causer certaines difficultés dans certains cas. Lorsqu'on a une période de temps arbitraire comme 5 ans, et qu'on découvre que le deuxième mari est mort 5 ans et 5 mois après le deuxième mariage, on ne peut rien faire. On pourrait ainsi s'occuper de ce cas car à mon avis, on le considérerait particulièrement digne d'attention.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Les veuves des militaires qui reçoivent une pension et qui se remarient se voient enlever leur pension en vertu de la Loi sur la pension de retraite des forces canadiennes, mais si le second mari meurt ou si elle divorce, je pense que nous l'avons même modifié pour inclure aussi la séparation ordinaire, elle reçoit automatiquement sa pension. Personne ne doit exercer de discrétion. Je ne vous demande pas d'aller dans le détail, mais je voudrais que vous établissiez une comparaison pour vous assurer que les deux cas font l'objet d'autant de largesse.

Le président: Cette disposition encourage en quelque sorte les unions libres dans plusieurs cas, j'en ai bien peur.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Oui.

M. Ward: Monsieur le président, je dois dire que je ne connais pas très bien la Loi sur la pension de retraite des forces canadiennes, et je ne suis pas en mesure de faire la comparaison à ce sujet.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): On pourrait peut-être l'examiner entre temps.

Le président: Il y a deux autres recommandations, monsieur Ward.

M. Ward: Recommandation n° 147. Le Comité Woods recommande l'élimination du délai d'un an en ce qui concerne la Loi sur les pensions et les allocations de guerre pour les civils. La recommandation a été acceptée sans modification.

Recommandation n° 148. Le Comité Woods recommande les dates finales du «Théâtre réel de guerre», ce qui a été accepté sans modification.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires ou d'autres questions?

[Text]

Mr. MacRae: Just one very brief question, Mr. Chairman. I have been very quiet, as you may have noticed. I understand that there are certain recommendations in the Woods Report that have been implemented by the Pension Commission up to this point; at least that has been my understanding. I would like to impose on Mr. Ward again and ask if he would be prepared to prepare for us—I ask it through you, Mr. Chairman—to list those which have been implemented or are in the process of being implemented and which do not need legislation. Have I made myself clear? I think it would be helpful to the Committee.

The Chairman: I think we might refer this matter to Mr. Ward. Possibly Mr. Reynolds may have some comments on this too.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does Mr. Ward have anything to say on the minority recommendation? I am sitting in the seat that Mr. Thompson was in this morning, so the subject of an ombudsman comes out naturally.

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, I am a great admirer of the ombudsmen in their proper sphere. But I feel that trying to change things in the field of adjudication by persuasion without having any real powers, real teeth in your authority, is not likely to work very well and be very acceptable to the unhappy pensioners whose claims have been turned down. And, of course, under the new procedures outlined in the White Paper, there are many, many opportunities for a veteran's claim to be thoroughly considered at many levels, as you know, right from initial adjudications, second applications, renewal applications, entitlement board hearing and appellate division. Surely the applicant's representative, by the time it has finally been dealt with at the appellate division, will have exercised all that can be exercised by the way of persuasion.

• 1630

The Chairman: Are there any further comments or questions?

We will now adjourn until 9.30 tomorrow morning, when we will have The National Dieppe Prisoner of War Association.

I would like to thank Mr. Ward for appearing this afternoon. We have covered some very difficult ground which I think he has done well. Thank you.

Mr. Ward: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee.

[Interpretation]

M. MacRae: Une seule brève question, monsieur. J'ai été très sage comme vous avez pu le remarquer. Je crois savoir que certaines recommandations du rapport Woods ont été mises en vigueur jusqu'ici par la Commission des pensions. C'est du moins ce que j'ai cru comprendre. Je voudrais demander à monsieur Ward s'il pourrait établir une liste des recommandations adoptées ou qui sont en train d'être mises en vigueur et indiquer lesquelles n'ont pas besoin de mesure législative. Est-ce bien clair, monsieur? Je pense que cela devrait être utile au Comité.

Le président: Je pense que l'on pourrait poser cette question à monsieur Ward. Monsieur Reynolds pourrait peut-être faire un commentaire à ce sujet-là.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Est-ce que monsieur Ward a quelque chose à ajouter sur la recommandation minoritaire? J'occupe en ce moment le siège où monsieur Thompson était assis ce matin. La question de l'ombudsman me vient donc naturellement à la bouche.

M. Ward: Monsieur le président, je suis un partisan de l'ombudsman dans sa propre sphère d'activité. A mon avis, chercher à modifier les procédures, dans le domaine d'un jugement par voie de persuasion sans avoir de vrais pouvoirs, ni aucune sorte d'autorité ne mènera pas à grand-chose et ne sera pas acceptable aux pensionnés dont la demande a été refusée. En vertu des nouvelles procédures précisées dans le Livre blanc, il y a toutes les chances pour que la plainte d'un ancien combattant soit examinée à tous les niveaux, comme vous le savez, à partir d'une décision initiale, d'une demande initiale, d'une deuxième demande, d'un renouvellement de demande et d'un bureau d'admissibilité et d'une Division des appels. Après que la Division des appels se sera prononcée sur la demande le représentant de cet ancien combattant pourra alors invoquer le principe de la persuasion.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires à faire ou des questions à poser?

Nous allons ajourner jusqu'à 9h30 demain matin. L'Association nationale des prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe viendra témoigner.

J'aimerais remercier monsieur Ward d'être venu témoigner cet après-midi. Nous avons étudié en sa compagnie des questions extrêmement difficiles. Merci.

M. Ward: Je vous remercie, monsieur le président, et messieurs les membres du Comité.

The Chairman: I will now call the Committee to order.

This morning we will hear from The National Dieppe Prisoner of War Association, and their spokesman is Mr. Georges Giguère. I would also like to welcome Mr. Marcel Lambert who is with us this morning and who is a former Dieppe prisoner of war.

Mr. Giguère, the Committee is very informal and we invite you to make your presentation. It is the custom for members to perhaps interrupt at certain times to ask questions, if that suits your pattern.

Mr. Georges Giguère (President, The National Dieppe Prisoner of War Association): That is perfectly all right.

The Chairman: Fine. You may proceed.

Mr. Giguère: Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, this brief which we are presenting to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has been prepared with the assistance of the report entitled "Pathology of the Capitivity of the Prisoners of War", of the International Medical Conference in Brussels on November 1 to 4, 1962, the Effects of Imprisonment and Deportation International Conference organized by the World Veterans Federation at The Hague on November 20 to 25, 1961, and personal investigation by The National Dieppe Prisoner of War Association.

As you all know, the Dieppe raid, one of the most searing engagements of the Second World War, took place on August 19, 1942.

Of the 5,000 Canadian troops who set out for the coastal town in Normandy, only 2,000, mostly men who did not land, came back. Records show that 1946 men, most of them seriously wounded, were taken prisoner. It is also recorded that 72 of these men died in captivity. The period of imprisonment for those who survived was approximately three

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mercredi 24 septembre 1969

Le président: A l'ordre, s'il vous plaît. Nous allons ce matin entendre le porte-parole de l'Association nationale des prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, M. Giguère. Je tiens aussi à accueillir M. Marcel Lambert, un ancien prisonnier de guerre de Dieppe. Monsieur Giguère, notre Comité est sans cérémonies et vous invite à faire vos représentations. Si vous n'y voyez pas d'objections, les membres vous poseront des questions, à l'occasion.

M. Georges Giguère: Je n'y vois pas d'inconvénient.

Le président: Fort bien. Veuillez poursuivre.

M. Georges Giguère (Président de l'Association nationale des prisonniers de Guerre de Dieppe): Monsieur le président, messieurs les membres du Comité, le présent mémoire que nous soumettons au Comité permanent sur les affaires des anciens combattants a été préparé à l'aide du «Rapport pathologique sur la captivité des prisonniers de guerre» issu de la Conférence médicale internationale qui a eu lieu à Bruxelles du 1er au 4 novembre 1962; du rapport intitulé: «Effets de l'emprisonnement et de la déportation», issu de la conférence internationale convoquée à La Haye du 20 au 25 novembre 1961 par la Fédération mondiale des vétérans ainsi que des recherches personnelles effectuées par l'Association nationale des prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe.

Nul n'ignore que le Raid sur Dieppe fut l'engagement le plus controversé de la seconde grande guerre; il eut lieu le 19 août 1942.

Parmi les 5,000 troupes canadiennes qui y prirent part, seulement 2,000 réussirent à retourner en Angleterre et parmi ces dernières, plusieurs ne sont même pas descendues à Dieppe.

Les statistiques démontrent que 1,946 hommes, dont la plupart sérieusement blessés furent fait prisonniers par les Allemands. Il years; 32 months would be more exact. In 1953 the federal government established a War Claims Commission and named Mr. Justice Thane A. Campbell as chief commissioner. It was found to be necessary here to issue reparation.

In his report Mr. Justice Campbell found that general maltreatment did exist in prisoner of war camps in Europe where Canadian troops were imprisoned, and that extraordinary brutal treatment had been proved in many cases. The findings of the War Claims Commission resulted in granting almost equal awards to both Hong Kong and Dieppe Prisoners of war.

• 0945

The effects of imprisonment have for some years been a matter of grave concern to those Dieppe prisoners of war who still survive, and it is their hope that the government will instruct the standing committee on Veterans Affairs to conduct an inquiry into their plight which is in so many ways identical to that of the Hong Kong prisoners of war. Among these similarities is the prevalence of peptic ulcers, lumbar spine disabilities, nervous disorders and other problems commonly attributed to avitaminosis.

The standing committee on Veterans Affairs has for some time known that the circumstances of the Dieppe prisoners of war should be reviewed along the lines of what has been done in the case of the Hong Kong prisoners of war.

In presenting this submission on behalf of the Dieppe prisoners of war, we realize that in general you are familiar with this problem and respectfully ask for your support in bringing this matter to the attention of the government. We are also aware of the profound effect that your concern and support could have in bringing about consideration and immediate review of all Dieppe prisoners of war. This brief is being submitted a third time in the hope that you, our elected representatives, will speak up on behalf of the veteran and bring this matter to the attention of those persons who could make this possible.

This brief is submitted to provide supplemental information to that furnished your Committee in our brief of December 17, 1965, and to provide comment regarding the report of Dr. J. H. Richardson of the Canadian Pension Commission.

[Interpretation]

est aussi démontré que 72 soldats moururent en captivité. La période d'emprisonnement pour les survivants fut d'environ trois ans, trente-deux mois pour être plus précis.

En 1953, le Gouvernement fédéral établit la Commission des Réclamations de guerre et nomma le Juge Thane A. Campbell, Commissaire en Chef. Il a été jugé nécessaire d'obtenir des réparations.

Dans son rapport, Monsieur le Juge Campbell établit qu'il y eut des mauvais traitements dans les camps de prisonniers de guerre en Europe, où il y avait des troupes Canadiennes, et notamment, brutalités dans plusieurs cas.

D'après les résultats de la Commission, les prisonniers de guerre de Hong Kong et de Dieppe furent alloués une compensation à peu près identique.

Les effets d'emprisonnement sont depuis plusieurs années un grand souci pour nos prisonniers de Dieppe qui survivent, ils espèrent que le Gouvernement va demander au Comité permanent des Affaires des Anciens Combattants de faire enquête à leur sujet, qui est non moins identique à ceux de Hong Kong.

Parmi ces similarités, il y a prédominance d'ulcère peptique, invalidité lombaire, troubles névrotiques et plusieurs autres incapacités attribuables à l'avitaminose.

Le Comité permanent des Affaires des Anciens Combattants sait que les circonstances des Prisonniers de Guerre de Dieppe devraient être revisées, tout comme les prisonniers de Hong Kong.

En présentant cette soumission au nom des Prisonniers de Guerre de Dieppe, nous réalisons qu'en général vous êtes familiers avec ce problème et nous vous demandons très respectueusement votre support afin que le Gouvernement porte une attention toute particulière à nos problèmes. Nous sommes au courant du profond effet que votre appui peut apporter afin qu'une revision immédiate soit faite pour tous les Prisonniers de Guerre de Dieppe.

Ce sommaire est présenté pour une troisième fois avec l'espoir que vous, nos représentants élus, parlerez en notre faveur aux personnes qui peuvent rendre notre demande effective.

[Texte]

The major requirement, in so far as the Pension Act is concerned, for members of the Canadian Army who served in the Dieppe Force is to provide protection for widows and children in the event that the veteran should die prematurely.

If the veteran is in receipt of a pension of 48 per cent or greater, his widow and surviving children will be entitled to pension under the Pension Act and his children will be entitled to the benefits of the Education Assistance Act.

If pension is in payment at the rate of less than 48 per cent, pension will not be continued for the widow and children, and the children would be denied the benefits of the Education Assistance Act, unless it can be shown that the death is attributable to his service.

The relevant section of the Pension Act is set out below:

> 36 (3) Subject as in this Act otherwise provided, the widow of a member of the forces who was at the time of his death in receipt of a pension in any of the classes 1 to 11, inclusive, mentioned in Schedule A or who died while on the strength of the Department for treatment and but for his death would have been in receipt of pension in one of the said classes, is entitled to a pension as if he had died on service whether his death was attributable to his service or not.

The main source of apprehension to surviving members of the Dieppe force who are in receipt of pension of less than 48 per cent is that they may die from causes which are either unknown or which cannot be specifically stated to have been attributable to service, thus leaving their widows and children with no protection under the Pension Act.

The undermentioned persons who represent the Dieppe prisoners of war are willing to appear before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs (if given the chance to do so) to show just cause why the Dieppe prisoners of war should have a review along those lines used in the almost parallel situation of the Hong Kong prisoners.

[Interprétation]

Ce sommaire est présenté afin d'apporter des informations supplémentaires au mémoire que nous avons soumis précédemment, c'est-à-dire le 17 décembre 1965 et aussi en regard du rapport du Dr. J. H. Richardson de la Commission Canadienne des Pensions.

Les réclamations majeures en ce qui concerne l'Acte de la Commission Canadienne des Pensions pour les membres des Forces Armées Canadiennes qui ont servi à Dieppe, sont d'apporter une protection pour les veuves et dépendants en cas de décès prématuré de l'ancien combattant.

Si l'ancien combattant est récipiendaire d'une pension d'invalidité de 48 p. 100 ou plus, sa veuve et ses dépendants bénéficient d'une pension d'après l'Acte des Pensions et ses enfants sont éligibles à l'assistance éducationnelle. Par contre, si la Pension attribuée est moindre que 48 p. 100, elle ne continuera pas après le décès de l'ancien combattant et, les enfants ne seront pas éligibles à l'assistance éducationnelle.

Le paragraphe de l'Acte des Pensions est énuméré ci-dessous:

> 36 (3) «Sous réserve des dispositions à l'effet contraire prévues dans la présente loi; lorsqu'un membre des forces touchait, au moment de son décès, une pension de l'une des catégories 1 à 11 inclusivement, mentionnées dans l'annexe A, ou est décédé alors qu'il était porté sur les contrôles du ministère aux fins de traitement et, n'eût été son décès, aurait reçu une pension à l'une desdites catégories, la veuve dudit membre a droit à une pension comme s'il était mort en service, que son décès fût attribuable ou non à son service.»

Le plus grand souci des survivants de Dieppe qui reçoivent actuellement une pension de moins de 48 p. 100 est de mourir pour des causes inconnues ou ne peuvent pas spécialement être attribuable au service, laissant ainsi la veuve et les dépendants non éligibles d'après l'Acte des Pensions.

Les personnes sous mentionnées qui représentent les Prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, sont prêtes à se présenter devant le Comité Permanent des Affaires des anciens Combattants si on leur donne l'opportunité, afin de leur démontrer pourquoi le cas des Prisonniers de Guerre doit être revisé.

Pathology of the P.O.W.

Since 1952 when the Hamilton & District P.O.W. Association was first formed, we have always faced the problem of apathy in the P.O.W. veteran. Oddly enough, this apathy is not so strong among the majority of veterans who are members of various other veterans' organizations.

This apathy does show up strongly among our ex Dieppe Prisoners of War—why?

Firstly, they suffered a sharp psychological defeat in losing the battle of Dieppe.

The shock of leaving a land of plenty, the shock of their first bloody fight with the enemy and their subsequent internment left these men in a state of apathy which today is still evident. These men sat out the war in prison camps and this alone upset these once very active soldiers a great deal. The loss of freedom, lack of adequate food, shelter, and gainful activity fed this apathy.

When the day arrived and these men were released from the camps, hospitalized, or returned to their units for release from the service, they were so eager to get out of the service that in many cases they denied the existence of many and various diseases or illnesses which had occurred in the P.O.W. camps. Upon this happening they would report to a DVA Centre requesting treatment.

"What a shock!" They found that they had no entitlement; there was nothing written into their documents to substantiate their

Pathologie des Prisonniers de guerre

Depuis 1952, alors que l'Association des Prisonniers de guerre de Hamilton, Ont. fût formée, nous avons toujours fait face à des problèmes d'apathie parmi les anciens prisonniers de guerre. Il est étrange que cette apathie n'est pas aussi saillante parmi la majorité des autres anciens combattants qui font partie des autres organisations.

Cette apathie est très marquée parmi les prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe. Premièrement, ils souffrent d'un sentiment morbide de défaite dû à la perte de la bataille de Dieppe.

L'effet de laisser un pays d'abondance, l'échec de leur première bataille sanglante avec l'ennemi et incidemment, leur internement, tout ceci a laissé ces hommes dans un état d'apathie qui est encore aujourd'hui très évident.

L'effet pour ces hommes si actifs dans le passé, de se voir internés durant la plus grande durée de la dernière guerre a été très néfaste pour eux.

La perte de leur liberté, le manque de nourriture, de logement et d'activités ont rendu cette apathie plus intense.

Lorsque le jour de libération arriva, et que ces hommes furent délivrés des camps d'internement, des hôpitaux, ou retournèrent à leurs unités respectives afin d'être libérés du service, ces hommes avaient tellement hâte que dans la plupart des cas, ils nièrent l'existence de plusieurs symptômes de maladie ou malaise, lesquels étaient dûs à leur internement. Ils auraient dû s'adresser aux différents centres médicaux du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, afin d'obtenir les soins requis.

Quelle fut leur surprise lorsqu'on leur dit qu'ils n'étaient pas éligibles, il n'y avait aucun rapport médical dans leur dossier, afin request. "Now what?" These men appealed through proper channels to the CPC, and again were refused treatment or pension.

In the case of the Dieppe P.O.W.s, from the time they were taken prisoner to the date of release, there was not a word of documentary evidence added to their files. It is this lack of documentary evidence that is denying the P.O.W. veteran his rights. Since the CPC demands documentary evidence of maltreatment, lack of care, illness and disease suffered by the P.O.W., these vets are up against a stone wall in their request for adequate treatment and pensions. This deplorable situation has again led the ex-P.O.W. to a state of apathy greater than was experienced as a P.O.W. These veterans are so bitter in their attitude toward the CPC that they will not even talk to their own executives.

A conclusion was reached by diligent interviews with these veterans. These veterans are still suffering from invisible wounds sustained while P.O.W.'s in the camps of Europe. These wounds are best described by the foregoing pages of this document. It is the considered opinion of all P.O.W. associations that these ex-P.O.W.s be given the benefit of the doubt.

Medical Examination

This Association is aware of the provisions approved by the Department of Veterans Affairs, under which they are entitled to free medical examination. These provisions do not appear to be sufficient protection as they do not overcome the possibility that a member may die unexpectedly, without previous symptoms or manifestations of any disease.

Autopsy

The Association is aware also of the provisions made in the United Kingdom under which an autopsy and investigation are carried out automatically when the death occurs of a former member of the Forces who was a prisoner of war in the European Theatre. In this respect, our membership must once again consider that this procedure provides no comfort to the veteran while he is alive, as he is still faced with a matter of uncertainty in regard to adequate provision to protect his widow and children in the event of his death.

[Interprétation]

d'acquiescer à leur demande pour certaines déficiences dues à leur internement. Maintenant que faire? Ils allèrent en appel par l'entremise du bureau des avocats des pensions, mais comme il ne figurait aucune preuve médicale au dossier, leurs demandes furent refusées ou rejetées. Dans le cas des prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, durant la période d'emprisonnement, jusqu'au jour de leur libération, aucune note médicale n'existait dans leur dossier. C'est ce manque de preuve qui lésait les prisonniers de guerre. Alors que la Commission canadienne des pensions exige des preuves évidentes de mauvais traitements, de manque de soins, maladies ou symptômes quelconques subis par les prisonniers de guerre, ces anciens combattants font actuellement face à un mur infranchissable en regard de leur demande pour traitements adéquats (ou pension).

Cette déplorable situation a porté les anciens prisonniers de guerre à souffrir d'apathie plus grande que celle expérimentée dans leur internement.

Ces vétérans sont tellement déçus de l'attitude de la Commission canadienne des pensions qu'ils n'osent plus s'adresser à l'exécutif de leur association.

Après maintes entrevues, nous en sommes venus à cette conclusion. Ces vétérans souffrent toujours de maux invisibles qu'ils subirent lors de leur internement en Europe. Ces symptômes sont assez bien décrits dans les pages qui suivent de ce document.

C'est l'opinion de toutes les associations de prisonniers de guerre que ces vétérans devraient obtenir le bénéfice du doute de la Commission canadienne des pensions.

Examen médical

L'Association est au courant des provisions approuvées par le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants pour lesquelles ils sont éligibles à un examen médical gratis. Mais ceci ne semble pas une protection suffisante car ils omettent la possibilité qu'un membre puisse décéder subitement, sans symptôme préalable ou manifestation d'aucune maladie.

Autopsie

L'Association est aussi au courant qu'au Royaume Uni, lorsqu'un ancien prisonnier de guerre décède, une autopsie et une investigation sont immédiatement ordonnées. Dans ces circonstances, nos membres une fois de plus considèrent que cette procédure n'apporte aucun réconfort au vétéran alors qu'il est vivant, car il doit toujours faire face à l'incertitude en regard de la protection inadéquate de sa veuve et de ses enfants au cas de décès.

Prisoner of War Conditions

It is perhaps difficult for anyone who did not experience the horror of the German prison camps to fully understand the present-day apprehension of the Dieppe Force—an apprehension born of the knowledge that seemingly healthy soldiers were overcome by death from causes which were both insidious and incomprehensible to their fellow prisoners.

It is believed that one of the most complete works of this type is entitled Pathology of the Captivity of the Prisoner of War—Tome 11, containing the results of the International Medical Conference on this subject, held in Brussels, November 4, 1962.

A résumé of this report, edited by the International Confederation of Ex-Prisoners of War, contains information which appears to be relative to the report published by Dr. J. H. Richardson.

Some excerpts from the report of the Pathology of the Captivity of the Prisoner of War are quoted hereunder:

> No doubt statistical studies of the results of internment on a prisoner are difficult to establish. For one thing, witnesses who could serve for comparison cannot be easily found in sufficient number. On the other hand in numerous countries it is proven difficult to assemble exact information based on clinical examinations and laboratory tests about our former comrades, due to a certain physical lassitude, fatigue, which often is a result of their captivity.
>
> For the majority of the prisoners, the years spent in the camps represented a series of privations, enforced work, new dangers of war, which all have influenced their psychosomatic state.
>
> There followed the stay...without ever getting sufficient food...the work often difficult in a climate we were not used to, driven by guards obsessed by the notion that we had to produce more, absence or scarcity of news from the family.
>
> The doctors who were interested in the fate of former prisoners have found among our comrades troubles of varying gravity in different organs, but troubles whose frequent appearance, it seems, can be traced back to a common psychosomatic origin. Captivity, in tearing the individual from his familiar and professional surroundings to which he has adapted through acquired reflexes, brought about a series of aggressions; Physical aggression, over-exertion in marching, in work, in climate, privations, fear, anxiety about the future, breaking off family life.

La condition des prisonniers de guerre

Il est sans doute difficile pour quiconque n'a pas expérimenté les horreurs des camps de prisonniers de guerre, en Allemagne, de comprendre l'esprit pessimiste des vétérans de Dieppe. Un pessimiste né des connaissances que des soldats apparemment en santé sont décédés subitement de causes inconnues même de leurs camarades prisonniers.

Il est connu que l'ouvrage le plus complet de ces conditions est contenu dans le rapport pathologique sur l'internement des prisonniers de guerre Tome II à la suite de la conférence médicale internationale qui eut lieu à Bruxelles le 4 novembre 1962.

Un résumé de ce rapport édité par la Conférence internationale des anciens prisonniers de guerre contient des informations qui apparaissaient au rapport publié par le Dr J. H. Richardson.

Quelques idées générales de ce rapport sur la pathologie de l'internement des prisonniers de guerre vous sont ici présentées.

> Il n'y a nul doute que les résultats des études sur l'internement des prisonniers de guerre sont difficiles à définir.
> Incidemment, il est difficile d'atteindre suffisamment de témoins et, dans plusieurs pays, il n'a pas été facile d'obtenir assez d'informations basées sur des examens de cliniques, tests de laboratoire concernant nos camarades dues à certaines fatigues physiques qui sont souvent le résultat de l'internement.
>
> Pour la majorité des prisonniers de guerre, les années passées dans les camps représentent une série de privations, de travaux forcés, un nouveau danger de guerre qui influence leur état psychosomatique.
> Ils ont enduré ce stage sans avoir de nourriture suffisante, le travail souvent pénible, dans un climat auquel ils n'étaient pas habitués, conduits par des gardiens obsédés par la notion qu'ils devaient produire plus, sans compter l'absence de nouvelles de leur famille.
>
> Les médecins qui se sont intéressés au cas des anciens prisonniers de guerre, ont constaté parmi nos camarades différents troubles augmentant en gravité dans différents organes, mais les déficiences qui apparaissent plus fréquemment peuvent être retracées par une origine psychosomatique commune.
>
> La captivité tout en arrachant l'individu à son milieu familial dans lequel il était habitué de vivre depuis son enfance a apporté toute une série d'aggravations, agression physique sur la marche au travail, dans le climat, les privations, la

[Texte]

The organism made an effort to adapt to captivity; captivity, however, multiplies the aggressions consisting of prolonged imprisonments, lack of sufficient food, compulsory work.

The successive aggressions disturb the circuit of acquired reflexes at the level of the cerebral membrane, the thalamus and the formations at the base of the brain.

The nervous system of our former comrades shows very often evidence of unbalanced functionings; with the weight of advancing years there appear disorders of temper, irritability, disinterestedness in a sentimental sector and, on the other hand, a diminishing of intellectual ability, difficulty in mental concentration, impossibility of sustained effort.

In the domain of psychiatry, it manifests itself as either a slowly advancing asthenia or in chronic form with attacks (Targowla's paroxystic hypermnesic syndrome).

In particular, reference is made to the report of Dr. Francis Lantheaume of Neulise, France in his Introductory Report to Senescence. He reports as follows:

"This problem of fatigue has moreover been studied by authors from various countries and their conclusions are practically identical in noticing the wear caused by a psychic as well as neuro-muscular fatigue. One has also placed the accent on the responsibility of emotional, affective, and nervous shocks in the evolution and precociousness of Senescence."

Baumgartner writes:

"The accumulation of physiological and psychological stresses which have a repercussion on the sympathetic system and on the hollow viscera, is responsible for increased mortality among men between the ages of 40 and 70 years."

On their side J. and M. Postel dealing with the senile psychological feeling say:

"These causes are mainly of psycho-affective and social order."

Mr. Boruk insisted particularly on the etiological role of emotional shocks: deaths, violent emotions, changes of job, family conflicts, hunger, misery, physical and moral stresses, fatigue, climatic and atmospherical injuries, physiological shocks. Here are in a few words the causes of precocious senility, to which one must add, since a few years have passed, the inopportune eradiations to peur, anxiété à propos des éventualités futures.

L'organisme a fait un effort afin de s'adapter à l'internement; par contre, ce dernier multiplie les agressions lorsqu'il y eut l'emprisonnement prolongé, nourriture insuffisante et travaux forcés.

L'agression successive gêne les réflexes acquis au niveau (du cortex cérébral) du Thalamus et de la formation à la base du cerveau.

Le système nerveux de nos camarades montre très souvent des évidences d'un désiquilibre fonctionnel avec le poids des années; il apparaît dune part des désordres de tempérament, dans le contexte sentimental et, d'autre part, une diminution intellectuelle d'habilité dans la concentration, impossibilité d'efforts soutenus.

Dans le domaine de la psychiatrie, il y a manifestation de l'avancement de l'asthénie ou sous forme chronique avec attaques (Targowla's parorystique hypermenesic syndrome).

Particulièrement, référence est faite au rapport du Dr. Francis Lanthéaume de Neulise, France, dans son rapport d'introduction sur la sénescence qu'il décrit comme suit:

ce problème de fatigue est de plus en plus étudié par les auteurs de différents pays et leur conclusion est presque identique à remarquer une usure causée par une fatigue psychique ainsi que neuro-musculaire. Nous avons aussi placé l'accent sur la responsabilité émotive affective et choc nerveux dans l'évolution et la précocité de sénescence.

Baumgartner écrit:

l'accumulation physiologique et psychologique accentuée qui a une répercussion sur le Hollow-Viscera est responsable du taux accru de mortalité parmi les hommes de 40 à 70 ans.

De leur côté J. et M. Postel traitent l'effet de la sénilité psychologique déclare: Ces causes sont principalement dues à la psycho-affective et ordre social.

M. Boruk insiste particulièrement sur le rôle étiologique dû au choc émotionel, émotion violente, changement d'emploi, conflit familial, la faim, la misère, la fatigue, choc physiologique. Voici dans ces mots les causes précoces de sénilité auxquelles on doit ajouter depuis quelques années les radiations inopportunes auxquelles les organismes du corps humain sont soumis.

which the human organisms are submitted.

For one who lived in prisoner of war camps, it is undeniable that one finds here all the conditions, almost at the experimental state, of the incurrence of precocious senescence.

However, before a prejudiced mind, it is difficult to affirm this, one must also give proof of these declarations.

Dr. Lantheaume then quotes a number of eminent physicians who have carried out studies which indicate considerable preaging for ex-prisoners of war. He then states as follows:

"This summary, as it is only a short summary in relation to the works published in the last fifteen years, as boring as it may seem, has only aimed to start an investigation on the precocious senility, the premature senescence which seems to be the fate of the ex-prisoners of war."

"It is important that very soon a close network of proofs prove to the reticent Governments, the materiality of our statements. Once again it is a question of helping unfortunate people, victims of fate."

I have here the Pathology of the Captivity of the Prisoner of War, Brussels, November, 1962. It summarizes a bit of what the effects have done to us.

The International Federation of Ex-Servicemen and P.O.W.'s held its Congress in Brussels on November 2, 3 and 4, 1962.

The aim of the Medical Commission of the above mentioned was to study the belated sequelae of captivity.

Along with representatives from the World Federation of Ex-Servicemen the Union of the Interned and Deported of the Resistance several governments, and the Committee of the International Red Cross, were doctors delegated from Belgium, Italy, Japan, Norway, the Netherlands, the German Federal Republic, the U.S.S.R., the U.S.A. and Yugoslavia.

I would ask that the members pay attention to this: Canada was represented by a note only, to the Congress.

In many countries, the legislation enacted regarding ex-P.O.W.'s had fixed a precise limit, generally too short, as noted by grievances from P.O.W. associations. It was noted that these countries adopted a wait and see attitude; Canada was no exception.

[Interpretation]

Pour celui qui a vécu dans les camps de prisonniers de guerre, il est indéniable que l'on trouve ici toutes les conditions presqu'à l'état expérimental de l'apparition de la précocité de la sénescence.

Cependant, devant une idée de préjudice, il n'est pas difficile d'affirmer ceci, que l'on doit donner des preuves à ces déclarations.

Le Dr. Lanthéaume nomme quelques éminents médecins qui ont fait des études qui indiquent qu'un nombre considérable d'ex-prisonniers de guerre sont (pré âgés), de plus. Il note aussi:

ce sommaire, vu qu'il n'est qu'un court aperçu en relation avec les ouvrages publiés depuis les quinze années, aussi ennuyeux qu'il puisse être, n'a qu'un but, le début d'une investigation sur la sénilité. La sénescence prématurée qui semble être le destin des anciens prisonniers de guerre.

J'ai ici le Rapport pathologique sur les prisonniers de guerre, Bruxelles, novembre 1962. Il résume, en partie, les dommages qui nous ont été causés par les effets.

La Fédération internationale des anciens combattants et prisonniers de guerre (C.I.A.P.G.) tenait son congrès à Bruxelles le 2, 3 et 4 novembre, 1962.

Le but de la Commission médicale était d'étudier les effets de la captivité.

Avec les représentants de la Fédération Mondiale des Anciens Combattants (F.H.A.C.) ainsi que l'Union des internés et déportés de la résistance (U.I.R.D.O.), plusieurs représentants de différents gouvernements, le Comité International de la Croix Rouge, des médecins délégués par la Belgique, l'Italie, le Japon, la Norvège, la Hollande, la République Fédérale de l'Allemagne, l'U.R.S.S., les États-Unis et la Yougoslavie.

Nous notons ici que le Canada était représenté par une note seulement au congrès.

Dans plusieurs pays, la législation en vigueur au sujet des Anciens Prisonniers de guerre avait établi une limite précise, trop courte en général. A noter, les griefs des Associations de prisonniers de guerre. A noter que ces pays adoptèrent une attitude passive; le Canada n'était pas une exception.

[Texte]

The point of view of the doctors on the effects of the prolonged duration of detention, observed during 1940-45 war, was excellently summarized in the conclusion of the Congress of the World Federation of Ex-Servicemen in The Hague in November, 1961:

The conference considers that there exist affections and:

"Infirmities, with belated appearance among those who were interned or detailed in concentration camps."

"These conditions can show up at any time after liberation and no time limit can be fixed for their appearance."

"Similar conditions can also be found among ex-P.O.W.'s having lived in exceptionally hard conditions."

During the discussion, it was specified that these conditions were achieved by the severity of the detention, or by its duration. The CIAPG asked the doctors to set forth the results of their recent researches.

First:

1. Cardiovascular pathology.
2. Psychosomatic disorders with complement communications and observations on belated tuberculosis of the P.O.W.'s.
3. Precocious senescence.

• 1005

Since 1954 the FNAC has interested itself with the problems of the International Red Cross and subsequently it concentrated its attention on the deported and the P.O.W.'s.

Fifteen years after returning to near normal life, it has become evident that the suffering endured in P.O.W. camps had inflicted invisible injuries which often proved injurious, in a permanent manner, to the health of these persons and always hastened the ageing of the prisoners having lived in exceptional conditions of stress.

What is required is the means of settling many questions and straying from tradition, to request our government to guarantee for the ex-P.O.W.'s the best form of reparation, by studying their special needs, whose nature changes a they grow older, and to strive to ease them by taking into account the progress which has been accomplished in the medical, economical and social sciences.

[Interprétation]

Le point de vue des médecins sur l'effet de la prolongation de la durée de la détention observée durant la guerre 1939-1945 a été parfaitement énuméré au terme du Congrès de la Fédération des Anciens Prisonniers de guerre à La Haye en novembre 1961:

La Conférence considère qu'il existe affections et infirmités avec apparence à retardement parmi ceux qui ont été internés ou détenus dans les camps d'internement.

Ces conditions peuvent apparaître en tout temps après la libération et aucune limite de temps ne peut-être fixée pour leur apparence.

Des conditions semblables se trouvent aussi parmi les anciens prisonniers de guerre qui ont vécu dans des conditions exceptionnellement dures.

Durant la discussion, il a été fait mention que ces conditions étaient le résultat de la dureté de la détention aussi bien que de la longue durée.

La C.I.A.P.G. demande aux médecins de produire les résultats de leurs récentes recherches.:

1. Pathologie cardio-vasculaire.
2. Désordres psycho-somatiques, avec attaches et relations aux observations sur les causes déterminantes de la tuberculose chez les anciens prisonniers de guerre.
3. Vieillissement prématuré.

Depuis 1954, la F.N.A.C. s'est beaucoup intéressée aux problèmes de la Croix Rouge Internationale avec le résultat que plus tard elle mit toute son attention et ses efforts sur le cas des personnes déportées et les anciens prisonniers de guerre.

Quinze années après un retour à une vie presque normale, il est devenu évident que les sévices endurés dans les camps de prisonniers ont infligé des blessures invisibles et souvent de nature sérieuse et nuisible en permanence, à la santé et au bien-être, produisant un vieillissement très prématuré de ces anciens prisonniers ayant vécu dans des conditions exceptionnelles de «stress»

Ce qu'il nous faut ce sont des moyens pour résoudre plusieurs questions en mettant de coté ce qui se faisait dans le passé, de demander au gouvernement de garantir aux anciens prisonniers de guerre la meilleure formule de compensation, en étudiant leurs besoin spéciaux, qui changent de nature avec le vieillissement, et de s'efforcer d'alléger leurs infirmités en tenant compte des derniers progrès accomplis en médecine et en science économique et sociale.

[Text]

We agree that the government has taken into consideration the lot of the P.O.W.'s but legislation being as it is, no text will ever be able to bring out exactly the prejudice suffered by living in P.O.W. camps.

There are several laws which cover our pathology; but the pathology of the P.O.W. is special; we feel no pride and prefer not to speak about it, but the ex-P.O.W. is often an old man when administratively speaking he is only an adult.

The legislation on this subject should follow an evolution parallel to that of medical science.

This will lead to a more exact appreciation of the belated sequelae which appear among ex-P.O.W.'s and which can manifest themselves at any time after liberation.

We request that the P.O.W.'s receive the right to the benefit of the presumption of the origin and the aggravation of their ailments. It is unequestionable that the filiation and the evolution of ailments caused by captivity and which were not ascertained on release or were considered light or not dangerous, and which have transformed themselves into ailments which at present have an important incapacity and a premature senescence.

If the P.O.W.'s are affected with a particular predeliction for certain ailments, it is because captivity has had an unquestionable influence on their genesis.

If the captivity has had an influence on their genesis, the imputability of these ailments must be reconsidered, even if this late showing of ailments has not allowed, from the point of view of present legislation, these ailing P.O.W.'s to benefit from the presumption of the origin.

The belated sequelae of the pathology of captivity are neither a catch nor a free supposition, but a harsh fact which asserts itself more than ever and grows more vigorous every day.

It is therefore legitimate that the promiscuity, the feeding, the climate and all the conditions imposed on P.O.W.'s be the basis of a different pathology from that of a sedentary population.

[Interpretation]

Nous admettons que le gouvernement est intéressé au sort des anciens prisonniers de guerre mais les lois présentes étant ce qu'elles sont, aucune clause ne serait jamais capable de saisir et définir le préjudice fait à ceux qui ont vécu dans des camps de prisonniers de guerre.

Il y a des lois qui concernent la pathologie dans les grandes lignes, mais la pathologie du prisonnier de guere est tout autre; nous n'en éprouvons aucun orgueil et préférons n'en pas parler, mais l'ancien prisonnier de guerre est souvent physiquement parlant un vieil homme pendant que du point de vue administratif il est encore un adulte.

Sur ce sujet les lois devraient donc évoluer de pair avec la science médicale.

Ceci nous conduirait à une appréciation plus exacte des sévices soufferts par les anciens prisonniers de guerre, lesquels se manifestent en aucun temps après la démobilisation.

Nous demandons qu'on accorde aux anciens prisonniers de guerre la reconnaissance quant à l'origine et à l'aggravation de leurs infirmités, comme ayant été encourues durant leur temps passé dans les camps de prisonniers de guerre.

Il ne fait aucun doute que la cause et l'aggravation de certaines infirmités durant la captivité n'ont pas été bien repérées lors du licenciement ou bien, avaient été considérées de nature bénigne et sans danger, mais que plus tard sont devenues de nature telle à présenter une sérieuse infirmité et la cause directe d'un vieillissement précoce.

Si un ancien prisonnier de guerre semble avoir moins de résistance à certaines maladies, ceci nous croyons est dû sans contredit à l'influence de la captivité sur l'origine de ces maladies.

Si la captivité a influencé l'origine des infirmités, la cause de ces origines doit être reconsidérée, même si un peu sur le tard la preuve des infirmités n'est pas accordée du point de vue de la législation présente, ces anciens prisonniers de guerre devraient être accordés le bénéfice du doute.

Les suites tardives de la pathologie de la captivité n'est pas un piège ou une supposition toute gratuite, mais un fait bien réel qui s'affermit et se prouve de jour en jour.

Il est conséquemment légitime de dire que la promiscuité, la nourriture, le climat et toutes les autres conditions imposées aux prisonniers de guerre, soient acceptées comme base pour une pathologie différente de celle des populations sédentaires.

[Texte]

The repetition of stress, which does not exist in normal life, is capable of causing injuries which might only appear later on, its evolution may be long and insidious and caused by involuntary circumstances.

Under difficult hygienic conditions, poor nutrition and hospital care, infectious diseases must play a large part in the life of men in a P.O.W. camp.

Rheumatism plays an extremely important role in the case of heart muscles and vascular systems. Nutrition troubles and dystrophia can cause high albumen losses and various avitaminosis. There is also the grave situation where a psychosomatic state is induced into the P.O.W. by alimentary privations, physical and moral coercions.

We submit that the repercussion of captivity manifested itself at the level of all organs of the bodies of the P.O.W.'s. These symptoms continue to show themselves and the disturbances which characterise them become more frequent and noticeable as our comrades grow older.

We now come to a premature conclusion.

Although the problem of pensions for ex-P.O.W.'s cannot constitute a general rule, there are, nevertheless, particular cases, individual and far from exceptional cases, special affections for which a scale of pensions should be established. Once these individual cases all have been specified, they should be submitted to medico-military tribunals, which have as their function the solution to our problems.

The Ex-Prisoner of War Associations, together with the help of our medical and pension commissions and with the help of the World Federation of Ex-Servicemen, should try to obtain from our government a practical means of adapting the existing legislation.

We ex-prisoners of war who have all known the same horror of war, the sweetness of peace and the price of liberty, can only hope that our pleas will be heard by those who are at the disposal of medical science and the peace of all men.

The rest, gentlemen, are excerpts from the debates of the House of Commons of which, I think, most of you are aware.

[Interprétation]

La répétition de contraintes qui n'existent pas dans la vie normale est capable de produire des infirmités qui n'apparaîtront que sur le tard, leurs évolutions étant lentes et insidieuses et amenées à la surface par des circonstances involontaires.

Dans des conditions d'hygiène lamentables, une nourriture insuffisante et déficiente, un système de soins médicaux rudimentaires, il n'est pas surprenant que les maladies de toutes sortes ont eu une grande part dans la vie de ces anciens prisonniers de guerre.

Le rhumatisme occupe un rôle extrêmement important dans les cas de maladies de cœur en ce qui a trait au système vasculaire.

Troubles de nutrition et dystrophie peuvent causer de grande perte d'albumine et aussi plusieurs sortes d'avitaminoses.

Il y a aussi une grave situation où un état de psychomatose est induit dans un ancien prisonnier de guerre par privations alimentaires, et sévices mentaux et moraux.

Nous disons que les répercussions de la captivité se présentent dans tous les organes du corps des anciens prisonniers de guerre.

Que ces symptômes continuent de se manifester et que les troubles qui les caractérisent deviennent plus nombreux, et plus apparents à mesure que nos camarades vieillissent.

Nous en venons maintenant à une conclution initiale, peut-être prématurée.

Bien que le problème des pensions pour les anciens prisonniers de guerre ne peut être considéré comme règle générale, il y a cependant des cas fort particuliers et individuels sans être des cas exceptionnels, où certaines affections devraient être mesurées selon un barème établi.

Une fois que tous ces cas individuels auraient été signalés, ils devraient être présentés à un tribunal médico-militaire, qui devrait avoir pour fonctions de trouver la solution à nos problèmes.

L'Association des Anciens Prisonniers de Guerre assistée de nos commissions de médecine et de pension, avec l'aide de la Fédération Mondiale des Vétérans devraient essayer d'obtenir de notre gouvernement des moyens pratiques à être adoptés dans la législation présente.

Les anciens prisonniers de guerre, qui ont connu les mêmes horreurs de guerre, les bienfaits de la Paix et du prix de la liberté, ne peuvent qu'attendre que nos demandes seront écoutées par ceux qui se dévouent à la science médicale et à la Paix mondiale.

Le reste se compose d'extraits des débats de la Chambre des communes, que vous connaissez.

[Text]

The Chairman: I wonder if we could append to the record without being read the extracts from the debates of the House of Commons. Is that agreeable to the Committee?

Mr. Giguère has indicated he would be pleased to answer questions on the brief. I have the following names: Mr. MacRae, Mr. Bill Knowles and Mr. Legault.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask our witness this particular question dealing with records. Yesterday we had the Hong Kong fellows and they told us that in most cases they had very little in the way of medical records for the time they were prisoners of war in Hong Kong. I gathered from your brief, at one point, that you were able to get very little in the way of records since you were released. Were your doctors not able to keep anything in the way of records that were brought back that would support your cases now?

Mr. Giguère: Many of our chaps were treated in prisoner of war camps by German doctors and so forth, but no record of that is available. Those records have been lost. You are aware that according to the Pension Act you have to relate what you are suffering from and the cause of it to the war.

To give you an example, this chap was wounded in battle, went to his medical officer and he subsequently went to the hospital. He has a record which shows his injuries which he can prove. We cannot. If we are suffering from a certain disease, naturally we cannot prove it unless we get the benefit of the doubt that the disease we are suffering from is due to our internment.

Mr. MacRae: Thank you. The second point, and I will be very brief, as I just have this one other question. I notice you refer in your brief in many cases to that principle of psychosomatic illness. I suggest to the witness that is a most important point; it is a very valuable point. In other words, even though in some cases a doctor cannot pinpoint an actual illness, yet psychosomatically the man is ill because of stress and strain. More and more, medical science is deciding that the stress and strain of such things as you men experienced, that is captivity with all of its privations and everything else, can have a very definite effect on a man's physiology—on his physical condition. I was pleased to see—and this is the end of what I am going to say, Mr. Chairman—that you are stressing the psychosomatic illness and the theory of stress. I believe it is vitally important to you for future submissions.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Maintenant on pourrait s'abstenir de lire les extraits et se contenter de les annexer au compte rendu d'aujourd'hui. Le Comité est-il d'accord?

M. Giguère va maintenant répondre à vos questions sur le mémoire. Monsieur MacRae.

M. MacRae: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais poser cette question au témoin à propos des dossiers. Hier, les anciens combattants de Hong Kong ont comparu et ils nous ont dit que, dans la plupart des cas, il n'y avait que très peu de dossiers médicaux qui remontent au moment où ils étaient prisonniers à Hong Kong. Dans votre mémoire, vous avez dit que vous n'aviez que très peu de dossiers médicaux sur votre état depuis votre licenciemment. Vos médecins n'ont-ils pas pu garder des dossiers qui pourraient appuyer votre cause?

M. Giguère: La plupart ont été traités dans des camps par des médecins allemands, mais il n'y a pas de dossiers. Vous savez qu'en vertu de la loi sur les pensions, il faut établir un lien entre la maladie ou sa cause avec la guerre. Par exemple, si quelqu'un est blessé au combat et hôspitalisé après la recommendation du médecin, il a une preuve. Quant à nous, nous n'en avons pas de preuve. Si nous souffrons d'une certaine maladie, il nous est impossible de prouver, à moins d'avoir le bénéfice du doute, que cette maladie provient de notre internement.

M. MacRae: Merci. J'aurais une deuxième question. Dans votre mémoire vous avez parlé de la maladie psychosomatique. C'est un argument de valeur. Même si, dans certains cas, le médecin ne peut pas repérer une maladie, il n'en reste pas moins que, du point de vue psychosomatique, la personne souffre de stress et de tension. De plus en plus, la médecine reconnaît que le stress et la tension du genre auquel vous avez été soumis peut engendrer des troubles physiologiques, voire physiques. Je termine en disant que je suis heureux que vous ayez souligné ce point.

[Texte]

Mr. Giguère: Thank you.

The Chairman: There are many people with their hands up. For your interest I was going to call on Mr. Legault, Mr. Stanley Knowles and Mr. Bill Knowles, if that is agreeable. I am rotating and trying to go to different corners of the room. Mr. Legault?

• 1015

M. Legault: Monsieur le président, une question, quand le témoin parle d'antipathie, est-ce que c'est nécessairement d'antipathie vis-à-vis le traitement reçu après la libération?

M. Giguère: Oui.

M. Legault: Une chose que je n'ai jamais bien comprise, c'est le but de cette attaque à Dieppe qui a eu lieu en 1942 et ceci a toujours été entouré d'un peu de mystère; y a-t-il de l'antipathie à cause du manque d'explication pour...

M. Giguère: Non, pas sur le but, le pourquoi, les causes ce n'est pas cela, c'est surtout à l'égard des traitements reçus après. D'abord, plusieurs de mes camarades, s'ils se présentent au ministère des Anciens combattants où, naturellement il y a des lois, ils sont obligés de s'y soumettre et parfois, ils se voient privés de certains traitements, en vertu des règlements en vigueur. Je ne sais pas si vous êtes au courant, mais pour avoir droit aux traitements il faut, premièrement, ne pas être pensionné, si on a fait du service outremer, on peut avoir un examen médical, un point, c'est tout. Maintenant, si un ancien combattant est pensionné, il peut être traité pour la maladie qui a amené sa mise à la retraite.

Alors, le prisonnier de guerre qui, comme moi, et il y en a plusieurs, n'a pas été blessé et ne reçoit pas de pension, peut recevoir un examen médical, mais il ne peut pas être traité. Alors, il se dit: «eh bien, je suis un ancien combattant, j'ai été prisonnier de guerre et je suis malade»; il est à noter que plusieurs de ces combattants de Dieppe souffrent de troubles d'estomac et tout cela, et ils ne peuvent pas être traités, tandis qu'ils en voient d'autres qui le sont.

Je vais vous citer un cas: un récipiendaire de l'allocation des anciens combattants peut être traité de «a» à «z», la même chose se produit dans le cas d'anciens combattants des forces alliées. Un Italien, qui a servi lors de la Première guerre mondiale, reçoit l'allocation et il va être traité dans un hôpital du ministère, tandis que l'ancien combattant canadien, qui a servi à Dieppe, comme il ne reçoit pas de pension, il ne peut être traité. Il faut qu'il soit pensionné. Alors, c'est de là que vient cette antipathie En bon Canadien, bien, il dit: «I am fed up»!

[Interprétation]

M. Giguère: Merci.

Le président: Je vois qu'il y a plusieurs personnes qui voudraient parler. Je vais accorder la parole à M. Legault, M. Stanley Knowles et M. Bill Knowles, si vous êtes d'accord. Monsieur Legault. (Monsieur le président, une question...)

Mr. Legault: Mr. Chairman, when the witness talks of antipathy, is it necessarily antipathy with regard to the treatment received after the liberation?

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Mr. Legault: There is something that I have never understood fully, and that is the purpose of the Dieppe attack in 1942. This has always been shrouded in mystery. Is there antipathy because of a lack of explanation...

Mr. Giguère: Not with regard to the aim, the reason, the causes. It is especially with regard to treatment received afterwards. Several of my comrades who go to the Department of Veterans Affairs, which naturally has its own rules, have to abide by the latter and are sometimes deprived of certain treatments due to the rules that are in force. I do not know whether you are aware of it, but to be eligible for treatments one must in the first place not be pensioned, and if one has had overseas service, he may have a medical examination and that is all. If a veteran is pensioned, he may be treated for the illness which caused his being pensioned.

Now, prisoners of war who, like myself and there are many of them, have not been wounded and do not receive a pension, can have a medical examination, but they cannot be treated. Then they say: I am a veteran, I was a prisoner of war and I am ill. It should be noted that several of the Dieppe veterans suffer from stomach ailments and yet they cannot be treated, while there are many others who are treated.

I shall cite a case: someone who is entitled to veterans' allowance may be treated from "a" to "z", and the same applies to veterans of the allied forces. An Italian who served in the First World War is eligible for an allowance and is treated in one of the Department's hospitals, while the Canadian veteran who was in Dieppe cannot be treated because he is not a pensioner. He must be a pensioner. This is where the antipathy stems from and thus, as a good Canadian, he says: I am fed up!

[Text]

M. Legault: Alors . . .

M. Giguère: Il y en a d'autres qui ont fait des tentatives au tout début, après la guerre, mais après avoir essuyé un refus ils ne se sont pas entêtés. Il y en a qui ont une certaine position, alors ils vont voir leur médecin.

Le président: Quel pourcentage des anciens combattants de Dieppe sont pensionnés?

Mr. Giguère: A survey was made recently by the Canadian Pension Commission and I believe it was approximately 60 per cent, but these pensions were due directly to wounds, certain ailments or symptoms that were caused by the raid and not by different diseases or symptoms sustained afterwards.

M. Legault: Alors, vous voulez nécessairement mettre en évidence votre désir d'être favorisés du bénéfice du doute.

M. Giguère: Favorisés oui, on ne peut pas...

M. Legault: Peut-être pas favorisés mais peut-être reconnus...

M. Giguère: Oui, on veut avoir le bénéfice du doute.

M. Legault: ... touchant la question du bénéfice du doute.

M. Giguère: La seule chose en laquelle nous croyons, la seule possibilité, la seule façon, c'est en subissant un examen médical sur les mêmes bases que celles établies envers les prisonniers de Hong Kong. Nous ne nous comparons pas à eux en ce qui a trait aux mauvais traitements, mais nous voulons avoir le même principe de base pour l'examen médical que les prisonniers de Hong Kong, c'est-à-dire que les prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe soient appelés par le ministère, qu'on leur fasse subir un examen médical: un examen médical de «a» à «z» et non pas un examen de clinique où le médecin ne fait qu'ausculter. Comme nous avons souffert de malnutrition ou de choses semblables, les malaises se font surtout sentir à l'estomac, il se forme des ulcères, etc. Alors tout profane que je sois, j'estime que la seule façon pour un médecin de savoir s'il y a des ulcères, c'est de faire subir un examen au baryum.

Nous avons subi un examen médical, après le service, en 1946, mais très peu ont passé un examen au baryum, pour savoir exactement s'ils avaient des maux d'estomac. Quelques annés plus tard, des ulcères se déclarent, ce qui est normal après avoir souffert de malnutrition. L'estomac est rapetissé, alors les troubles viennent surtout de là. Ensuite viennent

[Interpretation]

Mr. Legault: Then...

Mr. Giguère: There are others who made certain attempts right at the beginning, after the end of the war, but after being refused they gave up. Some of them have a certain position and they see their own doctor.

The Chairman: What is the percentage of Dieppe veterans who are pensioned?

M. Giguère: Une étude a été faite par la Commission des pensions, et je crois que le chiffre était d'environ 60 p. 100, mais ces pensions étaient attribuées à certaines blessures ou certaines symptômes causés par l'attaque même de l'ennemi et non pas à des maladies survenues après.

Mr. Legault: So, necessarily, you wish to emphasize your desire to be favoured under the principle of the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Giguère: Yes, favoured. One cannot...

Mr. Legault: Perhaps not favoured but recognized...

Mr. Giguère: Yes, we want to have the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Legault: ...with regard to the question of the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Giguère: The only thing in which we believe, the only possibility, the only way, is to have a medical examination on the same basis as those established for Hong Kong prisoners. We do not compare ourselves to them with respect to ill treatment, but we want to have the same basic principle for the medical examination as the Hong Kong prisoners, which means that the Dieppe POW's be called by the Department and be subject to a medical examination.

That is, a medical examination from "a" to "z", and not a clinical examination where the doctor merely sounds one's chest. As we have suffered from malnutrition or similar things, the stomach in particular has been affected, and we have stomach ulcers, and so forth. Hence, although I am but a layman, I believe that the only way for a doctor to find out whether there are any ulcers, would be to give a barium test to the patient.

Although we passed a medical examination after leaving the service, in 1946, very few had a barium test made to see whether they had any stomach disease. So a few years later, ulcers appear, which is normal after having suffered from malnutrition. The stomach has shrunk and this is where the trouble comes from. And then there are psychic and les troubles psychiques, mentaux. Qu'est-ce qui reste? Voici un exemple: un ancien combattant de Dieppe qui se trouve handicapé et ne peut pas prouver que c'est dû à son service, n'est pas éligible pour une pension; il ne lui reste que l'allocation aux anciens combattants. C'est tout.

M. Legault: Merci, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: Mr. Stanley Knowles and Mr. William Knowles.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, in the case of the Hong Kong veterans—and I think we are all impressed with the similarity of the two groups—we were given certain statistics either by the Hong Kong Veterans Association, or by the Department. Does Mr. Giguère have these? If not, Mr. Chairman, perhaps you could flag it as something to be given to us.

I gather that there were 1946 taken prisoner, 72 of whom died during the period of captivity, leaving 1874 who were released. How many of those are still living, how many are on pension and how many of those on pension are at 48 per cent or higher?

Mr. Giguère: As I said, Mr. Knowles, the Canadian Pension Commission made a survey recently on veterans who were receiving pensions. The files of 208 were reviewed, along with 392 additional files taken at random; so that with the 200 original files a total of 800 files were examined. This constitutes almost half of the total known POW's resulting from the invasion and provides a very comprehensive sample. A copy of our finding is attached to the review. It is significant that in this group only 50 per cent are in receipt of pension.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Fifty per cent of the 800?

Mr. Giguère: That is what it says here. Whereas of the Hong Kong group it is 90 per cent. Naturally, that was different. Although, as I mentioned previously, most of our chaps who are pensioned are pensioned for wounds sustained during the raid. This has been proven, and this is obvious, because the records are on file, and so on; it is easy. But there are pensions for other symptoms that could be related to our internment. I am sure that if a survey were made and we were given the benefit of the doubt that certain symptoms were caused by our internment, they would amount, perhaps not to as many as those, but close to it. There are many veterans today who could be in receipt of a mental troubles. So what is left to them? Take the case of a Dieppe veteran who is handicapped and cannot prove that it is attributable to his period of service. He is not eligible for veterans' allowance. All he has is the veterans' allowance. That's all.

Mr. Legault: Thank you, Mr. Chairman,

Le président: Monsieur Stanley Knowles. Monsieur William Knowles.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Monsieur le président, dans le cas des anciens combattants de Hong Kong, nous sommes tous frappés par la similitude qui existe entre les deux catégories. L'Association des anciens combattants de Hong Kong ou le ministère nous a communiqué certains chiffres statistiques. Monsieur Giguère les a-t-il? S'il ne les possède pas, vous pourriez peut être nous les faire parvenir. Je constate qu'il y a eu 1946 prisonniers, dont 72 sont morts en captivité. Les survivants ont été libérés. Pouvez-vous nous dire combien d'eux vivent encore, combien bénéficient de pensions et combien de ceux-là ont pu toucher des pensions de 48 p. 100 ou plus?

M. Giguère: Monsieur Knowles, la Commission canadienne des pensions a récemment fait le relevé des anciens combattants qui reçoivent des pensions. Elle a revu 208 dossiers et examiné 392 autres dossiers choisis au hasard. En tout, elle a examiné 800 dossiers compte tenu des 200 premiers dossiers. C'est presque la moitié du nombre total des soldats faits prisonniers pendant l'invasion et c'est un échantillon très représentatif. Un exemplaire de la liste de nos constatations est annexé au compte rendu. Il est significatif que seulement 50 p. 100 de ceux qui appartiennent à cette catégorie reçoivent une pension.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): 50 p. 100 des 800?

M. Giguère: Oui, c'est ce que l'on dit ici. Dans le groupe de Hong Kong, le pourcentage est de 90. Évidemment, c'était un cas différent. Mais, comme je l'ai expliqué plus tôt, la plupart de nos pensionnés le sont à cause de blessures subies durant le raid. C'est évident, parce que tout est consigné dans des dossiers. Mais certaines pensions sont accordées pour des maladies qui pourraient découler de notre période de captivité. Si l'on faisait une étude et si l'on découvrait, même en vertu du principe du bénéfice du doute, que certaines maladies sont dues à la période de captivité, on pourrait augmenter le pourcentage de notre groupe presque au niveau de celui du groupe de Hong Kong. Bien des anciens com-pension but for the way the pension legislation is written. There is now a White Paper on it and they have mentioned in the fourth paragraph the benefit of doubt—that they might review it—but we do not know how far they will go.

Mr Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The benefit of the doubt provision, of course, as mentioned in the White Paper, is to apply to all veterans.

Mr. Giguère: That is right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But I gather you feel that Dieppe prisoners of war should receive treatment similar to those of Hong Kong?

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Namely, 50 per cent if there is an assessable disability?

Mr. Giguère: That is exactly what we want. That is actually what we should have.

• 1025

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I get the impression that because of the different experiences that you fellows went through in Dieppe more of your comrades seem not to want to talk about it than in the case of Hong Kong. We are told that we know about all of the Hong Kong boys but eight, but apparently in your case there are quite a few we should be seeking out.

Mr. Giguère: I will tell you, Mr. Knowles. I have been looking after the Dieppe veterans in Montreal, and we are the oldest branch. At first it started as a small association to commemorate the Dieppe Raid, which we have done for the past 15 years. We do not want the people of Canada to forget Dieppe. That was our main purpose.

But I find that we have difficulty in getting them interested in our association. We got them interested when the war claims commission agreed that we suffered maltreatment and gave us reparation, the first being about 50 cents per day for each day that it was considered involved maltreatment. The second time it was half of what we had received. Then the chaps got a bit interested, but we had a lot of trouble. I managed to get 172 members in my branch, which is one of the largest branches. But there is apathy. There is not much interest in the financial aspect.

First it is the treatment we are after so that we can go into a veterans' hospital as a battants pourraient toucher aujourd'hui une pension, n'était la teneur de la Loi sur les pensions. Je vois maintenant qu'il y a un Livre blanc, qui parle du bénéfice du doute au quatrième paragraphe, mais dans quelle mesure les dispositions seront généreuses, je l'ignore.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Le bénéfice du doute mentionné dans le Livre blanc s'appliquera à tous les anciens combattants?

M. Giguère: C'est exact.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Si je comprends bien vous êtes d'avis que les prisonniers de Dieppe devraient jouir des mêmes avantages que ceux de Hong Kong.

M. Giguère: Oui.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): 50 p. 100 dans les cas d'invalidité qui peuvent être évalués?

M. Giguère: C'est ce que nous réclamons. C'est ce que nous méritons en fait.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): J'ai l'impression que, à cause des expériences que vous avez connues à Dieppe, un plus grand nombre de vos camarades ne désirent pas en parler comme le font les anciens combattants de Hong Kong. On nous dit que nous connaissons tous les combattants de Hong Kong sauf huit.

M. Giguère: M. Knowles, je me suis occupé des anciens combattants de Dieppe à Montréal. Nous avons constitué il y a 15 ans notre petite Association pour commémorer le raid de Dieppe. Nous ne voulons pas que les gens du Canada oublient Dieppe. Mais, il est difficile d'attirer leur attention sur notre Association. Nous avons suscité leur intérêt lorsque la Commission des réclamations de guerre a convenu que nous avions subi de mauvais traitements et nous a accordé des indemnités, la première fois, une indemnité de 50 cents par jour pour chaque jour de mauvais traitements; la seconde fois, une indemnité égale à la moitié de la première. Dès lors les gens se sont un peu intéressés à nous, mais nous avons eu beaucoup d'ennuis. J'ai réussi à recruter 172 membres pour ma section. Mais l'indifférence règne. L'aspect pécuniaire nous intéresse peu. Ce qui nous intéresse d'abord c'est de pouvoir visiter les hôpitaux des anciens combattants en qualité d'ancien combattant de Dieppe et d'obtenir le traitement des maladies que nous avons con-

[Texte]

Dieppe veteran and get treatment for different diseases and so on that may be due to our internment. I am not a doctor. I cannot say exactly which disease is related directly to the internment. This, I think, is our main concern.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This very apathy is an indication of the seriousness of what you suffered?

Mr. Giguère: That is right. As I mentioned they are just fed up. It is a shame, in a way. I do not say this because I was there, but I saw these chaps land in Dieppe. Even the Germans were surprised to see them land. My unit landed at 7.30 in the morning in bright sunshine and bullets were pouring into the water. I really thought it was raining. I was not hit but a lot of chaps were. It was unbelievable to see that bunch of chaps. Even the Germans were surprised to see them land. The Germans were not two miles away, and they were right on the top of the cliff.

One thing you gentlemen are probably not aware of, except for Mr. Lambert, is that we were maltreated. We were tied with ropes for one month and chained for 13 months. Ido not know whether or not you are aware of that. If that was not maltreatment I do not know what is. I have the piece of rope that I was tied with. Our hands were bound 12 hours a day. We had to go to the bathroom with our hands tied. Try it some time, gentlemen. Our chains were put on at 7 o'clock in the morning and removed at 8 o'clock at night. We were handcuffed, with chains about one and a half feet apart. We were subjected to that for 13 months. Why did the Germans tie us up? Perhaps some of the members can answer that. The Germans did not tie us up because we were Canadians.

The Chairman: Mr. William Knowles?

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certain of the questions I was going to ask cousin Stanley has already covered. I think if the statistics on the number of Dieppe fellows who are still living could be made available they would be helpful to us.

Mr. Chairman, can our witness tell us how many requests for pension and/or treatment have been made to the Commission and have been refused for the reasons suggested in his brief? Could you tell us?

Mr. Giguère: I am not sure.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Have there been many?

[Interprétation]

tractées pendant notre captivité. Je ne suis pas médecin, et je ne sais pas exactement quelles maladies peuvent découler directement de notre emprisonnement.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Alors cette indifférence est une indication de la gravité de vos souffrances?

M. Giguère: Vous voulez dire que les gens en ont assez, qu'ils sont dégoûtés? Je les ai vus au combat à Dieppe. Même les Allemands étaient surpris de les voir débarquer. Mon unité a débarqué à 7 h. 30 du matin par un soleil brillant. Les balles pleuvaient dans l'eau. Elles ont atteint un grand nombre de mes compagnons. C'était incroyable de voir ces gens. Même les Allemands étaient surpris. Les Allemands étaient sur le sommet d'un promontoir à deux milles de distance.

Vous ignorez peut-être, sauf monsieur Lambert, que nous avons subi de mauvais traitements. Nous avons été liés avec des câbles un mois durant et nous avons été enchaînés pendant 13 mois. N'était-ce pas là un mauvais traitement. Nous avions les mains liées 12 heures par jour. Il fallait aller à la toilette les mains liées. Essayez d'y aller, messieurs les mains liées. Nous étions enchaînés de 7 heures du matin à 8 heures du soir. On nous enchaînait les mains à la file, à environ un pied et demi les uns des autres. Cela dura 13 mois. Pourquoi nous liaient-ils? Ils ne nous liaient pas parce que nous étions canadiens.

Le président: Monsieur William Knowles.

M. Knowles (Norfold-Haldimand): Merci, monsieur le président. Réponse a été donnée à certaines des questions que j'allais poser. Il y a un certain nombre de participants à la guerre de Dieppe qui vivent encore, et je pense qu'on pourrait nous communiquer les renseignements qui nous seraient utiles. Je me demande, monsieur le président, si le témoin pourrait nous dire combien de demandes de pensions ou de traitements ont été présentées à la Commission et combien ont été refusées à cause des raisons mentionnées dans son mémoire? Est-ce qu'il y en a eu plusieurs, un grand nombre?

M. Giguère: Je ne suis pas certain.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Est-ce qu'il y en a eu plusieurs?

[Text]

Mr. Giguère: In Montreal, my area, I would say about 60 to 70 per cent of the chaps who are not receiving pensions have applied.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): And have been turned down.

Mr. Giguère: Were turned down because they could not relate...

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Because they could not prove...

• 1030

Mr. Giguère: They could not relate their disease to their internment as prisoners of war. That is why.

I now come back to the White Paper and the benefit of the doubt clause.

The benefit of the doubt is all right but, as Mr. Knowles was saying, that is general. I know you are aware that the Canadian Pension Commission made a survey of the chaps who are receiving pensions for certain wounds, but unless the chap has been to a hospital lately and has had a complete medical checkup, they do not have a complete medical history on file. There are some chaps who are receiving pensions for shrapnel wounds or other different kinds of wounds where the disability is permanent, and they just go for a review once every year or every four years. They are just seen by a pension doctor for that wound and that is it. They have not done a complete checkup on him unless he has been to a DVA hospital lately. When he goes to the hospital he gets a complete checkup, blood test and all, and that is what we want.

We want a complete checkup. That is the only way for the government to be sure that we have been taken care of. They are now going on certain statistical information but I think there should be a complete checkup on the same basis that the Hong Kong prisoners of war had two or three years ago.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Would it be helpful if he were to cite a specific case that he is familiar with that has appeared before the Pension Board and has been refused?

Mr. Giguère: I have one here.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): If it would not take too long, Mr. Chairman. We might understand the problem better, I do not know.

[Interpretation]

M. Giguère: Dans ma région, celle de Montréal, de 60 à 70 des personnes qui ne reçoivent pas une pension ont fait une demande.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): On a refusé de leur accorder une pension.

M. Giguère: Oui.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Parce qu'ils ne pouvaient présenter des preuves.

M. Giguère: Ils ne pouvaient pas démontrer que leur maladie était une conséquence de leur captivité.

Je reviens maintenant au Livre blanc et à la clause dite «Bénéfice du doute».

Il faut en tenir compte comme M. Knowles l'a dit, je sais que la Commission canadienne des pensions a fait une enquête, parmi les membres qui reçoivent une pension. Pour certaines blessures reçues, on n'a pas de dossier médical complet à moins que le combattant ait été à l'hôpital et qu'il ait passé un examen médical complet. Il y en a certains d'entre-eux qui reçoivent une pension pour des blessures de shrapnel ou pour des blessures diverses à cause desquelles ils sont désormais invalide d'une façon permanente. Ils passent un examen tous les ans, ou tous les quatre ans. Ils sont suivi par un médecin de la Commission des pensions, mais on ne leur fait pas d'examen complet, à moins que l'ancien combattant ait été hospitalisé dernièrement dans un hôpital d'anciens-combattants. Lorsqu'il va à l'hôpital, il subit un examen médical complet, test, sanguins, etc...

C'est ce que nous voulons, un examen médical complet. C'est la seule façon pour le gouvernement de savoir qu'on prend soin de nous. Je n'ai pas toutes les statistiques mais en tout cas c'est la seule façon, je pense, pour le gouvernement de savoir où nous nous situons dans ce domaine, tout comme on l'a fait pour les prisonniers de Hong Kong il y a deux ans.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Est-ce qu'il serait utile de préciser des cas particuliers, pourriez-vous nous donner des exemples de personnes qui se sont présentées à la Commission canadienne des pensions et qui ont essuyé un refus?

M. Giguère: Monsieur le président, j'en ai un ici que je pourrais vous mentionner,

M. Knowles (Norfold-Haldimand): Si ce n'est pas trop long, on pourra peut-être mieux comprendre les problèmes.

[Texte]

Mr. Giguère: There is the case of a chap from London, Ontario and the commission ruled that he had functional dyspepsia of organic origin—this is tomach trouble—and they said that it was not attributable to the period of active force service. At the time of his discharge in 1946 he was reported fit and he only complained of poor appetite, but naturally in 1945 or 1946 we in particular were fed up and wanted to go home, we wanted to forget about everything, especially about being a P.O.W.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Tell them anything in order to get out.

Mr. Giguère: He did not want to go back to hospital, so he just did not mention his illness. He struck it out, if you want to put it that way. However, he is now getting into his forties and fifties, and troubles are starting.

Another thing is dentition. We did a survey in Montreal about four years ago and, if I remember correctly, 80 per cent of our boys had false teeth.

• 1035

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I was also going to ask if your organization appeared before the Woods Commission to give your viewpoint?

Mr. Giguère: I do not think so, no. We were not given the...

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I was wondering if you had made any specific request of them. That would perhaps account for the fact that we do not see a specific reference to your people in the White Paper.

Mr. Giguère: Unless my other comrade, Mr. Leo Lesynski, did something, but I am not aware of it. It is only for the past year and a half or two years that we have been a national organization.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Oh yes.

Mr. Giguère: We had a lot of trouble in bringing the boys together. It is a real fight to get them to stick together and get them to have confidence in an association.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Chairman, I think this underlines the importance of this brief which is being presented to us this morning. There is no reference anywhere else for us to go by and in our recommendations we must use this and try to incorporate something in our report that will be of specific benefit to these people.

[Interprétation]

M. Giguère: Voilà, j'ai ici le cas d'un homme, de London, Ontario. La Commission a déclaré qu'il souffrait de dyspepsie fonctionnelle d'origine organique, c'est à dire de maux d'estomac, qui n'était pas selon eux attribuables au service de guerre. En 1946, lors de son licenciement, on a déclaré que cette personne était en bonne santé en quelque sorte, se plaignait d'avoir peu d'appétit. Évidemment en 1945-1946 nous voulions tous retourner chez-nous nous voulions tout oublier de la guerre et nous voulions surtout oublier que nous avions été prisonniers de guerre.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Ils disaient n'importe quoi pour être licenciés.

M. Giguère: Il ne voulait pas aller à l'hôpital alors il ne mentionna même pas son mal. Mais maintenant il constate qu'il a 40 ou 50 ans et sa maladie remonte à la surface. Un autre problème concerne la définition. Nous avons fait une étude à Montréal, il y a à peu près 4 ans et il y avait environ 80 p. 100 de nos membres qui portaient de fausses dents.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Est-ce que votre organisation s'est présentée devant le Comité Woods?

M. Giguère: Non, je ne pense pas. On ne nous a pas averti.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Je me demandais si vous aviez fait des requêtes spéciales auprès du Comité Woods. C'est peut-être pourquoi on ne parle pas de vous dans le Livre blanc?

M. Giguère: A moins que mon camarade Léo Lesynski ait fait quelque chose, mais je ne suis pas au courant. Notre Association possède un statut national seulement depuis deux ans.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Oh, je comprends.

M. Giguère: Maintenant c'est une véritable lutte que nous engageons pour nous unir et pour obtenir ce que nous voulons, pour avoir confiance dans notre Association.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Ceci souligne l'importance du mémoire que vous présentez aujourd'hui. Je pense qu'on ne parle pas de vos membres dans aucune recommandation et je pense qu'il nous faudra utiliser votre mémoire pour ajouter quelque chose à nos recommandations qui seront appropriées quand nous rédigerons notre propre rapport.

[Text]

As a point of interest, and then I will not take any further time, you mentioned forced labour. A lot of publicity, of course, has been given to the forced labour camps that the Japanese conducted. We are all familiar with those, but I am not too familiar with the fact that the Germans also subjected our P.O.Ws to forced labour.

Mr. Giguère: You see, in a German camp anybody who was below the rank of sergeant was forced to work on a working party. After we had been tied up for a month and chained for 13 months—that was in Oberschlesien—they transferred us to northern Pomerania, and I think it was in 1943 that the first exchange of German prisoners with the British and Canadian prisoners took place, and when the German boys came back home they found out that they had been well treated in Canada, very well treated, compared to us.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Yes, I guess so.

Mr. Giguère: And sent us to Pomerania in northern Germany and they separated us into groups of from 30 to 40 and we went to work on the farms—and there we worked!

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Without proper food.

Mr. Giguère: We had a bit more food because we could get vegetables, and things like that, but we worked during the harvest season. Most of us were city boys and we were not accustomed to farms, and there was no machinery on the farms there. You used your two hands and your two feet, and we used to work from sunrise to sunset.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I have a number of names on my list: Mr. Marshall, Mr. Lambert, Mr. Weatherhead, Mr. Bigg and Mr. Peters.

Mr. Marshall: I just have one question. Mr. Giguère, since the conditions that have resulted from your treatment as Dieppe prisoners of war are similar to that of the Hong Kong veterans, and the White Paper suggests that separate legislation will be enacted to provide for the Hong Kong veterans, do you believe that the same legislation should be enacted for the Dieppe war veterans?

[Interpretation]

Je ne prendrai pas beaucoup plus de temps mais vous avez parlé des camps de travail, de travail forcé. Nous savons tous que les Japonais en ont eus, mais ce que je ne savais pas c'est que les Allemands eux aussi ont fait travailler de force nos prisonniers de guerre.

M. Giguère: Dans les camps allemands, tous les soldats qui n'avaient pas au moins rang de sergent, devaient travailler. Après avoir été emprisonnés durant un mois et enchaînés pendant 13 mois en Haute Silésie, les Allemands nous ont transférés en Poméranie du nord. Je pense qu'en 1943 a eu lieu le premier échange de prisonniers entre les Allemands, les Britanniques et les Canadiens. Quand les Allemands sont revenus chez eux, ils ont constaté qu'ils avaient été bien traités au Canada, très bien traités même en comparaison de nous.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Je pense bien.

M. Giguère: Et naturellement on nous a envoyés dans une région du Nord de l'Allemagne, en Poméranie et on nous a divisés en divers groupes de 30 à 40 personnes et nous sommes allés travailler sur des fermes, et là nous avons vraiment travaillé dur.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Sans être suffisamment nourris.

M. Giguère: Nous pouvions avoir des légumes mais nous avons travaillé très fort. Nous avons fait des travaux de ferme durant les récoltes, nous n'étions pas habitués à cela. La plupart d'entre nous étions des gens de la ville et nous avons fait des travaux agricoles sans machinerie et nous avons travaillé avec nos mains et avec nos pieds, évidemment c'étaient les seuls instruments dont nous disposions et nous travaillions de l'aurore jusqu'au crépuscule.

M. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Merci monsieur le président.

Le président: J'ai sur ma liste les noms de M. Marshall, M. Lambert, M. Weatherhead, M. Bigg et M. Peters également.

M. Marshall: J'ai juste une question pour M. Giguère. Puisque les conditions qui ont résulté de votre situation de prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe sont semblables à celles des prisonniers de Hong-Kong, et que le Livre blanc prétend qu'il faut présenter une loi spéciale pour tenir compte du cas des prisonniers de Hong-Kong, pensez-vous qu'une loi similaire devrait être adoptée en ce qui concerne les prisonniers de Dieppe?

[Texte]

Mr. Giguère: Something similar to it although, as I said, we cannot compare ourselves to the Hong Kong veterans. We do not want to be compared to the Hong Kong veterans. The Hong Kong veterans are separate. We were in a different part of the world.

• 1040

Another thing is that when the Hong Kong prisoners of war were captured some of them had only been in the Army for four months. We went to war. When we went to Dieppe we were fully trained soldiers, we were fully sacked, we were strong, and some of us were able to survive. I am not taking anything away from them. We do not want to be compared with them because this is different—I know they suffered a lot.

Although we were full of life maybe we would have been in the same position as they were. However, we feel that we should be given special treatment by the government. If it is the same as them, okay, but I think we are special because we suffered maltreatment. This has been established by the War Claims Commission. It has been proven that we were chained, tied, made to work on farms, and forced to march. Don't forget that march. When the Russians broke the line in January most of our boys were put on the road and marched about an average of 15 to 20 miles a day. I marched 400 miles up to Hanover. We went across country and so forth and averaged from five to six days a week. We used to march from 7 o'clock in the morning to 6 o'clock at night. We used to sleep in barns and such places.

I do not know if you are aware, gentlemen, what we used to eat in a German camp. Our menu in the morning consisted of mint tea. Try it sometime, it is pretty good, we used to shave with it.

Then at noon we had soup. Some soup was called by the boys bed-board soup. It was soup made of cabbage or turnips and we never saw any meat in it. We had a very big table for 150 men. We used to get a restaurant size bowl of soup and that was our noon meal. Late in the afternoon we used to get some potatoes, not Canadian potatoes but the size of an old 50 cent piece. We averaged about four per man. Then we had bread—oh, yes, we had bread—German bread, one-seventh of loaf per day—about a slice and a half of a normal loaf of bread.

[Interprétation]

M. Giguère: Oui, je pense à une loi semblable même si comme je l'ai dit nous ne pouvons pas comparer notre situation à celle de Hong-Kong. Nous ne voulons pas être comparé aux gens de Hong-Kong parce que c'est un cas spécial, un cas séparé et il y a diverses façons de traiter cette question et ces gens-là viennent d'une autre partie du Canada également.

Ils ont aussi été sur un théâtre de guerre dans une autre région du monde.

Les prisonniers de Hong-Kong, quand ils ont été capturés, étaient dans l'armée depuis 4 mois à peu près, pour un certain nombre en tout cas. Dans notre cas, nous, nous sommes allés à la guerre et quand nous avons fait partie du raid de Dieppe, nous étions formés, nous étions entraînés depuis longtemps à la guerre, nous étions forts, nous étions capables de survivre à certaines difficultés de guerre. Je ne veux pas qu'on nous compare aux anciens combattants de Hong Kong parce que nous avons un cas différent. Je sais qu'ils ont beaucoup souffert.

Même si nous étions pleins de vie nous aurions pu être dans la même position qu'eux. Mais en tous les cas, nous estimons pour notre part qu'on doit nous donner un traitement spécial. Si le gouvernement veut nous donner le même traitement, très bien, mais en tous les cas, nous avons souffert de mauvais traitements et ceci a été prouvé; nous avons été enchaînés, nous avons été ligotés, on nous a obligés à travailler sur des fermes et à marcher. N'oubliez pas que nous avons marché. Quand les Russes ont enfoncé la ligne du front en janvier, la plupart de nos militaires ont été forcés de marcher environ de 15 à 20 milles par jour et j'ai marché de Maurienne à Hanovre, une distance de 400 milles. Nous marchions 5 ou 6 jours par semaine de 7 heures du matin jusqu'à 6 heures du soir. Nous couchions dans des fermes, dans des granges. Je ne sais pas si vous savez ce que nous mangions dans les camps allemands. Notre déjeuner consistait d'un thé à la menthe.

Le midi, nous avions une soupe faite de choux, de navets, il n'y avait jamais de viande. Nous avions une table qui servait à 150 hommes. Ensuite, vers la fin de l'après-midi, nous mangions des pommes de terre. C'était des petites pommes de terre grosses comme un .50¢; nous en avions peut-être quatre par homme et nous avions du pain bien sûr, du pain allemand. 1/7 de pain, c'est-à-dire une tranche et demie de pain par jour. Évidemment, quand on suit un régime pareil, eh bien, ça prend un bon nombre de mois avant de s'y habituer parce que je pense que la pire

Naturally, if you are put on such a diet it takes quite a few months to get accustomed to it.

I can tell you it affects your mind, because I think hunger is one of the worst things. You would be surprised what a chap who is hungry can do. I hate to say this but a man can sell his own mother when he is hungry—and we were hungry because we were Canadian army soldiers and we were used to eating good food. We were not accustomed to that limited diet. This affected the morale of some of our boys. Putting all those things together, the only thing left for those chaps today is the war veterans' allowance and that is all. I know there is an austerity program going on. I am not against immigrants because Canada needs them and it is a good thing for Canada. I have nothing against the allied soldier because they fought with us and so on. However, any allied veteran is entitled to the war veteran's alowance. For an Italian chap to be eligible for such an allowance he had to serve in the First World War and he had to be in Canada for 10 years.

Take the case of a young Italian coming in after the war. After he is established here it is all right with the immigration department for him to bring out his father. That is a good thing. When his father comes he is 74 years of age and is still living ten years later. This man served in the First World War, he applied for the allowance, then he turned around after a year and went back to his own country, died there and we paid. If the government is rich enough to pay to that extent it should look after their own. We do not want to take anything away from them, but if it is rich enough to pay for such things it should at least take care of its own veterans. That is how we feel.

Mr. Marshall: Those are all the questions I had. I am just surprised that the Woods Commission did not interview the Dieppe prisoners of war.

The Chairman: Apparently there is no national association.

Mr. Giguère: As I said, we had difficulties. It was only a year and a half ago that we chose c'est la faim. Je pense que quand un homme a faim, il peut vendre sa mère et nous étions vraiment affamés, nous étions faméliques, nous étions des soldats canadiens et nous mangions habituellement bien dans l'armée, nous avions de la bonne nourriture à manger et nous n'étions pas habitués à ce régime extrêmement sévère.

Ceci évidemment, affectait notre moral. Si vous groupez tous ces facteurs, alors, vous pouvez dire que tout ce qui reste à ces hommes à l'heure actuelle, c'est l'allocation de guerre mais je ne sais pas si vous êtes au courant de cette allocation. Je sais qu'il y a un programme d'austérité à l'heure actuelle, je ne suis pas évidemment contre les émigrants, le Canada a besoin d'émigration, c'est une bonne chose pour le Canada. Je n'ai rien contre les soldats alliés non plus, ils ont combattu avec nous mais si vous considérez l'allocation de guerre des anciens combattants, eh bien tout ancien combattant des pays alliés a droit à cette allocation, vous le savez bien sûr.

Prenons le cas par exemple d'un Italien qui est admissible, il doit avoir servi pendant la Première guerre et il doit être au Canada pendant 10 ans et celui qui est venu après la guerre, un italien par exemple, jeune et qui après un certain temps, fait venir son père, il s'établit ici, c'est très bien, il passe par l'émigration et quand il vient ici, il a 74 ans et il vit encore 10 ans plus tard. Cet homme a servi pendant la Première guerre, il a demandé l'allocation et puis après un an, il retourne dans son pays, meurt là-bas et nous avons payé.

Eh bien, si le gouvernement est assez riche pour payer des allocations semblables, je pense qu'il doit s'occuper des Canadiens. Nous ne voulons rien enlever aux émigrants mais s'il est assez riche pour payer cela, eh bien, je pense qu'il doit tenir compte de ses propres anciens combattants. Voilà ce que nous pensons.

M. Marshall: Eh bien, je suis surpris de constater que la Commission Woods n'a pas interviewé les prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe.

Le président: Apparemment, il n'y a pas d'association nationale.

M. Giguère: Nous avons eu des difficultés. C'est seulement depuis un an et demi que managed to get the boys together. They are just plain fed up.

[Texte]

Mr. Marshall: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The next questioner, in addition to being a former Dieppe prisoner, is a former minister of veterans affairs.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I am thankful for the opportunity of being able to be here. Perhaps my approach to this is a little subjective.

I would have hoped that Mr. Giguère would have included in his references last year's short debate on a resolution by Mr. McIntosh on this particular subject of treatment of prisoners of war. I had a good deal to do with that resolution and did speak on it.

I do not have too many questions to ask Mr. Giguère except perhaps to exchange, shall we say, levels of treatment at the hands of our hosts at the time and perhaps on medical examination after release. I would say though that for a long time, recognizing priorities; those of us who did speak on behalf of prisoners of war felt that the first priority were the Hong Kong veterans. As their case was desperate efforts were concentrated on them, and with some degree of success. On the other prisoners of war I have spoken many times and, privately and publicly, tried to establish a principle that the Department of Veterans Affairs should—you cannot dragoon them in—find as many ex-servicemen as possible who were prisoners of war. May I say here that I am not concentrating on the Dieppe prisoners. However, this brief put forward by the association today affords the opportunity of discussing the whole problem of treatment of prisoners of war.

Actually, more air force personnel were prisoners of war. There is in Canada no national association of war prisoners as there is in New Zealand. As a matter of fact in the New Zealand—I have been out with their association members—their association, next to the Legion, is the most powerful group of veterans in that country. Let me assure you that they have made their organization felt.

I have advocated all along that every veteran who has not had a full medical examination in recent years and is recorded with the Department of Veterans Affairs, or is a major pensioner, should be brought in and given a medical examination. There are any number of reasons, which we do not have to canvass here, for this being done. From a medical point of view it provides an excellent study of a body of men who went through generally nous avons réussi à nous grouper. Tout le monde en a assez.

M. Marshall: Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je pense que nous pouvons entendre un ancien prisonnier de Dieppe, l'ancien ministre des affaires de la Défense nationale. Je vous remets à M. Lambert.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je vous remercie de m'avoir permis d'être ici. Je vais peut-être être un peu subjectif dans ce domaine-là.

J'aurais espéré que M. Giguère inclue une référence sur le débat de M. McIntosh l'année dernière au sujet du traitement des prisonniers de guerre. J'ai étudié moi-même cette résolution et je l'ai commentée. Je dirais que je n'ai pas trop de questions à poser à M. Giguère sauf peut-être pour échanger ce que nous pourrions appeler des niveaux de traitements en ce qui concerne les examens médicaux après avoir quitté l'armée. Je pense que ceux qui ont parlé au nom des prisonniers de guerre, ont reconnu que la première priorité, c'était Hong Kong. Leur cas était désespéré et on a polarisé nos efforts sur les prisonniers de Hong Kong et on a finalement obtenu un certain succès. Pour le reste des autres prisonniers de guerre, j'ai parlé plusieurs fois et j'ai essayé, je l'ai fait privément et en public et j'ai cherché à établir un principe à savoir que le ministère des Anciens combattants devrait essayer de chercher tous les anciens militaires et tous les anciens prisonniers de guerre. Je ne m'attache pas uniquement aux prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe mais je pense que ce mémoire de l'Association ici nous permet de discuter de toute la question du traitement des prisonniers de guerre.

Il y a par exemple plus d'aviateurs qui ont été prisonniers de guerre et au Canada, il n'y a pas d'Association nationale de prisonniers de guerre comme il y en a en Nouvelle-Zélande. Je suis allé là et j'ai été en contact avec leur association et après la légion, c'est le groupe le plus puissant d'anciens combattants dans ce pays-là. Et je puis vous assurer qu'ils ont créé une association puissante qui a su exercer une influence considérable.

En tous les cas, le point important c'est que tout ancien combattant qui n'a pas eu un examen médical complet ces dernières années et qui est inscrit au ministère des Anciens combattants et qui est un pensionné important devrait être convoqué à subir cet examen médical. Il y a de bonnes raisons à cela. Du point de vue médical, ceci fournit une excellente étude d'un groupe d'hommes qui ont subi les mêmes expériences, si on peut dire.

the same physical conditions. Some were worse than others. I fully agree with what Mr. Giguère said, it is a down right shame that you have to wait for a prisoner of war to come more or less on his hands and knees to the department and say he is ill. Once he is there, sure, he gets good treatment. He is well received and is examined. Unfortunately though, our rules say that unless you can attribute your disability or your illness to war service you will not be entitled to a pension. But that is not good enough.

Those people should be brought in when they are apparently healthy because some conditions perhaps could be discovered in its infancy. Some of my colleagues may attribute to me a certain advancing senility, according to this brief, because I have been subject to these conditions.

But I want to re-emphasize that as much as I can, this psychosomatic condition of the prisoner of war. I could be here all day and recite to you examples of fellow POW's. There is my own case where after the war it used to take 15 or 20 minutes just to make up your mind to catch a train. It took some time. I know that at the time of medical examinations—oh, we were put into hospital at Farnborough and given as good treatment as could be given. It was for our own good. We did not particularly care for it at the time, because fellows had wives and girl friends and fiancees, friends they wanted to see, yet they were being held up four or five days in hospital.

You were given a thorough exterior medical examination and for those who were able to report certain symptoms and have them recorded on documents, this has been to their good. In my own case this was so in connection with a foot disability. But in the case of many men today—and I fully agree with Mr. Giguère—in Edmonton and Calgary where most of the people from my unit are concentrated, you can see this. Some of them are aging fast. Not as bad as Hong Kong, not at all, but you know when you consider food—Mr. Giguère has spoken about this—we had supplies of millet where you had to sort out the mouse droppings from the millet. It had the smell of it; you had lentils that had gone mouldy; you had smoked fish, and I do not know how any human being was ever expected to eat it.

In wintertime there were the cases of constant chilblains; all this sort of thing wears you down. Some men have been able to resist this much better, but so many others have not. The pressing case now is to establish the principle that all prisoners of war, whether

[Interpretation]

Mais je suis tout à fait d'accord avec ce que dit M. Giguère c'est-à-dire que c'est tout à fait honteux qu'il faille attendre qu'un prisonnier de guerre se présente au ministère pour dire qu'il était malade. C'est humiliant en quelque sorte. Il est bien reçu bien sûr, il est examiné mais à moins d'attribuer l'invalidité ou la maladie aux services de guerre, on n'a pas droit à la pension. Ce n'est pas suffisant.

Ces gens devraient être invités au ministère pendant qu'ils sont en bonne santé et de cette façon, on pourrait découvrir les troubles à leur début. D'après ce mémoire, certains de mes collègues prétendront que je souffre de sénélité—j'ai été soumis à ces conditions.

Je veux insister autant que je puis sur le fait que c'est l'état psychosomatique du prisonnier de guerre. Je pourrais passer la journée à vous citer des exemples de compagnons d'armes qui ont été prisonniers de guerre. Je puis même me citer en exemple, car après la guerre, il me fallait 15 à 20 minutes pour me décider à prendre un train. Il fallait y mettre le temps. Je sais que lors des examens médicaux, oh! on nous a hospitalisés à Farnborough où nous avons reçu le meilleur traitement possible. C'était pour notre bien. Nous n'y tenions pas tellement à ce moment-là, parce que les copains voulaient revoir leur femme, leur amie, leur fiancée ou leurs amis et ils étaient retenus à l'hôpital durant quatre ou cinq jours.

On nous soumettait à un examen complet et ceux qui ont pu faire part de certains symptômes, et en faire prendre note sur des documents, cela a tourné à leur avantage. En ce qui me concerne, il en a été ainsi au sujet d'une invalidité de pied. Mais pour ce qui est de nombre de personnes aujourd'hui—et je partage entièrement l'avis de M. Giguère—à Edmonton et à Calgary où se trouvent la plupart des gens de mon unité, on peut constater cela. Certains d'entre eux vieillissent rapidement. Rien de comparable à Hong Kong, non pas, mais quand on parle nutrition—M. Giguère a soulevé ce point—nous avons reçu des rations de millet dont il fallait retirer les crottes de souris. Le millet en avait l'odeur; les pois étaient moisis; quant au poisson fumé, j'ignore comment on a pu s'attendre à ce qu'un être humain en mange.

En hiver, c'était des engelures interminables; toutes ces choses vous minent. Certains résistent mieux, mais tant d'autres n'ont pas su. Ce qui est urgent pour le moment, c'est d'établir le principe que tous les prisonniers de guerre, qu'ils aient été en Italie—et laissezthey were in the Italian—let me tell you many men who were in the Italian camps suffered equally; they did not have the cold, but they suffered too—all of these men should be examined, and then once you have seen the results you establish questions of benefit of the doubt.

I know men who were in hospital or in our camp—and our camp was possibly the best one as far as Dieppe prisoners of war were concerned—who underwent treatment and there was no record kept of it. There were certain conditions. I will cite you an example.

My own Squadron Leader, who was a World War I veteran, who was repatriated in 1943 because of severe ulcers, subsequently about eight or nine years ago developed tuberculosis. He had to go in for a period of convalescence. Well, there is entitlement under the Act for loss of earnings. The initial decision was that this was not attributable to war service, but fortunately on his documents from World War I and his chest X-ray when he entered the service in World War II, there was record of an old bronchial scar.

We know that we were exposed to TB germs. We had many cases of active TB develop in our camp, and this man was exposed to it. I was a complete negative case when I went into the armed services, but when I came out of the prisoner-of-war camp in early 1946, the Department called us all in and gave us a TB test. Well, I just reacted instantaneously almost. We are all in the same position, having been exposed to it.

Fortunately as a result of attestations I was able to get from other men in our camp, this man was given the entitlement. But that is a hit-or-miss system, you see. Therefore, there is no documentation. I know there are two of my men, older chaps, who have died. They should be alive today, but they died prematurely, because of the privations they underwent. They subsisted on sugar beets that last winter. When you get a diet that is supposedly 1,200 calories—now I was healthy, I weighed 180 when I went in. I came out of there at 148. Mind you I have made good progress since. It took me two and a half years to regain my service weight. This is the case with many of them. There was this debility, and you do not do that to the human body without some damage.

Now, all I say is that I underline—I participated particularly with the Toronto moi vous dire que ceux qui étaient dans les camps italiens ont souffert aussi; ils n'avaient pas à lutter contre le froid, mais ils ont souffert aussi—tous ces hommes devraient être examinés, et, par la suite, quand vous aurez vu les résultats, vous établirez les questions de bénéfice du doute.

Je connais des gens qui étaient dans un hôpital ou dans notre camp—et notre camp était peut-être le meilleur en ce qui concerne les prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, qui ont reçu des traitements dont aucun dossier ne fait mention. Certaines conditions existaient. Je vous en donne un exemple. Mon chef d'escadron, ancien combattant de la première guerre mondiale qui a dû revenir en 1943 parce qu'il avait des ulcères graves, s'est vu atteint de tuberculose il y a huit ou neuf ans. Il a été convalescent pendant un certain temps. La loi prévoit une compensation pour la perte de salaire. Selon la première décision, il ne s'agissait pas là d'une séquelle de la guerre, mais heureusement, son état de service durant la première guerre mondiale ainsi que la radiographie prise à son entrée en service lors de la deuxième, indiquaient clairement la présence de cicatrices bronchiques.

Nous savions que nous avons été exposés au tacille de la tuberculose. Il y a eu plusieurs cas actifs dans notre camp et cet homme y a été exposé. Quand je suis entré dans les forces armées, j'étais sur ce point absolument négatif, mais quand je suis sorti du camp de prisonniers tôt en 1946, le ministère nous a fait subir un test à la tuberculine. J'ai présenté une réaction presqu'aussitôt. Nous sommes tous dans le même cas, vu que nous y avons été exposés.

Heureusement, fort des déclarations que j'ai pu obtenir d'autres personnes de notre camp, cet homme a eu droit à la pension. Mais comme vous le voyez, c'est par pur hasard. Il n'y a donc pas de dossiers. Je connais deux de mes hommes, des personnes plus âgées, qui sont morts. Ils devraient être vivants aujourd'hui, mais ils sont morts prématurément à la suite de privations. Au cours du dernier hiver, ils ont survécu en mangeant des betteraves à sucre, pendant l'hiver. Quand vous êtes soumis à une diète présumément de 1200 calories notez que j'étais en santé: je pesais 180 livres à mon entrée au camp. Quand j'en suis sorti, je pesais 148 livres. Je me suis remplumé depuis. Il m'a fallu deux ans et demi pour reprendre le poids que j'avais à mon entrée en service. Et il en est ainsi de nombre d'entre eux. Il y avait cette débilité, qu'on ne peut sans graves conséquences infliger à l'organisme.

Donc, je ne fais qu'insister—j'ai collaboré, plus particulièrement avec la succursale de branch putting forward this view—that these men should be re-examined, all prisoners of war, of whom there is no immediate record. It is not going to cost that much. But it will also give those veterans, restore to them, those people who become so frustrated, the opportunity to say: "At least they care." The fellow who gets the clean bill of health will feel a heck of a lot better. That is all I have to say.

The Chairman: I wonder if this would be a good time to have coffee. Mr. Guay, do you have a comment?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My comment is short. Mr. Lambert has a lot of experience and there are a few things that intrigue me. No one knows better than he does about Dieppe. I was wondering if he brought this to the attention of his government when they were in power? I was not here at the time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, I did. But I will tell you that my prime concern was Hong Kong. Remember this, too, that it has become more and more apparent. I will tell you this, Mr. Guay, there was a question in the early years of 1950 to 1962 of getting veterans pensions up to a decent level. There was a great deal of work done. And remember there are certain things that can be done.

The Hong Kong case took an awful lot of persuasion. Why? I will not speculate, but there were great changes brought about in the Pension Commission, too, from the years 1958 to 1962. Do not, for goodness sake, underestimate or undersell the effect of men like Alf Brooks and Gordon Churchill as ministers. This was their prime interest. And I will say this, in all fairness to the Pension Commission, that they have to work within certain fixed rules and it is ourselves, Members of Parliament, and the public, who are prepared to accept this and bear the responsibility of what limitations you are going to put on the Pension Commission, in many instances.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, the other question is a brief one.

The Chairman: I wonder if you could delay it until after our coffee break?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is all relative to this. I am as anxious to adjourn as the others, but would you know why the Woods Committee did not request this particular group to appear before them? From what has gone on this morning, it looks as if . .

[Interpretation]

Toronto, pour que soit adoptée l'idée—que ces hommes devraient être réexaminés, tous les prisonniers de guerre pour lesquels on ne possède pas de dossier. Il n'en coûtera pas si cher. Mais ces anciens combattants, qui deviennent si frustrés, se verront fournir l'occasion de dire: «Au moins, ils ne restent pas indifférents à notre égard». Celui qui sera déclaré en parfaite santé se sentira beaucoup mieux.

Le président: Ce serait peut-être le moment de prendre le café. M. Guay, je pense, a une question.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je serai bref. M. Lambert a beaucoup d'expérience et il y a quelques points qui m'intriguent. Nul ne connaît mieux que lui la question de Dieppe. Je me demandais s'il avait attiré sur cette question l'attention du gouvernement qui était alors au pouvoir. Je n'étais pas ici en ce temps-là.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Oui, je l'ai fait. Mais je me suis surtout occupé de la question de Hong Kong. Remarquez que celà devenait de plus en plus évident. Je vous dirai, monsieur Guay, qu'il s'agissait au cours des années 1950 à 1962, de relever les pensions à un niveau raisonnable. Il y a eu beaucoup de travail de fait. Et souvenez-vous qu'il existe un certain nombre de choses qui peuvent être faites.

Le cas de Hong Kong, nous a demandé beaucoup de persuasion. Pourquoi. Je n'élaborerai pas sur ce point, mais il s'est produit de grands changements dans la Commission des pensions de 1958 à 1962. De grâce, ne sous-estimez pas le travail accompli à titre de ministre par des hommes tels que Alf Brooks et Gordon Churchill. Ce fut leur centre d'intérêt. Et je dirai, en toute justice pour la Commission des pensions qu'il lui fallait travailler d'après des règlements qui lui avaient été fixés, tandis que c'est nous, les membres du Parlement, et le public, qui sommes prêts à accepter, à assumer la responsabilité des limites que vous fixez dans bien des cas à la Commission canadienne des pensions.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Monsieur le président, mon autre question sera brève.

Le président: Pouvez-vous attendre après la pause-café?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Elle se rattache au sujet. Je désire faire une pause autant que les autres, mais sauriez-vous par hasard pourquoi la commission Woods n'a pas demandé à ce groupe de se présenter devant elle. D'après ce que nous avons entendu ce matin, il semble que. . .

[Texte]

The Chairman: I believe the group was not formed until after the Woods Committee held its hearings.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I see.

The Chairman: It is a national association, and it is only one year or a year and a half old?

Mr. Giguère: As a national association, yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I add to that?

The Chairman : Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I was having to do with the Toronto group and I remember there was a dinner in Toronto in 1967 which served as the 25th anniversary, but this provided, shall we say, the amalgam to form a national association. We had no national association of prisoners of war. As I said, the primary group is fom the Air Force. But these men belong to the Legion; they belong to other organizations, and there is no pressure group organized together. It may be that this was one area into which the Woods Committee might have looked, but who were they going to ask?

Mr. Bigg: On that same point, the Woods Committee heard everyone who wanted to present a brief. Even I as an individual was allowed to say all I wanted, and it was considerable.

The Chairman: We will adjourn for 10 minutes, then.

[Interprétation]

Le président: Je crois que l'association n'a été formée qu'après les audiences de la commission Woods.

M. Guay: Je vois.

Le président: C'est une association nationale, et elle n'a qu'un an ou un an et demi?

M. Giguère: A titre d'association nationale, oui.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Puis-je ajouter un mot?

Le président: Oui.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je travaillais avec le groupe de Toronto et je me souviens d'un dîner à Toronto, en 1967, à l'occasion du 25e anniversaire, et qui a fourni l'occasion de former une association nationale. Nous n'avions pas d'association nationale de prisonniers de guerre. Comme je l'ai dit, le premier groupe était constitué d'aviateurs. Mais ces hommes sont membres de la Légion; ils font partie d'autes associations et il n'y a pas de groupe proprement organisé en vue d'exercer des pressions. C'est peut-être un domaine que la commission Woods aurait pu explorer, mais à qui aurait-elle pu s'adresser?

M. Bigg: La commission Woods a entendu sur ce point tous ceux qui ont voulu présenter un mémoire. J'ai pu moi-même, en tant qu'individu, dire tout ce que j'avais à dire, et c'était appréciable.

Le président: Bon, nous allons ajourner dix minutes pour le café.

AFTER RECESS

REPRISE DE LA SÉANCE

The Chairman: Can we resume, please? I still have a number of names of members who have not been able to ask questions. The first is Mr. Weatherhead followed by Mr. Bigg and Mr. Peters and I believe Mr. Latulippe indicated he wanted to ask a question. I do not know whether there are any others. These are on my list so far. Mr. Weatherhead.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Lambert's comments have been very helpful to all of us and particularly to me as a new member of this Committee. He covered a couple of points that I was going to ask Mr. Giguère about. I wonder Mr. Giguère whether you consider the Dieppe prisoners of war members of your association in a different light from those of Le président: Pouvons-nous continuer, messieurs? J'ai sur ma liste un certain nombre de noms de membres du Comité qui n'ont pas encore réussi à poser leurs questions. En tête vient M. Weatherhead puis M. Bigg, M. Peters et, je pense, M. Latulippe qui voulaient aussi poser des questions. Je ne sais s'il n'y en a pas d'autres; ceux-ci sont sur ma liste, en tous cas. M. Weatherhead a la parole.

M. Weatherhead: Les commentaires de M. Lambert nous ont bien éclairés et ont éclairé particulièrement les nouveaux membres de ce Comité. Il a répondu à plusieurs des questions que j'allais poser à M. Giguère. Je me demande, M. Giguère, si vous considérez les prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, membres de votre Association, comme étant dans une the other Canadian prisoners of war in the European countries of Germany and Italy?

Mr. Giguère: As I mentioned, when we were tied up we were the only ones except for maybe a certain group of the air force who were tied with us. We were the only ones who were tied up and chained. As far as how others were treated I guess we received the same treatment as other prisoners of other countries or other services like the air force.

Mr. Weatherhead: You were chained for I think you said 13 months and in the initial period also I think something worse than that happened to you? Was there a month to start with?

Mr. Giguère: Well, the forced march started after that. I started from where I was around January 20, 1945 and I marched until April 11, 1945. That was a forced march. We marched approximately 400 miles. That was from north Pomerania all the way up to Hanover.

Mr. Weatherhead: After you were captured in 1942 were you not treated worse that first month or so?

Mr. Giguère: After we were captured we were in France. We stayed about two weeks in France, then we were put in those boxcars, cattle cars—40 men and 8 horses. There was no horse with us but there would not have been any room anyway. We passed four days and three nights in those boxcars all the way to Germany. The Germans let us alone for a couple of weeks. I would say maybe three weeks because it was in October that we were tied with string at first. Inbetween that we were put in a camp and then we started our menu of—our diet. That is about what we went through. I was in Stalag 8B but some of our boys went to Stalag 9C and were immediately sent to the salt mines. They were forced to work in the salt mines. Unfortunately, there are no veterans here today who were there. There are some in my association, but they were unable to attend. They immediately started receiving harsh treatment in the salt mines.

Mr. Weatherhead: Did not all our prisoners of war over there have to do forced labour—

Mr. Giguère: Like I said—

[Interpretation]

autre situation que celle des autres prisonniers de guerre canadiens qui étaient internés dans les pays européens, en Allemagne et en Italie?

M. Giguère: Comme je l'ai expliqué, nous étions les seuls à être ligotés excepté peut-être un autre groupe de l'Aviation. Nous étions les seuls à être ligotés et enchaînés. Quant aux autres traitements, je pense que nous avons subi les mêmes traitements que les autres prisonniers, des autres pays et d'autres armes telles que l'aviation.

M. Weatherhead: Vous avez été enchaînés pendant treize mois, vous dites, et il y avait aussi une période initiale où vous avez connu des traitements encore pires. C'était pendant un mois, je suppose.

M. Giguère: De là je suis parti vers le 20 janvier 1945 et j'ai marché jusqu'au 11 avril 1945. C'était une marche forcée. Nous avons parcouru presque 400 milles. C'est-à-dire depuis la Poméranie septentrionale jusqu'à Hanovre.

M. Weatherhead: Le mois où vous avez été fait prisonnier en 1942, n'avez-vous pas été traité d'une façon pire ce premier mois ou pendant une période de temps plus longue?

M. Giguère: Après notre capture, nous avons passé à peu près deux semaines en France. Après, nous avons été mis dans des fourgons, des wagons à bestiaux—40 hommes et 8 chevaux—il n'y avait pas de chevaux parmi nous mais il n'y aurait pas eu de place pour eux de toute façon et nous sommes resté quatre jours et trois nuits dans ces wagons jusqu'à notre arrivée en Allemagne. On nous a laissé tranquilles pendant quelques semaines, environ trois semaines, car c'est en octobre qu'on nous a ligotés avec des cordes. Entre temps, nous avons été mis dans un camp et mis au régime. Voilà les conditions que nous avons connues. J'étais au Stalag 8B, certains de nos compagnons ont été au Stalag 9C, ils sont allés immédiatement travailler dans les mines de sel. Malheureusement, il n'y a aucun de nos compagnons ici qui étaient dans ces mines. Il y en a quelques-uns dans mon association, mais ils n'ont pu venir. Dans ces mines, ils ont été traités de façon très dure.

M. Weatherhead: Est-ce que tous nos anciens prisonniers de guerre qui se trouvaient là n'étaient contraints de travailler?

M. Giguère: Comme je l'ai dit...

[Texte]

Mr. Weatherhead: —or did that apply only to all the non-commissioned people?

Mr. Giguère: It applied only to the non-commissioned people. I do not know if you are aware that in the German prison camp where I was—in Stalag 8B—there were, I would say, approximately 40,000 prisoners attached to that camp, but only 10,000 lived there, the others were on working parties. They were sent on working parties to different places outside the camp where they lived. I started working only in 1943 when we went to Pomerania where we lived in, if you will excuse the expression, a pig stall. They took the pigs out and put us in. There were 30 of us in a room 20 by 25 feet where there were three shelves for sleeping—10 men per shelf. We had no running water. We got our water from a well and the toilet was also outside.

Mr. Weatherhead: In your general knowledge of other prisoners of war, were they not treated as badly as this as far as their living conditions were concerned?

Mr. Giguère: We were practically on the same basis as far as treatment was concerned, except for the chains and the tying. Most of the prisoners in Europe were treated approximately the same. When you went on a working party you were on your own and were left to the discretion of your guards. So if you hit some bad guards, well, you had had it.

Mr. Weatherhead: Yes, and you mentioned the forced marches in the latter months of the war. I understand that most of our fellows had to go through forced marches unless they were in the middle of a country to start with.

Mr. Giguère: Yes, that is right because as the Russians advanced they evacuated the camps, but we found out that it was safer at that time to stay with the Germans than to take our chances with the Russians. We did not know the Russians. I understand some men who tried it never came back and others found out that it would have been better to have stayed with the Germans.

Mr. Weatherhead: Would you have any idea, Mr. Giguère, how many Canadian prisoners of war there were in Germany and Italy, in addition to the Dieppe veterans?

Mr. Giguère: Oh, I could not say. Mr. Lambert mentioned that there were a lot of Air Force boys including some Canadians although not many, who were captured, some of whom were captured in Italy and Sicily—I do not know about Sicily—I should say in Italy. There were others later, after the

[Interprétation]

M. Weatherhead: Ou cela s'appliquait-il seulement à ceux qui n'étaient pas officiers.

M. Giguère: Cela s'appliquait seulement à ceux qui n'étaient pas officiers. J'ignore si vous le savez dans le camp allemand où j'étais le Stalag 8B il y avait à peu près 40,000 prisonniers qui y étaient internés mais seulement, 10,000 vivaient dans le camp, les autres étaient répartis dans des groupes de travail et affectés à différents endroits en dehors du camp, où ils vivaient. Nous sommes allés en Poméranie, j'ai commencé à travailler en 1943, nous étions logés excusez l'expression dans une porcherie. Ils avaient fait sortir les porcs pour nous mettre à leur place. Nous étions 30 dans une baraque de 20 x 25 pieds; il y avait trois étagères pour dormir, 10 hommes par étagère. C'est là que nous dormions, l'eau était à l'extérieur et il fallait puiser l'eau d'un puits, les toilettes étaient aussi à l'extérieur.

M. Weatherhead: Est-ce que les conditions de vie, des autres prionniers de guerre, étaient semblables?

M. Giguère: Oui, nous subissions le même traitement, sauf les chaînes et les menottes, pour certains, la plupart des prisonniers en Europe ont subi le même traitement. Lorsqu'on faisait partie d'un groupe de travail on était soumis à la discrétion des gardiens si on avait la malchance d'avoir de mauvais gardiens alors c'était tant pis.

M. Weatherhead: Oui, vous nous avez dit que la plupart de vos compagnons ont dû faire des marches forcées vers la fin de la guerre sauf ceux qui se trouvaient au centre du pays.

M. Giguère: Oui, parce que les Russes avançaient ils évacuaient les camps. Nous avons pensé qu'il valait mieux rester avec les Allemands, plutôt que d'avoir affaire aux Russes, les Russes nous ne les connaissions pas. Je crois que certains qui ont essayé avec eux ne sont jamais revenus, les autres ont découvert après coup qu'il aurait mieux valu rester avec les Allemands.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur Giguère, savez-vous le nombre de prisonniers de guerre canadiens qui ont été en Allemagne et en Italie en plus de ceux de Dieppe.

M. Giguère: Je ne pourrais le dire, Monsieur Lambert a mentionné qu'il y en avait beaucoup de l'aviation y compris certains Canadiens assez peu nombreux qui avaient été capturés en Italie et en Sicile. Pour la Sicile je l'ignore, mais en Italie et après l'ouverture du deuxième front, les premiers prisecond front, although the first Canadian prisoners—there were some before us, naturally—were the Air Force chaps. I have no statistics, but I would presume there would have been at least 5,000 to 6,000 Canadian prisoners of war including the Air Force.

• 1125

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if Mr. Lambert would have any more information on that particular subject.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, Mr. Chairman, except rule of thumb, but my view is that the Dieppe group, of course, provided the bulk of the army prisoners of war. There might have been no more than about 200 out of the whole Italian campaign and as far as the Air Force was concerned, I would judge that they would have been about 2 to 1. As Mr. Giguère said, I think the figure for Canadian prisoners of war was somewhere around 5,000, give or take a few hundred.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, I was rather surprised to learn that there was no national prisoner of war association in Canada. I would have thought, having regard to the special circumstances they all went through, particularly the European ones, that there well might have been one. This may be one reason why there have not been as many advances made in this particular field in respect of prisoners of war as there have been in some other types of veterans' organizations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I can give you the answer, Mr. Weatherhead. Most of the fellows want to forget it.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Giguère and Mr. Lambert both laid heavy emphasis on their desire to have the right for re-examination—medical examination—for prisoners of war. I gather now that unless they have some compensatable disability they do not have this right at the present time?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, a veteran can go, but it is a question of will the man go on his own. This, as Mr. Bigg has said, is perhaps almost a begging approach if he goes along and says: "I would like to be examined." The Canadian Pension Commission will examine a man if he goes and explains the circumstances. What I feel should be done here is that they should hunt out the men and say: "We are prepared to give you the examination." It is psychological, I will admit, but it would do away with a sonniers canadiens c'était des gars de l'aviation. Je n'ai pas de chiffres précis mais je croirais qu'il y avait du moins, selon moi, cinq ou six mille prisonniers de guerre canadiens y compris ceux de l'aviation.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur Lambert pourrait-il nous donner des renseignements supplémentaires là-dessus?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Non, monsieur le président, mais d'après moi, le groupe de Dieppe constituait le groupe le plus important de prisonniers de guerre. Pour la totalité de la campagne d'Italie leur nombre n'a pas dépassé 200 et pour ceux de l'aviation, la proportion était de deux à un. Le chiffre des prisonniers de guerre canadiens était de 5,000 ou à peu près comme M. Giguère nous l'a dit.

M. Weatherhead: Je suis plutôt surpris d'apprendre qu'il n'y a pas d'association nationale de prisonniers de guerre au Canada. Après ce qu'ils ont connu, particulièrement ceux qui étaient en Europe ils auraient dû se grouper dans une association. C'est la raison pour laquelle il n'y a pas eu de progrès majeurs accomplis dans ce domaine comme il y en a eu dans d'autres associations de vétérans.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je peux vous dire pourquoi, M. Weatherhead c'est que la plupart des prisonniers veulent oublier cette période.

M. Weatherhead: Monsieur Giguère et monsieur Lambert ont tous deux mis l'accent sur leur désir d'avoir accordé le droit aux anciens prisonniers de guerre, de se faire examiner ou réexaminer médicalement, ils ne possèdent pas ce droit pour l'instant à moins qu'ils n'aient droit à une allocation d'invalidité.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Non, ils peuvent se faire examiner, la question est la suivante, voudront-ils se présenter d'eux-mêmes. Comme l'a dit monsieur Bigg, c'est peut-être un peu de la mendicité de venir pour réclamer un examen. La commission ferait examiner les anciens combattants s'ils se présentaient, et s'ils expliquaient les circonstances. Mais, selon moi, ce qu'on devrait faire, c'est retrouver ces gens pour leur expliquer que nous sommes disposés à les faire bénéficier de traitement médical. C'est une great deal of this frustration that Mr. Giguère has mentioned.

Mr. Weatherhead: I gather, Mr. Chairman, then, that Mr. Lambert and the witness are suggesting that the Canadian Pension Commission should really hunt out these people—the prisoners of war—and encourage them to come back for examination and indicate to them, as I suppose the veterans organizations indicate now, that they certainly are not begging if they do so and they have every right to do so. It that correct?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It should be a combined effort. It has to be organized by both the Treatment Services Branch of the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Canadian Pension Commission. The Canadian Pension Commission would not be authorized to organize this on its own. This has to be a question of government policy. There are expenses, you know.

Mr. Weatherhead: Then it is your opinion, Mr. Lambert, that at the present time the Canadian Pension Commission could not go after these few thousands of prisoners of war who still are living without some change in the Commission policy. Would that be the case?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, it would not be Commission policy. This would have to be a deliberate decision of the government to be implemented through the Department of Veterans Affairs and to be worked out with the Canadian Pension Commission. I think it would go beyond the resources of the Canadian Pension Commission, that is, their doctors. This would have to be handled through the Treatment Services Branch so that the appropriate consultants could be brought in for the full examinations.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Chairman, perhaps Mr. Reynolds could make a note of this particular point and when we have a chance to examine the Departmental officials a bit later on we can ask why this could not be done, the costs involved and this sort of thing because it seems to be a very important point.

The Chairman: I think that is an excellent suggestion, Mr. Weatherhead, and we will make a note of it.

Mr. Weatherhead: That is all, Mr. Chairmake a note of it.

The Chairman: I have the additional names of Messrs. Bigg and Peters, I think Mr. Latuquestion psychologique mais je crois que cela permettrait d'effacer ce sentiment de frustration mentionné par M. Giguère.

M. Weatherhead: Alors je suppose, monsieur le président, que monsieur Lambert et le témoin proposent que la Commission des pensions retrouve ces prisonniers de guerre et les encourage à se présenter pour un examen médical et leur expliquer qu'il ne s'agit pas d'une question de charité, mais d'un droit. Ai-je raison?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Ce devrait être un effort combiné. L'affaire doit être organisée à la fois par la Direction des services de traitement du Ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et la Commission canadienne des Pensions. La Commission ne pourrait pas assurer d'elle-même, assurer cet effort. Il s'agit d'une question de politique qui relève des pouvoirs publics. Cela entraîne des dépenses comme vous le savez.

M. Weatherhead: Vous prétendez alors, monsieur Lambert, que la Commission ne peut pas elle-même essayer de retrouver ces milliers d'anciens prisonniers qui sont encore vivants à moins d'un changement dans la politique de la Commission?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Non, il ne s'agit pas ici de la politique de la Commission mais d'une décision du gouvernement qui sera appliquée par le ministère des Anciens Combattants en collaboration avec la Commission des pensions. Et cela dépasse les ressources médicales de la Commission. Il faudrait que le Service de traitements s'en charge et fasse venir les spécialistes appropriés pour consultation et examen médical complet.

M. Weatherhead: Est-ce que M. Reynolds pourrait inscrire cette question et on pourrait l'approfondir, en compagnie des fonctionnaires du ministère pour savoir comment on pourrait arranger l'affaire et quel en serait le coût, parce que c'est une question très importante.

Le président: C'est une excellente proposition, monsieur Weatherhead. Nous en prenons note.

M. Weatherhead: Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Monsieur Bigg, monsieur Peters et monsieur Latulippe ont manifesté lippe also indicated that he wanted to ask a question and Mr. MacRae.

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Giguère, one of our main difficulties, apart from written medical evidence which is very scarce with regard to prisoners of war, is the difficulty of getting credible evidence; that is, verbal evidence from fellow prisoners and so on. To your knowledge was there very much, say, isolation? In the first place, were you all kept in fairly large groups?

Mr. Giguère: You mean when we were captured?

Mr. Bigg: Well first of all you were put in camps...

Mr. Giguère: When we were captured as a group, we were put in Oberschlesien Stalag 8B. Where I was were most of the Dieppe prisoners-of-war, NCO's and men. We were in huts perhaps 75 feet long and we were 150 per hut.

Mr. Bigg: Were you at anytime, for misconduct or other reasons taken off as individuals and left under the care of say, a German Corporal and subject to physical violence?

Mr. Giguère: I will give you an example. When we were tied with string or rope we were kept in the hut all day, not allowed outside for air. The only time we went outside was when we had to go to the toilets. We went to the toilet with a chap who was an ex-stretcher bearer and he used to help us.

Mr. Bigg: Was he a German?

Mr. Giguère: No, no.

Mr. Bigg: One of your own boys?

Mr. Giguère: Yes. The guard used to change every two hours and if we were caught untied or loose, because if you wanted you could always loosen your bonds with your teeth, you used to get what we called "the wall". When you got "the wall" they took you in the guard room and they tied your hands behind your back with a chain and they put your nose to the wall. You used to get sentences, if you like, from two hours up.

Mr. Bigg: Were you alone then?

Mr. Giguère: You were alone. Well, no, you were not alone; you were in the guard room with all the Germans.

[Interpretation]

l'intention de prendre la parole et de poser des questions, et monsieur MacRae aussi.

M. Bigg: Monsieur Giguère, à part les preuves médicales qui sont très rares dans le cas des prisonniers de guerre, il est difficile d'obtenir des preuves irréfutables, soit des témoignages de vive voix des compagnons de camp et autres. A votre connaissance, y avait-il beaucoup d'isolement? Tout d'abord, étiez-vous en groupes assez nombreux?

M. Giguère: Vous voulez dire lorsque nous avons été capturés?

M. Bigg: Au début, vous avez été placés dans des camps...

M. Giguère: Lorsqu'on a été capturé, nous avons été placés en groupes en Haute Silésie, au Stalag 8B. Là où j'étais, la plupart des prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, les sous-officiers et des hommes. Nous habitions des baraquements d'environ 75 pieds de long à 150 par baraquement.

M. Bigg: Est-ce que vous avez été confiés à un moment donné aux soins d'un caporal allemand qui aurait pu vous affliger de mauvais traitements pour mauvaise conduite ou pour d'autres raisons?

M. Giguère: A titre d'exemple, lorsque nous étions attachés ou enchaînés, nous étions laissés toute la journée à l'intérieur du baraquement sans avoir la permission de sortir à l'extérieur. La seule fois que nous sortions, c'était pour nous rendre à la toilette. Nous allions à la toilette, en compagnie d'un ex-ambulancier qui avait l'habitude de nous aider.

M. Bigg: Était-il allemand?

M. Giguère: Non.

M. Bigg: C'était un des vôtres?

M. Giguère: Oui. La garde avait l'habitude d'être relevée toutes les deux heures, si l'on nous prenait sans lien ou détaché, parce que vous pouviez toujours relâcher ces liens avec les dents, on avait alors ce qu'on appelait «le mur». On nous amenait dans la salle de garde et l'on nous attachait les mains derrière le dos avec une chaîne, on nous mettait nez contre le mur. On nous punissait de cette façon pendant deux heures.

M. Bigg: Étiez-vous seul?

M. Giguère: Non. On était là avec tous les Allemands.

[Texte]

Mr. Bigg: I mean you were away from your own boys?

Mr. Giguère: Oh yes, and you had to have your two feet together, your toes to the wall and your nose to the wall.

Mr. Bigg: If you tried to escape what happened?

Mr. Giguère: If you tried to escape you could get shot, because you were on your own, nobody protected you there. Once you left that camp you were on your own. If you were lucky and did not get shot and you were recaptured, then you got from one month to two months in solitary on bread and water.

Mr. Bigg: Did any of your boys do this?

Mr. Giguère: Yes, lots of our boys tried. In 8B we dug a tunnel, but our engineers were not very good and anyway the ground was sand. Although we managed, four of our chaps went through, only two made it out of there. They went through Yugoslavia all the way; only four managed to get out. It took us about four months to dig that tunnel. One chap was shot, but that was normal.

Mr. Bigg: What kind of food did you get in solitary?

Mr. Giguère: German bread...

Mr. Bigg: And water?

Mr. Giguère: ...and water, one-seventh of a loaf of bread.

Mr. Bigg: How much solitary could you get?

Mr. Giguère: That is the one thing of which I am not aware; I was never in myself.

Mr. Bigg: Were any of our boys in solitary?

Mr. Giguère: A month I think was the most we were there; two weeks was the least.

Mr. Bigg: On black bread?

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: I presume that the psychological eflects of the Dieppe raid were much greater than most of the service personnel normally had to face. What effects did it have

[Interprétation]

M. Bigg: Je veux dire que vous étiez séparés de vos compagnons?

M. Giguère: Oui. Nous devions avoir les deux pieds collés, les orteils contre le mur tout comme le nez.

M. Bigg: Si vous essayiez de vous échapper, qu'arrivait-il?

M. Giguère: En cas de tentative d'évasion, on risquait d'être abattu parce qu'on était seul et qu'on n'avait pas de protection. Une fois qu'on quittait ce camp, on était laissé à nos propres moyens. Si on était chanceux, si on échappait aux balles et si on n'était pas retrouvé, on nous isolait pendant un ou deux mois avec du pain et de l'eau.

M. Bigg: Est-ce que certains de vos hommes l'ont fait?

M. Giguère: Bon nombre d'entre eux dans le camp 8B ont creusé un tunnel, mais nos ingénieurs n'étaient pas très bons et de toute façon le sol était sablonneux. Quatre de nos compagnons se sont tout de même échappés par le tunnel, mais deux ont pu réussir. Ils ont traversé la Yougoslavie. En tout, seulement quatre ont réussi à s'échapper. Il nous a fallu à peu près quatre mois pour creuser ce tunnel. L'un de nos compagnons a été abattu, mais c'était normal.

M. Bigg: Quelle genre de nourriture aviez-vous au cachot?

M. Giguère: Du pain allemand.

M. Bigg: Et de l'eau?

M. Giguère: ...et de l'eau, le septième d'un pain.

M. Bigg: Dans quelle mesure étiez-vous isolé?

M. Giguère: Je ne le sais pas car je n'y suis moi-même jamais allé.

M. Bigg: Est-ce quelques-uns de vos hommes y sont allés?

M. Giguère: Je crois que le séjour maximum était d'un mois, et deux semaines tout au moins.

M. Bigg: Au pain noir.

M. Giguère: Oui.

Le président: Monsieur Peters.

M. Peters: Je suppose que les effets psychologiques directs du raid de Dieppe dépassent de beaucoup les conditions qu'ont connues les autres militaires. Quels effets cela a-t-il eu on prisoners? Was there an immense loss of morale. Those boys went into a situation in broad daylight when they knew they could not win, and they got massacred. The period before this must have been a buildup. While it should have a raid, it was really an invasion and they must have been built up for an invasion. A lot of the people must have been in pretty severe psychological condition because of the disasters that happened.

Mr. Giguère: You would be surprised the way our Canadian boys took it. Their morale was something that all Canadians should be proud of. Even at the time when we went there in 1942 the Germans were in their prime, they were winning all over the place, we used to get propaganda over the radio, in the camp and we used to get fed all kinds of news of ships being sunk and the Germans advancing in Russia. We used to get all that propaganda fed to us. When we were in the camp perhaps because of the way we were trained, we stuck to our morale and we knew in our minds that one day we were going to get out of that hole.

However, as I said afterwards, right now, the chaps are getting fed up and they figure that after all they went through they should get a certain privilege and certain treatment eligibility because we are not the same as ordinary veterans, because we went through something that affected our whole system.

Mr. Peters: I agree that it did. I knew many prisoners of war. I happened to be in the hospital when a lot of the Air Force prisoners of war came back to Lachine after the war. Many of them were in fairly bad physical condition. They were not emaciated or anything like the Hong Kong veterans but they had a number of things wrong with them because they had not received medical treatment nor dental treatment; however they would not stay in the hospital long enough to establish any kind of a medical record or anything, they wanted to get out. It was get out, get out, get out, all the time. Some of them were sick and they still wanted out and they wanted to forget about the whole thing. This in itself is an indication of a psychological condition, to some extent a vacation from reality. This is the point, while the morale itself may not have been bad, there must have been a terrific emotional upset in what happened. I suppose the initial shock always is when you expect to win and you lose ..

[Interpretation]

sur les prisonniers? Y avait-il une perte de moral dû au fait que les soldats ont débarqué en plein jour tout en sachant qu'ils ne pouvaient pas gagner et ils ont été massacrés. Mais la période qui a précédé ce raid a dû être une période de préparation. Il s'agissait plutôt d'une invasion que d'un raid et ils avaient dû être préparés pour une évasion. Bon nombre de soldats ont dû être tendus sur le plan psychologique à cause de la catastrophe qui a suivi le débarquement.

M. Giguère: Vous seriez surpris de savoir comment nos hommes ont réagi. Leur moral était tel qu'il devrait remplir de fierté tous les Canadiens. Même au moment où nous y sommes allés en 1942, les Allemands gagnaient sur les lignes et nous étions inondés de propagande sur les ondes et nous écoutions toutes sortes de nouvelles, des bateaux qui étaient coulés et des Allemands qui avançaient en Russie. Nous étions inondés de ce genre de propagande. Lorsque nous étions dans les camps, peut-être à cause de la manière dont on nous traitait, nous avons conservé notre moral, car nous savions qu'un jour nous sortirions de ce trou.

Toutefois, au fil des jours, les soldats se décourageaient et ils ont pensé qu'après tout ce qu'ils avaient subi, ils devraient bénéficier de certains privilèges et avoir droit à un certain traitement, car nous n'étions pas dans les mêmes conditions que les anciens combattants ordinaires parce que nous avons connu des conditions qui avaient affecté tout notre système.

M. Peters: Je l'admets pour bon nombre de prisonniers de guerre. Je suis allé à l'hôpital quand un contingent de prisonniers de guerre de l'aviation sont revenus à Lachine après la guerre. Bon nombre d'entre eux étaient dans des conditions physiques déplorables. Ils n'étaient pas décharnés ou quelque chose du genre comme les anciens combattants de Hong Kong, mais ils avaient quelque chose d'anormal parce qu'ils n'avaient pas reçu de soins médicaux, ni de soins dentaires. Ils ne voulaient toutefois pas rester à l'hôpital assez longtemps pour que l'on établisse un dossier médical ou autre, ils voulaient sortir de l'hôpital. Quelques-uns d'entre eux étaient malades, mais ils voulaient sortir et oublier. C'est un indice de leur trouble psychologique, dans une certaine mesure, une évasion de la réalité. Voilà, alors que le moral n'était pas trop mauvais, il a dû quand même y avoir un bouleversement psychologique, un choc initial je suppose qui survient lorsque l'on s'attend à gagner et qu'on perd...

Mr. Giguère: It was in a way because we first had the idea that we were going to go there and may be by 11 o'clock we would be on board returning ship, which was not so, to the contrary. Naturally it did affect us but as I say although affected us immediately after and we said, "All right, we have been captured", we never lost faith in our country, in our allies. We knew the strength of our army and that eventually we were going to be liberated.

Mr. Peters: You operated in a fairly classic prisoner-of-war relationship. The treatment was pretty well conventional except for the food, which the Germans did not really have too much of either. What kind of medical records did you have? Did they allow you to establish a regular routine with your own people and did you have doctors available?

Mr. Giguère: There was a hospital outside the camp and if you were sick you could be examined by a German doctor. To be admitted to that hospital you had to be pretty bad. First of all there was room for only a few and all the medical supplies were Red Cross. I raise my hat to the Red Cross. Had it not been for the Red Cross I do not think we could have survived because the food was supplemented by one parcel per week per four men. Four men to a parcel of 10 pounds of food from the Red Cross. That is what kept us alive. It was not the German rations.

Mr. Peters: I am curious about how they kept records. If you were in the hospital did you bring back a record or did someone? You mentioned you had a stretcher-bearer who, I suppose, was at the medical corps.

Mr. Giguère: The Germans kept their own records on that.

Mr. Peters: But did your camp not keep some?

Mr. Giguère: No.

Mr. Peters: Why?

Mr. Giguère: A man was in charge of a hut and had perhaps 100 men in his hut. One day he would have 94; therefore six men were in the hospital. That is it. He had no record; there was no such thing as paper

[Interprétation]

M. Giguère: D'une certaine manière, nous savions les premiers que nous allions nous rendre en cet endroit, et à onze heures, nous serions embarqués à bord d'un navire, ce qui est tout à fait le contraire de ce qui s'est passé. Cela nous a touchés, naturellement, mais, comme je l'ai expliqué, même si cela a eu lieu juste après, nous avons accepté le fait que nous étions en captivité mais nous n'avons jamais perdu la foi en notre pays, en nos alliés. Nous connaissions la puissance de notre armée, nous savions que nous allions être libérés un jour.

M. Peters: Vous avez fait un rapprochement classique entre le cas de prisonniers de guerre; le traitement était un traitement traditionnel sauf pour les vivres. Les Allemands n'étaient pas bien nourris eux-mêmes, ce que nous voulons savoir c'est quels sont vos états de santé. Vous ont-ils permis d'établir une routine avec vos propres compagnons, aviez-vous des médecins à votre service?

M. Giguère: Il y avait l'hôpital hors du camp si on était très malade on pouvait se faire examiner par un médecin allemand, mais pour être admis dans cet hôpital il fallait être dans une condition assez déplorable.

Tout d'abord il n'y avait de la place que pour quelques-uns, pour une poignée alors toutes les fournitures médicales venaient de la Croix-Rouge; je tire mon chapeau devant la Croix-Rouge, sans la Croix-Rouge nous n'aurions pas pu survivre. Les vivres fournies par celle-ci consistaient en un colis par semaine pour quatre hommes. Quatre hommes par colis de la Croix-Rouge contenait 10 livres d'aliments. Ceci nous permettait de survivre, ce n'était pas la nourriture des Allemands.

M. Peters: Est-ce que l'on tenait des dossiers? Si vous étiez à l'hôpital, par exemple, est-ce que vous rapportiez un dossier ou y avait-il quelqu'un, par exemple, cette personne dont vous parliez qui portait la civière et qui faisait partie du corps de Santé je le suppose?

M. Giguère: Les Allemands gardaient leurs propres dossiers à ce sujet.

M. Peters: Est-ce qu'au camp quelqu'un de chez-vous le faisait?

M. Giguère: Non.

M. Peters: Pourquoi alors?

M. Giguère: Un homme avait une besogne sans sa responsabilité et il devait s'occuper peut-être de 100 hommes. Tel jour il n'en avait que 94, six se trouvant à l'hôpital: voilà tout, rien de ressemblant à des documents work or any record of when you went in and what you were suffering from.

Mr. Peters: Were records kept of those who died?

Mr. Giguère: All those records were kept by the Red Cross. The Red Cross was responsible for informing the relatives and so forth. We were under the Red Cross.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I interpose here. I think you will find that outside perhaps a camp like the one I was in, Oflag 7B, where we had medical officers and a camp hospital, most of the medical facilities in the stalags would be of the nature almost of an R.A.P. They were merely for first aid or a cold or very light things as they did not have that many doctors around.

However, in the case of a place like Oflag 7B, I had my own personal German card and on it, as I recall it, are records showing that I was committed to the camp hospital for sinus problems on a certain date and released. But those records were undoubtedly destroyed.

• 1145

It is only in the case of Oflag 7B—and this is in fairness of the German administration—when we went on our march all these records accompanied us. When the balloon went up all of the records feel into the—shall we say the allied—the British since we were in a British officers' camp—feel into the hands of our own administration and these were distributed to us as souvenirs. Your camp records were given back to you. I still have mine as a wartime souvenir. But that would be the only record maintained.

Mr. Bigg: That would be an officers' camp, Mr. Lambert.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This camp that I was in happened to be about the best organized camp in the whole of Germany. It was a junior officers' camp and I must say that we had a pretty efficient internal organization. It was a highly disciplined camp. To show you just how thorough they were, those things that had been taken from our persons in Dieppe when we were first examined—for instance, the amount of French money and sterling money that I had was returned to me in April of 1945; it accompanied me. Even things such as reading glasses, a map-reading glass, little pocket knives followed those who had been captured in Greece and Crete right along and were given them three and four years later.

[Interpretation]

administratifs ou à tout autre registre d'entrée ou de sortie ou de vos maladies...

M. Peters: Est-ce qu'on tenait compte de ceux qui mourraient?

M. Giguère: La Croix-Rouge tenait à jour des dossiers à ce sujet. La Croix-Rouge était chargée de prévenir les parents, etc.; nous dépendions d'elle.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Puis-je interrompre ici, messieurs, vous constaterez qu'à l'extérieur d'un camp comme celui où j'étais l'Oflog 7B, où il y avait des médecins et un hôpital de camp; la plupart des installations médicales dans les stalags étaient des installations militaires de premiers soins genre poste de secours régimentaire. Par exemple, pour soigner quelqu'un qui avait un rhume ou des choses comme cela car il n'y avait pas beaucoup de médecins dans ces camps-là mais, en tout cas, dans le camp 7B j'avais ma propre carte allemande et sur celle-ci, autant que je me souvienne, il était mentionné que j'avais été envoyé à l'hôpital pour des ennuis concernant les sinus à une date donnée et ensuite libéré; mais, sans aucun doute, ces dossiers ont été détruits.

Dans le cas du camp 7B uniquement et ceci est tout à l'honneur de l'administration allemande, tous ces dossiers nous accompagnaient et lorsque nous avons été libérés ou que les Alliés sont arrivés, ceux-ci sont tombés dans les mains de notre propre administration par l'entremise des Britanniques puisque nous étions dans un camp d'officiers britanniques et puis nous ont été remis. J'ai encore ces dossiers-là, en souvenir de guerre, mais c'étaient les seuls documents qui étaient conservés.

M. Bigg: S'agissait-il d'un camp d'officiers, M. Lambert?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Ce camp où j'étais était le camp le mieux organisé dans toute l'Allemagne et c'était un camp de sous-officiers subalternes et je dois dire que c'était une organisation interne très efficace, très disciplinée et pour vous montrer comment cela se passait; les objets que l'on nous avait enlevés à Dieppe lors d'un premier examen, par exemple, les sommes d'argent français et anglais que j'avais m'ont été remises en avril 1945. Je les gardais sur moi et même des objets tels que verres grossissants, loupes pour lire les cartes, couteaux de poche ont été méticuleusement mis dans une enveloppe et ont suivi ceux qui avaient été capturés en Grèce et à Crête et leur ont été remis trois ou quatre ans plus tard.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters, I wonder if you would bear in mind that we are running short on time now and that there are two other people who want to ask questions.

Mr. Peters: I would just like to say that I endorse the idea of this Committee's making a recommendation that we look into the possibilities of calling in all POW's, from no matter what campaign, to the Commission for a board.

The Chairman: We will have an opportunitry to discuss this further.

Mr. Peters: Yes, and I say that we should do it because the former Minister asked here a few minutes ago why these things had not been done and I think there is this need to build up public opinion and public opinion has not wanted to look at these problems until recently. You pick up the newspaper today and see that somebody was convicted for atrocities in the last war and it has become fairly commonplace and is an accepted thing. It has not the psychological effect on the nation that it had before. I think we are ready for it and that we have an obligation to the POW's to do this. We as a Committee should probably consider the time is ripe now and that construction should begin.

Le président: Monsieur Latulippe, désirez-vous poser des questions à M. Giguère?

M. Latulippe: Je ne serai pas très long, car les questions que je voulais poser l'ont été par d'autres, du moins en partie, mais je crois que nous devons nous limiter. Après avoir lu l'exposé de M. Giguère, qui m'a vraiment ému, je suis très touché d'apprendre comment les anciens combattants, surtout ceux de Dieppe, ont été traités durant la dernière guerre. Ce mémoire m'a impressionné profondément.

Le président: Monsieur Latulippe, voulez-vous parler plus fort, s'il vous plaît.

M. Latulippe: Oui et à ce propos, je crois que dans le but de limiter les débats, nous devons nous en tenir à de simples recommandations. Nous connaissons présentement de quelle façon les anciens combattants ont été traités et à la lumière des faits, nous constatons qu'ils ne l'ont pas tous été sur un pied d'égalité. Il y a différents traitements accordés à différentes associations et je crois qu'il serait juste et opportun de recommander que

[Interprétation]

Le président: M. Peters, je pense que nous avons peu de temps, il y a deux autres membres qui voudraient poser des questions; est-ce que vous avez terminé?

M. Peters: Je voudrais tout simplement dire que j'appuie l'idée, je voudrais que le Comité présente une recommandation afin de songer à réunir tous les prisonniers de guerre quelle que soit la campagne à laquelle ils ont participé pour que leur cas puisse être présenté à un jury de la Commission.

Le président: Je pense que nous aurons l'occasion de reparler de cette question.

M. Peters: Oui, je pense qu'il faudrait le faire parce qu'on a posé, il y a quelques minutes, cette question à l'ancien ministre, à savoir: pourquoi ces choses n'ont pas été faites, je pense qu'il faut que l'opinion publique soit alertée parce que le public jusqu'à récemment n'avait pas voulu s'occuper de ces problèmes. Vous aviez le journal aujourd'hui et lisez que quelqu'un a été condamné pour atrocités commises au cours de la dernière guerre: cela est devenu courant et banal. L'effet psychologique sur la nation n'est plus le même qu'autrefois. Je pense que nous sommes maintenant psychologiquement prêt à le faire et que nous avons cette obligation envers nos prisonniers de guerre et que le présent Comité doit sans doute considérer que le temps est venu d'agir.

The Chairman: Mr. Latulippe, do you wish to ask Mr. Giguère any questions?

Mr. Latulippe: I will be brief. The questions I wanted to ask were already posed by other members, in part at least, and I think that we should limit ourselves.

After having read Mr. Giguère's report which is very touching, I was really moved on learning how the veterans, and especially those who were at Dieppe, were treated during the last war. I was deeply impressed by this report.

The Chairman: Mr. Latulippe, would you please speak louder.

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, and with reference to this, I think that in order to limit the discussions, we should limit ourselves to simple recommendations. We know now the way in which veterans were treated and in the light of the facts, we observe that all veterans were not treated on the same footing.

There are different treatments given to different associations. I think it would be fair and timely to recommend that all our veternos anciens combattants soient tous soumis aux mêmes règlements et traités de façon à peu près identique.

Si nous avons des concessions à faire aux anciens combattants de Hong Kong nous devons également le faire à l'égard de ceux de Dieppe ou de ceux qui ont combattu à différents endroits dans le monde où il y a eu la guerre. Nos Canadiens y sont allés représenter le Canada, le défendre et plusieurs, malheureusement, ont donné leur vie ou sont revenus affligés de toutes sortes de maladies ou d'infirmités. Alors, le Canada, notre pays, leur doit beaucoup de reconnaissance et je crois que notre pays peut, par égard envers eux, les traiter tous à peu près sur le même pied et leur donner une chance égale.

Je crois que notre pays peut faire cela, car nous ne manquons pas de produits; ce qu'il nous faut, ce sont des consommateurs et je crois que ces gens méritent notre appui et celui du Canada.

Ils doivent être traités adéquatement et je crois qu'il est de notre devoir, à nous de ce Comité, de faire les recommandations voulues. On a dit tout à l'heure que le rapport Woods n'a pas tenu compte des anciens combattants de Dieppe; je crois qu'ils sont tout aussi importants que ceux de Hong Kong, parce que la guerre, c'est la guerre. Tout le monde, ceux qui y ont pris part, particulièrement, les anciens combattants, ont subi des traitements épouvantables et ceci doit être reconnu de la population qui, aujourd'hui, jouit d'une certaine liberté: liberté d'expression, liberté d'agir, liberté de vivre aussi et je crois que nous devons respecter ceux qui nous ont défendu dans le passé parce qu'ils ont donné le meilleur d'eux-mêmes. Plusieurs ont donné leur vie, d'autres leur santé, ce qu'il y a de plus cher chez un individu. Alors, s'il y en a dont la santé est affectée, je crois qu'il est du devoir de notre gouvernement de leur venir en aide d'une façon adéquate et juste. Je crois qu'il y a injustice quand nos militaires qui ne sont pas traités sur le même pied selon l'unité à laquelle ils appartiennent, et un pays comme le Canada n'a pas le droit de commettre ces injustices.

Après avoir écouté toutes les explications de M. Giguère, après toutes les questions qui ont été posées concernant les traitements, je crois que nous devons nous en tenir à de simples recommandations qui doivent être précises, claires et nettes. Nos anciens combattants doivent être traités sur un pied d'égalité, sinon ce n'est pas juste. Et notre pays est capable de la faire. Comme membre de ce comité, je recommande que les demandes de l'Association nationale des prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe soient étudiées et qu'il soit ans be treated more or less equally and be subject to the same regulations.

If we have concessions to make to the veterans of Hong Kong we also have to do so for the Dieppe veterans or those who fought in various parts of the world where the war raged. Canadians went there to represent Canada and to defend it. Unfortunately, mamy of them died and others came back with all kinds of diseases or infirmities. I think that our country, Canada, owes them much and Canada is able, in recognition for everything that has been done by these men, treat them more or less on an equal footing and give them an equal opportunity.

I think that our country can do this because we have a big production and we need consumers. I think that these people deserve our support and the support of Canada. These people must be treated adequately, and I believe that it is our duty—the duty of this Committee—to make the proper recommendation. A while ago it was said that the Woods Report did not take into consideration these Dieppe veterans, and I think that they are just as important as those of Hong Kong because war is war, and everybody who participated in it, and particularly the veterans, underwent terrible treatment. And this must be recognized by which, today, enjoys certain freedoms, such as freedom of action, freedom of speech, freedom of life. So I think that we should respect those who defended us in the past because they gave the best of themselves. Many of them gave their life, others their health, the most important thing in an individual.

So, if some are affected in their health, I think that it is the duty of our government to help them and in an adequate and fair way. I think there is an injustice when our military personnel is not treated on an equal footing according to the unit to which they belong, and a country like Canada does not have the right to commit such injustices.

After having heard all the explanations by Mr. Giguère, after all the questions that have been asked concerning treatment, I think we should restrict ourselves to simple recommendations which should be precise and clear. Our veterans must be treated on an equal footing, otherwise it is not fair. And, moreover, our country can do this and, as a member of this Committee, I recommend that the requests made by the National Association of Dieppe POW's be studied and that it be recommended that they benefit from familiar recommandé qu'ils bénéficient de traitements semblables à ceux des autres corps de l'Armée.

Je crois qu'il est de notre devoir de faire cette recommandation. Nous avons étudié toute la question des anciens combattants. Présentement, nous avons ceux de Dieppe. Je suis allé à Dieppe il y a trois ans, mais j'étais loin de croire que les anciens combattants avaient été traités de la façon décrite par M. Giguère tout à l'heure. Encore une fois, je suis touché de cet exposé, et je suis sûr que nous de ce comité pouvons les aider, en faisant les recommandations voulues pour rendre justice à tout le monde. Sur ce, je vous remercie, monsieur le président.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Latulippe.

Mr. MacRae: I promise you I will be brief, Mr. Chairman. I surely want to make a point for the benefit of the witness. I think it is not only our duty to hear evidence but, if we can, to advise those who appear before us relative to future submissions.

You made the point earlier, Mr. Giguere, that when the camps were being closed out and you were being marched across Germany you tried not to fall into the hands of the Russians. This fact has been fairly well documented over the years. It was much wiser to stay with the Germans in many cases. We have had evidence of what happened to some of our prisoners who fell into the hands of the Russians. They were treated worse than they had been by the Germans. That is known and documented.

• 1155

In the submissions we have had over the years, especially from the Hong Kong veterans, the word "avitaminosis" has come up very often, and we have got to know it very well in this Committee. We understand exactly what is involved in it and what has happened. Although, for the worst part, prison diet was scanty throughout the long term of imprisonment, in my understanding, yet it managed to keep body and soul together and men were able to work.

However, in those forced marches at the end of the war for several months prisoners were marched across Germany—and some who were in what is now East Germany were marched right across Germany—and lived for many months on turnips and on sugar beets and such things, as you say. They lived off the land, and were marched and starved as they did so.

It seems to me that this is the particular area to which you, as an Association, should treatment as that enjoyed by other units of the Armed Forces.

I think it is our duty to make this recommendation.

We have studied all aspects of the question dealing with veterans. Right now, we are dealing with those who were in Dieppe. I was in Dieppe three years ago, but I was far from believing that the veterans had been treated the way Mr. Giguère told us just a moment ago.

Once again, I repeat that I am deeply touched by this report and I am sure that we members of the Committee can help by making the proper recommendations so that everyone will be treated fairly.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Latulippe.

M. MacRae: Je serai bref, monsieur le président. Je voudrais tout simplement dire ceci au témoin parce que je pense que non seulement c'est notre devoir d'entendre les témoignages, mais je pense que, dans la mesure du possible, il faut donner des conseils à ceux qui se présentent devant nous en vue de leur présentation future. Monsieur Giguère, vous avez dit plus tôt que lorsque les camps ont été fermés et vous avez été forcés de marcher d'un bout à l'autre de l'Allemagne afin de ne pas tomber aux mains des Russes. Ce fait a été rapporté avec documentation à l'appui. Il était beaucoup plus sage de rester avec les Allemands que de tomber avec les Russes car les Russes ont traité les prisonniers de façon beaucoup plus cruelle. C'est un fait connu et prouvé.

Dans les présentations que les Vétérans de Hong Kong ont présentées au cours des années, le terme «vitaminose» est fréquemment apparu. Nous le connaissons très bien ici et nous sommes au courant de ce qui s'est passé. Bien que le régime des prisonniers était assez restreint, au cours de la longue durée d'internement, ces gens ont tout de même pu survivre et travailler. Cependant, dans ces marches forcées à la fin de la guerre lorsque, pendant plusieurs mois, les prisonniers de guerre ont dû marcher d'un bout à l'autre de l'Allemagne et parfois même dans ce qui est aujourd'hui l'Allemagne de l'Est ils ont vécu pendant plusieurs mois de betteraves ou de navets. Ils vivaient à même la terre et souvent étaient affamés. Il me semble donc que, dans ce secteur-là, vous devriez, à titre d'association, consacrer plus de temps à l'étude de cette question. Il y a maintenant beaucoup de documentation sur cette question mais je pense que la vitaminose est un facteur important de devote more study. There is a great deal of documentary evidence now, and I think that avitaminosis is a very distinct factor now in the premature aging of those men who were prisoners of war and, as a matter of fact, in the case of many men who served under shell-fire—those in France, Italy and elsewhere. Men who served in these circumstances are very definitely prematurely aged; there is no question of that. Therefore, this matter of avitaminosis is, I think, a vital one and should be very fully explored by your Association.

There are, of course, the psychological effects of what you underwent over those years, resulting in psychosomatic disabilities which are more difficult for the Canadian Pension Commission and medical men to pinpoint, but this avitaminosis I would suggest to you is an area in which you might do further research and study for future submissions. Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. MacRae. We must bear in mind that we are running close to our time of adjournment, and Mr. Giguère has indicated that he wants to make a statement at the end of this testimony. Mr. Bigg?

Mr. Bigg: I just wish to say something I had noted but forgot to mention. It is that the Red Cross were very helpful. The parcels apparently came through with fair regularity.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not regularly; on a much reduced scale, yes. They had many hazards in getting to Germany.

Mr. Bigg: I think it was probably a factor. The diet was extremely low in both theatres of war, but it seems to me that possibly the Red Cross may have helped you people a little more than they did in the eastern theatre, because I understand these parcels did not get through to Japan as they did to the western theatre.

Mr. Giguère: As Mr. Lambert mentioned, the regular delivery was supposed to be one parcel for four men, on one fourth of a parcel per man. I have seen sometimes where they were short and it was one for six. With one parcel of ten pounds of food for six men you do not get much, although it helped us; because if we had had to rely only on the German diet it would have been quite impossible to survive.

Mr. Peters: May I ask this one question? You were in a compound. Why were you shackled, and your wrists bound, as well? What was the purpose of this?

Mr. Giguère: I cannot say for sure. It was because of certain orders, or certain things vieillissement prématuré des prisonniers de guerre et ceci touche nombre de militaires qui ont été au feu en France et en Italie et ailleurs. Il est évident que ces personnes vieillissent prématurément. Par conséquent, cette question de la vitaminose est une question essentielle et je pense que votre Association devrait l'étudier à fond. Je pense que votre association devrait l'étudier à fond.

[Interpretation]

Il y a les effets psychologiques que vous avez endurés au cours de ces années et qui ont occasionné des invalidités psychosomatiques qui sont plus difficiles à détecter par notre Commission ainsi que par les médecins. Par conséquent, la question de la vitaminose, je le répète, est un secteur que vous pourriez étudier encore plus à fond en vue des présentations à venir. Merci.

Le président: Merci, M. MacRae. Eh bien! je pense que nous allons ajourner bientôt mais M. Giguère a un commentaire à faire avant la fin. M. Bigg?

M. Bigg: J'ai oublié de mentionner que la Croix-rouge nous à beaucoup aidé. Les colis nous arrivaient régulièrement.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Pas régulièrement, car ils avaient bien de la difficulté à parvenir en Allemagne.

M. Bigg: Le régime était bien restreint sur les deux fronts et il semble que la Croix-rouge vous ait aidé plus que nous qui étions sur le front oriental car ces colis ne sont pas parvenus au Japon comme ils sont parvenus en Allemagne.

M. Giguère: Et comme M. Lambert l'a mentionné, la Croix-rouge donnait un colis pour quatre hommes mais des fois il fallait le partager entre six hommes. S'il avait fallu uniquement manger ce que les Allemands nous donnaient, il aurait été presque impossible de survivre.

M. Peters: Pourquoi vous avait-on mis les entraves et aviez vous les poignets liés en plus?

M. Giguère: Je ne sais pas exactement pourquoi. Il y avait certains ordres qui ont été that were done at Dieppe, or orders that were found on the beach. Perhaps somebody else could answer that better than I. I do not know the exact reason.

The Chairman: Mr. Lambert, have you a comment?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The retaliation, and the spirit of it, came all the way from Hitler himself and Himmler. Actually, the orders at the time of the raid—because we were on a raid, and this was standard practice—were simply that German prisoners who were captured were to be sent back in the care of the walking wounded or, if that was not possible, then their hands were to be tied as they were led back to the beach. This infuriated the Germans, and they received an apology from the Allied Command relative to that.

A matter of a week after this there was a raid on the Island of Sark by the commandos. This was a regular practice with them. Unfortunately, when leaving they were under fire and one of the German prisoners was shot by fire from the Germans and he was left on the beach with his hands tied.

This was retaliation. First of all, it was the Dieppe prisoners; and we similarly tied up a number of people here at Fort Henry. So the Germans said, "Well, we have three times yours; we will tie up three times as many"—which they did. This was because they had more prisoners than we had.

• 1200

This was finally dropped after May 1943, when the balance of prisoners was the same. We had more of theirs after North Africa. Conditions then improved a great deal until sometime after 1944.

I can tell you, though, that one of the worst experiences was that first winter of going through shackling. You were under very close surveillance and if you were caught with your shackles off during the first few months it was the pokey for either two days, four days or seven days of solitary. Subsequently it was not that bad but there was still the presence of those chains and I can assure you that we had some fellows go slightly around the bend for a while.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, we had an officer escape . . .

The Chairman: Will the members of the Committee please bear the time element in mind.

Mr. Bigg: . . .from Dieppe after a very few weeks or months of imprisonment and to my knowledge, he had the scars of the chains on donnés sur les plages de Dieppe, peut-être que quelqu'un d'autre serait plus en mesure de répondre à cette question.

Le président: M. Lambert, voulez-vous ajouter quelque chose?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je pense que les ordres venaient directement de Hitler et de Himmler. Il s'agissait de réprésailles au moment des raids, puisque c'était un raid et que c'était l'usage courant à ce moment-là. Les prisonniers allemands qui étaient capturés devaient être envoyés et confiés. Autrement, on devait ligotter les mains de ces prisonniers. Le commandement allié a présenté des excuses à ce sujet. Malheureusement, en partant ils étaient sous le feu et un prisonnier allemand a été tué par les Allemands et ont l'a retrouvé sur la plage les mains liés. C'était des mesures de représailles et les Allemands disaient; nous avons trois fois plus de prisonniers que vous, alors, nous allons en ligoter plus que vous.

Finalement, cette coutume a été abandonnée en mai 1943, car le nombre des prisonniers est devenu à peu près égal et après la campagne de l'Afrique du Nord nous en avions plus qu'eux. Ensuite la situation s'est améliorée jusqu'en 1944. Je peux vous dire que l'expérience la plus terrible de ce premier hiver est qu'on nous mettait les fers. Nous étions surveillés très étroitement et si nous étions surpris sans nos fers au cours des premiers mois, on nous condamnait à deux, quatre ou sept jours de cellule. Par la suite, la situation n'était pas aussi mauvaise, mais nous étions toujours enchaînés, ligotés. Je puis vous assurer que certains hommes ont pu s'en tirer durant un certain temps.

M. Bigg: Monsieur le président, un officier a pu s'échapper . . .

Le président: Puis-je demander aux membres du comité de se souvenir que nous avons peu de temps à notre disposition.

M. Bigg: . . .a pu s'échapper de Dieppe après quelques semaines ou mois de captivité. Je sais qu'il a porté la marque des chaînes his arms and wrists for two years. Any mention of his being chained in this way—and I think this is probably standard among Canadians—just about drove him up the wall. He could not control his temper or anything else if you even mentioned the fact that he had been tied up because his pride was such that, to him, having been tied up like an animal was just about the same as mentioning his ancestors in an unusual manner.

[Text]

The Chairman: I think we all know what you are referring to, Mr. Bigg. Mr. Giguère wanted to make a comment.

Mr. Giguère: Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen, in the name of all prisoners of war I wish to thank you for your time and the opportunity you have given us to speak. I hope that you will give us the benefit of the doubt and advise the Department of Veterans Affairs to conduct, as we wish, a survey similar to the one made in respect of the Hong Kong veterans.

I am also aware that although you sympathize with us there is an austerity program in existence. However, as I say again, if the government is rich enough to pay a Canadian veteran who goes to live in the States a pension, provided he comes back here—the American Government will not do that, then it should look after its own veterans.

Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Giguère.

May I call the attention of the members of the Committee to the fact that we now have the transcript for the first two days of the proceedings, additional transcripts will be available, and we will resume our hearings on Monday morning at 9.30 a.m. in this room. We have no witnesses scheduled for this afternoon, Thursday or Friday.

On Monday the nursing sisters will present a brief. The Canadian Corps Association is also scheduled for that day.

We will have quite a full program next week and we should complete the first phase of hearing witnesses then.

I would like to thank the members of the Committee. I particularly want to thank those who have come. We have had a very good attendance of members, especially some members who are not with the Committee but who have attended because of their interest. I note Mr. Howard of British Columbia here and, of course, Mr. Lambert and we are always glad to have them with us. Thank you.

sur ses bras et ses poignets durant deux ans. Le simple fait de mentionner le traitement qu'on lui avait infligé le mettait rouge de colère.

Le président: Nous vous comprenons. M. Giguère voudrait faire une déclaration.

M. Giguère: Messieurs, monsieur le président, je vous remercie au nom des prisonniers de guerre de l'occasion que vous nous avez donné de présenter notre mémoire ici ce matin. Je ne doute pas que vous étudierez notre cas avec la plus grande attention, que vous nous donnerez le bénéfice du doute et que vous recommanderez au ministère des anciens combattants de faire une étude comme celle qui a été faite dans le cas des anciens combattans de Hong Kong.

Je sais très bien que, si vous êtes sympathiques à notre cause, il existe un programme d'austérité à Ottawa. Toutefois, je le répète, si le gouvernement est assez riche pour indemniser un ancien combattant canadien qui va demeurer aux États-Unis, à condition qu'il revienne au Canada parce que le gouvernement américain ne lui versera pas une pension, il devrait s'occuper de ses anciens combattants.

Le président: Je vous remercie, M. Giguère. Puis-je signaler aux membres du Comité que nous avons la transcription des deux premiers jours. Des transcriptions supplémentaires seront disponibles. Nous reprendrons nos séances lundi matin à 9 heures et demie et il n'y aura pas de séances cette après-midi, jeudi et vendredi. Lundi, les infirmières canadiennes présenteront un mémoire. L'Association du corps Canadien témoignera aussi le même jour.

Je tiens à remercier les membres du Comité et je voudrais remercier ceux qui sont présents ici ce matin. Nous avons eu une présence considérable, je sais que M. Lambert est venu se joindre à nous et je le remercie particulièrement ainsi que M. Howard de la Colombie-Britannique.

Sir:

The Dieppe raid, one of the most searing engagements of the Second World War, took place on August 19, 1942.

Of the 5,000 Canadian troops who set out for the coastal town in Normandy only 2,000, mostly men who did not land, came back. Records show that, 1,946 men, most of them seriously wounded, were taken prisoner. It is also recorded that 72 of these men died in captivity. The period of imprisonment for those who survived was approximately three years.

In 1953 the Federal Government established a War Claims Commission and named Mr. Justice Thane A. Campbell as chief commissioner. In his report, Mr. Justice Campbell

Messieurs:

Le Raid sur Dieppe fut l'engagement le plus contreversé de la seconde grande guerre, il eut lieu le 19 août 1942.

Parmi les 5,000 troupes Canadiennes qui y prirent part, seulement 2,000 réussirent à retourner en Angleterre et parmi ces dernières, plusieurs ne sont même pas descendus à Dieppe.

Les statistiques démontrent que 1946 hommes, dont la plupart sérieusement blessés furent fait prisonniers par les Allemands. Il est aussi démontré que 72 soldats moururent en captivité. La période d'emprisonnement pour les survivants fut d'environ trois ans.

En 1953, le Gouvernement Fédéral établit la Commission des Réclamations de guerre et nomma le juge Thane A. Campbell, Commissaire en Chef.

found that general maltreatment did exist in prisoner of war camps in Europe where Canadian troops were imprisoned, and that extraordinary brutal treatment had been proved in many cases. The findings of the War Claims Commission resulted in granting almost equal awards to both Hong Kong and Dieppe prisoners of war.

The effects of imprisonment have for some years been a matter of grave concern to those Dieppe prisoners of war who still survive, and it is their hope that the government will instruct the standing committee on Veterans Affairs to conduct an inquiry into their plight which is in so many ways identical to that of the Hong Kong prisoners. Among these similarities are the prevalence of peptic ulcers, lumbar spine disabilities, nervous disorders and other problems commonly attributed to avitaminosis.

The standing committee on Veterans Affairs has for some time known that the circumstances of the Dieppe prisoners of war should be reviewed along the lines of what has been done in the case of the Hong Kong prisoners.

In presenting this submission on behalf of the Dieppe prisoners of war, we realize that in general you are familiar with this problem and respectfully ask for your support in bringing this matter to the attention of our government. We are also aware of the profound effect that your concern and support could have in bringing about consideration and immediate review of all Dieppe prisoners of war. This brief is being submitted a third time in hopes that you our elected representative will speak up on behalf of the veteran and bring this matter to the attention of those persons who could make this possible.

This brief is submitted to provide supplemental information to that furnished your Committee in our Brief of December 17th, 1965, and to provide comment regarding the Report of Dr. J. H. Richardson of the Canadian Pension Commission.

The major requirement, in so far as the Pension Act is concerned, for members of the Canadian Army who served in the Dieppe Force is to provide protection for widows and children, in the event that the veteran should die prematurely.

Dans son rapport, Monsieur le Juge Campbell établit qu'il y eut des mauvais traitements dans les camps de prisonniers de guerre en Europe, où il y avait des troupes Canadiennes, et notamment, brutalités dans plusieurs cas.

D'après les résultats de la Commission, les prisonniers de guerre de Hong Kong et de Dieppe furent alloués une compensation à peu près identique.

Les effets d'emprisonnement sont depuis plusieurs années un grand souci pour nos prisonniers de Dieppe qui survivent, ils espèrent que le Gouvernement va demander au Comité Permanent des Affaires des Anciens Combattants de faire enquête à leur sujet, qui est non moins identique à ceux de Hong Kong.

Parmi ces similarités, il y a prédominance d'ulcère peptique, invalidité lombaire, troubles névrotiques et plusieurs autres incapacités attribuables à l'avitaminose.

Le Comité Permanent des Aflaires des circonstances des Prisonniers de Guerre de Dieppe devraient être revisées, tout comme les prisonniers de Hong Kong.

En présentant cette soumission au nom des Prisonniers de Guerre de Dieppe, nous réalisons qu'en général vous êtes familiers avec ce problème et nous vous demandons très respectueusement votre support afin que le Gouvernement porte une attention toute particulière à nos problèmes. Nous sommes au courant du profond effet que votre appui peut apporter afin qu'une revision immédiate soit faite pour tous les Prisonniers de Guerre de Dieppe.

Ce sommaire est présenté pour une troisième fois avec l'espoir que vous, nos représentants élus, parlerez en notre faveur aux personnes qui peuvent rendre note demande effective.

Ce sommaire est présenté afin d'apporter des informations supplémentaires au mémoire que nous avons soumis précédemment, c'est-à-dire le 17 décembre 1965 et aussi en regard du rapport du Dr J. H. Richardson de la Commission Canadienne des Pensions.

Les réclamantions majeures en ce qui concerne l'Acte de la Commission Canadienne des Pensions pour les membres des Forces Armées Canadiennes qui ont servi à Dieppe, sont d'apporter une protection pour les veuves et dépendants en cas de décès prématuré de l'ancien combattant.

If the veteran is in receipt of a pension of 48% or greater, his widow and surviving children will be entitled to pension under the Pension Act and his children will be entitled to the benefits of the Education Assistance Act.

If pension is in payment at the rate of less than 48%, pension will not be continued for the widow and children, and the children would be denied the benefits of the Education Assistance Act, unless it can be shown that the death is attributable to his service.

The relevant section of the Pension Act is quoted below:

> 36 (3) "Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the widow of a member of the Forces who was, at the time of his death, in receipt of a pension in any one of the classes 1 to 11, inclusive, mentioned in Schedule A, or who died while on the strength of the Department for treatment, and, but for his death, would have been in receipt of pension at the rate so provided for any of those classes, is entitled to a pension as if the member had died on Service whether his death was attributable to his service or not."

The main source of apprehension to surviving members of the Dieppe Force who are in receipt of pension at less than 48% is that they may die from causes which are either unknown, or which cannot be specifically stated to have been attributable to service, thus leaving their widows and children with no protection under the Pension Act.

The undermentioned persons who represent the Dieppe prisoners of war are willing to appear before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs (if given the chance to do so) to show just cause why the Dieppe prisoners of war should have a review along those lines used in the almost parallel situation of the Hong Kong prisoners. Yours very truly,

Si l'ancien combattant est récipiendaire d'une pension d'invalidité de 48 p. 100 ou plus, sa veuve et ses dépendants bénéficient d'une pension d'après l'Acte des Pensions et ses enfants sont éligibles à l'assistance éducationnelle. Par contre, si la Pension attribuée est moindre que 48 p. 100, elle ne continuera pas après le décès de l'ancien combattant et, les enfants ne seront pas éligibles à l'assistance éducationelle.

Le paragraphe de l'Acte des Pensions est énuméré ci-dessous:

> (3) «Sauf disposition différente contenue dans la présente loi, lorsqu'un membre des forces touchait, au moment de son décès, une pension de l'une des catégories 1 à 11 inclusivement, mentionnées dans l'annexe A, ou est décédé alors qu'il était porté sur les contrôles du ministère aux fins de traitement et, n'eût été son décès, aurait reçu une pension au taux ainsi prévu pour l'une des catégories, la veuve dudit membre a droit à une pension comme s'il était mort en service, que son décès fût attribuable ou non à son service.

Le plus grand souci des survivants de pension de moins de 48 p. 100 est de mourir pour des causes inconnues ou ne peuvent pas spécialement être attribuables au service, laissant ainsi la veuve et les dépendants non éligibles d'après l'Acte des Pensions.

Les personnes sous-mentionnées qui représentent les Prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, sont prêtes à se présenter devant le Comité Permanent des Affaires des Anciens Combattants si on leur donne l'opportunité, afin de leur démontrer pourquoi le cas des Prisonniers de Guerre doit être revisé.

Pathology of the P.O.W.

Since 1952 when the Hamilton & District P.O.W. Association was first formed, we have always faced the problem of apathy in the P.O.W. Veteran. Oddly enough, this apathy is not so strong among the majority of veterans who are members of various other veterans' organizations.

This apathy does show up strongly among our ex Dieppe Prisoners of War—Why?

Firstly, they suffered a sharp psychological defeat in losing the Battle of Dieppe.

The shock of leaving a land of plenty, the shock of their first bloody fight with the enemy, and their subsequent internment, left these men in a state of apathy which today is still evident. These men sat out the war in prison camps and this alone upset these once very active soldiers a great deal. The loss of freedom, lack of adequate food, shelter, and gainful activity fed this apathy.

When the day arrived and these men were released from the camps, hospitalized, or returned to their units for release from the service, these men were so eager to get out of the service that in many cases they denied the existence of many and various diseases or illnesses which had occurred in the P.O.W. camps. Upon this happening they would report to a D.V.A. Centre requesting treatment. "What a shock!" They found that they had no entitlement; there was nothing written into their documents to substantiate their request. "Now what?" These men appealed through proper channels to the C.P.C., and again were refused treatment or pension.

In the case of the Dieppe P.O.W., from the time they were taken prisoner to date of release, there was not a word of documentary evidence added to their files. It is this lack of documentary evidence that is denying the P.O.W. veteran his rights. Since the C.P.C. demands documentary evidence of maltreatment, lack of care, illness and disease suffered by the P.O.W., these vets are up against a stone wall in their request for adequate treatment and pensions. This deplorable situation has again led the ex-P.O.W. to a state of apathy greater than was experienced as a P.O.W. These veterans are so bitter in their

Depuis 1952, alors que l'Association des Prisonniers de guerre de Hamilton, Ont. fût formée, nous avons toujours fait face à des problèmes d'apathie parmi les anciens prisonniers de guerre. Il est étrange que cette apathie n'est pas aussi saillante parmi la majorité des autres anciens combattants qui font partie des autres organisations.

Cette apathie est très marquée parmi les prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe. Premièrement, ils souffrent d'un sentiment morbide de défaite dû à la perte de la bataille de Dieppe.

L'effet de laisser un pays d'abondance, l'échec de leur première bataille sanglante avec l'ennemi et incidemment, leur internement, tout ceci a laissé ces hommes dans un état d'apathie qui est encore aujourd'hui très évident.

L'effet pour ces hommes si actifs dans le passé, se voir internés durant la plus grande durée de la dernière guerre a été très néfaste pour eux.

La perte de leur liberté, le manque de nourriture, de logement et d'activités ont rendu cette apathie plus intense.

Lorsque le jour de libération arriva, et que ces hommes furent délivrés des camps d'internement, des hôpitaux, où retournèrent à leurs unités respectives afin d'être libérés du service, ces hommes avaient tellement hâte que dans la plupart des cas, ils nièrent l'existence de plusieurs symptômes de maladie ou malaise, lesquels étaient dus à leur internement.

Ils auraient dû s'adresser aux différents centres médicaux du Ministère des Affaires des Anciens Combattants, afin d'obtenir les soins requis.

Quelle fut leur surprise lorsqu'on leur dit qu'ils n'étaient pas éligibles, il n'y avait aucun rapport médical dans leur dossier, afin d'acquiescer à leur demande pour certaines déficiences dues à leur internement. Maintenant que faire? Ils allèrent en appel par l'entremise du bureau des avocats des pensions, mais comme il ne figurait aucune preuve médicale au dossier, leurs demandes furent refusées ou rejetées. Dans le cas des prisonniers de guerre de Dieppe, durant la période d'emprisonnement, jusqu'au jour de leur libération, aucune note médicale n'existait dans leur dosseier. C'est ce manque de preuve qui lésait les prisonniers de guerre.

attitude toward the C.P.C. that they will not even talk to their own executives.

A conclusion was reached by diligent interviews with these veterans. These veterans are still suffering from invisible wounds sustained while P.O.W.'s in the camps of Europe. These wounds are best described by the foregoing pages of this document. It is the considered opinion of all P.O.W. Associations that these ex-P.O.W. be given the benefit of the doubt.

Medical Examination

This Association is aware of the provisions approved by the Department of Veterans Affairs, under which they are entitled to free medical examination. These provisions do not appear to be sufficient protection as they do not overcome the possibility that a member may die unexpectedly, without previous symptoms of manifestations of any disease.

Autopsy

The Association is aware also of the provisions made in the United Kingdom under which an autopsy and investigation is carried out automatically when the death occurs of a former member of the Forces who was a prisoner of war in the European Theatre. In this respect, our membership must once again consider that this procedure provides no comfort to the veteran while he is alive, as he is still faced with a matter of uncertainty in regard to adequate provision to protect his widow and children in the event of his death.

Prisoner of War Conditions

It is perhaps difficult for anyone who did not experience the horror of the German Prison Camps to fully understand the present-day apprehension of the Dieppe Force—an apprehension borne of the knowledge that seemingly-healthy soldiers were overcome by death from causes which were both insidious and incomprehensible to their fellow-prisoners.

It is believed that one of the most complete works of this type is entitled "Pathology of Alors que la Commission Canadienne des Pensions exige des preuves évidentes de mauvais traitements, de manque de soins, maladies de symptômes quelconques subis par les Prisonniers de Guerre, ces anciens combattants font actuellement face à un mur infranchissable en regard de leur demande pour traitements adéquats (ou pension).

Cette déplorable situation a porté les anciens prisonniers de guerre à souffrir d'apathie plus grande que celle expérimentée dans leur internement.

Ces vétérans sont tellement déçus de l'attitude de la Commission Canadienne des Pensions qu'ils n'osent plus s'adresser à l'exécutif de leur association.

Après maintes entrevues, nous en sommes venus à cette conclusion. Ces vétérans souffrent toujours de maux invisibles qu'ils subirent lors de leur internement en Europe. Ces symptômes sont assez bien décris dans les pages qui suivent de ce document.

C'est l'opinion de toutes les associations de prisonniers de guerre que ces vétérans devraient obtenir le bénéfice du doute de la Commission Canadienne des Pensions.

Examen médical

L'Association est au courant des provisions approuvées par le Ministère des Affaires des Anciens Combattants pour lesquelles ils sont éligibles à un examen médical gratis. Mais ceci ne semble pas une protection suffisante car ils omettent la possibilité qu'un membre puisse décéder subitement, sans symptôme préalable ou manifestation d'aucune maladie.

Autopsie

L'Association est aussi au courant qu'au Royaume Uni, lorsqu'un ancien prisonnier de guerre décède, une autopsie et une investigation sont immédiatement ordonnées. Dans ces circonstances, nos membres une fois de plus considèrent que cette procédure n'apporte aucun réconfort au vétéran alors qu'il est vivant, car il doit toujours faire face à l'incertitude en regard de la protection inadéquate de sa veuve et de ses enfants au cas de décès.

La condition des prisonniers de guerre

Il est sans doute difficile pour quiconque n'a pas expérimenté les horreurs des camps de prisonniers de guerre, en Allemagne, de comprendre l'esprit pessimiste des vétérans de Dieppe. Un pessimisme né des connaissances que des soldats apparemment en santé sont décédés subitement de causes inconnues même de leurs camarades prisonniers.

Il est connu que l'ouvrage le plus complet de ces conditions est contenu dans le rapport the Captivity of the Prisoner of War—Tome 11" containing the results of the International Medical Conference on this subject, held in Brussels, November 1st to 4th, 1962.

A resume of this report, edited by the International Confederation of Ex-Prisoners of War, contains information which appears to be relative to the report published by Dr. J. H. Richardson.

Some excerpts from the report of the "PATHOLOGY OF THE CAPTIVITY OF THE PRISONERS OF WAR" are quoted hereunder:

"No doubt statistical studies of the results of internment on a prisoner are difficult to establish. For one thing, witnesses who could serve for comparison cannot be easily grouped in sufficient number. On the other hand in numerous countries it is proved difficult to assemble exact information based on clinical examinations and laboratory tests about our former comrades, due to a certain physical lassitude (fatigue) which often is a result of their captivity."

"For the majority of the prisoners, the years spent in the camps represented a series of privations, enforced work, new dangers of war, which all have influenced their psychosomatic state."

"There followed the stay...without ever getting sufficient food...the work often difficult in a climate we were not used to, driven by guards obsessed by the notion that we had to produce more, absence or scarcity of news from the family."

"The doctors who were interested in the fate of former prisoners have found among our comrades troubles of varying gravity in different organs, but troubles whose frequent appearance, it seems, can be traced back to a common psychosomatic origin."

"Captivity, in tearing the individual from his familiar and professional surroundings to which he has adapted through acquired reflexes, brought about a series of aggressions: Physical aggression, overexertion in marching, in work, in climate, privations, fear, anxiety about the future, breaking off family life."

"The organism made an effort to adapt to captivity; captivity, however, multiplies the aggressions consisting of prolonged imprisonments, lack of sufficient food, compulsory work."

"The successive aggressions disturb the circuit of acquired reflexes at the level of pathologie sur l'internement des prisonniers de guerre Tome II à la suite de la conférence médicale internationale qui eut lieu à Bruxelles du 1er au 4 novembre, 1962.

Un résumé de ce rapport édité par la Conférence Internationale des anciens prisonniers de guerre contient des informations qui apparaissaient au rapport publié par le Dr J. H. Richardson.

Quelques idées générales de ce rapport sur la pathologie de l'internement des prisonniers de guerre vous sont ici présentées.

Il n'y a nul doute que les résultats des études sur l'internement des prisonniers de guerre sont difficiles à définir.

Incidemment, il est difficile d'atteindre suffisamment des témoins et dans plusieurs pays, il n'a pas été facile d'obtenir assez d'informations basées sur des examens de cliniques, tests de laboratoire concernant nos camarades dues à certaines fatigues physiques qui sont souvent le résultat de l'internement.

Pour la majorité des prisonniers de guerre, les années passées dans les camps représentent une série de privations, de travaux forcés, un nouveau danger de guerre qui influence leur état psychosomatique.

Ils ont enduré ce stage sans avoir de nourriture suffisante, le travail souvent pénible, dans un climat dont ils n'étaient pas habitués, conduit par des gardiens obsédés par la nation qu'ils devaient produire plus, sans compter l'absence de nouvelles de leur famille.

Les médecins qui se sont intéressés au cas des anciens prisonniers de guerre, ont constaté parmi nos camarades différents troubles augmentant en gravité dans différents organes, mais les déficiences qui apparaissent plus fréquemment peuvent être retracées par une origine psychosomatique commune.

La captivité tout en arrachant l'individu à son milieu familial auquel il était habitué de vivre depuis son enfance a apporté toute une série d'aggravations, agression physique sur la marche au travail, dans le climat, les privations, la peur, anxiété à propos des éventualités futures.

L'organisme a fait un effort afin de s'adapter à l'internement par contre, ce dernier multiplie les agressions lorsqu'il y eut l'emprisonnement prolongé, nourriture insuffisante et travaux forcés.

L'agression successive gêne les réflexes acquis au niveau (du cortex cérébral) du the cerebral membrane, the thalamus and the formations at the base of the brain."

"The nervous system of our former comrades shows very often evidence of unbalanced functionings; with the weight of advancing years there appear disorders of temper, irritability, disinterestedness in a sentimental sector and, on the other hand, a diminishing of intellectual ability, difficulty in mental concentration, impossibility of a sustained effort."

"In the domaine of psychiatry, it manifests itself as either a slowly advancing asthenia or in chronic form with attacks (Targowla's paroxystic hypermnesic syndrome)."

"In particular reference is made to the report of Dr. Francis Lanthéaume of Neulise, France in his "Introductory Report to Senescence". He reports as follows:

"This problem of fatigue has moreover been studied by authors from various countries and their conclusions are practically identical in noticing the wear caused by a psychic as well as neuro-muscular fatigue. One has also placed the accent on the responsibility of emotional, affective, and nervous shocks in the evolution and precociousness of Senescence."

"Baumgartner" writes:

"The accumulation of physiological and psychological stresses which have a repercussion on the sympathetic system and on the hollow viscera, is responsible for increased mortality among men between the ages of 40 and 70 years."

"On their side J. and M. Postel dealing with the senile psychological feeling", say:

"These causes are mainly of psycho-affective and social order."

"Mr. Boruk insisted particularly on the etiological role of emotional shocks: deaths, violent emotions, changes of job, family conflicts. Hunger, misery, physical and moral stresses, fatigue, climatic and atmospherical injuries, physiological shocks, here are in a few words the causes of precocious senility, to which one must add since a few years, have passed the inopportune eradiations to which the human organisms are submitted."

"For one who lived in prisoner of war camps, it is undeniable that one finds here all the conditions, almost at the Thalamus et de la formation à la base du cerveau.

Le système nerveux de nos camarades montre très souvent des évidences d'un déséquilibre fonctionnel avec le poids des années apparaît d'une part des désordres de tempérament, dans le contexte sentimental, d'autre part par une diminution intellectuelle dans la concentration, impossibilités d'efforts soutenus.

Dans le domaine de la psychiatrie, il y a manifestation de l'avancement de l'asthénie ou sous forme chronique avec attache de (Targowla's paroxystique hypermenesic syndrome).

Particulièrement, référence est faite au rapport du Dr Francis Lanthéaume de Neulise, France, dans son rapport d'introduction sur la sénescence qu'il décrit comme suit:

Ce problème de fatigue est de plus en plus étudié par les auteurs de différents pays et leur conclusion est presque identique à remarquer une usure causée par une fatigue psychique ainsi que neuro-musculaire. Nous avons aussi placé l'accent sur la responsabilité émotive affective et choc nerveux dans l'évolution et la précocité du sénescence.

«Baumgartner écrit»:

L'accumulation physiologique et psychologique accentuée qui a une répercussion sur le Hollow-Viscera est responsable du taux accru de mortalité parmi les hommes de 40 à 70 ans.

De leur côté J. et M. Postel traitant l'effet de la sénilité psychologique déclare: Ces causes sont principalement dues à la psycho-affective et ordre social.

Pour celui qui a vécu dans les camps de prisonniers de guerre, il est indéniable que l'on trouve ici toutes les experimental state, of the incurrence of precocious senescence."

"However, before a prejudiced mind, it is difficult to affirm this, one must also give proof of these declarations."

"Dr. Lanthéaume then quotes a number of eminent physicians who have carried out studies which indicate considerable pre-aging for ex-prisoners of war. He then states as follows:

"This summary, as it is only a short summary in relation to the works published in the last fifteen years, as boring as it may seem, has only aimed to start an investigation on the precocious senility, the premature senescence which seems to be the fate of the ex-prisoners of war."

"It is important that very soon a close network of proofs prove to the reticent Governments, the materiality of our statements. Once again it is a question of helping unfortunate people, victims of fate."

conditions presque à l'état expérimental de l'apparition de la précocité de la sénescence.

Cependant, devant une idée de préjudice, il n'est pas difficile d'affirmer ceci, que l'on doit donner des preuves à ces déclarations.

Le Dr Lanthéaume nomme quelques éminents médecins qui ont fait des études qui indiquent qu'un nombre considérable d'ex-prisonniers de guerre sont (pré âgés), de plus, il note aussi, ce sommaire et vu qu'il n'est qu'un court aperçu en relation avec les ouvrages publiés depuis les quinze années, aussi ennuyeux qu'il puisse être n'a qu'un but, le début d'une investigation sur la sénilité. La sénescence prématurée qui semble être le destin des anciens prisonniers de guerre.

Pathology of the Captivity of the Prisoners of War Brussels, November, 1962

The International Federation of Ex-Servicemen and P.O.W.'s (C.I.A.P.G.) held its Congress in Brussels on November 2nd, 3rd and 4th, 1962.

The aim of the Medical Commission of the A/M was to study the belated sequelae of captivity.

Along with: Reps. World Federation of Ex-Servicemen (F.M.A.C.) the Union of the Interned and Deported of the Resistance (U.I.R.D.O.) several governments, the Committee of the International Red Cross, were: doctors delegated from Belgium, Italy, Japan, Norway, the Netherlands, The German Federal Republic, the U.S.S.R., the U.S.A. and Yugoslavia.

(Writer's note: Canada was represented by a note only, to the Congress.)

In many countries, the legislation enacted regarding ex P.O.W.'s had fixed a precise limit, generally too short. As noted by grievances from P.O.W. Ass'ns. it was noted that these countries adopted a wait and see attitude; Canada was no exception.

The point of view of the doctors on the effects of the prolonged duration of detention, observed during 1940-45 war, was excellently summarized in the conclusion of the Congress

Extrait du Rapport Pathologique sur les Prisonniers de guerre Bruxelles, Novembre 1962

La Fédération Internationale des Anciens Combattants et Prisonniers de guerre (C.I.A.P.G.) tenait son congrès à Bruxelles le 2, 3 et 4 novembre 1962.

Le but de la Commission Médicale était d'étudier les effets de la captivité.

Avec les représentants de la Fédération Mondiale des Anciens Combattants (F.M.A.C.) ainsi que l'union des internés et déportés de la résistance (U.I.R.D.O.), plusieurs représentants de différents gouvernements, le Comité International de la Croix-Rouge, des médecins délégués par la Belgique, l'Italie, le Japon, la Norvège, la Hollande, la République Fédérale de l'Allemagne, l'U.R.S.S., les États-Unis et la Yougoslavie.

(Nous notons ici que le Canada était représenté par une note seulement au congrès).

Dans plusieurs pays, la Législation en vigueur au sujet des Anciens Prisonniers de guerre avait établi une limite précise, trop courte en général. A noter, les griefs des Associations de Prisonniers de guerre. A noter que ces pays adoptèrent une attitude passive, le Canada n'était pas une exception.

Le point de vue des médecins sur l'effet de la prolongation de la durée de la détention observée durant la guerre 1939-1945 a été parfaitement énuméré au terme du Congrès of the World Federation of Ex-Servicemen in The Hague in November, 1961:

The conference considers that there exist affections and "Infirmities, with belated appearance among those who were interned or detailed in concentration camps."

"These conditions can show up at any time after liberation and no time limit can be fixed for their appearance."

"Similar conditions can also be found among ex-P.O.W.'s having lived in exceptionally hard conditions."

During the discussion, it was specified that these conditions were achieved by the severity of the detention, or by its duration. The C.I.A.P.G. asked the doctors to set forth the results of their recent researches: (i.e.)

1. Cardio-vascular pathology
2. Psycho-somatic disorders with complement communications and observations on belated tuberculosis of the P.O.W.'s.
3. Precocious senescence.

Since 1954 the F.N.A.C. has interested itself with the problems of the International Red Cross and subsequently it concentrated its attention on the deported and the P.O.W.'s.

Fifteen years after returning to near normal life, it has become evident "that the suffering endured in P.O.W. camps had inflicted invisible injuries which often proved injurious, in a permanent manner, to the health of these persons and always hastened the ageing of the prisoners having lived in exceptional conditions of stress" (Rogan—F.N.A.C.)

What is required is the means of settling many questions and straying from tradition, to request our Government to guarantee for the ex-P.O.W.'s the best form of reparation, by studying their special needs, whose nature changes as they grow older, and to strive to ease them by taking into account the progress which has been accomplished in the medical, economical and social sciences.

We agree that the Government has taken into consideration the lot of the P.O.W.'s but legislations being as they are, no text will ever be able to bring out exactly the prejudice suffered by living in P.O.W. camps.

de la Fédération des Anciens Prisonniers de guerre à La Haye en novembre 1961:

La Conférence considère qu'il existe affections et infirmités avec apparence à retardement parmi ceux qui ont été internés ou détenus dans les camps d'internement.

Ces conditions peuvent apparaître en tout temps après la libération et aucune limite de temps ne peut être fixée pour leur apparence.

Des conditions semblables se trouvent aussi parmi les anciens prisonniers de guerre qui ont vécu dans des conditions exceptionnellement dures.

Durant la discussion, il a été fait mention que ces conditions étaient le résultat de la dureté de la détention aussi bien que de la longue durée.

La C.I.A.P.G. demande aux médecins de produire les résultats de leurs récentes recherches: (i.e.)

1. Pathologie cardio-vasculaire.
2. Désordres psycho-somatiques, avec attaches et relations aux observations sur les causes déterminantes de la tuberculose chez les anciens prisonniers de guerre.
3. Vieillissement prématuré.

Depuis 1954 la F.N.A.C. s'est beaucoup intéressée aux problèmes de la Croix-Rouge Internationale avec le résultat que plus tard elle mit toute son attention et ses efforts sur le cas des personnes déportées et les anciens prisonniers de guerre.

Quinze années après un retour à une vie presque normale, il est devenu évident «que les sévices endurés dans les camps de prisonniers ont infligé des blessures invisibles et souvent de nature sérieuse et nuisible en permanence, à la santé et au bien-être, produisant un vieillissement très prématuré de ces anciens prisonniers ayant vécu dans des conditions exceptionnelles de «stress». (Rogan—F.M.A.C.).

Ce qu'il nous faut ce sont des moyens pour résoudre plusieurs questions en mettant de côté ce qui se faisait dans le passé, de demander au gouvernement de garantir aux anciens prisonniers de guerre la meilleure formule de compensation, en étudiant leurs besoins spéciaux, qui changent de nature avec le vieillessement, et de s'efforcer d'alléger leurs infirmités en tenant compte des derniers progrès accomplis en médecine et en science économique et sociale.

Nous admettons que le gouvernement est intéressé au sort des anciens prisonniers de guerre mais les lois présentes étant ce qu'elles sont, aucune clause ne serait jamais capable de saisir et définir le préjudice fait à ceux qui ont vécu dans des camps de prisonniers de guerre.

There are general laws which cover our pathology; but the pathology of the P.O.W. is special; we feel no pride and prefer not to speak about it, but the ex-P.O.W. is often an old man when admistratively speaking he is only an adult.

Il y a des lois qui concernent la pathologie dans les grandes lignes: mais la pathologie du prisonnier de guerre est toute autre; nous n'en éprouvons aucun orgueil et préférons n'en pas parler, mais l'ancien prisonnier de guerre est souvent physiquement parlant un vieil homme pendant que d'un point de vue administratif il est encore un adulte.

The legislation on this subject should follow an evolution parallel to that of medical science.

Sur ce sujet les lois devraient donc évoluer de pair avec la science médicale.

This will lead to a more exact appreciation of the belated sequelae which appear among ex-P.O.W.'s and which can manifest themselves at any time after liberation.

Ceci nous conduirait à une appréciation plus exacte des sévices soufferts par les anciens prisonniers de guerre, lesquels se manifestent en aucun temps après la démobilisation.

We request that the P.O.W.'s receive the right to the benefit of the presumption of the origin and the aggravation of their ailments. It is unquestionable that the filiation and the evolution of ailments caused by captivity and which were not ascertained on release or were considered light or not dangerous, and which have transformed themselves into ailments which at present have an important incapacity and a premature senescence.

Nous demandons que les anciens prisonniers de guerre soient accordés la reconnaissance quant à l'origine et à l'aggravation de leurs infirmités, comme ayant été encourues durant leur temps passé dans les camps de prisonniers de guerre.

Il ne fait aucun doute que la cause et l'aggravation de certaines infirmités durant la captivité n'ont pas été bien repérées lors du licenciement ou bien, avaient été considérées de nature bénigne et sans danger, mais que plus tard sont devenues de nature telle à présenter une sérieuse infirmité et la cause directe d'un vieillissement précoce.

If the P.O.W.'s are affected with a particular predilection for certain ailments, it is because captivity has had an unquestionable influence on their genesis.

Si un ancien prisonnier de guerre semble avoir moins de résistance à certaines maladies, ceci nous croyons est dû sans contredit à l'influence de la captivité sur l'origine de ces maladies.

If the captivity has had an influence on their genesis, the imputability of these ailments must be reconsidered, even if this late showing of ailments has not allowed, from the point of view of present legislation, these ailing P.O.W.'s to benefit from the presumption of origin.

Si la captivité a influencé l'origine des infirmités, la cause de ces origines doit être reconsidérée, même si un peu sur le tard la preuve des infirmités n'est pas accordée du point de vue de la législation présente, ces anciens prisonniers de guerre devraient se voir accorder le bénéfice du doute.

The belated sequelae of the pathology of captivity are neither a catch nor a free supposition, but a harsh fact which asserts itself more than ever and grows more vigorous every day.

Les suites tardives de la pathologie de la captivité n'est pas un piège ou une supposition toute gratuite, mais un fait bien réel qui s'affermit et se prouve de jour en jour.

It is therefore legitimate that the promiscuity, the feeding, the climate and all the conditions imposed on P.O.W.'s, be the basis of a different pathology from that of a sedentary population.

Il est conséquemment légitime de dire que la promiscuité, la nourriture, le climat et toutes les autres conditions imposées aux prisonniers de guerre, soient acceptées comme base pour une pathologie différente de celle des populations sédentaires.

The repetition of stress, which does not exist in normal life, is capable of causing injuries which might only appear later on, its evolution may be long and insidious and caused by involuntary circumstances.

La répétition de contraintes qui n'existent pas dans la vie normale est capable de produire des infirmités qui n'apparaîtront que sur le tard, leurs évolutions étant lentes et insidieuses et amenées à la surface par des circonstances involontaires.

Under difficult hygienic conditions, poor nutrition and hospital care, infectious diseases must play a large part in the life of men in a P.O.W. camp.

Rheumatism plays an extremely important role in the case of heart muscles and valvular system. Nutrition troubles and dystrophia can cause high albumen losses and various avitaminosis. There is also the grave situation where a psychosomatic state is induced into the P.O.W. by alimentary privations, physical and moral coercions.

We submit that the repercussion of captivity manifested itself at the level of all organs of the bodies of the P.O.W.'s. These symptoms continue to show themselves and the disturbances which characterize them, become more frequent and noticeable as our comrades grow older.

We now come to a premature conclusion.

Although the problem of pensions for Ex-P.O.W.'s cannot constitute a general rule, there are, nevertheless, particular cases, individual and far from exceptional cases, special affections for which a scale of pensions should be established. Once these individual cases all have been specified, they should be submitted to medico-military tribunals, who have as their function, the solution to our problems.

The Ex-Prisoner of War Associations, together with the help of our medical and pension commissions and with the help of the World Federation of Ex-Servicemen, should try to obtain from our Government a practical means of adapting the existing legislations.

We Ex-Prisoners of War, who have all known the same horror of war, the sweetness of Peace and the price of Liberty, can only hope that our pleas will be heard by those who are at the disposal of medical science and the Peace of all men.

Dans des conditions d'hygiène lamentables, une nourriture insuffisante est déficiente, un système de soins médicaux rudimentaires, il n'est pas surprenant que les maladies de toutes sortes ont eu une grande part dans la vie de ces anciens prisonniers de guerre.

Le rhumatisme occupe un rôle extrêmement important dans le cas de maladies de cœur en ce qui a trait au système valvulaire.

Troubles de nutrition et dystrophie peuvent causer de grandes pertes d'albumine et aussi plusieurs sortes d'avitominosis.

Il y a aussi une grave situation où un état de psychomatose est induit dans un ancien prisonnier de guerre par privations alimentaires, et sévices mentaux et moraux.

Nous disons que les répercussions de la captivité se présentent dans tous les organes du corps des anciens prisonniers de guerre.

Que ces symptômes continuent de se manifester et que les troubles qui les caractérisent deviennent plus nombreux, et plus apparents à mesure que nos camarades vieillissent.

Nous en venons maintenant à une conclusion initiale, peut-être prématurée.

Bien que le problème des pensions pour les anciens prisonniers de guerre ne peut être considéré comme règle générale, il y a cependant, des cas fort particuliers et individuels, sans être des cas exceptionnels, où certaines affections devraient être mesurées selon un barème établi.

Une fois que tous ces cas individuels auraient été signalés, ils devraient être présentés à un tribunal médico-militaire, qui devrait avoir pour fonctions de trouver la solution à nos problèmes.

L'association des Anciens Prisonniers de Guerre assistée de nos commissions de médecine et de pension, avec l'aide de la Fédération Mondiale des Vétérans devraient essayer d'obtenir de notre gouvernement des moyens pratiques à être adoptés dans la législation présente.

Les anciens prisonniers de guerre, qui ont connu les mêmes horreurs de guerre, les bienfaits de la Paix et du prix de la liberté, ne peuvent qu'attendre que nos demandes seront écoutées par ceux qui se dévouent à la science médicale et à la Paix mondiale.

House of Commons Debates
Volume 112 — Number 67 — 2nd
Session — 27th Parliament
Official Report
Friday, October 27, 1967
Speaker — The Honourable Lucien
Lamoureux

Mr. Ormiston 3567

It is my opinion that a general overhaul should be made of pension legislation. This legislation has not been amended for quite a few years. It was originally brought forward in a hurry to expedite assistance to veterans who had completed their wartime service. In light of what has transpired in the last few years a general review of veterans pension legislation should be made.

3567

I presume the representations and appeals made from time to time to the minister and the department by various organizations have been considered. We would like to hear what is in store for our veterans in the next year. The cost of living has made it imperative that increases in pensions be considered and now would be a good time to let our veterans know what they can expect in the future.

3568

Over the last year and a half many representations have been made to the minister and his department to give us some outline of what can be expected in the nature of veterans legislation. I hope that today the minister will afford himself of the opportunity to deal with this question and will give us some idea of what we may expect in the future.

Mr. Lambert 3569

There is another matter about which I would like to say a few words. It also concerns prisoners of war. Sometime ago I placed a question on the order paper asking whether the treatment section of the Department of Veterans Affairs intended to call in prisoners of war through the various treatment centres in the country to give them a check-over either there or through the facilities of the Canadian Pension Commission. I consider this to be treatment of a preventive nature. There is no use waiting for a veteran to come in and say: Iam ill and this is attributable to a disability incurred during the war. The minister is in the same position as I am. We are both former prisoners of war. He will recall the agitation on both sides of the house with

M. Ormiston 3567

A mon avis, une refonte complète de la législation sur les pensions, qui n'a subi aucune modification depuis des années, s'impose. Adoptée hâtivement à l'origine pour secourir les anciens combattans qui avaient terminé leur service du temps de guerre, elle devrait subir une révision générale à la lumière des événements de ces dernières années.

3567

Je suppose qu'on a tenu compte des instances et des appels adessés de temps à autre au ministre et à son ministère par différentes organisations. Nous aimerions qu'on nous dise ce que l'année prochaine réserve à nos anciens combattans. Le coût de la vie nous fait une obligation impérative de considérer une augmentation de leurs pensions et ce serait le bon moment pour mettre nos anciens combattants au courant de ce qu'ils peuvent espérer de l'avenir.

3568

Depuis dix-huit mois on a présenté de nombreuses instances au ministre et à son ministère pour qu'ils nous donnent une idée de ce qu'on peut attendre en fait de lois relatives aux anciens combattants. J'espère qu'aujourd'hui le ministre profitera de l'occasion pour exposer la question et nous donner une idée de ce qu'il compte faire dans l'avenir.

M. Lambert 3569

Il y a un autre point sur lequel j'aimerais m'arrêter quelque peu. Il s'agit aussi des prisonniers de guerre. J'avais fait inscrire il y a quelque temps une question au Feuilleton. Je voulais savoir si la section des traitements du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants avait l'intention de convoquer les prisonniers de guerre aux divers centres de traitements du pays afin de leur faire subir des examens médicaux dans ces centres ou par les services de la Commission canadienne des pensions. Je considère qu'il s'agit là de traitements préventifs. Il ne sert à rien d'attendre qu'un ancien combattant vienne nous dire: «Je suis malade et c'est à cause de quelque invalidité subie durant la guerre.» Le ministre lui-même se trouve dans la même position regard to the Hong Kong prisoners of war. I think that finally the right steps were taken on their behalf and none too soon. However, I suggest to him that the same applies to other prisoners of war whose medical histories after incarceration have followed the same pattern.

Relatively speaking the minister and I did not suffer too much, but I know of many men who had to subsist for longer period of time on raw sugar beets which they pulled out of frozen fields. How has this affected them? We are not able to say whether any of these men who have died may have done so five or ten years earlier than they should have. And yet what do we know about those who are still suffering from the effects of the war? I think that here again we are missing an opportunity. I am sure that the treatment services have learned a great deal from the examinations of the Hong Kong prisoners of war conducted in the past few years. The same could be done with all the other prisoners of war. This is what I would call a form of preventive medicine. Their experiences cannot be duplicated. After all, there are not that many of these men who may serve as guinea-pigs, and experiments cannot be conducted easily with regard to this type of condition. I strongly urge the minister to reconsider the position taken by his department in the reply to my question. I really feel that we are passing up a truly worthwhile opportunity.

Mr. Herridge 3570

At the present time the major concern of veterans in Canada is an increase in the disability pension and the war veterans allowance. It is obvious that this does concern veterans and their dependants and veterans organizations. In order to indicate the extent of their concern I show the minister the over 100 letters I have received to date on this issue. There is a regular campaign going on in Kootenay West. We have ten branches of the Royal Canadian Legion. I will give the minister the letters later, but they show the interest in this question and the need for increases.

3570

Our whole system of judging the rate of pension is wrong. In the first instance it was que moi. Nous sommes tous deux d'anciens prisonniers de guerre. Qu'il se rappelle l'agitation qu'avait causée des deux côtés de la Chambre la question des prisonniers de guerre de Hong-kong. On a finalement pris les dispositions appropriées en leur nom, et pas trop tôt. Toutefois, je lui signale que la même chose s'applique aux autres prisonniers de guerre dont la fiche médicale après leur incarcération a suivi la même tendance.

3569

Le ministre et moi-même n'avons, relativement, pas trop souffert, mais je sais que nombreux sont ceux qui se sont nourris, durant de longues périodes de temps, de betteraves à sucre crues qu'ils arrachaient dans les champs gelés. Comment cela a-t-il pu altérer leur santé? Nous ne pouvons déterminer si ces hommes ont pu mourir cinq ou dix ans avant l'âge normal. Pourtant, que savons-nous de ceux qui souffrent encore des effets de la guerre? Je crois que nous manquons encore une occasion favorable. Je suis certain que les services de traitement ont beaucoup appris à la suite de l'examen des prisonniers de guerre de Hong-kong, ces quelques dernières années. On pourrait faire de même pour tous les autres prisonniers de guerre. C'est ce que j'appellerais de la prophylaxie. Leur expérience ne peut être répétée. Somme toute, il n'y a pas tellement de ces hommes qui peuvent servir de cobayes, et il n'est pas facile d'effectuer des expériences sur ce genre d'état. Je recommande instamment au ministre de revenir sur la position prise par son ministère dans sa réponse à ma question. J'estime vraiment que nous manquons une excellente occasion.

M. Herridge 3570

Et maintenant, monsieur le président, je voudrais souligner que le principal souci des anciens combattants au Canada est de voir augmenter la pension d'invalidité et l'allocation pour service de guerre. Il est évident que cela est un sujet de préoccupation non seulement pour les anciens combattants et pour les personnes à leur charge, mais encore pour les organisations d'anciens combattants. Afin d'indiquer la gravité de ces préoccupations, je montre au ministre la centaine de lettres que j'ai reçues jusqu'ici à ce sujet. Une campagne en règle est menée à Kootenay-Ouest. Nous y avons dix branches de la Légion Royale Canadienne. Je donnerai les lettres au ministre un peu plus tard; elles montrent l'intérêt que suscite cette question et la nécessité des augmentations en cause.

3570

Notre façon d'évaluer le taux de pension est entièrement mauvaise. On l'a d'abord étabased on the wage of a casual labourer. The increases in pensions have not been equal to the increases received by casual labourers thus far. This is the first reason for discontent. The second reason is the rapid increase in the cost of living during the last two or three years. I believe these arguments are soundly based.

3570

Canada has a generally good record with regard to veterans legislation. However, we are reaching a stage now where we have to approach our problems in this field on an international basis rather than on a strictly national basis. Before I sit down I want to bring to the attention of the members of the committee what has been done in this respect. I happen to be a member of the World Veterans Federation which has done a lot of constructive work in respect of improving veterans legislation generally in all countries of the world. I know that members of the Legion and veterans who will receive a copy of Hansard containing this day's proceedings will want to know something about what has been done. I should like, therefore, to place a few facts on the record.

3570

This organization, one might say, is the counterpart of the International Labour Organization, The World Federation of Farm Women, the World Health Organization and organizations of that type which have resulted from the realization that if we are going to solve our problems satisfactorily we have to solve them almost on the basis of an international set of rules. This is what has been done to date. The organization has held its third conference on legislation with regard to veterans affairs. Under the heading "International Documentation on Benefits for War Victims", the conference recommended the assembling by all means at its disposal, with the assistance of governments and member associations, of the fullest possible data bearing on the establishment of valid comparisons of the purchasing power of national currencies, gross national revenues, national budgets, average wages and the number of war victims in receipt of benefits in relation both to the amount of benefits granted and to modifications of legislation in this field. I believe that suggestion was made as a result of considerable thought.

The second heading was "Co-operation in Promoting Veterans Protection". The conference called upon veterans organizations and competent governmental institutions pursuing blie d'après le salaire d'un manœuvre d'emploi intermittent. Jusqu'à présent, les pensions n'ont pas augmenté autant que les salaires des manœuvres. Voilà le premier motif de mécontentement. Le deuxième est la hausse rapide du coût de la vie depuis deux ou trois ans. An mon sens, ces griefs sont bien fondés.

3570

A tout prendre le Canada peut être fier de ses lois relatives aux anciens combattants. Nous en arrivons toutefois au point où il y a lieu d'aborder nos problèmes dans ce domaine d'un point de vue international plutôt que strictement national. Avant de me rasseoir, je tiens à attirer l'attention des membres du comité sur ce qui a été fait à cet égard. Je suis membre de la Fédération mondiale des anciens combattants, qui a fait beaucoup pour améliorer la législation relative aux anciens combattants de tous les pays du monde. Je sais que les légionnaires et les anciens combattants qui recevront le hansard d'aujourd'hui voudront savoir un peu ce qu'elle a accompli. Voilà pourquoi je tiens à faire consigner certaines choses au compte rendu.

3570

La Fédération est l'équivalent, peut-on dire, de l'Organisation internationale du travail, de la Fédération mondiale des femmes d'agriculteurs, de l'Organisation mondiale de la santé et d'autres organismes analogues, tous fondés sur le principe que la solution effective de nos problèmes repose presque absolument sur des règles internationales. Voici ce qu'on a accompli à ce jour. La Fédération a tenu sa troisième conférence sur les lois relatives aux affaires des anciens combattants. Sous la rubrique: «Documentation internationale sur les prestations aux victimes de la guerre», la conférence a proposé que soit réunie, par tous les moyens disponibles et avec la collaboration des gouvernements et des associations affiliées, une documentation des plus fouillées pour qu'on puisse établir des comparaisons valables concernant le pouvoir d'achat des devises nationales, les revenus nationaux bruts. les budgets nationaux, les salaires moyens et le nombre des victimes de la guerre qui sont indemnisées, en fonction tant du chiffre des prestations que des modifications apportées aux lois pertinentes. Je crois que cette proposition a été faite après mûre réflexion.

3571

On a parlé ensuite de «la coopération en vue d'assurer une meilleure protection aux anciens combattants». La conférence a exhorté les associations d'anciens combattants humanitarian aims for the protection of veterans and their dependants to develop comprehensive mutual cooperation for the purpose of completing and improving systems of protection of veterans, resistants and war victims.

3571

The next subject was "Indemnification for Damages and Illnesses Resulting Indirectly from Disabilities Already Giving Entitlement to Indemnification". The conference recommended that governments ensure the indemnification of any aggravation occuring in the somatic state of a person disabled in war or while performing military service, not only when it is established medically that his recognized lesions or sicknesses were caused exclusively by a disability previously recognized as being war or service connected but also where a consensus of medical opinion makes it possible to consider that the predominant cause of the new disability is the accepted war disablement. They recommended also the introduction into the legislation of countries concerned of provisions which make possible a benevolent, clear and uniform application of the relevant regulations.

3571

The conference also discussed the discrimination existing against the less severely disabled in the matter of pensions and advocated scales of pensions proportional to disability ratings. There was a recommendation that the governments concerned resist any such tendency, accord to the less severely disabled their true worth and respect their right and, with this end in view, ensure that scales of pensions are directly proportional to the basic pension related to the medical assessment of the disablement.

3571

The conference then dealt with the influence of age on war pension rates. They called upon governments to introduce, where necessary, legislation whereby the disabled are entitled to the undiminished rate of their disability pension as from the age of 60, or earlier in cases where they have been in receipt of such pensions for a period of ten years.

3571

The next subject dealt with was the adjustment of war victims pensions. The conference went on to recommend that governments establish pensions and other benefits in line with rising national standards.

et les organismes officiels chargés du bien-êtres des anciens combattants et de leurs familles à collaborer de leur mieux afin d'établir et d'améliorer des sytèmes de protection pour les anciens combattants, les membres de la résistance et les victimes de guerre.

3571

Le sujet de discussion suivant était «l'indemnisation pour les dommages et les maladies résultant indirectement d'une invalidité qui donne déjà droit à une indemnisation». La conférence a recommandé que les gouvernements accordent une indemnité pour toute aggravation d'une affection somatique contractée pendant le service militaire ou à la guerre, non seulement lorsque les médecins reconnaissent que les maladies ou lésions en cause proviennent exclusivement d'une invalidité reconnue comme étant le résultat de la guerre ou du service militaire, mais lorsque les médecins s'accordent pour considérer l'invalidité de guerre comme étant la cause principale de la nouvelle infirmité. La conférence a recommandé également que les pays intéressés modifient leurs lois en y incorporant des dispositions permettant d'appliquer les règlements pertinents de façon claire, uniforme et bienveillante.

3571

Puis, la conférence a discuté la discrimination envers les personnes frappées d'une invalidité relativement légère lorsqu'il s'agit de pensions et a préconisé une échelle de pensions proportionnelle à l'incapacité. Elle a exprimé le vœu que les gouvernements repoussent toute tendance à la discrimination, accordent à ces personnes ce qu'elles méritent et ce qui leur revient de droit et, à cette fin, assurent une échelle de pensions directement proportionnelle à la pension et fondée sur l'évaluation médicale de l'incapacité.

3571

On est ensuite passé à l'effet de l'âge sur les taux de pension de guerre. On a invité les gouvernements à présenter, au besoin, des mesures législatives qui permettent aux invalides de toucher une pension d'invalidité non réduite à partir de l'âge de 60 ans ou plus tôt lorsqu'ils la touchent depuis dix ans.

3571

Ensuite, il a été question du rajustement des pensions des victimes de guerre. Il a été recommandé, lors de la conférence, que des gouvernements fixent les pensions et autres prestations selon l'amélioration des normes de leur pays.

Mr. Churchill 3574

Why does the minister not say to the people of this country: you have a continuing responsibility for the disabled veterans who fought in the wars for freedom for Canada? Let him stress this point. He is the only member of the cabinet who is charged with this responsibility, although I would hope other members of the cabinet share it, but someone has to do this and keep on doing it because human nature is such that we tend to forget when things are not drawn to our attention.

3574

The grave danger which faces the veterans of Canada is that with the passage of time people generally will tend to forget them. There is a new generation coming up. Fortunately it has been free from having to make sacrifices in warfare, but that new generation should be interested in the history of our country, should know something of the fight for freedom that was carried on by its predecessors and should be steeled in its own will to face similar hazards if called upon to do so.

3575

Let us not carelessly brush aside or treat as something insignificant the care of our disabled veterans. The minister should have put the figures on the record to show the number of people still suffering. Why did he not say that of the approximately 33,000 disabled pensioners of the first world war almost 6,000 are men who are in the category of 75 per cent to 100 per cent disability? They have carried that burden for 50 years. Fancy being a 100 per cent disabled pensioner for 50 years. No greater sacrifice has been made by any citizen of this country than that made by the men who have carried that burden. The minister should draw this to our attention.

3575

The minister should also indicate the figures for the second world war and Korea to show that the problem exists, that it cannot be brushed aside, and that it will remain with us for a great many years. First world war veterans, of course, are on the downward slope. There are very few of them under 70 years of age. In another 15 years they will have gone over the precipice. But second world war veterans are going to be around for a long time and the citizens of this country must gratefully bear the burden of sustaining these men who risked their lives in order that Canada would be free. The Minister of Veterans Affairs carries the responsibil-

M. Churchill 3574

Pourquoi le ministre ne dit-il pas aux Canadiens: «Vous avez une responsabilité continue envers les anciens combattants infirmes qui ont combattu lors de deux guerres pour la liberté du Canada»? Qu'il souligne ce point. Il est le seul membre du cabinet chargé de cette responsabilité, quoique pour ma part j'aurais souhaité que d'autres la partagent. Mais quelqu'un doit le faire et revenir à la charge, car la nature humaine est telle que nous sommes portés à oublier ce qu'on ne nous signale pas.

3574

Les anciens combattants canadiens courent un sérieux danger: celui de se voir peu à peu oubliés. La génération actuelle est une nouvelle génération qui n'a heureusement pas dû se sacrifier pour la guerre; elle devrait, cependant, s'intéresser à l'histoire de notre pays, connaître l'essentiel de la lutte pour la liberté qu'ont menée ses prédécesseurs et galvaniser sa propre résolution de faire face à de semblables dangers si elle y était un jour appelée.

3575

Ne soyons pas désinvoltes en ce qui concerne le souci de nos anciens combattants; ne les traitons pas en quantité négligeable. Le ministre aurait dû faire figurer au dossier les chiffres qui attestent le nombre de personnes qui souffrent encore. Pourquoi n'a-t-il pas cité celui des quelque 33,000 pensionnés invalides de la Première Guerre mondiale, dont environ 6,000 appartiennent à la catégorie de ceux qui ont 75 pour cent d'invalidité? Ils ont porté ce fardeau pendant 50 ans. Qu'on imagine ce que cela représente d'être un invalide à 100 pour cent pendant 50 ans. Aucun citoyen de notre pays n'a accompli un sacrifice plus grand que celui de ces hommes. Le ministre devrait attirer notre attention sur ces faits.

3575

Le ministre devrait aussi nous donner les chiffres pour la seconde guerre mondiale et celle de Corée, afin de nous montrer que le problème existe, qu'on ne saurait en faire abstraction et qu'il subsistera encore très longtemps. Évidemment, les anciens combattants de la Grande Guerre sont au déclin de leur vie. Rares sont ceux de moins de 70 ans. Dans 15 ans, ils auront disparu. Mais il y aura encore des anciens combattants de la seconde guerre pendant longtemps, et les Canadiens doivent accepter avec reconnaissance de secourir ces hommes qui ont risqué leur vie pour préserver la liberté du Canada. Le ministre des Affaires des anciens combat-ity of repeating that message time and time again.

Mr. Martin (Timmins) 3578

The other point I would like to raise has to do with the treatment of our war veterans allowance recipients who also happen to be old age pensioners. I have raised this matter before; in fact I raised it last spring during the committee hearings, as the minister may recall. I have since heard of a number of cases of veterans of the first world war who were recipients of old age security and also of a partial war veterans allowance pension who have found that the money which the Minister of National Health and Welfare put into one pocket for old age pensions was promptly taken out of the other pocket for war veterans allowances. I think we should remember that the reason for $30 supplement was given to old age pensioners was that old age pensioners were in need and that they were not receiving a sufficient pension to meet their basic needs in view of the cost of living today. Having recognized this, the department proceeded to give them a small increase.

3578

The funny part of the whole thing is that the different sets of rules in the games that the government plays with the old people have meant that under the rules of the old age security game they could qualify even though they were in receipt of the war veterans allowance but under the rules of war veterans allowance game the recipients fell afoul of the law if they received extra money on their old age pension. The most vicious feature of all in many of these cases was that when the department finally got through the red tape in giving the extra $30 a month it was late in the year, July, August or September, and since the increase was retroactive to the first of this year it constituted an overpayment. We found that not only were the war veterans allowances out by the $30 which they received in addition to the old age security pension but they were cut even more to recoup the so-called overpayments. I cannot think of anything more vicious in the treatment of our veterans.

Mr. MacRae 3581

The time has now come when veterans pensions must be increased. We know the unpleasant economic facts of life in this nation and that inflation is one of the great problems. The cost of living falls most heavily on those men and woemn on fixed incomes, such peotants se doit de revenir là-dessus constamment.

M. Martin (Timmins) 3578

Je voudrais aussi parler de la manière dont on traite les bénéficiaires des allocations aux anciens combattants qui touchent aussi des pensions de vieillesse. J'ai déjà soulevé la question; de fait, je l'ai soulevée le printemps dernier pendant les audiences du comité, comme le ministre doit s'en souvenir. Depuis, j'ai entendu parler d'un nombre de cas d'anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale qui touchent des pensions de la sécurité de la vieillesse, ainsi que des pensions partielles à titre d'allocations de guerre. Ceux-ci estiment que les pensions de vieillesse que leur verse d'une part, le ministre de la Santé nationale et du Bien-être social, leur sont promptement retirées d'autre part au titre des allocations aux anciens combattants. Nous devrions nous rappeler, je pense, que le supplément de $30 aux pensions de la vieillesse est justement versé parce que le gouvernement a enfin compris que les vieillards pensionnés en avaient besoin, leurs pensions étant bien insuffisantes pour répondre à leurs besoins fondamentaux en raison du coût de la vie à l'heure actuelle. Ayant reconnu cela, le ministère est passé à l'action et a légèrement haussé les pensions.

3578

Le plus amusant, c'est qu'en vertu des différentes règles des jeux que joue notre gouvernement avec les vieillards, ceux-ci pourraient satisfaire aux exigences relatives à la sécurité de la vieillesse même s'ils touchent une allocation d'ancien combattant, mais en vertu du règlement applicable à ces allocations, les bénéficiaires enfreignent la loi s'ils reçoivent un supplément à la pension de vieillesse. Pour comble d'injustice, dans une foule de ces cas, avant que le ministère en ait fini avec les formalités et verse le supplément de $30, l'année était déjà avancée—c'était en juillet, août et septembre—et comme l'augmentation était rétroactive au premier de l'an, il y a eu paiement en trop. Non seulement le supplément de $30 à la pension de vieillesse a-t-il été déduit des allocations aux anciens combattants, mais les prétendus paiements indus en ont aussi été défalqués. Est-il façon plus injuste de traiter nos anciens combattants?

M. MacRae 3581

Le moment est venu d'augmenter les pensions des anciens combattants. Nous savons que la situation économique est difficile dans notre pays et que l'inflation est un grand problème. Le coût de la vie retentit plus durement sur les hommes et les femmes à revenus ple as was pensioners, the dependants of veterans and federal civil service superannuates.

Those who belong to the powerful labour unions can strike, and they do with regularity. In this way they are able to force up their remuneration. But the veterans of this country and their dependants have no one other than the members of this house to speak for them. This is why I make no excuse for pressing this matter in the house upon the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The time has now come when there should be a substantial increase in disability pensions, in war veterans allowances, in pensions to disabled veterans, indeed in the payments to all those who are receiving assistance of this sort.

Mr. Patterson 3583

I would also like to support the representations made by the Hon. member for Timmins who referred to the fact that there are veterans who find their pensions have been reduced because they are now in receipt of the old age pension income supplement. It seems very strange that although veterans pensions are not taken into consideration in the establishment of people's right to the income supplement, the income supplement itself affects veterans pensions.

Mr. Winch 3584

It has been some time since the Wood commission was appointed to study veterans problems, legislation, administration and regulations. A committee was also set up to deal with the financial aspects of veterans pensions. It is not necessary to remind the house that a period of over a year has passed since the minister indicated that the report of the Wood commission would be forthcoming. Because the report has not been received the government, through the minister, introduced an interim increase of 15 per cent in veterans pensions. He pointed out that this was only an interim increase and that the situation would be remedied as soon as the Wood report was received and the committee's fiscal recommendations has been considered. Almost another year has elapsed and we are still awaiting the Wood commission report and the committee's fiscal recommendations.

3584

The priority list of legislative items outlined by the Prime Minister for this year did not contain any mention of veterans pensions and contained not one word in respect fixes, comme les pensionnés de guerre, les personnes à la charge d'anciens combattants et les agents pensionnés de l'État.

3581

Ceux qui sont membres de puissants syndicats ouvriers peuvent se mettre en grève et ils le font régulièrement. Ainsi ils peuvent faire augmenter leur rémunération. Mais les anciens combattants du Canada et leurs personnes à charge n'ont que les députés pour parler en leur nom. Voilà pourquoi je ne crois pas devoir m'excuser d'insister sur cette question auprès du ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants. L'heure est venue d'augmenter considérablement les pensions d'invalidité, les allocations aux anciens combattants, les pensions aux anciens combattants invalides, en fait toutes les prestations versées à ceux qui reçoivent une telle aide.

M. Patterson 3583

J'aimerais aussi appuyer les instances du député de Timmins (M. Martin), qui nous a rappelé que la pension de certains anciens combattants a été réduite parce qu'ils touchent maintenant le supplément de revenu aux vieillards pensionnés. Il paraît très étrange que, bien que les pensions des anciens combattants ne comptent pas dans l'établissement du droit des gens au supplément de revenu, le supplément de revenu lui-même affecte la pension des anciens combattants.

M. Winch 3584

La création du comité constitué pour étudier les problèmes des anciens combattants ainsi que les lois, l'administration et les règlements qui s'y rapportent remonte déjà à un certain temps. Ce comité devait aussi s'occuper des aspects financiers des pensions des anciens combattants. Dois-je rappeler à la Chambre que plus d'un an s'est écoulé depuis que le ministre à laissé entendre que le rapport du comité Woods était en route. Le rapport n'étant pas arrivé, le gouvernement, par le truchement du ministre, décréta une augmentation provisoire de 15 p. 100 des pensions des anciens combattants. Il a signalé que ce n'était qu'une augmentation provisoire et qu'on remédierait à la situation dès que le rapport Woods serait présenté et que les recommandations du comité en matière fiscale auraient été examinées. Depuis, près d'une année s'est encore écoulée et nous attendons toujours ce rapport et ces recommandations.

3584

of any change or increase on an interim basis between now and the receipt of the Wood report. It is obvious that as far as this government and the minister are concerned the veterans of this country have been forgotten. We all pay tribute to the senior citizens and pioneers of Canada but the government has apparently forgotten those who volunteered and risked their lives for this country. During this past centennial year we should remember the hundreds of thousands who offered their time and their lives during wartime not only for this country but to protect the concept of democracy in the free world. These people have now been forgotten.

The veterans of this country and the dependants of those who were killed have the right to expect top priority to be given to the introduction of a bill to provide a further interim increase to our veterans. I refer not only to those on veterans pension but those on veterans allowance.

3585

Action should be taken at once to correct this situation, and those on veterans allowance should not be discriminated against as they were last year, when in effect they received no increase whatsoever because of the means test, or to use the polite language of the government, the needs test. More than that, what has happened in this respect from the first world war through to the second world war is now almost a matter of history. There has been a denial of fair treatment by governments of this country to forces which have already been mentioned, namely those who served in the Korean war, the firefighting corps and the merchant marine service, which in many respects was just as much in a firing line as those on active service.

3585

There was no mention, in the list of priorities announced by the Prime Minister, of legislation to improve the lot of our veterans.

Mr. Pugh 3586

The veterans themselves are writing letters, but the government is stalling and stalling. It says to the veterans complacently, "Tomorrow is the day quite possible, and if we can, we will try to get down to it and give you an answer." The minister must do better than that.

Mr. Webb 3587

Under the present regulations a veteran is discouraged from showing initiative and un mot ne laisse prévoir un rajustement ou une hausse provisoire d'ici la réception du rapport Woods. Tout indique que le gouvernement et le ministre ont oublié les anciens combattants. Nous rendons tous hommage aux vieillards qui ont édifié ce pays, mais le gouvernement, semble-t-il, fait peu de cas de ceux qui ont consacré volontairement leur vie à leur pays. Nous devons, en cette année du centenaire, nous rappeler les centaines de milliers de Canadiens qui ont sacrifié leur temps et leur vie pendant la guerre non seulement pour leur propre pays, mais pour défendre les principes démocratiques du monde libre. On les a oubliés maintenant, ces gens-là.

3585

Les anciens combattants et les familles des militaires tués ont le droit de s'attendre à ce que la priorité soit donnée à un projet de loi visant à leur accorder d'autres augmentations provisoires. Je ne parle pas seulement de ceux qui touchent une pension, mais aussi de ceux qui reçoivent une allocation.

3585

Il faut agir immédiatement pour corriger cette situation; ceux qui reçoivent des allocations aux anciens combattants ne doivent pas subir la discrimination dont ils ont été victimes l'an dernier alors qu'ils n'ont reçu aucune augmentation à cause de l'évaluation des ressources ou, pour employer l'euphémisme du gouvernement, l'évaluation des besoins. En outre, ce qui s'est produit dans ce domaine depuis la première grande guerre jusqu'à la seconde est passé à l'histoire. Les gouvernements du pays ont refusé de traiter équitablement les troupes dont il a été déjà question, à savoir celles qui ont servi pendant la guerre de Corée, le corps des sapeurs-pompiers et la marine marchande qui, dans un certain sens, était autant sur la ligne de feu que les hommes en activité de service.

3585

Dans la liste des priorités annoncées par le premier ministre on n'a mentionné aucune mesure législative destinée à améliorer le sort de nos anciens combattants.

Mr. Pugh 3586

Les anciens combattants eux-mêmes écrivent des lettres, mais le gouvernement, lui, ne fait que temporiser. Il leur dit avec suffisance que ce sera peut-être pour demain mais que s'il le peut, il essaiera de leur fournir une réponse. Le ministre doit faire mieux que cela.

M. Webb 3587

Les règlements actuels tendent à dissuader les anciens combattants de toute initiative et endeavouring to keep himself busy, thereby earning a few extra dollars. In some cases veterans have a few chickens or a cow to supply eggs or milk for their families. Yet when the D.V.A. representative has called on them this has been calculated as income. Also the fact that a veteran owned a decent car to transport his family here and there was deplored by the representatives of the department. Surely this is not the wish of the Canadian people. In my opinion they want their veterans to be treated as well as veterans are treated in any other country. I hope the minister will consider these matters.

The National Dieppe Prisoner of War Association wishes the Minister to give serious consideration to the remarks made by Mr. Webb.

Thank you.

NATIONAL DIEPPE PRISONER OF WAR ASSOCIATION.

de toute occupation qui leur apporterait quelques dollars supplémentaires. Certains anciens combattants avaient des poules ou une vache qui donnent des œufs ou du lait à leur famille. Pourtant, aux yeux des représentants du ministère, il s'agissait là d'un revenu. Ils ont aussi déploré le fait qu'un ancien combattant possède une voiture convenable pour les déplacements de sa famille. Ce n'est certainement pas ce que désire le peuple canadien. A mon sens, il veut que ses anciens combattants soient traités comme ceux des autres pays. J'espère que le ministre examinera ces questions.

EVIDENCE

(Recorded by Electronic Apparatus)

Monday, September 29, 1969

The Chairman: I would like to call the Committee to order.

We have with us this morning the Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada, and they will present a brief. I believe members of the Committee have a copy of their brief, so without further ado I will turn the proceedings over to Mrs. Reynolds, who is here with a group of other representatives of the Association.

Mrs. Margaret Reynolds (Executive Committee, Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, this brief has been prepared on behalf of the 7,304 registered nurses of Canada whose privilege it was to serve their country during World Wars I and II. We do not purport to speak on behalf of all servicewomen's organizations. During our study of the Woods Committee Report, however, we have continually had their needs and rights in mind. Consequently, we trust that our deliberations will reflect the views of all women who served.

The Pension Crisis 1969

The basic rate of pension is now $3,180 per annum for a 100 per cent pensioner. It seems very obvious that this basic rate has been allowed to lag very considerably behind what might be termed earnings in the unskilled labour market.

A history of pension increases shows that in 1919 the amount provided under the Pension Act was $720 a year. This was the equivalent to the amount paid at that time to the cleaner and helper in the federal civil service. The pension amount was increased in 1920 to $900 and no further increase was made until 1948 when the basic rate of pension became $1,128. Subsequent increases were as follows:

TÉMOIGNAGES

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le lundi 29 septembre 1969

Le président: Attention, la séance est ouverte. Nous recevons ce matin l'Association des sœurs infirmières du Canada qui présentera un mémoire au Comité des Affaires des anciens combattants. Je crois que les membres du Comité possèdent actuellement un exemplaire de ce mémoire. Sans plus tarder, nous entendrons donc madame Reynolds qui est ici avec un groupe de représentantes de son association.

Mme M. Reynolds (Comité exécutif de l'Association des sœurs infirmières du Canada): Merci, monsieur le président. Le présent mémoire a été rédigé au nom des 7,304 infirmières autorisées du Canada, qui ont eu le privilège de servir leur patrie au cours des deux guerres mondiales. Nous ne prétendons pas parler au nom de toutes les associations de femmes qui ont servi sous les drapeaux. Tout au long de l'étude que nous avons faite du Rapport du Comité Woods, toutefois, nous avons eu constamment présents à l'esprit leurs besoins et leurs droits. En conséquence, nous avons la certitude que nos observations refléteront l'opinion de toutes les femmes qui ont servi dans les forces armées.

La crise des pensions de 1969

La crise des pensions 1969

Le taux de base de la pension est actuellement de $3,180 par année, dans le cas d'un pensionné à 100 p. 100. Il semble tout à fait évident que l'on a permis à ce taux de base de tirer considérablement de l'arrière sur ce que l'on pourrait appeler le salaire d'un ouvrier non spécialisé.

L'histoire des majorations des pensions nous montre qu'en 1919, la Loi des pensions prévoyait un montant de $720 par année. Ce montant était l'équivalent de ce qui était payé, à ce temps-là, aux travailleurs de la catégorie des nettoyeurs et aides du service civil fédéral. En 1920, la pension a été portée à $900 et aucune autre majoration n'est survenue avant 1948 lorsque le taux de base de la pension a été porté à $1,128. Les majorations subséquentes furent les suivantes:

[Text]

1951—$1,500
1957—$1,800
1961—$2,160
1964—$2,400
1966—$2,760
1967—$3,180

The cleaning serviceman in the Public Service of Canada is, we now believe, rated at approximately $4,152 per annum. Hence, the gap between the original basis of war disability pension and the equivalent being earned by unskilled labour in the federal civil service is $972 per year.

The findings of the Woods Committee emphasize the need to bring the basic rate of pension to $4,152 a year. This association would point out, however, that this is the penalty which must be paid for not having kept pensions in line, over the years, with the cost of living and other factors which went into the compilation of the earnings of the unskilled worker in the federal civil serivce.

This association is aware, of course, that the Prime Minister has announced an "anti-inflation" policy. He did, at the same time, state very clearly that one of the objectives of this policy was to assist the pensioner who must, of necessity, subsist on a fixed income.

It is obvious that anti-inflationary measures will be of benefit to this group of pensioners. However, it is essential, in the first instance, that the pension be brought up to a reasonable level before being subjected to a "freeze". In other words, if the war disability pension could be raised to $4,152 per annum and then "locked in", to be adjusted only in accordance with fluctuations in the cost of living, the anti-inflationary measures would, hopefully, assist the pensioner. If, however, the anti-inflationary measures are applied as a means of preventing an increase in pension to the $4,-152 level, where it should have been in 1967, the war disability pensioner would be severely penalized. These anti-inflationary measures would be fair only if they were applied to all categories of income in a standard or uniform way. However, where because of circumstances, the amount of war disability pension was considerably below where it should have been at the date that the anti-inflationary measures were announced, there is only one equitable means of dealing with the situation. That is, to bring pensions to reasonable levels and then freeze them in their proper bracket in comparison with earnings in the unskilled labour market.

[Interpretation]

1951 — $1,500
1957 — $1,800
1961 — $2,160
1964 — $2,400
1966 — $2,760
1967 — $3,180

L'employé de la catégorie des nettoyeurs de la Fonction publique du Canada touche actuellement, semble-t-il, environ $4,152 par année. En conséquence, l'écart entre la base originale des pensions d'invalidité de guerre et le salaire du travailleur non spécialisé de la Fonction publique du Canada est actuellement de $972 par année.

Les conclusions du Comité Woods appuient sur la nécessité de porter à $4,152 par année le taux de base de la pension. Notre association tient à faire remarquer que c'est là le prix que nous devrons payer pour ne pas avoir maintenu les pensions à un niveau tenant compte du coût de la vie et des autres facteurs qui déterminent le salaire du travailleur non spécialisé dans la Fonction publique fédérale.

Notre association n'est pas sans savoir, bien entendu, que le premier ministre a annoncé une politique «anti-inflationnaire». Il a dit très clairement, toutefois, que l'un des objectifs de cette politique était d'aider le pensionné qui doit forcément se suffire d'un revenu fixe.

Il est évident que les mesures anti-inflationnaires seront à l'avantage de ce groupe de pensionnés. Il est essentiel, toutefois, que la pension soit d'abord portée à un niveau raisonnable avant d'être «figée». En d'autres termes, si la pension d'invalidité de guerre pouvait être majorée à $4,152 par année, pour être ensuite maintenue à ce niveau jusqu'à ce que s'imposent des rajustements motivés par les fluctuations du coût de la vie, les mesures anti-inflationnaires aideraient vraisemblablement le pensionné. Si, par contre, les mesures anti-inflationnaires sont appliquées de façon à empêcher que la pension soit portée au niveau de $4,152 qu'elle aurait dû atteindre en 1967, le pensionné pour invalidité de guerre en sera très fortement pénalisé. Ces mesures anti-inflationnaires ne seraient justes que si elles étaient appliquées d'une manière uniforme à toutes les catégories de revenus. Toutefois, étant donné que le taux de base de la pension d'invalidité était de beaucoup inférieur à ce qu'il aurait dû être au moment où les mesures anti-inflationnaires furent annoncées, il n'y a qu'une seule façon équitable de corriger cette situation. Il faudrait porter les pensions à un niveau raisonnable et ensuite les figer au niveau qu'elles doivent occuper par rapport au salaire de l'ouvrier non spécialisé.

Basic Rate of Pension

This association desires firstly to deal with the recommendation of the Woods Committee concerning basic rate of pension which states that the amount for 100 per cent pension be a composite of the earning power of the untrained labourer, as determined by the average wage for this type of employment in the public service of Canada and the labour market.

We recognize that it is difficult to determine the quantum of dollars represented by earnings in the unskilled labour market as there is no specific classification of this nature, and wages in the common labour field vary widely in different parts of Canada.

We believe, however, that the problem could be solved by using, as a general basis, the wages of the unskilled classified employee in the public service of Canada and the unskilled worker in the labour market in determining a composite figure. The advantages of this would be, firstly, that pension would then keep pace with periodic adjustment in wages generally. Secondly, average wages in the public service do not vary significantly in different geographic locations. Thirdly, the inclusion of the criterion of the unskilled classified worker in the public service of Canada as a guide, would allow continuation of the existing system which has been in force, as we understand it, since the inception of the Pension Act in 1919.

The adoption of the Woods recommendation would bring about an orderly solution to the long-standing problem of adjustments in the pension rates. For many years, organizations representing pensioned veterans have attempted to have pensions brought into line with increases in the cost of living. To date this has not happened.

This association would point out that, for the pensioner to be classified as an untrained labourer is sufficient penalty, in the sense that many of them brought well-developed skills with them into the service. Nursing sisters are cited as a case in point! It is undertood, however, that it would be difficult to base a pension plan on the principle of attempting to compensate a person disabled by war, in accordance with the skills which he or she acquired in civilian life prior to enlistment. Hence, in order that there should be a common denominator, it is recognized that the category of the untrained worker from the labour force and the public service is probably the only feasible criterion. Accepting this,

[Interprétation]

Taux de base de la pension

Notre association veut d'abord traiter de la recommandation du Comité Woods concernant le taux de base des pensions, et selon laquelle le montant versé au pensionné à 100 p. 100 devrait être la moyenne de ce qui est payé à l'ouvrier non spécialisé dans la Fonction publique du Canada et sur le marché du travail.

Nous reconnaissons qu'il est difficile d'établir le nombre de dollars représenté par le salaire de l'ouvrier sur le marché du travail non spécialisé, vu qu'il n'existe actuellement aucune classification des travailleurs de cette catégorie et que la rémunération de l'ouvrier sur le marché du travail non spécialisé varie énormément d'une partie à l'autre du Canada.

Nous croyons, toutefois, que la solution à ce problème serait de prendre comme base le salaire versé à l'employé non spécialisé dans la Fonction publique du Canada et à l'ouvrier non spécialisé sur le marché du travail, pour établir un chiffre moyen. Cette méthode présenterait plusieurs avantages: premièrement, la pension refléterait les rajustements périodiques de l'ensemble des salaires. Deuxièmement, le salaire moyen payé dans la Fonction publique ne varie pas sensiblement d'une région à l'autre du pays. Troisièmement, l'adoption, en guise de critère, du salaire du travailleur non spécialisé de la Fonction publique du Canada permettrait de continuer le système actuel, qui est appliqué, selon ce que nous croyons savoir, depuis la mise en vigueur de la Loi des pensions en 1919.

L'adoption de la recommandation du Comité Woods apporterait une solution méthodique au problème ancien des rajustements des taux de pension. Depuis de nombreuses années, les associations représentant les anciens combattants pensionnés ont tenté d'obtenir que les pensions reflètent les augmentations du coût de la vie. Elles ne l'ont pas obtenu jusqu'à ce jour.

Notre association veut souligner, en outre, que le pensionné est déjà suffisamment pénalisé en étant classé comme un ouvrier non spécialisé, car un grand nombre d'entre eux étaient déjà bien spécialisés lorsqu'ils se sont enrôlés. Mentionnons le cas des infirmières à titre d'exemple. Nous comprenons, toutefois, qu'il serait difficile de fonder un régime de pensions sur le principe de l'indemnisation des invalidités de guerre en fonction des talents que le pensionné a acquis dans la vie civile, avant son enrôlement. En conséquence, afin qu'il y ait un dénominateur commun, nous reconnaissons que le seul critère utile est probablement la catégorie du travailleur non spécialisé du marché du travail et de la Fonc-it is surely the responsibility of the government to make certain that, at the very least, the war disability pension should not be below the earning levels of these workers. Notwithstanding, the existing rate for war disability pension is $3,180 per annum, or as stated previously, $972 below the earning level of the average wage of the unskilled worker in our country.

Old Age Security Pension and Canada Pension Plan

Disability pensions paid under the authority of the Pension Act, are based on "disability" which is defined in the Act, Section 2(j), as follows:

> "Disability" means the loss or lessening of the power to will and to do any normal mental or physical act;

Such pension is paid as of right and, in accordance with Section 28(1), such pension shall be based on the extent of the disability.

Old Age Security

For some years old age security pension has been paid as of right to persons 69 years or over. By 1970 persons of 65 years or over will be eligible recipients. This is a contributory type pension in that the assessment for income tax contains a special assessment for old age security.

Canada Pension Plan

Benefits under the Canada Pension Plan are also payable as of right. This plan is also a contributory plan in that employed persons in the meaning of the Act, and employers jointly, contribute an assessment of 1.8 per cent of an employee's salary to fund the Canada Pension Plan.

This association desires to point out, therefore, that the basis for payment of disability pensions, and for payment of pensions to widows under the Pension Act, and dependents of single veterans, if applicable, must be calculated independently of any possible pension which may be payable under either the Old Age Security Pension Act or the Canada Pension Plan.

Adjudication of Claims

It is our understanding that, under the present system used by the Pension Commission, the initial decisions are made by the commissioners on the basis of written reports submitted by the commission staff, or by pen-tion publique. Ce critère étant accepté, le gouvernement a certainement le devoir de s'assurer que, tout au moins, la pension d'invalidité de guerre ne soit pas inférieure au niveau de salaire de ces travailleurs. Quoi qu'il en soit, le taux actuel de la pension d'invalidité est de $3,180 par année, c'est-à-dire, comme nous l'avons déjà souligné, $972 de moins que le salaire moyen de l'ouvrier non spécialisé.

[Interpretation]

Pension de sécurité de la vieillesse et Régime de pensions du Canada

Les pensions d'invalidité versées en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions sont fondées sur l'invalidité, celle-ci étant définie à l'article 2(j) de la Loi, ainsi qu'il suit:

> «invalidité» signifie la perte ou l'amoindrissement de la faculté de vouloir et de faire normalement des actes d'ordre physique ou mental;

La pension d'invalidité est payée de droit et, en conformité de l'article 28 (1), elle doit être fondée sur la gravité de l'invalidité.

La pension de sécurité de la vieillesse

Depuis quelques années, la pension de sécurité de la vieillesse est payée de droit aux personnes âgées de soixante-neuf ans ou plus. Dès 1970, elle sera versée aux personnes âgées de soixante-cinq ans ou plus. Cette prestation est une pension contributoire, en ce sens que la cotisation d'impôt sur le revenu comprend une cotisation spéciale destinée à la sécurité de la vieillesse.

Le Régime de pensions du Canada

Les prestations versées dans le cadre du Régime de pensions du Canada sont également payées de droit. Il s'agit aussi d'un régime contributoire car l'employé et l'employeur contribuent chacun une cotisation de 1.8 p. 100 du salaire de l'employé pour financer le régime.

En conséquence, notre association désire souligner que la base sur laquelle est fondé le paiement des pensions d'invalidité prévues par la Loi sur les pensions, y compris les pensions versées aux veuves et aux personnes à la charge d'un ancien combattant, doit être calculée indépendamment de toute prestation qui pourrait être payée en vertu de la Loi sur la pension de sécurité de la vieillesse ou du Régime de pensions du Canada.

Adjudication des demandes de pensions

Nous croyons savoir que, en vertu de la procédure utilisée actuellement par la Commission canadienne des pensions, les décisions initiales sont rendues par les commissaires, qui se fondent sur des rapports écrits soumis sions advocates employed by the Department of Veterans Affairs or through veterans organizations. This appears adequate so far as it goes but we find a grave weakness in the lack of a proper appeal procedure, as determined by the Woods Committee. The present appeal system provides only for a review of the decision by fellow commissioners, some of whom may have even been associated with the initial decision. This does not give the appearance of a true form of appeal and is, we feel certain, responsible for a great deal of the criticism which is heard in regard to the Pension Commission.

Members of the Woods Committee suggested the establishment of an independent appeal board which would be superior in structure to the Pension Commission and which would have the power of reversal of commission decisions. It would also have the power of interpretation of the Pension Act, and such interpretations would have the force of law within the commission. Our association considers this to be a most practical step and strongly endorses its implementation.

Multiple Disabilities

Most of the members of this Association have first-hand knowledge of the suffering of the severely disabled veteran. We refer specifically here to the quadriplegic, the paraplegic, the war blinded and the multiple amputee case. It is difficult to comprehend how we in Canada could have perpetuated a pension system which places an artificial ceiling on the amount of pension which can be paid, bearing in mind that the ceiling of 100 per cent is very far below the state of total disablement. That is to say, a 100 per cent pensioner can very often live a fairly normal life and, although it is evident that he should be compensated for his disability at the 100 per cent rate, it seems unreasonable that the government will not recognize that there are degrees of disablement far in excess of the existing 100 per cent category.

We have studied this Woods Committee recommendation respecting multiple disabilities with a great deal of care. The committee's solution, which as we understand it, is based on the assumption that the first 100 per cent of a disability would be paid in accord-par le personnel de la Commission, par les avocats des pensions à l'emploi du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants ou, encore, par les associations d'anciens combattants. Ce régime semble adéquat, mais nous croyons que l'absence d'une véritable procédure d'appel, ainsi que l'a constatée le Comité Woods, constitue une grave lacune. Le régime d'appel actuel ne prévoit qu'une révision de la décision par des collègues des commissaires qui l'ont rendue, dont certains ont parfois même contribué à rendre la décision initiale.

Cela ne semble pas être une vraie procédure d'appel et donne lieu, nous en sommes certains, à bon nombre des critiques qui sont formulées relativement à la Commission des pensions.

Les membres du Comité Woods ont recommandé la formation d'un jury d'appel indépendant qui aurait la préséance sur la Commission des pensions et qui serait autorisé à renverser les décisions de cette Commission. Il serait également autorisé à interpréter la Loi sur les pensions, et ses décisions auraient force de loi aux yeux de la commission. Notre Association estime qu'il s'agit d'une mesure très opportune, et nous recommandons très fortement qu'elle soit adoptée.

Invalidités multiples

La plupart des membres de notre Association connaissent parce qu'ils les ont éprouvées eux-mêmes les souffrances des grands infirmes de guerre. Nous voulons mentionner spécialement ici les quadriplégiques, les paraplégiques, les aveugles de guerre et ceux qui ont subi plusieurs amputations. Il est difficile de comprendre comment il se fait qu'ici au Canada, nous avons pu conserver un régime de pension qui fixe un plafond artificiel quant au montant de la pension qui peut être versé, si l'on considère que ce plafond de 100 p. 100 est bien en deça de l'invalidité totale. Ce qui veut dire qu'un pensionné qui reçoit une allocation de 100 p. 100 peut très souvent mener une vie à peu près normale et, bien qu'il soit évident qu'il doive recevoir une pension d'invalidité totale, il ne semble pas raisonnable que l'État ne reconnaisse pas que certains cas d'invalidité dépassent largement la catégorie à laquelle on verse présentement une allocation de 100 p. 100.

Nous avons étudié avec beaucoup de soin cette recommandation du Comité Woods concernant les formes multiples d'invalidité. La solution que propose le Comité, selon notre façon de voir la chose, se fonde sur l'idée que cette première allocation de 100 p. 100 pour ance with loss of earning capacity, with the balance for these multiple disability cases being based on other aspects of the pensioner's problem. These would include anatomical loss, restrictions on his ability to enjoy life and shortened life expectancy. This recommendation is, in our view, a just one.

[Text]

Our committee feels very strongly about this specific recommendation and I would like to have Miss Christie speak to it further at this time.

invalidité serait versée lorsque le pensionné est incapable de gagner sa vie, les autres cas d'invalidité multiple étant considérés selon d'autres aspects de la situation du pensionné. Ce qui comprendrait les cas d'ectomie, les limitations pour le pensionné à jouir de la vie et les perspectives d'un décès prématuré. A notre point de vue, cette recommandation est justifiée. Notre Comité aimerait souligner qu'il est vraiment d'accord et qu'il désire appuyer fortement cette recommandation. Mademoiselle Christie, vous désirez parler?

Miss Kathleen Christie (Member of the Executive Committee, Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada): I think everyone recognizes the fact that no amount of money could fully compensate for the loss of limbs or eyes. A person with only one limb can learn to manage fairly well, but he needs help. However, the loss of both arms, for example, is devastating, not only from the physical standpoint but from the severe psychological trauma he suffers. First of all, he must forever face the fact that he does not have a whole body. He loses his means of spontaneously protecting himself from falling objects or from falls, quite apart from the assistance required in all aspects of his daily life.

If the rate of pension for the loss of one limb is 70 per cent, then surely the assessment for the loss of two limbs should at least be 70 per cent plus 70 per cent. Why cannot the pension assessment exceed 100 per cent? In the world of buying and selling, the cost price is set at 100 per cent but the selling price can be in excess of 100 per cent.

If anyone has doubts about the state of helplessness experienced by the amputee, there is a very simple experiment that can be carried out which will provide a first-hand practical demonstration. All you need is a firm bandage and a girdle or binder and someone to help you. Before going to bed one night, fold your thumb over, fold your fingers over and have this hand firmly bandaged above the wrist and then have it immobilized to your side.

On getting up in the morning try to wash yourself with one arm or to shave, try to put socks and shoes on with one hand and when you go to the kitchen try to spread butter on a slice of bread or take the top off a bottle with one hand. As you go to your business carrying a briefcase in one hand, see what it is like to travel on public transportation with no second arm to support yourself, or to open a door when you are already holding a brief-

Mlle Kathleen Christie (Association des Sœurs infirmières du Canada): Il faut bien se rendre compte qu'aucune somme d'argent ne peut compenser la perte des membres ou des yeux. Une personne qui n'a qu'un membre peut apprendre à se débrouiller passablement bien, mais la perte des deux bras est traumatisante non seulement du point de vue physique mais aussi du point de vue psychologique.

Celui qui a perdu l'usage de ses deux bras ne peut plus se protéger, par exemple, des objets qui peuvent tomber sur lui ou des chutes. En outre, il a toujours besoin d'aide.

Si la perte d'un membre, par exemple, accorde une indemnité de 70 p. 100, la perte de deux membres devrait être au moins de 140 p. 100. Alors on ne peut pas accepter que le plafond soit fixé à 100 p. 100. Dans le domaine des affaires, le prix coûtant est fixé à 100 p. 100, mais le prix de vente peut excéder 100 p. 100. Si l'on connaît bien les problèmes des amputés, il y a une expérience très simple que vous pouvez faire vous-même. Prenez simplement un bandage et faites-vous aider. Avant de vous coucher un soir repliez les doigts d'une main et faites-vous bander fermement la main au-dessus du poignet de façon à l'immobiliser à votre côté.

Le matin en vous levant tentez de vous laver avec seulement un bras ou tentez seulement de vous raser avec un seul bras. Tentez ensuite l'expérience de mettre vos souliers et vos bas, ensuite passez à la cuisine, tentez d'étendre du beurre sur une tranche de pain, ou tentez de verser du lait avec une seule main dans votre tasse de café, ensuite vaquez à vos affaires, portez votre porte-documents d'une main et utilisez ensuite les transports case. I think one day of this sort of testing would help most of us see the case of the amputee.

publics avec seulement une main; vous n'avez pas une main pour ouvrir une porte alors que l'autre main est occupée. Après une journée de cette expérience, vous comprendrez beaucoup mieux le problème de l'amputé de guerre.

Mrs. Reynolds:

Stabilization of Pension

One of the major complaints heard by this association in regard to the existing pension system is the lack of a policy of stabilization for World War II veterans. This lack of policy seems difficult to justify, bearing in mind that the policy of the commission, since 1936, has been to stabilize World War I pensions, once an award has been in effect for three years. The same justifications which applied in the case of World War I pensions should apply for World War II pensions, particularly inasmuch as nearly 25 years have elapsed since the end of the Second World War. The stabilization of a pension after three years appears to be eminently fair. This gives the pension medical authorities a three-year period in which to decide whether a pension assessment is stable. When the assessment has been in effect three years, the pensioner and his family have every right to expect that the assessment will be considered permanent, and they should not be subjected to the fear that that pension will be reduced.

Retroactive Awards

This Association has read, with interest, the chapter of the Woods Report dealing with fretroactive awards. What appears difficult to understand is why, over the years, the administration of our pension legislation should have been based on the principle of placing a pension award in payment only from the date of the decision of the Commission. It is understood that under certain circumstances the Commission can make the award retroactive 12 months and even with a further six months where hardship exists and a further 18 months where there has been an administrative error. These are, at the best, compromises and we are in full agreement with the conclusion of the Woods Committee to the effect that pension should be placed in payment from the date of the application, subject only to a five-year limitation.

Mme Reynolds:

Stabilisation des pensions

L'une des principales plaintes présentées à notre Association touchant le système actuel de pension est qu'il n'existe aucune ligne de conduite en matière de stabilisation pour les anciens combattants de la Seconde guerre mondiale. Cela semble difficile à comprendre si l'on considère que, depuis 1936, la Commission a eu pour ligne de conduite de stabiliser les pensions de la Première guerre mondiale, après qu'une allocation a été versée durant trois ans. Les règles qui s'appliquent dans le cas des pensions versées depuis la Première guerre mondiale devraient s'appliquer également aux pensions de la Seconde guerre mondiale, surtout que près de vingt-cinq années se sont écoulées depuis la fin de la Seconde guerre mondiale.

Il semble tout à fait équitable qu'une pension soit stabilisée après trois ans. Les autorités médicales consultées en matière de pension ont ainsi trois ans pour décider si l'allocation de pension doit être rendue stable. Lorsqu'une allocation a été en vigueur durant trois ans, le pensionné ainsi que sa famille sont bien en droit de s'attendre que l'allocation sera considérée comme permanente, sans avoir à craindre que l'allocation de pension pourrait être réduite.

Indemnités rétroactives

Notre Association a lu avec intérêt le chapitre du Rapport Woods qui traite des indemnités rétroactives. Ce qui semble difficile à comprendre c'est qu'au cours des années, les administrateurs de la Loi sur les pensions aient eu pour ligne de conduite de ne verser une indemnité rétroactive de pension qu'à compter de la date à laquelle la Commission a rendu sa décision. Nous croyons savoir que la Commission peut, en certaines circonstances, accorder 12 mois de rétroactivité et même prolonger celle-ci de 6 mois en cas de nécessité ou encore de 18 mois s'il y a eu une erreur d'administration. Tout ce qu'on peut dire à ce sujet, c'est que ce sont des compromis et nous sommes pleinement d'accord sur la conclusion du Comité Woods portant que l'indemnité de pension devrait être versée à compter de la date de la demande, sous la seule réserve d'une période de cinq ans.

Continuation of Pension to Dependents of Person with Single Status

It is our belief that in the administration of War Disability Pensions, the continuation of pension for dependents of persons with single status has been overlooked.

The Act does provide that where pension is in payment at 48 per cent or higher, or where a death is attributable to service, a widow and children may be awarded continuation of pension. There is, however, no similar coverage where a person of single status has been supporting a dependent parent or dependent brother or sister. Surely, where such persons are dependent upon the pensioner, there is every justification to continue pension in payment for these dependents if the pensioner dies.

Therefore, we fully subscribe to the recommendation in the Woods Report (Recommendation 107, page 879) which suggests that where pension is in payment to a dependent parent or a dependent brother or sister, such should be continued at the full rate permissible under the Act if the member's death was attributable to his service or if the pensionable disability was assessed at 48 per cent or greater; and that, if the assessment was less than 48 per cent, the pension for the dependent parent or brother or sister be awarded in proportion to the extent of the assessment in payment to the pensioner at the time of his death.

Reinstatement of Widows Pension

The Woods Committee recommendation which suggests a broadening of the terms under which a widow's pension may be reinstated appears to be fully warranted.

• 1005

The feeling of our Association is that a widow in receipt of pension should have the fullest possible guarantee when contemplating remarriage, that if for any justifiable reason the marriage does not work, and she encounters financial need, her pension can be restored.

The existing legislation is satisfactory, but it does not go far enough. She can be placed back on pension if her second husband dies within a period of five years. The Woods Committee recommendation suggests removal of the five-year time limit, and suggests the additional circumstances that, if the second

[Interpretation]

Maintien de l'allocation de pension aux personnes à charge d'un pensionné célibataire

Nous croyons que les administrateurs des pensions pour invalidité de guerre n'ont pas prévu le maintien de l'allocation de pension aux personnes à charge des pensionnés célibataires.

La Loi dit bien que lorsque l'allocation de pension versée est de 48 p. 100 ou plus, ou que le décès est attribuable au service militaire, la veuve et les enfants ont droit de demander que l'allocation de pension se continue. Or, la même disposition ne s'applique pas dans les cas où un pensionné célibataire avait à sa charge un parent, un frère ou une sœur. Lorsque de telles personnes sont à la charge d'un pensionné, elles sont, bien entendu, tout à fait justifiées de s'attendre qu'on continuera de leur verser une allocation de pension à titre de personnes à charge du pensionné décédé.

Par conséquent, nous souscrivons pleinement à la recommandation du Rapport Woods (Recommandation 107, page 879) qui propose que lorsqu'une allocation de pension est versée à un parent, un frère ou une sœur que le pensionné avait à sa charge, cette allocation se continue au plein montant admissible en vertu de la Loi si le décès du membre est attribuable au service militaire ou si l'invalidité du pensionné était calculée à 48 p. 100 ou plus; et que, si l'indice d'invalidité était moins de 48 p. 100, la pension du parent, du frère ou de la sœur qui était à charge soit calculée en proportion de ce qu'était l'indemnité versée au pensionné au moment de son décès.

Rétablissement de la pension aux veuves

La recommandation du Comité Woods pour que soient élargies les conditions auxquelles la pension d'une veuve peut être rétablie semble tout à fait justifiée.

Notre Association est d'avis qu'il faudrait rétablir l'allocation d'une veuve qui reçoit une pension et, à cet effet, qu'elle en ait toute la garantie possible dans le cas où elle voudrait contracter un second mariage et que, pour une bonne raison, le mariage n'a pas lieu, et qu'elle se trouve dans le besoin du point de vue financier.

La législation actuelle est satisfaisante, mais elle ne va pas encore assez loin! La veuve peut commencer à recevoir la pension si son second mari décède avant cinq ans. Le Comité Woods recommande que l'on abandonne le délai de cinq ans, et propose comme autres circonstances que si le second mariage marriage fails, she is entitled to be reinstated to the status of a widow under the Pension Act.

Security of the Pensioner's File

This Association cannot subscribe to the existing procedure under which information on a pensioner's file can be made available to the Public Service Commission and to life insurance companies. There are, quite obviously, many circumstances where information would be placed on a pensioner's file of which he would have no knowledge. This information would have been gathered for pension purposes and would, in our view, be quite liable to misinterpretation if placed in the hands of a prospective employer or insurer.

Both the Public Service of Canada, and the life insurance companies operating in Canada, have excellent facilities through which they can obtain medical histories. There seems to be no justification for extending to them the information on a pensioner's file. We support, in the strongest possible terms, the recommendation of the Woods Committee to the effect that the information on a pensioner's file be made available only to the Canadian Pension Commission for its purposes, unless otherwise specifically requested by the pensioner.

Income Tax Exemption

This Association deems it essential for the Government to continue to recognize the special nature of payments under the Pension Act, which warrant exemption from income tax, specifically wartime pay.

War Disability Pension is an extension of wartime pay, and as such is entitled to the same income tax exemption. This factor was stressed by the Woods Committee, along with a number of other considerations, some of which are reviewed below:

(1) Replacement of Earnings: War Disability Pension is intended to replace earnings, but in addition the pensioner receives his pension as a mark of gratitude for his service to the state.

(2) Pension is not social legislation and it is not paid on the basis of financial need; it is a right.

[Interprétation]

n'a pas lieu, la veuve ait droit d'être rétablie comme veuve d'un ancien combattant aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions.

Sécurité du dossier d'un pensionné

Notre Association ne peut souscrire à la pratique actuelle qui permet de fournir à la Commission de la Fonction publique et aux compagnies d'assurance-vie certains renseignements que contient le dossier du pensionné. Dans de nombreux cas, bien entendu, le pensionné n'est pas au courant des renseignements qui sont consignés dans son dossier. A notre avis, ces renseignements étant recueillis aux fins de la pension, il se pourrait fort bien qu'ils soient mal interprétés s'ils venaient à tomber entre les mains d'un employeur ou d'un assureur éventuels.

La Fonction publique du Canada, de même que les compagnies d'assurance-vie au Canada, ont d'excellents moyens à leur disposition pour se renseigner sur l'état de santé des gens. Il semble n'y avoir aucune raison de leur permettre d'obtenir des renseignements à même le dossier d'un pensionné. Nous appuyons avec toute la vigueur possible la recommandation du Comité Woods portant que les renseignements contenus dans le dossier d'un pensionné doivent être mis uniquement à la disposition de la Commission canadienne des pensions pour ses propres fins, à moins que le pensionné ne demande spécialement le contraire.

Exemption d'impôt sur le revenu

Notre Association estime qu'il est essentiel que le gouvernement continue de reconnaître le caractère spécial des allocations versées aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions, paiements dont on garantit l'exemption de l'impôt sur le revenu, surtout dans le cas d'allocations du temps de guerre.

La pension pour invalidité de guerre est un prolongement de l'allocation du temps de guerre et, comme telle, elle doit également être exempte de l'impôt sur le revenu. Le Comité Woods a appuyé sur cette question ainsi que sur un certain nombre d'autres considérations, dont certaines sont exposées ci-dessous:

(1) La pension tient lieu du traitement: Le but de la pension pour invalidité de guerre est de remplacer le traitement, mais il faut ajouter le fait que le pensionné reçoit une allocation de pension comme marque de gratitude pour les services qu'il a rendus à son pays.

(2) La pension n'est pas une forme d'aide sociale et elle n'est pas versée en fonction de la nécessité financière; elle est un droit.

[Text]

This Association wishes to support the submission of Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues to the effect that War Disability Pension should remain exempt from income tax.

Pension Coverage for Regular Forces

This Association holds the view that the coverage under the existing Pension Act for death and disability arising from, or connected with, service in Canada's Armed Forces in peacetime is inadequate.

Our Association agrees with the observation of the Woods Committee to the effect that the circumstances of service in the Regular Force, as it exists today, bring about the requirement for a somewhat different philosophy from that which obtains during time of war. Service in the Armed Forces today involves activities which are seemingly more industrial than military in nature. Also, the recreation programmes of the Armed Forces are perhaps more extensive than was the case during wartime.

This Association fully supports the recommendations of the Woods Committee concerning pension coverage for Regular Force applications and, in particular, emphasizes the need for the Act to contain specific coverage in special activities engaged in by the Armed Forces such as: (1) acts done in accordance with specific orders or established service customs: and (2) exposure to any environmental hazard resulting in disease or other disability.

Prisoners of War

This Association notes the recommendations of the Woods Report concerning Hong Kong Veterans. One of our own members who was herself taken prisoner of war at Hong Kong, witnessed the totally inadequate medical treatment of the battle casualties and the subsequent illnesses suffered by the men during their term of imprisonment including the irreversible effects of the psychological harassment. Accordingly, we subscribe to the Woods Recommendation that such persons should be awarded the basic 50 per cent minimum pension with additional pension where the disability warrants it.

We would also strongly urge the Committee to consider the application of the recommendations with respect to all Canadian prisoners of

[Interpretation]

Notre Association voudrait appuyer la recommandation du Juge Woods et de ses collègues portant que la pension pour invalidité de guerre ne soit pas imposable aux fins de l'impôt sur le revenu.

Allocations de pension dans le cas de l'armée régulière

Notre Association est consciente de l'insuffisance des allocations de pension, aux termes de la Loi actuelle sur les pensions, dans le cas de décès ou d'invalidité résultant ou découlant du service dans les Forces régulières du Canada en temps de paix.

Notre Association partage le point de vue du Comité Woods portant que les circonstances du service dans l'Armée régulière, dans sa forme actuelle, imposent la nécessité d'adopter une philosophie un peu différente de celle qui a cours en temps de guerre. De nos jours, le service dans l'Armée régulière comporte des activités qui ont plutôt le caractère industriel que militaire. En outre, les programmes de divertissement de l'Armée régulière sont sans doute plus étendus qu'ils ne l'étaient pendant la guerre.

Notre Association appuie pleinement les recommandations du Comité Woods relativement aux allocations de pension dans le cas de l'Armée régulière, et nous insistons en particulier pour que la Loi prévoie des allocations de pension précises dans le cas d'activités spéciales auxquelles s'adonne l'Armée régulière; par exemple:

1. Des actes posés à la suite d'ordres précis ou selon les pratiques établies du service; et

2. Le fait d'être exposé à un danger quelconque dans son milieu d'emploi, et qu'une maladie ou autre infirmité en découlent.

Prisonniers de guerre

Notre Association a pris note des recommandations du Rapport Woods concernant les anciens combattants de Hong-Kong. Une de nos membres qui a été elle-même prisonnière de guerre à Hong-Kong a constaté l'inefficacité totale du traitement médical accordé aux victimes des combats et les maladies subséquentes dont ont souffert les soldats pendant leur séjour en prison, y compris les effets inéluctables du harcèlement psychologique. Par conséquent, nous souscrivons à la recommandation Woods portant que la pension minimum de base de 50 p. 100 soit accordée à de telles personnes, de même qu'une allocation de pension supplémentaire si elle est justifiée par l'infirmité.

Nous voudrions également inciter très fortement le Comité à songer à appliquer ces recommandations à tous les prisonniers de war in other theatres. Many of our Association members have vivid recollections of the condition of these survivors, having nursed them following their release from prisoner of war camps in Europe. Large numbers had suffered extreme deprivation, physical brutality and unspeakable humiliations over long periods of time. The ultimate psychological and physiological damage of these experiences many, as with the Hong Kong veterans, never be fully ascertained.

We are advised that the Pension Commission is, at this time, conducting a survey with respect to the pension problems of prisoners of war from these other areas. We fully support this action.

Personnel of the Commission

We refer to the recommendations of the Woods Committee, to the effect that the Pension Commission personnel should be chosen from amongst qualified persons who have had experience in armed forces, or with veterans organizations. In this regard we recommend that the government consider the appointment of a former nursing sister to the Canadian Pension Commission. The appointment of a former nursing sister of the armed forces would be logical and timely. It would assure a wide breadth of understanding as the nurses who cared for the sick and wounded servicemen and assisted in their rehabilitation have a very special knowledge of the problems of disabled veterans.

Thousands of women also served their country during two world wars. They need and have a right to representation on the Canadian Pension Commission and the appointment of a former nursing sister would in the view of our association recognize that need as well as make a unique contribution to the quality of the Commission itself.

We appreciate the opportunity afforded us to present this brief to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. We trust that during further deliberations of the Committee our expressed views will be found meaningful and helpful.

At this time representatives from the Nursing Sister's Association are prepared to answer any questions that you may have.

The Chairman: I am sure members of the Committee have found the brief well pre-guerre canadiens sur les autres théâtres d'opérations. De nombreux membres de notre Association conservent des souvenirs vivants de l'état de ces survivants puisqu'ils les ont soignés après qu'ils eurent quitté des camps de prisonniers de guerre en Europe. Un grand nombre d'entre eux ont subi des privations extrêmes et souffert de cruauté physique et d'humiliations sans nom pendant de longues périodes de temps. Il ne sera peut-être jamais possible de connaître totalement, en définitive, jusqu'à quel point ces expériences ont été coûteuses du point de vue psychologique et du point de vue physiologique, comme dans le cas des anciens combattants de Hong-Kong.

On nous dit que la Commission des pensions procède présentement à une étude concernant les problèmes relatifs à la pension des prisonniers de guerre de ces autres théâtres d'opérations. Nous sommes tout à fait d'accord sur une telle mesure.

Le personnel de la Commission

Nous signalons la recommandation du Comité Woods voulant que le personnel de la Commission des pensions devrait être choisi parmi les gens qualifiés qui ont l'expérience des Forces armées, ou qui appartiennent à des associations d'anciens combattants. A cet effet, nous recommandons que le gouvernement avise à nommer une ancienne infirmière pour faire partie de la Commission canadienne des pensions. La nomination d'une ancienne infirmière des Forces armées serait une chose logique et à propos. On assurerait ainsi beaucoup plus de compréhension car les infirmières qui ont soigné les doldats malades et blessés et qui ont aidé à les réhabiliter connaissent parfaitement les problèmes des anciens combattants infirmes.

Des milliers de femmes également ont servi leur pays au cours des deux grandes guerres. Elles doivent être représentées au sein de la Commission canadienne des pensions, car elles y ont droit, et notre Association estime que le choix d'une ancienne infirmière ne ferait que reconnaître ce besoin, tout en contribuant singulièrement à rehausser la qualité de la Commission elle-même.

Nous sommes heureux d'avoir eu l'occasion de soumettre le présent mémoire au Comité permanent des anciens combattants. Nous avons confiance que les points de vue que nous avons exprimés seront jugés opportuns et utiles lors des délibérations futures du Comité. Nous sommes maintenant prêtes à répondre à toutes les questions que vous voudrez bien nous poser.

Le président: Je suis sûr que les membres du comité apprécient la qualité du mémoire.

pared and most interesting. One or two members have indicated they would like to ask questions and our procedure, if it suits you, is to open up the meeting for questioning by the members. Mr. MacRae and Mr. Howard have both indicated they have questions. Are there any others? Mr. Bigg and Mr. Legault. Mr. MacRae.

Mr. MacRae: I would like to ask this particular question of the Sister. I noticed when she referred to the nursing sisters of World Wars I and II that there was no mention of Korea. Did we not have nursing sisters in that conflict as well?

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes.

Mr. MacRae: We did have. Not very many, perhaps, but there would have been a few there.

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes, sir.

Mr. MacRae: I took it from the reading of your brief that basically perhaps you had prepared it—or maybe entirely—before the presentation of the White Paper. Is that correct or not?

• 1015

Mrs. Reynolds: Sir, we have not seen the White Paper, so we cannot comment on it.

Mr. MacRae: That limits me...

The Chairman: This is a public document and it should have been distributed to you. I do not quite know what happened in the channels of communication, but it was released to the press and to the public generally on September 9. We can certainly give you some copies right now.

Mr. MacRae: Regardless of that, I think perhaps I would like to ask you one or two questions on matters that are dealt with in the White Paper. On the principle of multiple disabilities, Sister, the White Paper suggested that in lieu of a pension of 150 per cent, 200 per cent or 300 per cent, as the case may be, that there would be a lump sum annual payment over the 100 per cent to a multiple disability pensioner of from $400 to $1,200 per year. I can tell you that for the most part those organizations that have appeared before us took a very dim view of this particular principle of simply paying $400 to $1,200 at the discretion, presumably, of the Commission. Would you care to comment?

Mrs. Reynolds: Miss Christie, would you like to speak to that?

[Interpretation]

Un ou deux députés ont exprimé le désir de poser des questions. Si cela vous sied, nous allons laisser la parole aux députés. Messieurs MacRae et Howard ont laissé voir qu'ils voulaient poser des questions. Y en aurait-il d'autres? Messieurs Bigg et Legault. Monsieur MacRae, vous avez la parole.

M. MacRae: J'ai remarqué que lorsque l'infirmière parlait des infirmières, elle mentionnait celles de la Première Guerre mondiale et de la Deuxième, mais pas celle de Corée. Est-ce que nous n'avons pas eu aussi des infirmières dans cette guerre?

Mme Reynolds: Oui.

M. MacRae: En effet. Il n'y en a pas eu beaucoup, mais il y en a eu quelques-unes.

Mme Reynolds: Oui monsieur.

M. MacRae: D'après la lecture de votre mémoire, j'ai cru comprendre que vous l'aviez préparé peut-être entièrement avant la parution du Livre blanc. Est-ce exact?

Mme Reynolds: Nous n'avons pas vu le Livre blanc, de sorte que nous ne pouvons pas formuler de commentaires.

M. MacRae: Cela me limite...

Le président: Il s'agit d'un document publique qui aurait dû vous être distribué. Je ne sais pas ce qui est advenu de la distribution, mais il a été remis à la presse et au public en général le 9 septembre. Nous pouvons vous en donner une copie en ce moment.

M. MacRae: J'aimerais poser une ou deux questions sur des sujets traités dans le Livre blanc. Sur le principe des infirmités multiples, le Livre blanc a proposé qu'au lieu d'une pension de 150 p. 100, 200 p. 100 ou 300 p. 100 suivant le cas, qu'il y ait un paiement global annuel qui excède le montant de la pension de 100 p. 100 versée à une personne atteinte d'infirmités multiples de $400 à $1,200, probablement à la discrétion de la Commission. Pourriez-vous apporter quelques commentaires?

Mme Reynolds: Mademoiselle Christie, aimeriez-vous répondre à cette question?

[Texte]

Miss Christie: I am generally adverse to lump sum settlements.

The Chairman: These would be annual payments.

Miss Christie: Oh, annual payments. What did you say the amount was?

Mr. MacRae: From $400 to $1,200 annually, rather than the principle that was outlined by Mr. Justice Woods of a percentage, depending on the multiple disability. I believe Mr. Justice Woods went up to roughly 350 per cent under certain circumstances with, I would think, the majority being somewhere between 100 and 200 per cent, but in the case of the quadriplegic and the triplegic it would go to 250 or 300 per cent. As I said earlier, it puts you at a disadvantage if you have not seen the White Paper, but I repeat that other organizations did not agree with this and I was just telling you about it in case you wanted to comment. Perhaps it is not fair to ask you to comment.

Miss Christie: I would prefer to see it in black and white and think about it.

Mr. MacRae: Yes. In other words, you would like to reserve judgment.

Miss Christie: Yes, I would.

Miss Evelyn Pepper (Honorary President, National Executive, Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada): May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Miss Pepper: Am I correct in assuming that you mean over and above the 100 per cent pension that is now paid?

The Chairman: Yes.

Miss Pepper: The pensioner would get a lump sum varying from $400 to $1,200.

The Chairman: That is the proposal.

Miss Pepper: This in fact does not support what we are saying about the multiple disabilities.

Mr. MacRae: No.

Miss Pepper: In any way. It does not meet it at all, and I think this is rather unfair. Are there so many cases that they cannot be determined individually, and should they not be determined individually? You cannot compare a quadriplegic with a person who perhaps has a double amputation. His needs are

[Interprétation]

Mlle Christie: Je m'oppose généralement aux règlements annuels sous forme de somme globale.

Le président: Il s'agirait de versements annuels.

Mlle Christie: Oh, de versements annuels. Quel en était le montant?

M. MacRae: De $400 à $1,200 par an, au lieu du principe, exposé par monsieur le juge Woods, du pourcentage établi d'après les infirmités multiples, Monsieur le juge Woods préconisait un pourcentage maximum de 350 p. 100 dans certains cas. Je crois que la majorité se situerait entre 100 et 200 p. 100, mais pour les quadriplégiques et les triplégiques, cela irait jusqu'à 200 ou 300 p. 100. Comme je l'ai dit auparavant, vous êtes désavantagées par le fait de ne pas avoir lu le Livre blanc, mais je dois dire que d'autres organisations ne partageaient pas cet avis. J'ai apporté ces précisions au cas où vous aimeriez apporter des commentaires. Il n'est peut-être pas juste de vous demander votre point de vue.

Mlle Christie: Je préférerais lire le Livre blanc et y r éfléchir.

M. MacRae: Oui, autrement dit, vous aimeriez réserver votre jugement.

Mlle Christie: Oui.

Mlle Evelyn Pepper (Présidente honoraire de la Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada): Puis-je poser une question, monsieur le président?

Le président: Oui.

Mlle Pepper: Ai-je raison de croire que vous pensez à une pension au-dessus du 100 p. 100 qui est versé actuellement?

Le président: Oui.

Mlle Pepper: Le pensionné recevrait une somme globale qui varierait entre $400 et $1,200.

Le président: C'est ce qu'on propose.

Mlle Pepper: Cela n'appuie pas nos dires sur les infirmités multiples.

M. MacRae: Non.

Mlle Pepper: Cela n'y répond pas du tout et à mon avis, c'est assez injuste. Y a-t-il tellement de cas qu'ils ne peuvent déterminer individuellement, et ne devraient-ils pas l'être ainsi? On ne peut pas comparer un quadriplégique avec un individu qui a subi deux amputations. Les besoins sont tellement plus so much greater, and my reaction to this is that this would indeed be an unfair way to try to settle it. I think each case should be assessed on the inability of the pensioner to fend for himself, his needs are so much greater and in that way I think there would be so many variables.

Another thing I would like to emphasize is that we are aware of these disabilities if a single or a double amputation is involved, or if it is the case of a quadriplegic, but where there is an underlying medical condition it is very, very hard to assess and in my estimation when that is linked with these other disabilities it creates a need for an individual assessment. It is not a matter of giving, over and above the 100 per cent, a variable of from $400 to $1,200. I do not think this is at all adequate.

Mr. MacRae: I think, Sister, that most of us would agree with you, and certainly I do. Another point—and it is a very brief one—is that I would like the Sister who read the brief to clarify the point mentioned on page 9 of your brief.

The Chairman: Mr. MacRae, I am concerned at this point about procedure. Should we try to deal with one point at a time and should we go through the brief page by page. If we begin by each member asking questions on four or five points, I am concerned about how we are going to deal with this. I think there possibly may be supplementary questions on the problem of multiple disability before we proceed to another major question. How does the Committee want to deal with this?

Mr. MacRae: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if at the very beginning of the brief we had stopped at each particular point and finished with it that it would have been better.

The Chairman: Would this be all right?

Mr. MacRae: However, I have no objection.

The Chairman: I am sorry, I just opened and I did not want to inhibit in any way the asking of questions, but I feel that if we go from the multiple disability point to another fundamental point in the brief the next person who puts a question may well repeat the same thing. If we can, I would like to deal with the questions on a point by point basis. Mr. Knowles has his hand up.

[Interpretation]

grands et ce serait injuste de régler la question de cette manière. Chaque cas devrait, à mon avis, être réglé en fonction de l'incapacité du pensionné, de se défendre. Ses besoins sont tellement plus importants et de cette manière, il y aurait tellement de variantes.

J'aimerais aussi insister sur le fait que nous sommes conscients de ces infirmités s'il s'agit d'une amputation simple ou double ou s'il s'agit d'un cas de quadriplégie, mais lorsque l'état de santé, est très très difficile à établir, et à mon avis, lorsque c'est lié à d'autres infirmités, il faut faire une évaluation isolée. Il ne s'agit pas de donner une pension qui excède 100 p. 100, qui varie entre $400 et $1,200. A mon avis, cela ne résout pas le problème.

M. MacRae: Je crois que plusieurs d'entre nous sont d'accord avec vous et croyez que je le suis. J'aimerais que l'infirmière qui a lu le mémoire précise le point mentionné à la page 9.

Le président: Monsieur MacRae, je me demande quelle méthode nous devrions adopter. Devrions-nous examiner un point à la fois ou étudier le mémoire page par page. Si chaque député pose des questions sur quatre ou cinq points, je me demande comment nous allons pouvoir procéder. Il est possible, à mon avis, qu'il y ait des questions complémentaires sur les infirmités multiples avant de passer à une autre question. Quelle méthode le Comité aimerait-il adopter?

M. MacRae: Monsieur le président, il aurait mieux valu prendre un point à la fois et l'épuiser au cours de la lecture du mémoire.

Le président: Tout le monde serait-il d'accord?

M. MacRae: J'aurais toutefois une objection.

Le président: Je regrette, la période de question vient de commencer et je ne voudrais pas vous empêcher de poser des questions, mais je crois que si l'on prend pour point de départ les infirmités multiples, un autre point important du mémoire, la personne suivante peut fort bien traiter encore de la même question. C'est pourquoi j'aimerais que l'on étudie la question, point par point, si c'est possible. Monsieur Knowles?

[Texte]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make just a brief comment on one remark Mr. MacRae made. I hope he will not mind my making what I think is a necessary correction. Mr. MacRae referred to the grant of from $400 to $1200 as an annual grant. I do not think that is necessarily so. We were told by one of the officials, for example, that it could be a grant to install a ramp for a man who uses a wheel chair. In other words, there is no guarantee that it is an annual grant; it is at the discretion of the Commission all down the line. All I am saying is that I think it makes it a less desirable proposition, when one understands that, than it is already.

Mr. MacRae: I thank Mr. Knowles for that advice because I had not understood that. I had understood that it was an annual grant up to this point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But you do remember the example...

Mr. MacRae: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): ... a lump sum grant once to install a ramp.

Mr. MacRae: Thank you, Mr. Knowles.

The Chairman: Are there any other comments on this point? If not, then in the interests of clarification I think we should start from the beginning and proceed. Mr. MacRae, I hope you do not mind my doing it this way.

Mr. MacRae: Not at all. You know how co-operative I am.

The Chairman: I realize that, Mr. MacRae and thank you for it.

Are there any comments on page 1 of the brief?

Mr. Bigg: Has the delegation any figures on how many World War I sisters there still are in the association?

Mrs. Reynolds: I am sorry, sir; it is possible to obtain this figure but I do not have it available today.

Mr. Bigg: I would like to go on record as saying that I personally know of one nursing sister, Marnie Hearne, a 100 per cent pensioner out in Victoria who had a long service in both wars. I know you will be all glad to know that she is still with us, wishes she were here today, and she said to say "hello" to any of her old friends.

Mrs. Reynolds: That is very nice. Thank you very much.

[Interprétation]

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Brièvement, je reviens sur ce que monsieur MacRae a dit. J'espère qu'il n'aura pas d'objection à ce que je fasse une correction. Monsieur MacRae a parlé de cette subvention de $400 à $1,200 comme étant une subvention annuelle. Je ne crois pas qu'il en soit nécessairement ainsi. Un des fonctionnaires nous a dit que ça pouvait être une subvention pour installer une rampe pour un homme qui utilise une chaise roulante. Rien ne nous assure qu'il s'agisse d'une subvention annuelle. C'est à l'entière discrétion de la Commission. Cela est beaucoup moins intéressant quand on sait de quoi il s'agit.

M. MacRae: Je remercie monsieur Knowles pour cette rectification. Je pensais vraiment que c'était une subvention annuelle.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Mais vous vous souvenez de cet exemple?

M. MacRae: Oui.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Un montant global pour installer une rampe.

M. MacRae: Merci M. Knowles.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres commentaires à formuler à ce sujet? Nous commençons à partir du début. M. MacRae, j'espère que vous n'avez pas d'objection?

M. MacRae: Non, pas du tout. Vous savez que je collabore volontiers.

Le président: Je m'en rends compte et je vous en remercie.

Y a-t-il des commentaires à la page 1 du mémoire?

M. Bigg: Je me demande si la délégation a des chiffres sur le nombre d'infirmières ayant servi au cours de la Première Grande Guerre et faisant encore partie de l'Association?

Mme Reynolds: C'est un chiffre qu'on peut obtenir, mais je ne l'ai pas à ma disposition.

M. Bigg: Je connais une infirmière, Marnie Hearne, ayant servi au cours des deux guerres et qui a une pension de 100 p. 100. Elle habite Victoria. Elle m'a prié de vous saluer de sa part et aurait bien aimé être ici aujourd'hui.

Mme Reynolds: Merci.

[Text]

The Chairman: They have a distinguished record of service. There are a number in the Ottawa area too.

Mrs. Reynolds: We have two World War I nursing sisters with us this morning.

Mr. Bigg: Would they mind standing up?

Mrs. Reynolds: Would you please stand?

The Chairman: Would you please introduce the rest of the delegation?

Mr. Bigg: We would like to know who you all are, if you do not mind.

Mrs. Reynolds: Miss Pepper, would you please introduce the other members of our delegation?

Miss Pepper: Miss Ella Beardmore, Miss Kathleen Christie, Miss Evelyn Pepper, Miss Grace Johusan and Miss Nancy Kennedy-Reid.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, are they all in the same group or do they represent various organizations. If the latter is the case, could we have the group or association they are from?

The Chairman: This is the Nursing Sisters Association of Canada.

Mrs. Reynolds: Mr. Chairman, I am President of the National Executive of the Nursing Sisters Association of Canada, Miss Beardmore and Miss Christie are our Executive Committee, Miss Evelyn Pepper is Honorary President, Miss Grace Johusan is the President of the Ottawa Unit, and Miss Nancy Kennedy-Reid is past president of the Nursing Sisters Association of Canada.

Mr. Badanai: Is there anyone from northwestern Ontario?

The Chairman: Mr. Badanai represents the head of the lakes and he has a strong local interest there.

Mrs. Reynolds: Miss Christie, Miss Beardmore and myself are from Toronto, Miss Pepper and Miss Johusan from Ottawa, and Miss Nancy Kennedy-Reid is from Montreal.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Would you introduce the others please?

The Chairman: Could we have the other members who are here too?

[Interpretation]

Le président: Elles ont de bons états de service. Il y en a quelques-unes dans la région d'Ottawa.

Mme Reynolds: Nous avons, ce matin, deux infirmières qui ont fait la première guerre avec nous.

M. Bigg: Peuvent-elles se lever?

Mme Reynolds: Voulez-vous vous lever s'il vous plaît?

Le président: Voulez-vous nous présenter les autres membres de votre délégation.

M. Bigg: Nous voudrions savoir qui vous êtes.

Mme Reynolds: M[lle] Pepper, voulez-vous nous présenter les autres personnes de notre délégation.

Mlle Pepper: M[lle] Ella Beardmore; Mlle Kathleen Christie; M[lle] Evelyn Pepper; Mlle Grace Johusan; M[lle] Nancy-Kennedy-Reid.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Sont-elles toutes du même groupe ou appartiennent-elles à divers organismes? Si oui, pouvons-nous savoir à quel organisme ou association elles appartiennent?

Le président: Elles font partie de la Nursing Sisters Association of Canada.

Mme Reynolds: Je suis la présidente nationale et je parle au nom du comité d'organisation de l'association: M[lle] Beardmore et M[lle] Christie forment l'exécutif; M[lle] Evelyn Pepper, présidente honoraire; M[lle] Grace Johusan est présidente de la section d'Ottawa; M[lle] Nancy Kennedy-Reid, ancienne présidente de l'association.

M. Badanai: Y a-t-il quelqu'un du Nord-Ouest Ontarien?

Le président: M. Badanai représente la Tête des lacs et s'intéresse beaucoup à notre section locale.

Mme Reynolds: M[lle] Christie, M[lle] Beardmore et moi-même sommes de Toronto; M[lle] Pepper et M[lle] Johusan d'Ottawa. M[lle] Nancy Kennedy-Reid représente Montréal.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Voulez-vous nous présenter les autres membres s'il vous plaît?

Le président: Pouvons-nous connaître les autres membres qui sont présents?

[Texte]

Mrs. Reynolds: We have 15 units across Canada with almost 900 active members. We have many others that are somewhat inactive but are paid-up members. Miss Christie is our Hong Kong Nursing Sister. She was a prisoner of war in Hong Kong.

As Mr. Francis would like the other nursing sisters to introduce themselves, would you mind standing up and giving your name?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes, and the group and area you are from.

Major Jessie Urquhart: I am Jessie Urquhart and I am presently in the Armed Forces.

Miss M. Maclaren: I am Mina Maclaren and belong to the Ottawa Unit.

Miss C. Winter: I am Constance Winter and belong to the Ottawa Unit.

Miss M. Ross: I am M. Ross from the Ottawa Unit.

Miss E. Bagnall: I am E. Bagnall and I belong to the Ottawa Unit.

Mrs. Miriam MacDermott: I am Miriam MacDermott of the Ottawa Unit.

Miss D. Lodge: I am Miss D. Lodge of the Ottawa Unit.

Miss B. Riddell: I am Miss B. Riddell from the Winnipeg, now Ottawa Unit.

The Chairman: May I say that you are all welcome. Our procedure is very informal and if at any point in the questioning anyone present would like to add to the comments they do not need to feel inhibited about doing so.

Are there any further comments on page 1 of the brief?

Mr. Bigg: Also, Mr. Chairman, if anything has come up since the briefs have come in or the White Paper has been put out, we would be very happy to hear about it.

The Chairman: Yes, indeed; the doors are certainly not closed at this point.

Mr. Marshall: Mrs. Reynolds, you say you have 900 members?

Mrs. Reynolds: Paid-up members in our National Association.

Mr. Marshall: But in your brief you say you have 7304 registered nurses in Canada?

[Interprétation]

Mme Reynolds: Nous avons 15 sections par tout le Canada avec environ 900 membres actifs et de nombreux membres passifs. M[lle] Christie est notre infirmière de Hong Kong. Elle a été prisonnière de guerre à Hong Kong. M. Francis voudrait que les autres infirmières se présentent.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Oui, votre nom et celui de votre organisme ainsi que l'endroit d'où vous venez.

Major Jessie Urquhart: Je suis Jessie Urquhart et je suis présentement dans les Forces Armées.

Mlle M. MacLaren: Je suis Mina MacLaren et je suis d'Ottawa.

Mlle C. Winter: Je suis Constance Winter et suis aussi d'Ottawa.

Mlle M. Ross: Je suis M. Ross d'Ottawa.

Mlle E. Bagnall: Je suis E. Bagnall d'Ottawa.

Mme Miriam MacDermatt: Je suis Miriam MacDermatt d'Ottawa.

Mlle D. Lodge: Je suis D. Lodge d'Ottawa.

Mlle B. Riddell: Je suis B. Riddell anciennement de Winnipeg et aujourd'hui d'Ottawa.

Le président: Je tiens à vous souhaiter la bienvenue. Nous procédons sans formalité et si vous avez des commentaires à formuler à propos de la première page du mémoire n'hésitez pas à le faire.

M. Bigg: Monsieur le président, je voulais dire aussi que si ces infirmières ont quelque chose de plus à nous dire, nous les écouterons très volontiers.

Le président: Certainement, la porte est ouverte à tout commentaire.

M. Marshall: Vous dites que vous avez 900 membres?

Mme Reynolds: Qui paient leur cotisation à l'association nationale.

M. Marshall: Vous en avez 7304 parmi les infirmières enregistrées?

[Text]

Mrs. Reynolds: This is the total of those in World War I and World War II who have served in the capacity of a nursing sister.

Mr. Marshall: How many are around now who are not members?

Mrs. Reynolds: That is rather difficult to know. Like all associations, we have people who do not pay their membership.

Mr. Marshall: I am just wondering how many are not interested and therefore have not belonged.

Mrs. Reynolds: We have 15 units, as I said, across Canada. There is at least one unit in each province. We have several in Ontario.

The Chairman: I am sure you can be very proud of that record. I know what Mr. Marshall is trying to bring out; every organization faces the problem of trying to get to everyone that you want to reach.

Mr. Marshall: I can state cases, which perhaps is not relevant at this point, but there are people who do not know that help is available for them.

Mrs. Reynolds: One of the aims of our National Executive is to help the poor and needy of our own association. We have very active welfare committees in some of our units that do a great deal. We in Toronto have a very, very active welfare committee which makes a real effort to seek out former nursing sisters who are in need and we try to get the benefits for them. Many of them are unaware of what is available. This is one of our problems.

Miss Ella Beardmore (Executive Committee of the Nursing Sisters Association of Canada): One of our problems, too, is that we are unaware of the benefits that these former nursing sisters are entitled to. This is one reason that we are so extremely interested in this report.

• 1030

Mr. Marshall: That is what I was trying to bring out.

The Chairman: Are there any other comments on page 1?

Miss Daisy Lodge: (from the Ottawa Unit): As many former members of the nursing sisters forces do not live in the larger communities and as there are just the 15 units across the country many of these former members would not belong, being outside the larger cities.

[Interpretation]

Mme Reynolds: C'était de la première guerre et de la deuxième guerre.

M. Marshall: Combien en avez-vous maintenant qui ne sont pas membres?

Mme Reynolds: Je ne sais pas exactement.

M. Marshall: Je me demandais tout simplement combien d'infirmières ne sont pas intéressées.

Mme Reynolds: Nous avons 15 sections dans tout le Canada. Environ une section par province. Nous en avons plusieurs en Ontario.

Le président: Je suis sûr que vous pouvez être fières de ce que vous avez accompli. Tout organisme a le problème de rallier le plus de membres possibles.

M. Marshall: Mais il y a peut-être des infirmières, qui ne sont pas au courant qu'on peut leur venir en aide.

Mme Reynolds: Un des objectifs de notre exécutif national c'est d'aider les personnes dans le besoin. Nous avons des comités de bien-être très actifs, des comités à Toronto. A Toronto nous avons un comité très actif qui fait tous les efforts possibles pour rallier les infirmières à notre association. Et je dois dire qu'un grand nombre d'entre elles n'étaient pas au courant de notre existence. C'est là un de nos problèmes.

Mlle Beardmore (Comité exécutif): Notre problème, c'est que nous ne sommes pas au courant des avantages auxquels certaines de nos consœurs ont droit. Voilà pourquoi nous nous intéressons si vivement à ce rapport.

M. Marshall: C'est ce que je voulais vous entendre dire.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires concernant la première page?

Mlle Daisy Lodge (section d'Ottawa): Plusieurs de nos anciens membres, infirmières militaires, n'habitent pas les grands centres urbains. N'oubliez pas que les 15 sections sont réparties à travers le pays; alors plusieurs de ces membres ne peuvent pas facilement faire partie des sections parce qu'ils n'habitent pas dans les grandes villes.

[Texte]

Mr. Bigg: I notice that a good many nursing sisters are members of The Royal Canadian Legion and perhaps we could contact some of them through the legion.

The Chairman: Are there any comments on page 2 of the Brief—the pension crisis, general problems and background?

Page 3 deals with the basic rate of pension. In the White Paper there are comments concerning other studies and the general problem of social welfare and related programs in Canada, and there is a question in my mind how far the Committee can go on the basic rate of pension. I have said this with other delegations presenting a brief, and we are happy to hear your views; they will be part of the record. Are there any other comments? Page 4, the Old Age Security Pension and Canada Pension Plan. Are there any comments here? Mr. Knowles?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I notice that in the brief it is stressed that these two programs; Old Age Security Pension and Canada Pension Plan, are as-of-right programs, just as our payments under the Pension Act, and I note with interest that you are insisting that it stay this way. It is clear now that a person who qualifies for old age security or the Canada Pension Plan does not thereby lose anything that he is entitled to under the Pension Act. And this also applies to an Old Age Security recipient who qualifies for the guaranteed income supplement. That is, a disability pension is nothing else but a disability pension and the Old Age Security Pension. He can get the guaranteed income supplement and suffer no loss of the disability pension.

I see the Chairman looking at me with that critical eye. I am afraid that in a moment I am going to be out of order.

The Chairman: Mr. Knowles, I think I have taken a fairly tolerant view here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes you have, and I am thanking you for your continuing tolerance. How do you feel about the fact that pensioners on the War Veterans Allowance Act, when they get the guaranteed income supplement, have the War Veterans Allowance cutback?

The Chairman: I think I would have to say that the War Veterans Allowance Act is not part of our terms of reference, in this Committee, and I think we realize that.

[Interprétation]

M. Bigg: Il y a déjà plusieurs de vos membres qui sont membres de la Légion canadienne, alors nous pourrions peut-être en rejoindre de cette façon.

Le président: Quelqu'un a-t-il des commentaires ou des exposés ou des remarques sur la page 2? Sur la pension, les problèmes généraux et antécédents. La page 3 traite du taux de base des pensions. Dans le Livre blanc, on fait des commentaires sur d'autres études et on parle des problèmes généraux de bien-être social et des programmes connexes au Canada. Alors, je me demande jusqu'à quel point le Comité peut étudier le taux de base des pensions. Nous sommes très heureux d'entendre votre point de vue et ce point de vue sera inscrit au dossier. D'autres commentaires? Page 4, Pension de vieillesse et Régime de pensions du Canada. A-t-on des commentaires concernant ces sujets? Monsieur Knowles?

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je remarque que, dans le mémoire, on fait remarquer que ces deux programmes, Pension de vieillesse et Régime de pensions du Canada, sont des programmes de droit, tout comme nos paiements en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions. Vous espérez que cela restera ainsi. Il est clair que la personne qui réussit à obtenir une pension de vieillesse ou une pension en vertu du Régime de pensions du Canada ne devrait pas perdre quoi que ce soit en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions. Cela s'applique aussi à quelqu'un qui reçoit une pension de vieillesse et qui peut recevoir le supplément de revenu garanti. La pension d'invalidité n'est autre chose qu'une pension d'invalidité et la pension de vieillesse. Une personne peut recevoir le supplément de revenu garanti sans voir diminuer sa pension d'invalidité. Je vois que le président me regarde d'un œil peu favorable. Je crois que dans un moment on va me rappeler à l'ordre.

Le président: Monsieur Knowles, je crois que j'ai été assez tolérant envers vous.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg Nord-Centre): Je le sais et je vous en remercie. Que pensez-vous du fait que des pensionnés en vertu de la Loi sur les allocations aux anciens combattants ne puissent pas recevoir le supplément de revenu garanti sans se voir couper leur allocation d'ancien combattant.

Le président: Cette loi que vous venez de mentionner, monsieur Knowles, ne fait pas partie de notre mandat.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You would not let them express their view?

The Chairman: Certainly they can express their views, but there is no question that this is outside our terms of reference.

Miss Beardmore: This is one of our concerns too, the War Veterans Allowance Act being reduced when the person is entitled to Old Age Security. We have thoughts on this but as the Chairman has pointed out, it is really irrelevant to the existing situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I was not aware that there was any suggestion from any quarter that pensions which are paid as a matter of right for war service would be jeopardized by either receipt of the Old Age Security or the Canada Pension Plan. Has this suggestion ever been made? It is totally repugnant to me, just even the thought of it, and if there is any suggestion from any source, I have yet to hear of it. It is the first time this has come to my attention.

Mr. Bigg: The only suggestion, Mr. Chairman, is that it says at the start of the White Paper that basic pension cannot be considered except in reference to the whole problem of pensions and security and so on in Canada. This naturally alarms people who are already suffering under these conditions.

• 1035

The Chairman: I am sure that the observations that the Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada have made on this matter would have the complete support of every member of the Committee in this respect, and I do not think there would be any dispute on the point they are making here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We would support the last comment that was made.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments on Adjudication of Claims? That should be on pages 5 and 6.

Mr. Bigg: This brings up, Mr. Chairman, the last item where they suggest that nursing sisters should be put on the boards. I don't know whether you want to discuss it now or later. I think that it is tied in with this Adjudication of Claims as far as they are concerned. They would certainly be enhanced by having one of their own members put on the Board, but perhaps we will discuss that more fully on the final paragraph.

[Interpretation]

M. Knowles (Winnipeg Nord-Centre): Alors, vous ne voudriez pas qu'ils expriment leur point de vue à ce sujet?

Le président: Ils peuvent exprimer leurs points de vue, mais c'est certainement hors de notre mandat.

Mlle Beardmore: Nous sommes d'accord avec ce que vous avez dit, monsieur Knowles, et nous avons même combattu pour obtenir cela, mais le point n'est pas pertinent ici.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg Nord-Centre): Merci. Merci, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je n'ai pas entendu parler qu'une pension versée de droit pour services militaires pourrait être diminuée si une personne recevait la pension de vieillesse ou une pension en vertu du Régime de pensions du Canada. Est-ce que quelqu'un a déjà laissé entendre cela? Enfin, est-ce que quelqu'un a entendu dire qu'une personne risquerait de voir sa pension d'invalidité diminuer pour les raisons mentionnées? L'idée me dégoûte, mais c'est la première fois que j'en entends parler.

M. Bigg: On dit dans le Livre blanc qu'il faut tenir compte dans l'ensemble du problème des pensions. C'est ce qui alarme les gens.

Le président: Je suis certain que les observations que le Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada a fait à ce sujet recevraient l'appui de ce Comité. Je ne crois pas que personne soit en désaccord avec ce point.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Nous appuyerions ce dernier commentaire.

Le président: Est-ce que quelqu'un a maintenant quelque chose à dire sur ce qui est mentionné aux pages 5 et 6 sur l'adjudication des demandes de pensions?

M. Bigg: Est-ce que vous voulez en discuter tout de suite ou plus tard? Ce point prétend que des membres des Nursing Sisters devraient faire partie des Commissions. Je crois qu'il se rattache à l'adjudication des demandes de pensions. Ils seraient heureux de voir un de leurs membres faire partie de la Commission, mais peut-être devrions-nous en discuter lorsque nous serons rendus au dernier paragraphe.

[Texte]

The Chairman: That is a separate point at the end of the brief and one which is of very great interest to members of the Committee. I think, Mr. Bigg, you have a valid point in this matter. Are there any other comments? Mr. Legault had his hand up a few minutes ago.

Mr. Legault: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My question was asked by Mr. MacRae at the very beginning.

Mr. Bigg: Perhaps one of the sisters would like to enlarge on that, and then we could think about it a little bit before we come to the final paragraph. I have some ideas myself about that, how it would help to have a nursing sister on these boards.

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes, and I think Miss Christie can tell you how we feel that this would be of great benefit because of our experience of having nursed the veterans during World War I and World War II. We have had personal experience.

Miss Christie: A number of the pension medical examiners for one reason or another did not see service in either World War I or World War II, and they really have no down-to-earth understanding of the circumstances under which the pensioners obtained their disability. I have heard fears expressed by pensioners that the doctor really does not understand; he really does not listen. There is this attitude of lack of interest. He may well be listening and be interested, but it is not reflected in his outward attitudes, and the pensioners have this fear, and fear can be a dreadful thing. So we feel that a nursing sister who has served overseas and shared the horrors with the disabled veterans would have a greater understanding, a built-in understanding of the problem, and give them a feeling of support in their complaints and their claims.

The Chairman: I am sure all members of the Committee have listened with interest to what you say at this point, and when we come to make our recommendations later, we will certainly look at what you have said. Are there any comments here?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, is this feeling that the sister just expressed pretty general? I was thinking, as you were talking about this, of a field with which I am more closely connected, the compensation boards, and this is one of the comments that are made by claimants. I am thinking of a particular case where a man asked to get out of the hospital because one of his children was quite sick and he went home. He was supposed to be back

[Interprétation]

Le président: C'est un point distinct. Je suis certain que cela intéressera grandement les membres du Comité. Je crois que vous avez là un point valable à ce sujet. Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres commentaires? Monsieur Legault, vous aviez, me semble-t-il, l'intention de poser des questions?

M. Legault: Merci, monsieur le président, M. MacRae a déjà posé ma question.

M. Bigg: Est-ce qu'une des infirmières ne pourrait nous donner plus de détails, ce qui nous donnerait de quoi réfléchir avant d'arriver au dernier paragraphe. J'ai certaines idées visant à faire admettre des infirmières dans les commissions. Cela serait utile.

Mme Reynolds: Oui, cela serait très certainement utile parce que plusieurs de nos membres ont acquis une très grande expérience pendant les deux guerres mondiales. M^lle^ Christie pourrait vous donner des précisions.

Mlle Christie: Plusieurs des examinateurs médicaux, pour une raison ou une autre, n'ont pas servi durant les deux guerres mondiales, alors ils ne comprennent pas quelles sont les circonstances et les conditions dans lesquelles les pensionnés sont devenus invalides. Certains des pensionnés ont exprimé la crainte que les examinateurs médicaux ne comprennent pas vraiment leur situation et qu'ils ne les écoutent pas vraiment. Il y a un manque d'intérêt. Ils écoutent, mais ne sont pas intéressés et cette attitude se reflète sur leur façon d'agir et entraîne une certaine peur chez le pensionné. Nous croyons que les infirmières qui ont servi outre-mer et qui ont connu les horreurs auxquelles ont été exposés les anciens combattants seraient plus compréhensives et sauraient mieux apprécier les plaintes et les demandes.

Le président: Je suis certain que les membres du Comité ont écouté avec intérêt ce que vous avez dit concernant cette question. Lorsque nous aurons à faire des recommandations, nous tiendrons compte de ce que vous venez de mentionner. Des commentaires?

M. Peters: Ce sentiment qu'on vient d'exprimer est-il généralisé? Je pensais à un domaine que je connais mieux, les commissions de compensation, et où on retrouve le même état de chose. Je pense à un cas où un homme a dû quitter l'hôpital et se rendre chez lui parce qu'un de ses enfants était malade. Il devait revenir le lundi, mais il n'est rentré que le jeudi ou le vendredi parce que son enfant était mort et qu'il avait dû on Monday and he did not get back until Thursday or Friday. The child has died and they had buried the child. He was supposed to have been on disability so, of course, the doctor did not allow him back in the hospital for an operation. When you go over the doctor's head, of course, or other arrangements are made, this to me is a legitimate excuse. But the doctor did not pay any attention. I presume he did not even listen to the reason that was given. Is this a pretty general condition?

Miss Christie: Are you talking about Workmen's Compensation Board cases or veterans?

Mr. Peters: No, I am just saying that I know that this just happened a couple of weeks ago in the compensation in Ontario, but it was not the Compensation Board in any way, shape or form. It was only the doctor that this patient had. And he obviously was talking at him, but he was not talking with him. The fellow listened but did not hear, or was not interested.

• 1040

Miss Christie: That is the expression exactly. We have not done any kind of survey on this, but this is just from what I hear, and just in conversation, quite casual conversation. A few nights ago with another nursing sister, I did not even know that she received a disability pension, but she said: "You know they do not even listen to you". And I could not help but say "amen" because I get this feeling myself. Sometimes I almost feel like saying: "Would you like me to write this for you", and I could give them the facts and it would not waste his time, he would not have to be bothered with me. This I have heard from others. We do not expect a dance of joy to be done when we enter his office, but you would like to feel that he was at least interested in what this pensioner was complaining about. Perhaps "complaining" is not the right word. But when you are asked what your complaints are you sometimes wonder how much he is really listening, how much he knows that is related, and what this does to me. As you say, I think the individual doctor who is examining has much to do with it. I have noticed that the doctors who themselves had served overseas have a much greater understanding and ask an altogether different set of questions.

Mr. Bigg: I think, sister, it is like a man trying to understand hunger when he has never been hungry.

[Interpretation]

l'enterrer. Il était considéré comme un invalide et il n'a donc pas pu être réadmis à l'hôpital pour une opération. Le médecin n'a pas écouté son malade et n'a peut-être même pas écouté la raison. S'agit-il d'une situation généralisée?

Mlle Christie: Parlons-nous de cas des commissions de réparation des accidents du travail ou des anciens combattants?

M. Peters: Je ne voulais que mentionner un cas qui s'est produit récemment en Ontario. La faute n'était imputable en rien à la commission de compensation, mais c'était la faute du médecin. Il écoutait, mais n'entendait pas ou il n'était pas intéressé.

Mlle Christie: C'est exact. Ce que j'ai mentionné découle de ma propre expérience. J'ai eu un entretien l'autre soir avec une autre infirmière qui m'a parlé également de ce problème. Elle m'a dit qu'ils ne nous écoutent même pas. Ils ne nous comprennent pas parce qu'ils ne nous écoutent pas. Parfois j'aimerais lui offrir d'écrire les renseignements moi-même pour l'en débarrasser. Je connais cette situation fort bien. Ils ne semblent pas se préoccuper de nous. Ils ne veulent pas nous écouter ou tenir compte de notre expérience. On aimerait que les gens qui ont à prendre soin des pensionnés tiennent au moins compte des problèmes de ceux-ci.

Il n'est peut-être pas exact de parler de «plainte». Mais quand on nous demande de quoi vous voulez vous plaindre, vous vous demandez parfois si on vous écoute vraiment, et si le médecin connaît vraiment la situation. Comme vous dites, le médecin particulier qui vous examine a beaucoup d'importance. Ceux qui semblent faire preuve de plus de compréhension sont parmi les docteurs qui ont connu le service actif; ils connaissent bien la situation et vous posent les questions toutes différentes.

M. Bigg: Je crois que c'est comme demander à quelqu'un de comprendre ce qu'est la faim quand il n'en a jamais souffert.

[Texte]

Miss Christie: How true.

Mr. Bigg: And when I say "hunger" I do not mean missing your breakfast—

Miss Christie: No.

Mr. Bigg: —I mean missing your diet for a month, two months or two years. He has no conception whatever how it is to be starved. I think that is the kind of thing you are talking about. He laughs at pain who never felt a wound.

Miss Pepper: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak, I am not deprecating the Commission at all but I think it is a sad state of affairs when you hear pensioners say that they do not want to go back to report something more because they are fearful of having their existing pension reduced. This is so and I am sorry to have to say this. We have known it to happen because we are all in close association at some time or another with veterans.

The Chairman: The question has been asked: "How many doctors are there on the Pension Commission?" I cannot answer that question myself but we can have someone from the Department answer it.

Would Mr. Anderson be prepared to say something on this?

Mr. T. D. Anderson (Chairman, Canadian Pension Commission): Yes, Mr. Chairman. We have a total of 48 doctors on the Commission at the moment. Twenty of those are medical advisers and the others are pension medical examiners. Incidentally, we have only one pension medical examiner who is not an ex-serviceman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Anderson.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue this further.

The Chairman: We will now take a short break and then return to complete the examination.

• 1106

AFTER RECESS

The Chairman: Can we call the Committee back to order, please? Just before we had a brief recess I interrupted Mr. Peters and he smiled broadly at that point and said he would resume later.

[Interprétation]

Mlle Christie: C'est bien vrai.

M. Bigg: Si je ne veux pas parler ici de ceux qui ne peuvent prendre leur déjeuner, par exemple.

Mlle Christie: Oui.

M. Bigg: Quand on a jamais risqué de mourir de la faim, il est assez difficile de comprendre la situation.

Mlle Pepper: Me permettriez-vous de prendre la parole, monsieur le président? Je ne veux pas déprécier le travail de la Commission, mais on entend souvent des pensionnés dire qu'ils ne veulent pas continuer à faire des rapports parce qu'ils craignent de voir leurs pensions existantes coupées. C'est la situation réelle. Je suis désolée d'avoir à la signaler. Je sais que cela se produit parce que nous travaillons parfois en étroite collaboration avec les associations d'anciens combattants.

Le président: Quelqu'un a posé la question suivante: Combien y a-t-il de médecins à la Commission des pensions? Je ne peux pas répondre moi-même à cette question. Il faudrait que quelqu'un du ministère réponde à la question. M. Anderson est-il en mesure de nous fournir une réponse?

M. T. D. Anderson (Président de la Commission canadienne des pensions): Oui, monsieur le président. Nous avons 48 médecins à la Commission à l'heure actuelle. Vingt de ces médecins sont des conseillers médicaux, les autres sont des examinateurs médicaux des pensions. Il serait intéressant de signaler qu'un examinateur médical seulement n'a pas fait de service actif.

Le président: Merci beaucoup, M. Anderson.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais poursuivre.

Le président: Nous ferons une courte pause avant de reprendre notre travail.

REPRISE DE LA SÉANCE

Le président: Pourrions-nous reprendre le travail du Comité? Avant la pause-café, j'avais interrompu M. Peters qui était d'accord pour reprendre après la pause.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: We were discussing the relationship of the doctors in relation to cases and the charge that is made by veterans that the doctor may not be paying any attention to their case. In the old system of pension appeals did the Nursing Sisters in their experience not find that again this charge was being made, that this particular case became old hat because it had been heard before, and they did not listen. For instance, I brought up new evidence, I did this and I did that, but they did not listen. After the first time the veteran quite often complains of the fact that they did not listen.

Mrs. Reynolds: Mr. Peters, I believe this is quite true. Miss Christie probably is the one who can speak to this from personal experience.

Miss Christie: I remember very distinctly on one occasion I attempted to give new evidence and he said, "Oh, we have that". I said, "You could not possibly have that", but "Good morning", and that was it. How does a mere pensioner argue against that? I mean we are dismissed, that is the end of the interview.

Mr. Peters: Yes, this is a complaint in both cases and I do not know the answer. However, I do think the Woods Commission had part of the answer when they insisted that they not be the same people, and I suggest perhaps not even the same information. If the file is before the person doing the interview, and he opens the file and he scans through it, there is a suggestion that this information is going to be provided in advance. I think the charge will be continued that they did not listen because they already had made up their minds. It would seem to me the Woods Commission in their suggestion of completely new people without that evidence meant they would, in fact, have to listen if they are going to make any kind of a decision. They might make a decision that had not been made before and so they would have to at least listen, because they would have to justify their decision sooner or later. Is this a reasonable summary of what the effect of an independent appeal, a new appeal, a new person would be?

Miss Christie: I think this is what the Appeal Board would, hopefully, accomplish then.

[Interpretation]

M. Peters: Nous étions en train de discuter de l'importance des médecins qui examinent les patients et de la plainte que formulent les anciens combattants à l'effet que les médecins ne s'occupent pas de leurs cas. Quand l'ancien régime d'appel des pensions était en vigueur, les soeurs infirmières n'ont-elles pas remarqué que les anciens combattants se plaignaient de cela; cette plainte n'est donc pas nouvelle, et c'est pourquoi on n'y prête plus aucune attention. Moi-même, par exemple, j'ai présenté de nouvelles preuves, mais les examinateurs ne m'ont pas écouté. La deuxième fois qu'ils se présentent devant les médecins, les anciens combattants se plaignent que les médecins ne s'intéressent plus à leur cas.

Mme Reynolds: Monsieur Peters, ce que vous dites est tout à fait exact. M[lle] Christie pourrait nous raconter son expérience personnelle à ce sujet.

Mlle Christie: Je me rappelle très bien qu'une fois, j'ai essayé de fournir de nouveaux faits au médecin et il m'a répondu qu'il connaissait déjà ces faits; je lui ai dit que c'était impossible, mais il m'a tout simplement dit que la consultation était terminée. Comment un simple pensionné peut-il réagir devant un tel argument? Quand le médecin nous dit que la consultation est terminée, elle est terminée, un point c'est tout.

M. Peters: Oui, on a le droit de se plaindre et je ne sais vraiment pas comment on pourrait expliquer une telle situation. Cependant, je crois que le Comité Woods fournissait en partie la réponse, quand il insistait pour que des personnes différentes examinent les cas, et j'irais même plus loin en disant qu'il ne faudrait pas que les mêmes personnes examinent les mêmes renseignements. Si la personne qui fait passer l'entrevue a le dossier devant lui qu'il peut consulter à sa guise, il est très probable qu'il aura les renseignements qu'il cherche à l'avance. On pourra alors continuer à se plaindre, car en fait, les examinateurs auront déjà pris leur décision à l'avance. D'après la recommandation du Comité Woods les examinateurs seront forcés d'écouter les anciens combattants avant de prendre une décision quelle qu'elle soit. Il pourrait arriver qu'ils prennent une décision qui n'avait pas été prise avant et il faudra donc qu'ils écoutent les anciens combattants étant donné qu'ils devront justifier tôt ou tard leur décision. Ai-je ainsi pu faire comprendre quel serait l'effet d'un appel indépendant par une personne différente?

Mlle Christie: J'espère que c'est ce que la Division des appels s'efforcera d'accomplir.

[Texte]

Mr. Peters: I understand, Mr. Chairman, they are not aware of the appeal procedure outlined in the White Paper.

The Chairman: Unfortunately the Nursing Sisters Association have not had an opportunity to examine the White Paper in detail.

Mr. Peters: The new appeal is really a tiered appeal system where it is carried on within the department rather than going outside. It is tiered in a different manner and I suppose I better not ask about it. All I will ask is in the Woods Commission suggestion for appeal, would you find that the strong support from your own experience would be at least in the idea that the people who were going to hear the appeal were going to have to listen because they did not have the previous information that would be available under the present system and that they would have to listen before they could make any decision.

Miss Christie: Probably.

The Chairman: Mr. Legault.

Mr. Legault: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary to what Mr. Peters was asking. First of all, I would like to compliment the Nursing Sisters for their wonderful brief and especially for their recommendation of the member of their organization on the Commission and on the Appeal Board. However, one thing that hits me and this is very relevant in all fields of work in the sense that you would notice it in social work. Mr. Anderson has pointed out very well that of the doctors who are with the Commission only one is not a veteran. On the Pension Commission I think you will also find that most, if not all, of them are veterans. The point in my mind is that it is just human nature that, with time, we all become stale. Perhaps a rotation formula could be devised. Someone who has listened over and over and over again is not always disposed to be completely sympathetic. Perhaps a proper formula could be devised, to give him a holiday for a time—change his work every third month or every sixth month, or so. Would that not be a better proposition than to try to find someone else who may not have the experience, and, as you have said, has not participated in the particular difficulties that are being discussed?

Miss Christie: What do you mean by "changing their work"?

Mr. Legault: What I fear is this continuous role of facing the same people. It is not a case of meeting something very enjoyable, such as

[Interprétation]

M. Peters: Je crois comprendre que l'association n'est pas au courant de la nouvelle procédure d'appel qui est définie dans le Livre blanc.

Le président: Malheureusement, l'Association des soeurs infirmières n'a pas eu l'occasion d'étudier le Livre blanc en détails.

M. Peters: Le nouveau système d'appel est organisé par paliers et tout se passe à l'intérieur du Ministère au lieu d'avoir recours à une aide extérieure. Son organisation est différente et je ne crois pas que je doive demander des détails à ce sujet. Je voudrais cependant savoir ceci: croyez-vous que la grande innovation du Rapport Woods est d'obliger en quelque sorte les examinateurs à écouter le malade avant de prendre leur décision parce qu'ils ne posséderont pas les renseignements qu'ils ont avec le système actuel.

Mlle Christie: Probablement.

Le président: Monsieur Legault.

M. Legault: Monsieur le président, j'aurais une remarque complémentaire à ajouter à ce qu'a dit M. Peters. Mais d'abord, j'aimerais féliciter les Soeurs infirmières pour leur excellent mémoire et pour avoir recommandé un des membres de leur organisation au Comité et au Bureau d'appel. Cependant, quelque chose me frappe et je crois que c'est particulièrement important dans un domaine du genre de l'assistance sociale. M. Anderson a très justement souligné que seul un des docteurs de la Commission de pensions n'est pas un ancien combattant. Je crois aussi, et ce n'est qu'humain, qu'après un certain temps, on manque de ressort. On pourrait peut-être songer à varier le travail des examinateurs. Quelqu'un dont le travail ne consiste qu'à faire des entrevues n'est peut-être pas toujours disposé à être sympatique envers la personne qu'il écoute. On pourrait peut-être songer à lui donner des vacances de temps en temps, à changer la sorte de travail qu'il fait tous les trois ou six mois, etc. Ne serait-ce pas mieux que d'essayer de trouver quelqu'un qui n'a peut-être pas son expérience et qui n'a pas lui-même vécu les situations difficiles dont nous nous occupons présentement.

Mlle Christie: Que voulez-vous dire «changer la sorte de travail qu'ils font»?

M. Legault: Ce que je crains surtout pour les examinateurs, c'est la monotonie, car ces examinateurs interrogent toujours les mêmes to talk about a favourite subject—fishing, or something like that. You are always dealing with difficulties. Such is human nature that after a while we become stale; we become disinterested. This, I believe, is the fear that does exist among applicants—that whoever listens is not interested. And the reason for his lack of interest is that perhaps he has heard about 1,000 such cases and it merely becomes another number and a case that he has to dispose of.

If there was a rotation system he would rest for a while and do some other type of work rather than deal with these applications. He would then come back refreshed and more interested. Would that not be a better format?

Miss Christie: I think that would mean asking the same questions in another setting. After all, is not asking questions the basic procedure in any doctor's practice whether he be in private practice or in a specialty? He is still facing patients and asking questions. Apart from those who go into administrative work, they are still dealing with patients. And pensioners are basically patients, because they have some disability. I cannot see how moving the medical examiner to another position would change the situation. If he is not interested in one situation he is not going to be interested in another, relative to examining or interviewing pensioners.

Mr. Legault: Then we get right back to the same thing. We could change the people, but according to various briefs we have received within about a year or so we are right back in the same rut.

• 1115

Miss Christie: But they do not examine that often, do they?

Mr. Legault: But they are dealing always with the same cases.

Miss Christie: From my experience, they do not always. They take the files in order, as they appear. They do not always have to deal with the same pensioners. I am speaking from my own experience. I think twice I have seen the same documents.

Mr. Legault: What I am trying to find is some solution that will develop this sense of interest that the pensioner or the applicant would want to feel he is getting from the examiner.

[Interpretation]

sortes de personnes. Ils ne s'entretiennent pas de quelque chose d'agréable, comme la pêche ou que sais-je, ils ne parlent que de situations difficiles. Il est donc naturel qu'après un certain temps, on se fatigue, on n'a plus ce ressort. Et je crois que c'est de cela que se plaignent les anciens combattants: que les examinateurs ne font plus attention à ce qu'ils leur disent. Et la cause en est que ceux-ci ont déjà entendu la même chose de très nombreuses fois. Ce qu'il entend n'est donc plus qu'un cas parmi bien d'autres semblables ... et qu'il doit régler au plus tôt.

S'il y avait un système de roulement, il pourrait échapper à la routine en faisant une autre sorte de travail pendant quelque temps. Il reviendrait ensuite à ce travail beaucoup mieux disposé. Ne serait-ce pas beaucoup mieux?

Mlle Christie: Je crois que de toute façon il continuerait à poser des questions, mais dans un autre contexte. N'est-ce pas là le travail du médecin, qu'il soit un omnipraticien ou un spécialiste. Il aurait quand même affaire à des patients à qui il devrait poser des questions. La seule exception est pour les médecins qui se lancent dans l'administration. Et les pensionnés sont des patients, puisqu'ils souffrent d'invalidité. Je ne vois vraiment pas comment on changerait cette situation en déplaçant le médecin-examinateur et en lui faisant faire un autre travail pendant quelque temps. Si un travail ne l'intéresse pas, je ne conçois pas comment un autre pourrait l'intéresser.

M. Legault: Nous en arrivons à la même conclusion. Nous pourrions changer les examinateurs, mais, et c'est là l'avis exprimé dans différents mémoires, nous reviendrions au même point au bout d'une année.

Mlle Christie: Mais les examinateurs ne passent pas tout leur temps à faire des entrevues, n'est-ce pas?

M. Legault: Non, mais ils traitent toujours des mêmes problèmes.

Mlle Christie: Je ne crois pas, d'après l'expérience que j'ai. Ils prennent les dossiers dans l'ordre dans lequel ils apparaissent, mais ils ne s'occupent pas toujours des mêmes pensionnés. Je parle en connaissance de cause. Personnellement, je n'ai vu les mêmes dossiers qu'en deux occasions.

M. Legault: Mon but est de trouver une façon d'intéresser les examinateurs aux problèmes des pensionnés et de ceux qui demandent une pension, car ces derniers ont besoin de sentir qu'on s'intéresse à leur cas.

[Texte]

Miss Christie: When the examiner takes on the job he knows what his work will be. If he is not interested in that kind of work he should not take the job. That applies to any work. If you are not interested in your work, well, then, God help you. It might be just as well for you to get out and do something that you could be interested in.

Mr. Legault: We are arriving at the same conclusion. Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions? Mr. Bigg?

Mr. Bigg: From your own experience, sister—and this is a leading question, of course, because that is the only way I can probe your experience—what in your opinion is the biggest difficulty, apart from this changing of personnel? What do you think of the method of obtaining evidence about physical difficulties? Is there a lack of actual records, or a lack of proper presumptions? Do you understand what I mean? The fact that people are not getting what they think is a square deal in pensions relates to evidence. Is it the lack of evidence, or is there a lack in the hearing of the evidence?

Miss Christie: I think it is the thick file, right off the bat. If they get this great big thick file they cannot possibly go through it, because they do not know who they are going to get ahead of time. They cannot review the file. I do not quite know, if I were given this job, how I would get that information, but I would work on it.

Mr. Bigg: You people have not sat on these Boards and you therefore do not really have the information I am asking for?

Miss Christie: No, not really.

Mr. Bigg: But you feel that if you were on these Boards you could be valuable because you have first-hand information and you would know whether or not what you heard was relevant to the case?

Miss Christie: I am sure that any of us here would work out something practical.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments on the points on pages 5 and 6 on Adjudication?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we may have left the wrong impression and I would not want that to happen. As I understand it, when

[Interprétation]

Mlle Christie: Quand un examinateur décide de faire ce genre de travail, il sait en quoi cela consiste. Si ce travail ne l'intéresse pas, il ne devrait pas le faire. Il en va de même de n'importe quel travail. Quand le travail que vous faites ne vous intéresse pas, il est aussi bien d'en changer.

M. Legault: Nous en arrivons à la même conclusion. Merci.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Monsieur Bigg?

M. Bigg: Ma Sœur, en vous basant sur votre expérience—je crois que c'est une question importante, car c'est la seule façon pour moi de voir de près quelle expérience vous avez—quelle est la plus grande difficulté, à part le changement de personnel?

Que pensez-vous de la façon dont on obtient des preuves concernant les difficultés physiques? Y a-t-il trop peu de preuves écrites ou les conclusions qu'on tire sont-elles mauvaises? Voyez-vous ce que je veux dire? Si les pensionnés pensent qu'ils sont lésés, cela tient-il au manque de preuve ou au fait que l'entrevue n'est pas ce qu'elle devrait être?

Mlle Christie: Je crois que les dossiers trop volumineux rendent la tâche trop ardue aux examinateurs, car ils ne peuvent les parcourir, ne sachant jamais combien de travail les attend. Ils ne peuvent passer tout le dossier en revue. Si je devais faire ce travail, je ne sais vraiment pas comment je m'y prendrais, mais je suppose que je trouverais bien une méthode.

M. Bigg: En fait, vous n'avez jamais fait partie d'un tel comité et vous ne pouvez pas vraiment me renseigner.

Mlle Christie: Non, pas vraiment.

M. Bigg: Mais vous croyez que si vous faisiez partie d'un tel comité, vous pourriez être utile étant donné que vous avez des renseignements de premier ordre et vous sauriez si ce que vous avez entendu est important ou non pour le cas?

Mlle Christie: Je suis sûre que chaque personne qui est présente ici pourrait trouver une méthode pratique.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires concernant les points des pages 5 et 6 sur les adjudications des demandes de pensions.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, nous ne voudrions pas donner une fausse impression. Quand une personne se présente devant un a person comes in initially to a district doctor it is not so much that the interview and the questioning and the case are not well conducted at that stage. The difficulty arises in subsequent presentations. The doctor makes a decision, as a doctor always does, on his initial interview with the patient, and he has the tendency not to listen beyond that stage. This is a problem not only with pensions but with your own general practitioner. If he decides you have a gall bladder condition it does not matter a damn if he has pretty good evidence that you have emphysema, or tuberculosis, or anything else; he will still be interested in doing a gall bladder operation eventually. There is the inability to listen after he has made his decision. In the case of the Commission, it is their inability to listen after they have made a decision. The appeal really is not heard, because nobody listens to what happens after that. This is my experience.

I would not like to leave the impression that when you go to a DVA doctor he does not do anything about the initial case. I have found them to be good that way. But it is quite often very difficult for them to change their minds after they have decided on something. I presume we do not want to leave the impression that they are not doing their job initially; that they are—

An hon. Member: That they are not competent doctors?

Mr. Peters: That they are not competent. It is just that with repetition it is very difficult to listen to something new that may emerge. I am sure that when a doctor sees a patient he says: "Oh, yes; that is tonsillitis," or that it is something else. It really does not matter a damn what else is there. He has it pegged—"This guy swings the lead," or "That guy has flat feet."

The Chairman: Mr. Peters, I think you have made your point. Are there any further questions? Mr. Lambert had his hand up a minute ago.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, Mr. Chairman. I am particularly concerned about the Association's recommendation relative to the institution of the independent appeal board. I presume this goes back right to the whole problem of adjudication. Listening to a number of the questions here, I do not think there has been too much differentiation, or the clear establishing of a differentiation, between the treatment services of the Department and the work of the doctors of the Canadian Pension Commission. Because, in essence, when we talk about pensions it is the Pension Commission that we are concerned médecin de district, le problème ne se présente pas à ce stade. La difficulté se présente plus tard. Le médecin prend une décision lors de sa première entrevue avec son patient et généralement, il n'écoute plus après ce stade. Ce problème ne se pose pas seulement dans le cas des pensions, mais pour n'importe quel patient d'un omnipraticien. S'il estime que vous souffrez de la vésicule biliaire, peu lui importe que vous souffriez aussi d'emphysème, de tuberculose ou d'une autre maladie. Ce qui l'intéresse, c'est de vous opérer de la vésicule. Les médecins sont incapables de vous écouter quand ils ont pris leur décision. En fait, il n'y a pas d'audition d'appel, car personne ne s'intéresse à ce qui est dit par la suite. C'est l'expérience que j'ai. Je n'aimerais pas vous donner l'impression que les médecins du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants ne se préoccupent pas du problème initial. Il y en a qui s'en occupent fort bien. Mais il leur est fort difficile de changer d'avis; je suppose que nous ne voulons pas donner l'impression qu'il ne font pas bien leur travail, qu'ils sont...

[Interpretation]

Une voix: Qu'ils ne sont pas compétents?

M. Peters: Qu'ils ne sont pas compétents. C'est tout simplement que quand on entend la même chose un nombre infini de fois, il est fort difficile d'avoir de nouvelles idées. Je suis sûr que quand un médecin voit un patient, il se dit: «celui-là a une amygdalite, celui-ci souffre de ceci.» Il ne se soucie de rien d'autre. Il pense que ce patient tire au flanc et que celui-là a les pieds plats.

Le président: Monsieur Peters, je crois que vous avez bien expliqué votre position. Y a-t-il d'autres questions? M. Lambert voulait poser une question il y a quelques minutes.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Oui, monsieur le président, je me préoccupe surtout de la recommandation de l'Association concernant l'institution d'un bureau d'appel indépendant. Je suppose que cela remet en question tout le problème de l'adjudication. En écoutant ici un certain nombre de questions, je ne trouve pas qu'il y ait eu beaucoup de distinction, ou l'établissement d'une distinction claire, entre les services de soins du ministère et le travail fourni par les médecins de la Commission des pensions du Canada. Car quand nous parlons de pensions, c'est essentiellement de pensions de la Commission with. I have seen nothing in the brief to suggest that the doctors of the Pension Commission who make the medical assessments are in any way incompetent, and I do not think anyone can. Perhaps in certain types of cases there might be some greater reliance on the use of consultants rather than staff doctors, but that is a matter of judgment in relation to individual cases. I would not like to pass an opinion now on whether the Canadian Pension Commission does, or does not, use sufficient independent consultants.

What intrigues me, though, is the combination of the recommendations of the Woods Committee and the government White Paper. Frankly, in my own view, having had some experience of the pressures that can be brought to bear upon a Minister of Veterans Affairs relative to cases, I would look with horror upon any move which would put the original determination of pension entitlement in the hands of departmental officials responsible to the Minister. This means that it goes right into the lap of the Minister, and discretion is one of the worst things that a minister can have in these matters. If there is a question of taking a minister on appeal to an independent board it becomes very difficult.

Has the Association, though, in assessing an independent appeal board, looked at the stratification and the other hierarchy of officials and personnel and the cost of it, where members of an independent appeal board would necessarily be at a salary higher than that of the Commissioners? And then there are their staffs. Have you considered just what setting up an independent appeal board would mean in dollars and cents and set that against the potential benefits that would be added to the present system?

I am not by any means saying that the present system is perfect, but would the additional $400,000 to $500,000 a year, which it would cost to operate an independent appeal board, mean that you would have a system that would be that much better than the present one, or the framework that you have now if it is properly operating?

The Chairman: Would any member of the delegation care to comment on Mr. Lambert's questions? Mr. MacRae?

Mr. MacRae: May I, Mr. Chairman, ask Mr. Lambert to clarify a point for the benefit of the delegation? Mr. Lambert is a former Minister of Veterans Affairs...

[Interprétation]

dont il s'agit. Rien de ce que j'ai lu dans le mémoire ne me permet de supposer que les médecins de la Commission des pensions, qui font les évaluations médicales, manquent de compétence de quelque façon que ce soit, et je ne crois pas que quelqu'un d'autre pourrait le faire. Peut-être, dans certains cas, s'est-on appuyé plus volontiers sur les consultants que sur les médecins de la Commission, mais c'est une question d'appréciation de chaque cas en particulier. J'hésiterais à dire maintenant si la Commission des pensions du Canada emploie ou non suffisamment de médecins à titre de consultants.

Cependant, je suis intrigué par les recommandations faites par le comité Woods et celles qui sont présentées dans le Livre blanc. Franchement, j'ai eu quelqu'expérience des pressions qui peuvent être exercées sur un ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants à l'égard des cas et je considérerais avec horreur toute mesure visant à placer la détermination originale de la pension dans les mains des fonctionnaires qui relèvent du ministre. Ce serait confier l'affaire au ministre lui-même, et dans une question de ce genre, la discrétion est la pire chose que l'on puisse assurer au ministre. S'il s'agit de citer en appel un ministre, à une commission indépendante, la chose devient très difficile.

Mais, l'Association a-t-elle songé à ce qu'il en coûte d'instituer un tribunal d'appel indépendant, car les membres d'un tribunal d'appel indépendant coûteront nécessairement plus cher que ceux de la Commission? Avez-vous songé à ce qu'il en coûterait d'instituer un tribunal de ce genre, relativement aux avantages que ce tribunal remporterait sur le système actuel?

Loin de moi la pensée que le présent régime est parfait, mais la somme de $400,000 à $500,000, soit le montant qu'il faudrait consacrer au fonctionnement d'un tribunal d'appel indépendant, nous vaudrait-elle un système tellement supérieur aux cadres actuels, lorsqu'ils fonctionnent proprement?

Le président: Est-ce qu'un membre du comité désire commenter la question de M. Lambert? M. MacRae?

M. MacRae: Monsieur le président, puis-je demander à M. Lambert certains éclaircissements au profit de la délégation. M. Lambert est un ancien ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants...

[Text]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): For a very short period.

Mr. MacRae: A very short period.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But still sufficient to know under what gun you can be even with the present system.

Mr. MacRae: This is the point I want you to clarify for my benefit, and perhaps for the delegation. When you talk of the present system are you referring to the system as it presently exists or to the system as envisaged by the White Paper? I think that should be clarified.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Under the system as it now exists the Canadian Pension Commission adjudicates and if there are appeals there is a separate appeal board of the Commissioners. This is within themselves, just as in many courts you will have an entitlement to be heard in the first instance by one judge, or two judges, and then an appeal is taken to three or to five, as the case may be.

I have seen the recommendation or suggestion that the initial adjudication be made by departmental officials.

The Chairman: That is the suggestion of the White Paper.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes.

Mr. MacRae: I think, though, that to clarify it for the delegation—and, by the way, Mr. Lambert and I happen to be on the same side in this particular case . . .

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not talking politics here.

Mr. MacRae: I know you are not; but the point I am trying to make, if you are going to put the delegation on the spot, Mr. Lambert, is that it was not clear in my mind—and perhaps it is not clear in theirs—whether, when you ask them the question about what they think, you mean the system as it presently exists or as the White Paper suggests it should be? That is all I am asking you to clarify.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No; I asked about their recommendation. They say they support the recommendation of the Woods Report. This is quite clear in my question.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters has a question.

[Interpretation]

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Pendant bien peu de temps.

M. MacRae: Pendant bien peu de temps.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Mais assez longtemps pour me rendre compte de la situation où vous vous trouvez, même sous le présent régime.

M. MacRae: C'est précisément sur ce point que je désire des éclaircissements, pour moi-même et les membres de la délégation. Quand vous dites le présent régime, parlez-vous du système actuel, tel qu'il existe présentement, ou de celui qu'on mentionne dans le Livre Blanc? Il convient, je crois, de préciser.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Sous le régime actuel, c'est la Commission des pensions du Canada qui décide, et s'il y appel, on a recours à un tribunal d'appel distinct formé des commissaires. Ceci se fait entre eux, un peu comme, dans certains tribunaux, une cause sera entendue par un ou deux juges, en première instance, et l'appel reporté à deux ou cinq, selon le cas.

J'ai pris connaissance de la recommandation ou suggestion à l'effet que la décision initiale soit faite par les fonctionnaires du ministère.

Le président: Cette suggestion paraît au Livre blanc.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Oui.

M. MacRae: Je crois cependant qu'en vue de la préciser à l'intention de la délégation, et soit dit en pensant, M. Lambert, je suis avec eux en l'occurrence . . .

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je ne fais pas de politique ici.

M. MacRae: Je comprends, mais je n'en veux pas moins savoir si, lorsque vous parlez du système actuel, vous entendez celui qui existe présentement ou celui qu'on mentionne dans le Livre Blanc?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Non; je me suis renseigné au sujet de leur recommandation. Ils disent qu'ils appuient la recommandation du rapport Woods. Ce point est clairement exprimé dans ma question.

Le président: M. Peters a une question à poser.

[Texte]

Mr. Peters: I was just going to point out to Mr. Lambert that the delegation has not had the benefit of perusing the White Paper.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Quite; and I though I made that clear in my question. I apologize if I did not. But you support the independent appeal board as recommended by the Woods Committee on page 6 in the second paragraph:

> Our Association considers this to be a most practical step and strongly endorses its implementation.

There is nothing equivocal about that statement.

Let us go to the Woods Report. It is the independent appeal board and all that goes with it. I inferentially threw in the recommendation of the White Paper to see what reaction you would have to that. Let us keep them separate. Has the Association considered just what the Woods Report means by "an independent appeal board", the cost thereof and whether it is going to be that much better?

Mrs. Reynolds: I am afraid I cannot answer that, Mr. Lambert, because we are not experts. We are just expressing our opinions as nurses.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes; that is fine; but that sentence is a very powerful one.

The Chairman: Mr. Lambert, on page 6 the final sentence of the second paragraph on the page reads:

> Our Association considers this to be a most practical step and strongly endorses its implementation.

That, as I read it, is an endorsement of the Woods Committee Report on this point.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am asking my question...

The Chairman: Right.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Have you considered this point of the cost and all of the proliferations?

Mrs. Reynolds: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Or whether or not it would be that much better than the present system, which could perhaps be overhauled?

[Interprétation]

M. Peters: Je voulais simplement faire remarquer à M. Lambert que la délégation n'a pas eu l'avantage de lire attentivement le Livre blanc.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Justement; et je croyais avoir été précis. Je m'excuse si je ne l'ai pas été. Mais vous êtes en faveur d'un tribunal d'appel indépendant, tel que celui que recommande le comité Woods, à la page 6, au second paragraphe:

> Notre Association considère que c'est là une mesure très pratique et en recommande fortement l'application.

Il n'y a rien d'équivoque dans cette déclaration.

Reportons-nous au rapport Woods. C'est le tribunal d'appel indépendant et tout ce qu'il implique. J'ai, sous forme d'allusion, parlé de la recommandation du Livre blanc, pour voir la réaction. Tenons-les séparés. L'Association a-t-elle considéré ce que le rapport Woods entend par un «tribunal d'appel indépendant», ce qu'il en coûterait et si ce serait tellement mieux?

Mme Reynolds: Je crains de ne pouvoir répondre à cette question, M. Lambert, car je ne suis pas spécialisée en la matière. Nous ne faisons qu'exprimer notre opinion à titre d'infirmières.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Fort bien, mais cette phrase est très énergique.

Le président: M. Lambert, la dernière phrase, du second paragraphe, à la page 6, se lit:

> Notre Association considère que c'est là une mesure très pratique et en recommande fortement l'application.

Il s'agit là, à mon avis, d'une concordance de vues avec le comité Woods sur ce point.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je pose ma question...

Le président: Très bien.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Avez-vous pensé à ce qu'il en coûterait et à toutes les implications?

Mme Reynolds: Non.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Ou si cela sera tellement mieux que le présent régime, que l'on pourrait peut-être rénover?

[Text]

Miss Pepper: I might speak to that, Mr. Lambert, we did not work this out mathematically to determine what moneys would be involved.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right; that is fine. I have a related question. It may perhaps put you in an unfair position. It relates to the recommendation in the White Paper that the first adjudication be in the hands of department officials. From your experience how do you react to that? Perhaps you would like to take it under advisement?

• 1130

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Lambert. Are there any further questions dealing with this point? Yes, Miss Christie?

Miss Christie: Before we leave the question of pensions and examiners and so on, may I make it clear for the record that none of our remarks or mine personally are in any way critical of the professional competency of the medical examiners. It is strictly a matter of attitude. It has nothing to do with their professional ability.

Mr. Legault: Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding of the purpose of Mr. Lambert's question that if we are going to do something we should try to find a solution which would put the improvement on a permanent basis; that whatever would develop from the suggestions might perhaps just bring it right back within a year two to the stale situation that we have today, such as is suggested by the organizations.

It does not mean that we are going to remove human nature from all of these situations. I can well understand Mr. Lambert's point in suggesting that perhaps there may be another way to improve the situation in that sense.

Miss Lodge: May I speak on the point that was raised about whether the present system could be overhauled? As suggested in here, the review board very often contains members who have made the initial decision. Could it be that it would be an absolutely new group that would hear them?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There I would agree with you entirely. I think that under review the man who sat on an initial decision must under no circumstances appear on the review board.

Mrs. Reynolds: Thank you.

[Interpretation]

Mlle Pepper: Permettez-moi de dire un mot sur ce point. Nous n'avons pas effectué de calculs pour déterminer ce qu'il en coûterait.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Très bien. J'ai une question à poser, qui est en rapport avec l'autre. Vous serez peut-être placée dans une situation désavantageuse. Ma question se rapporte à la recommandation qu'on trouve dans le Livre blanc à l'effet que la décision originale soit laissée aux fonctionnaires du ministère. Qu'en pensez-vous? Voulez-vous un moment pour y penser?

Le président: Merci M. Lambert. Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Oui, M^lle^ Christie?

Mlle Christie: Avant de quitter cette question de pensions, d'examinateurs, etc., puis-je préciser, pour que cela soit inscrit au dossier, qu'aucune de nos remarques, ou mes remarques personnelles, ne veulent d'aucune façon mettre en doute la compétence professionnelle des examinateurs médicaux. Il s'agit surtout d'une question d'attitude qui n'a rien à voir avec leur compétence professionnelle.

M. Legault: Je crois, monsieur le président, si je comprends bien les questions de M. Lambert, que si nous devons faire quelque chose, il nous faudra trouver une solution visant à améliorer d'une façon permanente la situation, car autrement, tout ce qui résulterait des suggestions ne ferait qu'améliorer la situation pour un an ou deux, et nous ramener au point de départ, comme l'a suggéré l'association.

Ce qui ne veut pas dire que nous allons pouvoir enlever le facteur humain de ces situations. Je comprends fort bien la suggestion de M. Lambert, à l'effet que l'on puisse d'une autre façon améliorer la situation.

Mlle Lodge: Puis ajouter au sujet de la question soulevée, à savoir si le présent système pourrait être rénové? Comme on l'a laissé entendre, le Conseil de révision est très souvent composé de membres qui ont participé à la décision finale. Ne leur serait-il pas possible de se présenter devant un groupe entièrement nouveau?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je suis d'avis que toute personne qui a participé à la prise d'une décision initiale ne doit pas être membre ensuite du Conseil de révision.

Mme Reynolds: Merci.

[Texte]

The Chairman: Are there any further comments on this?

Mrs. Reynolds: I would like to say that I think this is something that we would like to think about, and if we have an any suggestions we would be prepared to make them.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I must say that in saying this, though, I am sure that in the administration of the Pension Commission every effort is made so that there are different people on review boards or appeal boards. But there are sometimes administrative difficulties that do arise. I do not think the pension commisioners are necessarily all ogres, you know, not by a long shot.

Miss Christie: We do not think so.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No. Administratively there may be some difficulties, I am sure. But as a matter of principle maybe we are just underlining the obvious, the practice now. But it seems to me that this should be reinforced because I have seen too many cases in which there has been a reappearance of the commissioner who was on the initial decision.

The Vice Chairman: Any further questions on the question of the appeal board? Mr. Turner.

Mr. Turner (London East): Mr. Chairman, we were assured, when we had some of the department officials here, and also the Minister, that no commissioner would hear the same case twice. That is the way I understood it.

The Vice Chairman: Yes, I believe that this is the way it was explained to us.

Mr. Turner (London East): Right.

The Vice Chairman: Any further questions? Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, is it not the thought of the delegation that it is the old basic principle of British justice, that it not only should be done but should appear to be done?

Many pensioners who may not be entitled to additional benefits, or additional pension, are personally of the opinion that they did not get a fair hearing because of the duplication of personnel who heard the case and then heard the review of the case, and in many cases heard it the second and the third time. It may be that they should not get a pension, but they also should be of the opin-

[Interprétation]

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires?

Mme Reynolds: Nous aimerions réfléchir sur le sujet afin d'être prêts à faire des suggestions.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je suis sûr que la Commission des pensions fait tout les efforts possibles pour que des personnes différentes fassent partie du Conseil de revision ou d'appel. Il peut parfois y avoir des difficultés administratives qui font qu'une personne ayant participé à une décision originale fasse partie du Conseil de révision.

Mlle Christie: Nous ne sommes pas de cet avis.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Non! Du côté administratif, cela peut causer des problèmes. En principe, je crois que nous soulignons que cette pratique ne devrait pas exister. Il faudrait souligner cela à nouveau parce qu'il y a eu trop de cas où un commissaire ayant participé à la décision initiale, a fait ensuite partie du Tribunal d'appel.

Le vice-président: D'autres questions à ce sujet? Monsieur Turner.

M. Turner (London-Est): Certains des fonctionnaires du ministère, de même que le ministre, nous ont assurés qu'aucun commissaire entendrait feux fois la même cause.

Le vice-président: Oui, je crois que c'est bien ce qu'on nous avait expliqué.

M. Turner (London-Est): En effet.

Le vice-président: D'autres questions? Monsieur Peters.

M. Peters: N'est-ce pas dans l'esprit de la délégation qu'un vieux principe fondamental de la justice britannique veut que justice soit non seulement rendue mais aussi débattue.

Bien des pensionnés qui n'ont pas droit à des avantages additionnels ou à une pension supplémentaire, sont d'avis qu'ils n'ont pas eu un traitement juste parce que les mêmes membres de la Commission ont participé à l'audition de la cause et ont ensuite fait partie de la Commission d'appel ou de revision lorsqu'il y a eu des appels en première ou deuxième instance. Il se peut fort bien qu'ils ion that justice was done and that they had a fair opportunity, and this sometimes is, in the person's mind, not possible.

I am sure the nursing sisters will know of a case where a person psychologically believes that he has greater disability than he has, and if he has what he considers to be an impartial hearing and is not able to make his case, he will be satisfied with that. But if he does not believe that he had that opportunity, the psychological problem will remain as great as it was in the initial stage. In other words, the fundamental principle is not being applied to all appeals before the appeal board. Is that a fair statement?

Mrs. Reynolds: That is a fair statement, I would say, yes.

The Vice-Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Peters. Any further questions? Mr. Turner.

Mr. Turner (London East): Sister, you suggested that a former nursing sister be on the Canadian Pension Commission. Would you like to see a nursing sister sit on the final appeal board, or both?

Mrs. Reynolds: I would like to see her on both, sir.

Mr. Turner (London East): I quite agree.

The Vice-Chairman: Thank you. We will continue with multiple disabilities. Any questions on this paragraph or on this clause? Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: In this matter of multiple disabilities, are some of the members of your organization actively treating or working with pensioners?

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes, sir.

Mr. Peters: I wonder if they have any information they could provide the Committee on the manner in which we could assist some of the discussion that has gone on. As you probably know, persons with multiple disabilities find 100 per cent pension certainly not enough. There has been the discussion that it should run up as high as 350 per cent and this may not satisfy them. Are there other means which we could provide that would alleviate the difficulty of some of these persons?

I know that if you give a person a car, the benefit may be far in excess of the cost of that type of assistance. It may be a ramp to his house. It may be some nursing care. But is ne reçoivent pas une pension supplémentaire. Alors, ils devraient se dire qu'ils ont eu l'occasion de faire valoir leurs réclamations.

Je sais que vous devez connaître, en temps qu'infirmières, le cas où une presonne se croit plus infirme qu'elle n'est en réalité. Si elle admet avoir fait l'objet d'une audience impartiale, elle sera heureuse du résultat—même si l'on n'a pas répondu favorablement à sa demande. Sinon le problème restera entier comme au début.

En d'autres termes le principe fondamental ne s'applique pas à tous les cas d'appel. N'est-ce pas clair?

Mme Reynolds: Oui.

Le vice-président: Merci M. Peters. D'autres questions? M. Turner.

M. Turner (London-Est): Madame, vous avez parlé de la Commission des pensions qui devrait avoir une infirmière du groupe qui est représenté ici ce matin? Aimeriez-vous qu'une infirmière de votre groupe fasse aussi partie du Tribunal d'appel?

Mme Reynolds: Oui, nous aimerions cela aussi.

M. Turner (London-Est): Je suis de votre avis.

Le vice-président: Continuons de parler des invalidités multiples. Y a-t-il d'autres questions sur le sujet? M. Peters.

M. Peters: Dans cette question, est-ce qu'il y a des membres de votre organisation qui s'occupent actuellement des pensionnés?

Mlle Reynolds: Oui.

M. Peters: Est-ce qu'ils pourraient communiquer au Comité des renseignements utiles aux discussions? Vous savez probablement que les personnes atteintes d'invalidités multiples ne trouvent pas suffisante une pension de 100 p. 100. On a mentionné que les pensions devraient atteindre 350 p. 100 et on n'est pas sûr que les pensionnés seraient satisfaits. Y aurait-il d'autres moyens de soulager les peines de ces personnes?

Je sais que si vous donnez à une personne une automobile, cela peut être beaucoup plus avantageux pour la personne que le coût de l'automobile même. On peut installer une there something further out of your own experience that can be undertaken, some program that can be undertaken that would be advantageous to the veteran, something that we are not doing for them? Is there any lack in our present program that could assist us with that might provide some additional comfort?

Mrs. Reynolds: Miss Pepper, would you like to speak to that?

Miss Pepper: I have very strong feelings that one thing we should always keep in mind is the sense of security we are establishing within the pension, if we can ensure that the pensioner feels secure in his situation, that his pension will be there, that it will not be taken away from him, that he has the backing of the department responsible for his well-being.

It is a psychological reaction I know, but we have to establish that within the pensioner because he has feelings and thoughts and needs beyond himself. He is not the only person involved; so often there is his family, his dependants, and so on. So if you can establish some way, whether it is in money, or care as it is being provided in all our DVA hospitals, this I think is one of the most important things, a real sense of security for the pensioner himself.

• 1140

Mr. Peters: We have made changes in our DVA hospitals and eliminated some of the total attachment that people had to those hospitals. Has this had a psychological repercussion? I know some people always thought...

Miss Pepper: Miss Kennedy-Reid might speak to that, or some others, but I am not aware that it has made any changes in patients. Are you speaking of, for instance, Sunnybrook Hospital, which is now a university hospital, University of Toronto hospital, with a section, as I understand it, run by the Department of Veterans Affairs? I do not think this has in any way jeopardized or brought a feeling of insecurity to the pensioner, but I am not one to speak on this. Miss Kennedy-Reid might speak to that.

Miss Beardmore: I think, speaking of one of the older hospitals, Ste. Anne's, which has the older patients, we tried the home service for some of those veterans. Two double amputees rampe devant leur maison, leur fournir les services d'une infirmière. Est-ce qu'il y a des programmes qui devraient être mis en route de façon à venir en aide aux anciens combattants d'après votre propre expérience. Quelque chose que nous ne faisons pas encore présentement et qui pourrait leur être utile. Est-ce qu'il y a des carences au programme actuel? Des carences que vous aimeriez voir éliminer avec notre aide.

Mme Reynolds: Aimeriez-vous répondre à cette question, M[lle] Pepper?

Mlle Pepper: J'estime que nous ne devrions jamais perdre de vue que notre but est d'assurer un sentiment de sécurité chez les pensionnés. Nous désirons communiquer aux pensionnés un sentiment de sécurité. Nous désirons qu'ils se sentent sûrs de recevoir leur pension, de ne pas voir supprimer leur pension, d'avoir l'appui du Ministère responsable de leur bien-être.

C'est la situation psychologique à laquelle nous aimerions arriver. Nous devons créer ce climat de confiance chez le pensionné parce qu'il ne doit pas se sentir abandonné, isolé, frustré ni sa famille, ni les personnes à sa charge. Lui donner de l'argent, ou des soins comme le font les hôpitaux du ministère des Anciens Combattants, je crois que c'est là la meilleure façon de les aider, de leur communiquer un sentiment de sécurité.

M. Peters: Nous avons modifié nos hôpitaux pour anciens combattants et éliminé certaines des conditions qui faisaient que certains anciens combattants s'y attachaient outre mesure. Est-ce que vous avez entendu parler des incidences que cela aurait pu avoir dans certains cas?

Mlle Pepper: Je ne sais pas s'il s'est produit des changements chez les patients. M[lle] Kennedy-Reid ou une autre pourrait peut-être répondre ici. Faites-vous allusion à l'hôpital Sunnybrook qui est un hôpital universitaire rattaché à l'université de Toronto, dont une partie relève du ministère des Anciens combattants? Je ne crois pas que cela ait de quelque façon nuit au sentiment de sécurité et de bien-être que nous voulions créer chez les pensionnés. Je crois que M[lle] Kennedy-Reid pourrait mieux vous renseigner que moi.

Mlle Beardmore: En parlant de l'un des hôpitaux les plus anciens, l'hôpital Sainte-Anne où étaient les patients les plus âgés, nous avons essayé le foyer pour quelques-uns who where at Ste. Anne's were getting a bit unhappy about having to be in a hospital atmosphere and they were put in a home and they managed very well for a while, but they were very dependent. The woman was tied down—the husband was working—and could not do shopping because she did not quite know what would happen to them, and finally it came to the point in the wintertime when they were not getting outside at all, so they had to be brought back to Ste. Anne's because they were merely sitting in their chairs and twiddling their thumbs. So, they were brought back to Ste. Anne's and carried on again with the normal living of a hospital life. They were not able to go to Senneville Lodge, which of course is a place where they can more or less care for themselves, which is the main thing.

If amputees or paraplegics were living outside they would be curtailed in their evening activities, such as entertainment. They might have a nurse or an attendant in the daytime but they would also want someone in the evening in order to get out. Otherwise they would be tied to their little quarters and not be able to get out to any outside entertainment or have any social life. So, they are really dependent on the outside person if they are going to have any added life, you might say. The daytime is now an 8-hour day. It was a little different when it was a 12-hour day for the staff, but they almost need somebody for half the evening as well.

Mr. Peters: May I also ask what psychological effect a reasonable escalator clause in the pension structure would have on their sense of well-being? We have treated pensioners to periodic increases through the parliamentary system but if they had it on a basis that would establish this permanency you are speaking of, would this have a considerable psychological effect on the patients that you know about?

Miss Beardmore: It would remove their fear and give them a sense of security, therefore I think they would be psychologically happier because they would have this loss of fear.

The Vice Chairman: Mr. Bruce Howard.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the recommendations for change in connection with pensions for multiple disabilities. I think some changes are long overdue with respect to compensation to allow for the added costs de ces vétérans, les deux doubles amputés qui étaient à Sainte-Anne, ils étaient un peu déprimés à l'hôpital. On les a mis dans ce foyer. Au début, tout allait bien mais ils étaient très dépendants. Sa femme ne pouvait s'absenter. Son mari travaillait. Elle ne pouvait aller aux provisions car elle ne savait ce qui aurait pu leur arriver, et pour finir, en hiver, ils n'ont plus sorti du tout. Ils restaient à longueur de journée assis dans leurs chaises à se tourner les pouces. Aussi ils sont revenus à Sainte-Anne et pour eux la vie monotone d'hôpital a repris. Il ne leur était pas possible d'aller à Senneville Lodge car c'est un endroit où les gens doivent pouvoir s'occuper d'eux-mêmes, ce qui est le principal problème dans leur cas.

Si un amputé ou un paraplégique vit chez lui, ses activités sociales comme par exemple recevoir des amis seraient très réduites. Ils peuvent avoir une infirmière ou une garde durant la journée mais le soir il faudrait aussi quelqu'un pour qu'ils puissent sortir, autrement ils devraient rester chez eux sans pouvoir participer aux distractions extérieures. Ils dépendent beaucoup en réalité de l'aide extérieure s'ils veulent profiter un peu de la vie. Sa journée de travail est maintenant de 8 heures. C'était un peu différent quand la journée de travail était de 12 heures. Mais à présent il leur faut quelqu'un pour la soirée aussi.

M. Peters: Quels sont les effets psychologiques? Quelles devraient être les dispositions, les structures des pensions pour modifier les effets, pour améliorer ce sentiment de bien-être que l'on veut créer chez les pensionnés? Nous avons habitué nos pensionnés à des augmentations périodiques, est-ce qu'on ne devrait pas les prévoir d'une façon permanente ou de façon à accroître chez eux ce sentiment de sécurité? Est-ce que cela aurait vraiment chez eux un effet psychologique important, d'après ce que vous savez?

Mlle Beardmore: Je crois qu'il y aura un sentiment de sécurité accru au point de vue psychologique. Cela contribuera à leur bien-être en leur enlevant la peur.

Le vice-président M. Legault: Monsieur Bruce Howard.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Monsieur le président, je suis intéressé aux recommandations prévoyant des modifications aux dispositions concernant les invalidités multiples. Je crois que ces modifications auraient dû être apportées depuis longtemps involved in maintaining extra care for multiple disabilities. The figures suggested for improvement range as high as incomes of $18,000 to $20,000 and perhaps $22,000 a year. Do you feel these amounts are adequate or do you feel this much is necessary? What additional costs do you envisage multiple disability pensioners will have in the way of extra nursing care and extra assistance that they will have to pay for, and so on?

• 1145

Mrs. Reynolds: I do not know. Our views would only be an opinion. I do not think we are prepared to state whether this is adequate or not. I do not think we are experts on the actual assessment; I think we see it more from a humanitarian point of view. We know about it from a psychological standpoint but I think it calls for an expert in that field to put dollars and cents to it. However, money in a man's pocket is certainly a great boost to his morale.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Pensioners who are hospitalized because of multiple amputations, is the extra care they get provided by the hospital facilities or do they require additional care outside the hospital facilities that would mean on extra financial outlay on their part as well?

Mrs. Reynolds: Oh, yes.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Even if they are in a hospital full-time they still require extra care outside the hospital environment. If they go outside the hospital and perhaps require nurses to take them out, would they have to pay for that or is a nurse provided by the hospital?

Miss Nancy Kennedy-Reid (Past President, Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada): If they needed a nurse to go with them I doubt very much if they would be allowed to go out, but they certainly would need an attendant. When the paraplegics go out for a day's outing they must have staff with them.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): And this is provided by the hospital?

Miss Kennedy-Reid: By the hospital, yes. I can only speak from the point of view of pensioners in a hospital, where we supply the staff for them, but a paraplegic living outside au sujet de l'allocation allouée pour les frais additionnels que nécessitent les soins supplémentaires dans le cas de ceux qui souffrent d'invalidités multiples. Il faudrait prévoir des modifications aux structures actuelles. On donne des chiffres de $18,000, $20,000 et même $22,000 par année. Est-ce que c'est satisfaisant, suffisant? Pensez-vous que ce soit suffisant? Quel coût additionnel croyez-vous ...combien coûtera en soins additionnels aux personnes frappées d'invalidités multiples, en soins supplémentaires et pour l'aide additionnelle et le reste qu'ils devraient payer?

Mlle Reynolds: Je ne sais pas véritablement. Nous vous donnons notre opinion. Nous ne sommes pas prêtes à déclarer si c'est approprié ou non. Notre point de vue est plus humanitaire. Nous connaissons la question au point de vue psychologique mais nous ne sommes pas des experts sur cette question d'argent. Seuls des experts dans ce domaine pourraient vous renseigner. Cependant il est évident qu'un homme a meilleur moral s'il a quelques dollars dans sa poche.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Les pensionnés qui doivent être hospitalisés, qui ont des cas d'amputations multiples ont besoin de soins suppémentaires. Est-ce que cela est fourni par l'hôpital lui-même ou s'ils ont besoin de soins à l'extérieur de l'hôpital? Est-ce qu'ils devront payer pour cela? Est-ce qu'on prévoit des soins supplémentaires, une aide supplémentaire?

Mlle Reynolds: Oui, il se peut qu'ils aient besoin de soins additionnels.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Alors, vous dites bien qu'ils peuvent avoir besoin de soins additionnels même s'ils sont à l'hôpital? Ils doivent, à ce moment-là, quitter l'hôpital pour aller subir des soins à l'extérieur et est-ce qu'il faut qu'une infirmière les accompagne, par exemple? Est-ce que c'est à eux de se procurer une aide ou est-ce que c'est l'hôpital qui fournit une infirmière?

Mlle Nancy Kennedy-Reid: S'ils ont besoin d'une infirmière pour les accompagner je me demande si on les laissera sortir même. Lorsque les paraplégiques doivent sortir ils doivent avoir des membres du personnel qui les accompagnent.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Et ces services sont fournis par l'hôpital?

Mlle Kennedy-Reid: Oui c'est fourni par l'hôpital. Je ne puis parler qu'au nom des pensionnés dans des hôpitaux où nous leur fournissons le personnel dont ils ont besoin.

should have an attendant after regular hours. In the evenings people are on their own, they are having their own social life, and a person who is dependent on anybody might be left behind, so I should imagine they would really need someone in the evenings. They may not need them after 10 or 11 o'clock at night, but certainly for the whole 14 or 15 hours a day think they do need someone if they are living out. However, many paraplegics are so well rehabilitated that they really manage very, very well, and their homes are well equipped.

[Interpretation]

Quand il s'agit du cas d'un paraplégique qui habite à l'extérieur, s'il a besoin d'aide après les heures régulières, par exemple le soir, ils sont seuls et c'est à eux de se débrouiller, d'avoir des activités sociales s'ils le veulent. A ce moment-là, s'ils ont besoin d'aide, je suppose que ce doit être à leurs frais. Ils n'en auront peut-être pas besoin durant la nuit ou tard le soir, à 10 ou 11 heures du soir mais il se peut qu'ils aient besoin d'aide pendant 10 à 15 heures par jour, disons, la majeure partie de la journée. Il y a les paraplégiques qui se sont si bien réadaptés qu'ils peuvent presque se débrouiller seuls aujourd'hui. Leurs maisons sont équipées en conséquence et ils peuvent presque se débrouiller seuls.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Do you feel that the financial compensation that is being suggested is for a purpose other than the specific requirements of care?

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Croyez-vous que l'indemnisation financière qui est proposée aurait un autre but que celui de venir en aide à la personne pour lui permettre de se payer les soins dont elle a besoin.

Miss Kennedy-Reid: They may have someone who is dependent on them.

Mlle Kennedy-Reid: Il faut aussi tenir compte de leurs personnes à charge.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): The suggestion is that there should be some financial compensation for the psychological disadvantage, for loss of enjoyment.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Est-ce qu'il y a une indemnisation prévue pour les effets psychologiques, pour la perte de leurs moyens?

Miss Kennedy-Reid: Yes, I think so. Even in the hospital they need to be independent. They need to have some means of being able to spend money somewhere else other than just in the hospital canteen, if they can get about.

Mlle Kennedy-Reid: Oui, je crois. Même à l'hôpital ils doivent être en mesure de se sentir indépendants, de jouir un peu de la vie, de dépenser de l'argent ailleurs qu'à la cantine de l'hôpital.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): On page 10 of your brief income tax exemption is suggested. Do you believe there should be income tax exemption for a pensioner who might be drawing a pension as high as $20,000 or $22,000 a year? Do you feel this should all be tax-free, the whole thing?

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): A la page 10 du texte du mémoire, on parle d'exemptions d'impôt. Est-ce qu'il devrait y avoir des exemptions d'impôt sur le revenu pour les pensionnés, même si celui-ci reçoit une pension de 20 à 22 mille dollars par année? Est-ce que cette pension devrait être exempte d'impôt complètement?

Miss Beardmore: Yes, very much so. I think this is a matter of right. Income tax should not affect the pension that a person gets because of a war disability. You speak about $22,000 a year as a possible amount that one pensioner might be getting. I feel there are very few people in this category living today who receive this amount of money. After all, this type of person has a very short life expectancy but he does have dependents.

Mlle Beardmore: Oui, exactement. La pension est fondée sur l'invalidité et devrait donc être versée en entier à la personne. On ne devrait pas soumettre cela à l'impôt. Vous parlez de $22,000 par année mais n'oubliez pas que leur espérance de vie est réduite et qu'il n'y aurait que peu de pensionnés de cette catégorie alors ne leur enlevez pas leur argent pendant qu'ils peuvent encore en profiter, et ils ont aussi des personnes à leur charge.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): What about . . .

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Et au sujet . . .

[Texte]

The Chairman: Mr. Howard, if I may just point out one thing. There will be a White Paper on Taxation and an opportunity will be given to all organizations, including the Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada, to present a brief on the taxation aspects.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Yes. I think that is a very interesting point, Mr. Chairman, and it should be noted. However, our attention was drawn to it in this brief and I thought it was worth bringing up at this time.

You say there would not be very many people in this category who would draw the maximum of $20,000 to $22,000 a year and they perhaps have a short life expectancy, but there would be a descending scale which would perhaps reach fairly large numbers of people who would be drawing pensions of what we would now consider to be fairly large amounts, say in the $15,000 to $20,000 range, somewhere in there, and you feel that all of these pensions should be tax-free?

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes, we do feel that way.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Howard. Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: It is my opinion that this number would be very, very small, but is it not a fact that anyone who will be getting that kind of money will be receiving it because of our hospital policy and the fact that we have now decided to put these people into the outside world rather than keeping them in a hospital, where we were fairly competent in operating with a minimum pension and a fairly large staff operating within the hospital.

I had the opportunity of spending some time in Christie Street Hospital early in the war and that was really the old people's home for the First World War veterans. I know that most of them were not interested in ever leaving there and if they left it was only for an excursion into the world and they came back to Christie Street Hospital which was home really. It seems to me that the expenses that we had as a nation—I remember in particular one quadriplegic case who had spent certainly half his adult life or more in that hospital. If you had put him out of the hospi-

[Interprétation]

Le président: Je voudrais signaler une chose. Il y aura un Livre blanc sur la fiscalité qui nous permettra, à ce moment-là, d'étudier cette question à fond. A ce moment-là, chacune des organisations pourra venir soumettre un nouveau mémoire sur la question des exemptions fiscales. En effet, c'est une question très importante, on devrait en tenir compte dès maintenant.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): On a attiré mon attention à ce sujet dans le présent mémoire, et c'est pourquoi j'ai voulu poser la question. En plus de cette question j'aimerais savoir s'il y en a qui reçoivent des pensions. Il n'y en a pas beaucoup, d'après ce que vous dites, qui reçoivent le maximum de 20 à 22 mille dollars. Il n'y en a pas beaucoup qui sont dans cette catégorie. Enfin, à ce moment-là, il faut tenir compte que leur espérance de vie est réduite. Est-ce qu'il y a un taux progressif de pensionnés à ce moment-là? Il y en a qui peuvent recevoir des pensions qui semblent assez considérables, par exemple de 15 à 20 mille dollars. Est-ce que vous croyez que tous ces pensionnés devraient bénéficier d'exemptions d'impôt?

Mlle Reynolds: Oui, nous croyons qu'ils devraient bénéficier d'une exemption totale d'impôt.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Merci beaucoup.

Le président: Merci, M. Howard, monsieur Peters.

M. Peters: Je crois que le nombre de ces gens est très, très réduit. Mais n'est-il pas vrai que toute personne qui reçoit ce genre d'indemnisation la reçoit à cause de notre politique en matière d'hospitalisation et à cause du fait que nous avons décidé de renvoyer ces gens dans le monde extérieur plutôt que de les garder dans les hôpitaux où, évidemment, il y aurait des gens compétents qui pourraient en prendr soin? Leur pension était peut-être réduite, mais ils bénéficiaient de soins payés à l'hôpital.

J'ai eu l'occasion de passer quelque temps à la Christie Street Hospital au début de la guerre. C'était vraiment le foyer des vieillards pour les anciens combattants de la Première Guerre mondiale. Je sais que la plupart d'entre eux n'étaient pas intéressés à laisser cet endroit et s'ils le quittaient, c'était simplement pour faire une visite dans le monde et ils revenaient à l'hôpital qui était vraiment leur foyer. Il me semble que nos dépenses en tant que nation; je me souviens, entre autres, d'un quadriplégique qui avait passé au moins la moitié de sa vie dans cet hôpital. Si vous tal the maintenance cost would have been fantastic. He would have needed the care of a nurse for three shifts and yet in the hospital he operated very well. He got around to see most everybody and visited his friends and so on. On Civoy Street to allow him to visit his friends and so on you would have had to supply him with almost ambulance transportation. It would have been almost impossible.

I think that with regard to what we are talking about, we kind of confuse two things. We have made the decision to do this; we should not make the suggestion of penalizing the pensioner for a decision that we have already made in relation to care that we, as parliamentarians, must have assumed would be cheaper and more advantageous than another way. I just want to make the point that this was a decision we made some time ago and because we made it we should not now give the impression that there are a large number of these people receiving that kind of money as a pension because it really is not. It is in lieu of hospital care; is this not so?

Mrs. Reynolds: This is, I believe, true.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters, I am thinking again of the time element and the Canadian Corps Association will be presenting a brief this afternoon. I wonder if there are any further comments to be made on the question of multiple disabilities?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, I am concerned. I do not want to appear opposed to this situation or granting of pensions of this kind. I merely feel that when we are discussing the thing we should discuss all aspects of it and measure the extent to which we are prepared to go. I think we should all have a clear understanding of how far we are prepared to go. I just want to make it very clear that I am not opposed to this in any way.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Howard. Are there any further comments on "Stabilization of Pension", page 7? There is a recommendation in the White Paper which goes some distance towards meeting what you are asking for here. "Retroactive Awards"—I think a similar situation applies there. Not everything that is asked for is met, but there is some improvement in the situation. "Continuation of Pension to Dependents of Person with Single Status"—are there any comments here?

• 1155

[Interpretation]

l'aviez voulu renvoyé de l'hôpital, le coût de son entretien aurait été fantastique. Il aurait eu constamment besoin d'une infirmière. A l'hôpital, il se débrouillait fort bien. Il pouvait circuler, rencontrer des personnes, visiter ses amis. Pour aller visiter ses amis, en dehors de l'hôpital, on aurait dû lui fournir une ambulance pour le transporter. Cela aurait été presque impossible.

Je crois que nous confondons deux choses. En prenant la décision de faire ce changement, il ne faudrait quand même pas pénaliser le pensionné pour une décision que nous avons déjà prise en rapport avec les soins qui, croyons-nous, seraient plus économiques. C'est une décision que nous avons prise il y a quelque temps, et, par conséquent, nous ne devons pas maintenant donner l'impression qu'il y a un grand nombre de personnes qui touchent cet argent à titre de pension, parce qu'en fait cela n'en est pas. Cela servira surtout à payer les frais d'hospitalisation, n'est-ce pas?

Mme Reynolds: Je crois que c'est exact.

Le président: Monsieur Peters, je pense encore au temps qui nous reste et à l'Association du corps canadien qui doit présenter un mémoire cet après-midi. Je me demande s'il n'y a pas d'autres commentaires à faire au sujet des infirmités multiples?

M. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Monsieur le président, je ne voudrais pas sembler m'opposer à cette situation ou au consentement des pensions de ce genre. J'ai surtout l'impression que lorsqu'on discute de toute cette question, on devrait en examiner les aspects et déterminer jusqu'où nous sommes prêts à aller. Je crois qu'il faut le savoir. Je voudrais signaler que je ne suis pas du tout opposé à ces mesures et à l'octroi de telles pensions.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires sur la «Stabilisation des pensions» qui figure à la page 7? Il y a une recommandation dans le Livre blanc qui répond à ce que vous demandez. Pour les «Indemnités rétroactives», la même situation se produit. On ne répond pas à ce que l'on demande, il y a une certaine amélioration. Pour la rubrique «Maintien de l'allocation de pension avec personnes à charge d'un pensionné célibataire», y a-t-il d'autres commentaires à ce sujet?

[Texte]

Mr. MacRae: I have a very brief comment perhaps, Mr. Chairman. This does not seem to have appeared in any of the other briefs we have had. Do you recall?

The Chairman: This is the first time, as I recall.

Mr. MacRae: I think the ladies are to be complimented on bringing this to our attention and to the attention of the Department and the authorities. It seems to have much merit.

The Chairman: I think we we will note this and look at it when we come to further studies of the committee. "Reinstatement of Widows Pension"—I think again there is some improvement in the proposals of the White Paper which I am sure will meet with your satisfaction.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I have in mind the time, of course, but I would like to ask just one question on the second last line of this particular submission in regard to "Reinstatement of Widows Pension" which is, perhaps, the cause of this group of ladies appearing here. Might they give us the benefit of their advice? The line reads:

> ...and suggests the additional circumstances that, if the second marriage fails, ...

I was wondering perhaps if the ladies might like to clarify ...

The Chairman: What is a failure?

Mr. MacRae: As a matter of fact that is just exactly what I intended to ask. For example, if a widow marries a no-good bum the second time and he leaves her and that kind of thing, then you see the position that she is in. We know it only too well because we see so much of this and we have heard so much about this in some cases. I have personal knowledge of some cases. Perhaps I could ask the President of the delegation how would she suggest a failure be defined in this particular case? Should it require the legality of an official separation, or divorce or just the matter of desertion where said bum cannot be found.

Mrs. Reynolds: Speaking as a married woman and I am not divorced or widowed, we feel that—and as I say this again is only an opinion—that this should be a matter of a legal separation, or divorce, or death.

Mr. MacRae: Thank you, that answers my question.

[Interprétation]

M. MacRae: J'aimerais faire un bref commentaire, monsieur le président. Cela ne semble pas avoir figuré dans aucun des mémoires précédents. Vous en rappelez-vous?

Le président: Je crois que c'est la première fois qu'on le mentionne.

M. MacRae: A mon avis, il faudrait féliciter ces dames d'avoir porté ces faits à l'attention du Ministère et des compétences. Cela semble très intéressant.

Le président: Oui, nous allons en tenir compte lors des études subséquentes du comité. Pour le «Rétablissement de la pension aux veuves», je crois aussi que dans les propositions du Livre blanc, il y a indice d'amélioration qui j'en suis certain vous réjouira.

M. MacRae: Monsieur le président, je sais fort bien que notre temps est compté, mais j'aimerais poser une question sur l'avant-dernière ligne de la proposition au chapitre du «Rétablissement de la pension aux veuves», qui explique peut-être la présence de ce groupe de femmes dans cette enceinte. Pourraient-elles nous faire profiter de leur expérience?

On y lit: «... et propose comme autres circonstances que si le second mariage n'a pas lieu, ...»

Je me demandais si vous n'aimeriez pas préciser ...

Le président: Qu'est-ce qu'un échec?

M. MacRae: Voilà justement ce que j'avais l'intention de demander. Si une veuve marie en secondes noces un vaurien qui la quitte, vous voyez dans quelle position elle se trouve. Nous le savons que trop, car nous l'avons vu et entendu trop souvent. J'en connais même quelques cas de ce genre. Puis-je demander au président de la délégation comment l'on devrait définir l'échec du mariage dans ce cas? Est-ce qu'il faudrait parler d'une séparation légale, d'un divorce ou est-ce qu'on devrait tenir compte aussi de l'abandon quand on ne peut retrouver le mari.

Mme Reynolds: En tant que femme mariée qui n'est ni divorcée, ni veuve, je crois, et ce n'est qu'une opinion, que cela devrait être une question de séparation devant la loi, ou d'un divorce ou de la mort.

M. MacRae: Je crois que cela répond à ma question. Je vous remercie.

The Chairman: "Security of the Pensioner's File"—are there any comments here? Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Bigg: Just on that last point I would just like to say that as a pensioner and as a married man, I would like to have that very liberally interpreted to the benefit of the wife. If she was trying to replace me I would hope she would have some . . .

An hon. Member: Better luck.

Mr. Bigg: —difficulty. I would expect her to have some difficulty and if it did not work out I would like the Pension Commission to reinstate her at will.

The Chairman: I think I know what you are saying, Mr. Bigg, but I want to read the transcript and I suggest you may want to do the same.

Are there any other comments on this section? Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask the delegation if in the past there has been to their knowledge any hardship or any cases they know of that would indicate some adverse effect of the pensioner suggesting that insurance companies have a look at the files?

Mrs. Reynolds: I think this is always coming up in the medical profession where there are people who are really interested or nosy or this type of thing. I think this is something of which we as nurses are very conscious, of what is personal. I think we have a very strong feeling as a nursing group that this should not be open to the public.

Mr. Peters: Thank you.

The Chairman: I think there has been some discussion on the question of "Income Tax Exemption". As I noted before, there will be an opportunity at the tax hearings following the White Paper on Taxation to make a representation and you may wish to consider doing so at that time. "Pension Coverage for Regular Forces"—are there any comments here? Mr. Bigg.

• 1200

Mr. Bigg: I would just like to know—I do not know the answer to this one—what your association thinks about the present payment for nurses? Are they comparable to the outside trade, shall we say? This definitely would have a bearing on their pensionability because they are pro rata? Are your nurses well paid compared to civilian nurses?

The Chairman: I think that is a little outside our terms of reference, Mr. Bigg.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Y a-t-il des commentaires à faire sur la «Sécurité du dossier d'un pensionné»? Monsieur Bigg.

M. Bigg: En tant que pensionné et homme marié, je voudrais que ce chapitre soit interprétée librement au bénéfice de l'épouse. Si elle essayait de me remplacer, j'espère qu'elle aurait quelques . . .

Une voix: Meilleure chance.

M. Bigg: . . . difficultés. Je crois qu'elle aurait quelques difficultés et si elle ne réussissait pas, j'aimerais que la Commission canadienne des pensions la rétablirait à souhait.

Le président: Je crois connaître ce que vous dites, mais je veux lire le texte transcript, tout comme vous, je présume.

Y a-t-il d'autres commentaires à faire sur cette question? Monsieur Peters.

M. Peters: Est-ce qu'une déléguée peut nous dire si dans le passé, à sa connaissance, il y aurait eu des difficultés ou si elle connaît des cas qui indiqueraient les méfaits sur le pensionné, attribuables au fait que les sociétés d'assurances aient consulté le dossier?

Mme Reynolds: Je crois que cela se produit souvent dans la profession médicale où il y a des gens vraiment intéressés ou curieux. En tant qu'infirmières, nous sommes très conscientes de ce genre de chose et à titre de groupe d'infirmières, nous sommes convaincues que cela ne devrait pas être accessible au public.

M. Peters: Merci.

Le président: Je crois qu'on a déjà discuté de la question de l'«Exemption d'impôt sur le revenu.» Comme je l'ai fait remarquer, nous aurons l'occasion lors des audiences sur l'impôt, qui font suite au Livre blanc sur la fiscalité, de vous présenter à ce moment-là. Pour l'«Allocation de pension dans le cas de l'année régulière», y a-t-il d'autres commentaires à faire? Monsieur Bigg.

M. Bigg: Je n'en connais pas la réponse, mais j'aimerais savoir ce que votre association, pense des versements aux infirmières? Sont-ils comparables à ceux qui sont versés à l'extérieur si on peut dire? Cela aurait une portée sur leur pension, car elle est établie au pro rata. Certaines infirmières sont-elles bien payées par rapport aux infirmières civiles?

Le président: Je crois que cela ne ressort pas de notre mandat, monsieur Bigg.

[Texte]

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, we will never have a better opportunity of knowing this.

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg, again I am sure that it is a subject on which whole briefs should be submitted and again in the time at the disposal of the group I question how far they can answer that kind of question. I have serious doubts about it.

Mrs. Reynolds: We have with us today Major Urquhart. I do not know whether she would like to comment on that.

Major Jessie Urquhart (Regular Force): At the present time the salary for nurses in the service are very good. They are certainly equal to civilian nurses pay.

The Chairman: Thank you. That was commendable testimony, very short and to the point.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, is the Association of the opinion that the insurance principle relative to the type of pension granted for wartime service should apply to the Regular Forces now?

Mrs. Reynolds: Miss Johusan, would you like to answer that?

Miss Johusan: I am going to speak on that. Are you asking if we think that pensions paid in respect of disabilities to the Regular Forces are comparable to what was given to people who were in active service? Is that what you are asking?

Mr. Peters: Should be comparable.

Miss Johusan: Should be?

The Chairman: I think that is a very good rephrasing of Mr. Peters' question. It gives him the benefit of a doubt or two, but go ahead.

Miss Johusan: I understood from Mr. Anderson this morning that this is a matter of legislation, that there are two sections in the Act that control this area, one referring to the regular forces and the other to those in active service or in designated areas during time of war. They do not correspond, was an example, if somebody in the Regular Forces is on leave. Such a person is not covered if they become injured in an accident or something happens, but during time of war you are covered.

The Chairman: There are some problems in this area. We have had testimony from other groups dealing with exactly the same situation. It is not only nurses; all military personnel have the same problem.

[Interprétation]

M. Bigg: Monsieur le président, c'est la meilleure occasion pour le savoir.

Le président: Une fois de plus, je suis certain que tous les mémoires devraient traiter de cette question, mais avec le temps dont dispose chaque groupe, je me demande dans quelle mesure on peut répondre à une question semblable. J'en doute vraiment.

Mme Reynolds: Je me demande si le major Urquhart qui nous accompagne, aimerait répondre à cette question.

Major Jessie Urquhart (Forces régulières): A l'heure actuelle, le salaire des infirmières militaires est très bon. Il égale certainement celui des autres infirmières.

Le président: Merci. C'était une excellente déposition, très courte, très claire.

M. Peters: Est-ce que l'Association estime que le principe de l'assurance devrait s'appliquer aux forces armées régulières, quant au genre de pension accordé pour les années du service durant la guerre?

Mme Reynolds: M^lle^ Johnson, voulez-vous répondre à cette question?

Mlle Johusan: Nous demandez-vous si les pensions d'incapacité versées aux forces régulières sont comparables à celles qui sont versées aux forces actives? Est-ce là votre question?

M. Peters: Devraient être comparables.

Mlle Johusan: Devraient être?

Le président: Je crois que c'est une excellente façon de poser à nouveau la question de M. Peters.

Mlle Johusan: M. Anderson ce matin nous a laissé entendre qu'il s'agit de mesures législatives, qu'il existe à l'égard de ce point deux articles dans la Loi, l'un se rapporte aux forces régulières et l'autre au service actif ou commandé en temps de guerre dans des endroits désignés. Ils ne correspondent pas. Par exemple, si quelqu'un des forces régulières est en congé, il n'est pas protégé s'il est blessé dans un accident, ou qu'il lui arrive quelque chose, tandis qu'il le serait en temps de guerre.

Le président: Il y a des problèmes qui se posent à ce sujet. Nous avons eu des témoignages d'autres groupes parlant de la même situation. Il n'y a pas que les infirmières qui ont des problèmes à ce sujet. Tout le personnel militaire en a.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Service in the Armed Forces today involves activities which, seemingly, are more industrial than military in nature, which I agree with, but I personally do not see a direct relationship between the type of compensation that we provide to Relular Force service personnel and wartime service personnel. This is why I asked if the nursing sisters are suggesting in this section that pension coverage should equate wartime pension for service with military service during peacetime.

Miss Johusan: I think this is what we were thinking of at this time—that the Act should refer to both in the same manner, which is a matter of legislation.

The Chairman: I think that is a very good and specific answer to the question.

Mr. Bigg: I think the White Paper will help the Sisters to clarify this. There are suggested improvements in this area, a very important one that you may or may not have heard of being that no longer will pensions be stopped, because of misconduct, for dependents or widows. I think you will be glad to hear that.

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes. We will.

Mr. Bigg: We are anticipating a change in that connection.

Mrs. Reynolds: Thank you.

Mr. Marshall: Major Urquhart, do you have many nursing sisters in the Reserve Forces?

Major Urquhart: We do have nurses in the Reserve Forces but I am afraid I cannot tell you how many there are. At the present time we have about 420 nurses in the Regular Force.

Mr. Marshall: Mrs. Reynolds, when you say Regular Forces are you including Reserve Forces also, or should you include it in this section? They are eligible for pensions.

The Chairman: I think that is a technical kind of question. I think a departmental official could answer that for you, Mr. Marshall.

Are there other questions?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Am I correct that what is really being asked for here is something equivalent to what the Workmen's Compensation Board provides for industry. . .

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes.

[Interpretation]

M. Peters: Les forces armées s'occupent aujourd'hui d'activités qui relèvent apparemment plus du domaine industriel que militaire, j'en conviens, mais je ne vois pas de rapport direct entre le genre d'indemnité versé au personnel des forces régulières et celui du personnel armé en temps de guerre. Voilà pourquoi j'ai demandé si les sœurs infirmières proposent dans cette partie de leur mémoire de verser une pension égale à celles octroyées aux titulaires de pensions qui ont fait du service militaire en temps de paix.

Mlle Johusan: Oui, c'est ce que nous voulions. La loi devrait s'appliquer aux deux catégories.

Le président: Ceci est une réponse très précise à cette question.

M. Bigg: Je crois que le Livre blanc apportera toutes les précisions voulues aux soeurs infirmières. On y trouve sur ce point des suggestions, entre autre une, qui est très importante, à l'effet que les pensions ne seront plus suspendues par suite de mauvaise conduite des personnes à charge ou des veuves. Vous serez, je crois, heureuses, de connaître cette modification.

Mme Reynolds: Oui, nous le serons.

M. Bigg: Nous prévoyons un changement dans ce domaine.

Mme Reynolds: Merci.

M. Marshall: Major Urquhart, les sœurs infirmières sont-elles nombreuses dans les unités de réserve.

Major Jessie Urquhart: Nous en avons, mais je crains de ne pouvoir vous dire combien. Nous avons présentement 420 infirmières environ dans les forces régulières.

M. Marshall: M^me^ Reynolds, quand vous dites forces régulières, entendez-vous aussi les unités de réserve? Devraient-elles être incluses. Car elles ont droit à une pension.

Le président: C'est une question plutôt technique. Un fonctionnaire du ministère pourrait je crois y répondre M. Marshall.

Avez-vous d'autres questions?

M. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Ce qu'on demande vraiment ici, c'est quelque chose de semblable à ce que prévoit la Commission des accidents, pour le secteur industriel, n'est ce pas?

Mme Reynolds: Oui.

[Texte]

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): ...with perhaps special consideration in the case of overseas service in peacekeeping force or something of that kind, where it would apply in the same manner as if it were wartime service. Is that about what you are asking for?

Mrs. Reynolds: That is correct. Mr. Howard.

Mr. Bigg: And recreational coverage as well, as I read between the lines here?

Mrs. Reynolds: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Yes, there is a question of recreational coverage there in the line of duty. But is it correct that when a man is out on his own and off duty you are not asking for coverage in such cases? You are talking about organized sports and things like that conducted by the service.

Mrs. Reynolds: Where they are compulsory or by special order, yes.

The Chairman: Are there further questions? Next is the Prisoners of War section and, on Page 13, the final section on personnel in which you make some suggestions.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask the lady who was a Hong Kong prisoner of war whether she was confined with other prisoners, whether she was treated the same or given a preferred position because she was a woman?

Miss Christie: The Japanese made no difference. We were confined. There was one other nursing sister and myself who went with Canadian troops to Hong Kong, we were on duty in the British military hospital there and when the Japanese took over on Christmas day of 1941 we were just herded in with the patients and army personnel who were on duty and treated in the same manner. We had no more liberties, no more food—no privileges. We were just treated as inmates at Prisoner of War Camp A and that is where we remained for eight months.

Mr. Peters: Are you a pensioner?

Miss Christie: Yes, I am, sir.

Mr. Peters: We are looking for the eight Hong Kong veterans who are not pensioners.

The Chairman: Thank you.

[Interprétation]

M. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Avec, en outre, des dispositions spéciales pour les services outre-mer, dans une unité chargée de maintenir la paix ou quelque chose de semblable où ces avantages vaudraient comme s'il s'agissait de service en temps de guerre. Est-ce là ce que vous demandez?

Mme Reynolds: Oui, M. Howard.

M. Bigg: Et de la protection durant les loisirs, si je lis bien entre les lignes.

Mme Reynolds: Oui, c'est exact.

M. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Oui, il y a ici une question de protection durant les loisirs organisés dans le cadre du service. Mais est-il exact que vous ne réclamez pas de protection pour l'individu qui n'est pas en service. Vous parlez de sports organisés au cours du service.

Mme Reynold: Lorsque l'individu est en service commandé, oui.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions? Vient ensuite la section sur les Prisonniers de guerre, page 13, la dernière section qui se rapporte au personnel sur laquelle vous présentez quelques suggestions.

M. Peters: Puis-je demander, à la dame qui a été prisonnière de guerre à Hong Kong, si elle était avec les autres prisonniers, traitée de la même façon? ou si elle a eu droit à certains égards à cause de son sexe?

Mlle Christie: Les Japonais ne faisaient aucune différence. Nous étions prisonniers. Il y avait avec moi une autre infirmière quand nous avnos été avec les troupes canadiennes à Hong Kong et nous avons été en service à l'Hôpital militaire britannique quand les Japonais ont fait invasion le jour de Noël 1941. Nous avons tout simplement été réunies avec le reste des prisonniers et traitées de la même façon. Nous n'avions pas plus de libertés, de nourriture, ou de privilèges. Nous étions exactement comme des prisonniers de guerre du Camp A et c'est là que nous sommes restées durant huit mois.

M. Peters: Est-ce que vous êtes pensionnées?

Mlle Christie: Oui monsieur.

M. Peters: Nous essayons de retracer huit prisonniers de guerre de Hong Kong qui n'ont pas de pension...

Le président: Merci.

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: Is it not true that you were subjected to sort of horror treatment, that you were forced to witness the execution of your officer commanding and that sort of thing?

Miss Christie: No, but we did witness all manner of torture and murder because the Japanese guards had their guardhouse just down beneath our balcony and there was never a day or a night that they did not have at least one or more Chinese tied up down there. You can believe anything you read in the literature about their methods of torture, and we saw this.

Mr. Bigg: And heard it.

Miss Christie: Well, the Chinese are very stalwart people: they moan, they do not scream. We witnessed that and then, later, when we were out in a civilian internment camp for 13 months, we saw—we were not supposed to look in that direction but we still did—what happened to civilians who were brought in by the Japanese. I do not think it made any difference whether you were a man, a woman or what nationality you were.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions? If not, I would like to thank the delegation for coming before us and for presenting a well-prepared brief. There has been an exchange of views and I know that members of the Committee have enjoyed being able to discuss with you the points you have raised. Thank you very much.

Mrs. Reynold: Thank you.

• 1210

The Chairman: We will have the Canadian Corps Association at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

[Interpretation]

M. Bigg: N'est-il pas vrai que vous avez reçu des traitement horribles et été forcées d'assister aux exécutions de votre commandant, etc.?

Mlle Christie: Non. Nous avons assisté à toutes sortes de tortures et de meurtres, car le poste de garde des Japonais se trouvait juste sous notre balcon et il ne se passait pas un jour, pas une nuit qu'il ne s'y trouve un chinois de garotté. Vous pouvez croire tout ce que vous lisez sur leurs méthodes de torture: nous l'avons vu.

M. Bigg: Et entendu.

Mlle Christie: Ces Chinois sont très résistants. Ils gémissent, mais ne crient pas. Nous avons été témoins de cela alors, puis plus tard, dans le camp civil où nous avons été internées pendant treize mois. Nous avons vu ce que nous n'étions pas censées voir: ce qui est arrivé aux civils internés par les Japonais. Que vous soyez homme ou femme, ou quelle que soit votre nationalité, celà n'avait pas, je crois, grande importance.

Le président: Avez-vous d'autres questions à poser? Sinon, je remercie la délégation d'avoir comparu devant le comité et d'avoir présenté un mémoire bien préparé. Je sais que les membres du comité ont eu beaucoup de plaisir à discuter avec vous et à entendre votre point de vue. Merci mesdames.

Mme Reynolds: Merci.

Le président: A 2 h. cet après-midi, nous entendrons l'Association du Corps canadien.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The Chairman: I think we can call the meeting to order. We have this afternoon with us the Canadian Corps Association who will present a brief. The officers who are with the delegation include Mr. Crooks who is Dominion First Vice President, Mrs. Shirley Wood Heesaker who is the Dominion Honourary Secretary, Mr. E. J. Parsons, Dominion Pensions Advocate, Mr. John Stroud, Dominion Resolutions Chairman, and Mr. Cliff Chadderton whom I think all members of the Committee know well at this point.

I think the brief is fairly short. With the permission of the Committee, I invite the Chairman, and those whom he wishes to ask to participate, to read the brief. Following this, we will review it section by section for questioning. Thank you.

SÉANCE DE L'APRÈS-MIDI

Le président: La séance est ouverte. Cet après-midi, nous avons les représentants de l'Association du Corps canadien qui nous présenteront un mémoire. Les administrateurs qui accompagnent la délégation comprennent M. Crooks, premier vice-président national, M^me^ Shirley Wood Heesaker, secrétaire honoraire national, M. E. J. Parsons, avocat national des pensions et M. John Stroud, président national du comité des résolutions et M. Cliff Chadderton qui est bien connu de tous les membres du Comité.

Je crois que le mémoire est assez court. Alors, avec la permission du Comité, j'invite donc le président à en donner lecture, après quoi nous l'étudierons article par article.

[Texte]

Mr. Leslie Crooks (Dominion First Vice President, Canadian Corps Association): Do you want us to read the brief right through?

The Chairman: If that suits you. I invite you to follow this procedure. If you want to follow another one, that is up to you.

Mr. Crooks: Section by section.

The Chairman: All right. We have followed them too and it depends on the party and the length of the brief. But the difficulty when you go section by section is that sometimes members would like an opportunity when they are seeing it for the first time, to sort of get a perspective on the brief and then their questioning reflects that. But if it is your preference to do it this way, we will certainly do it your way.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have noticed, Mr. Chairman, that in going section by section there has been much more discussion taking place.

The Chairman: All right, fine.

Mr. Crooks: Mr. Chairman and members of the Standing Committee, it is my pleasure to extend to you the greetings of our Dominion President, Mr. E. V. Heesaker. He requested me to express his regret that he could not personally join in this presentation today due to urgent business commitments, and our President has asked me to act in his stead.

Therefore, seeing that Mr. Francis has introduced our Committee, I will now request the Dominion Honourary Secretary to commence reading our brief.

Mrs. Shirley Wood Heesaker (Dominion Honourary Secretary): I want to mention, ladies and gentlemen, before I begin, that although Mr. Francis introduced each of us and our various titles, he did neglect to introduce Mr. Chadderton in the capacity in which he is here today. He is the Dominion Honourary Vice President of the Canadian Corps Association and has been for several years.

The Chairman: I am sorry, I did not mean any slight in any respect.

Mrs. Heesaker: No, that is all right, sir. In respect to Mr. Chadderton, as Honourary Secretary I am used to bringing certain things to people's attention, and you will have to forgive me. I must be sure that his title is well known to those here and that he speaks for the Canadian Corps Association today.

[Interprétation]

M. Leslie Crooks (premier vice-président national de l'Association du Corps canadien): Voulez-vous que nous lisions le mémoire tout d'un trait?

Le président: Si la chose vous va, vous êtes libre de le faire. Si vous voulez procéder autrement, vous le pouvez.

M. Crooks: Article par article?

Le président: Très bien. La chose s'est déjà faite. Tout dépend de l'organisation qui présente le mémoire et de la longueur de ce dernier. Le problème qui se pose quand on procède à l'examen des articles chacun séparément, c'est que certains membres préfèrent avoir une vue globale d'abord et être ainsi en mesure de poser des questions dans cette perspective d'ensemble. Si vous voulez présenter votre mémoire, article par article, nous nous conformerons à cette procédure.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Monsieur le président, j'ai noté que, lorsqu'on procède à l'examen d'un mémoire, article par article, il y a beaucoup plus de discussion.

Le président: Oui, c'est vrai.

M. Crooks: Monsieur le président et membres du Comité permanent, j'ai le plaisir de vous présenter les félicitations de notre président national, M. E. V. Heesaker. Il m'a demandé de vous exprimer ses regrets de ne pouvoir être présent cet après-midi, à cause d'autres engagements et il m'a prié de le remplacer.

M. Francis a présenté les membres de notre Comité. Je vais demander au secrétaire honoraire national de commencer la lecture du mémoire.

Mme Shirley Wood Heesaker (secrétaire honoraire nationale): Mesdames, messieurs, je crois que M. Francis, en présentant chacun des membres avec le poste qu'il occupe, a oublié de dire à quel titre M. Chadderton était ici aujourd'hui. M. Chadderton est vice-président honoraire national du Corps Canadien et cela, depuis plusieurs années.

Le président: Je m'excuse de cet oubli.

Mme Heesaker: Très bien! En ce qui a trait à M. Chadderton, je vous prie de m'excuser de vous avoir rappelé son titre de secrétaire honoraire, c'est une habitude chez moi. Je suis sûre que son titre vous était connu. Il parle au nom de l'Association.

The Canadian Corps Association, Dominion Command, welcomes this opportunity to present to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs this brief, which will outline in general terms our position with relation to the Woods Committee Report. The Canadian Corps Association wish to go on record that with only minor exceptions, we heartily approve the findings of the Woods Committee Report and commend them for an excellent survey. The Woods Committee delved deeply into the problems with which the Canadian Corps Association has been confronted for over thirty years, since the previous survey, and the Woods Committee has brought forward 148 recommendations which, with only two exceptions, Nos. 82 and 148, we endorse, and in fact, urge the Standing Committee to expedite their approval of said report.

• 1415

Mr. Chairman, we wish to state that we take exception to the lateness of the issuance of the government's White Paper. This has left veterans organizations only a few days to compare the government's recommendations as laid down in the White Paper, as against the recommendations of the Woods Report, in order to prepare our briefs for the Standing Committee. Further, we understand that the Minister of Veterans Affairs possibly has other proposals in mind, not included in the White Paper, which you will realize, gentlemen, further complicates our presentations here today. The Canadian Corps Association feels that with the amount of time spent by the government in writing their White Paper, we had a right to expect that it should have included all the Minister's proposed recommendations and comments, in order that our brief to you would, today be complete, rather than our having to submit supplements at a later date.

The Canadian Corps Association wish to go on record this date, September 29, 1969, that if the Minister of Veterans Affairs later issues supplementary statements to the White Paper, against any recommendations contained in the Woods' Report, the veteran organizations in Canada be granted additional appearances before this Standing Committee.

The Canadian Corps Association, gentlemen, would like to refer you to a portion of the White Paper's introductory remarks, which states, and I quote:

[Interpretation]

Le bureau fédéral de l'Association du Corps canadien est heureux de profiter de l'occasion qui lui est offerte de présenter au Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants son mémoire dans lequel il expose en termes généraux son attitude relativement au rapport du Comité Woods. A part certains points de détail, nous appuyons chaleureusement les conclusions de ce Comité et nous le félicitons de l'excellente étude qu'il a faite. Le Comité Woods a étudié à fond les problèmes avec lesquels l'Association du Corps canadien a été en butte pendant plus de trente ans, depuis l'étude faite antérieurement et il a formulé des propositions que, sauf dans deux cas, soit les propositions n°s 82 et 148, nous appuyons; en fait, nous prions fortement le Comité permanent d'adopter sans retard le rapport en question.

Monsieur le président, nous tenons à exprimer notre mécontentement quant au retard apporté à la publication du Livre blanc du Gouvernement. Conséquemment, les organisations d'anciens combattants n'ont eu que quelques jours pour comparer, d'une part, les recommandations que formule le Gouvernement dans son Livre blanc, et d'autre part, celles que renferme le rapport Woods, en vue de rédiger leurs mémoires destinés au Comité permanent. Il appert, en outre, que le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants aurait d'autres propositions à l'esprit, lesquelles ne figurent pas dans le Livre blanc. Vous concevrez facilement, messieurs, que cela complique davantage notre tâche aujourd'hui. Étant donné le délai que le Gouvernement s'est accordé pour rédiger le Livre blanc, l'Association du Corps canadien estime qu'elle pouvait s'attendre, à juste titre, que ce document renferme toutes les propositions et observations du Ministre, pour que le mémoire qu'elle nous présente aujourd'hui soit complet, sans qu'il lui soit nécessaire d'y prévoir un supplément à une date ultérieure.

Aujourd'hui, 29 septembre 1969, l'Association du Corps canadien tient à prendre position officiellement: advenant que le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants émette plus tard des déclarations en supplément au Livre blanc et à l'encontre de toute recommandation formulée dans le rapport Woods, les organisations canadiennes d'anciens combattants devraient être autorisées à témoigner de nouveau devant le Comité permanent.

Messieurs, l'Association du Corps canadien appelle votre attention sur un passage tiré de l'introduction du Livre blanc, et je cite:

[Texte]

It is in fact, a statement of how this government proposes to improve the Pension Act to enable it to fulfill its purpose in terms of present-day thinking and modern social justice.

These numerous plans have evolved individually over the years, and the government considers that the time has come to examine the entire fabric in order to achieve greater consistency between the various elements, and to eliminate unintended gaps or duplications.

At this point, Mr. Chiarman, the Canadian Corps Association wish to emphasize the meaning of the final paragraph of the White Paper's introduction and I quote:

This overall assessment is a large and complex undertaking, but when it is completed the government may propose changes in the pension program or in its administration.

Our Organization feels, with the above statements of the White Paper in mind, as issued by the Hon. Mr. Dubé, that confusion exists. In the first instance he indicates that the government is proposing to improve the Pension Act. In his final paragraph, the Minister leads us to believe that the government may, in the future, change the pension program and its administration.

We wish to respectfully point out to the Standing Committee and to the government as a whole, that the 945,200 veterans and their dependants in Canada will never accept our pensions' rights being included in the social development programs. Disability pensions are an earned right of the men and women who served their country in war and stress. The very thought of this or any Canadian government doing away with veterans' legislation and the Department of Veterans Affairs is abominating. We wish to point out, gentlemen, that initial steps towards this end have already been taken by the government's appointment of a special Senate committee on poverty whose duty it is to study social legislation of the federal government over the next two years. We were astounded to see that the Pension Act was mentioned specifically as one of the pieces of federal government legislation to come under the scrutiny of this poverty committee.

[Interprétation]

Il s'agit en effet d'un exposé de ce que le Gouvernement se propose en vue d'améliorer la Loi sur les pensions et de la rendre plus apte à remplir son rôle en tenant compte de l'optique moderne en matière de justice sociale.

Ces nombreux programmes ont évolué séparément au cours des années, et le Gouvernement estime que le moment est venu d'en examiner toute la structure afin de réaliser une meilleure cohérence des divers éléments, de combler les lacunes et d'éliminer les doubles emplois involontaires.

En l'occurrence, monsieur le président, l'Association du Corps canadien tient à faire ressortir l'esprit du dernier paragraphe de l'introduction du Livre blanc, et je cite:

«Cette évaluation générale est une tâche considérable et compliquée, mais lorsqu'elle sera terminée, le Gouvernement pourra peut-être proposer des changements au programme même ou à l'administration du programme de pensions.»

Après mûre réflexion, notre organisation estime que les passages précités du Livre blanc, émis par l'honorable M. Dubé, font naître une certaine confusion. D'une part, le ministre laisse entendre que le Gouvernement se propose d'améliorer la Loi sur les pensions; d'autre part, dans le dernier paragraphe, il donne à croire que le Gouvernement pourrait, à une date ultérieure, modifier le contenu et l'administration du programme des pensions.

Qu'il nous soit permis de signaler respectueusement au Comité permanent et au Gouvernement en général que les 945,200 anciens combattants et les personnes à leur charge au Canada ne consentiront jamais à ce que le droit à la pension soit compris dans les programmes de progrès social. La pension d'invalidité est un droit acquis aux hommes et aux femmes qui ont servi leur pays en temps de guerre et de tension. Il est exécrable même de penser que le gouvernement actuel ou l'un de ses successeurs veuille abroger les lois visant les anciens combattants et abolir le ministère qui administre leurs affaires. Nous tenons à dire, messieurs, que le Gouvernement a déjà fait un premier pas dans cette direction en instituant un comité spécial du Sénat sur la pauvreté, dont le mandat pour les deux prochaines années consiste à étudier la législation sociale du gouvernement fédéral. Quel ne fut pas notre étonnement d'apprendre que la Loi sur les pensions est mentionnée explicitement comme l'une des mesures législatives fédérales devant faire l'objet de l'étude du Comité en question.

[Text]

This is one of the main reasons why the Canadian Corps Association is here today, to see that the disability pensioners' legislation never comes under the heading of poverty or welfare.

We wish to point out at this time, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Standing Committee, that the English transcript of our brief here before you has been modified considerably, since the government's White Paper was presented on September 9. Due to the lateness of the White Paper's presentation, we apologize to our French-speaking members of the Standing Committee, that time did not permit this revised brief to be completed in both English and French.

• 1420

The Canadian Corps Association appreciates those members of the Standing Committee who have sacrificed a portion of their recess period, to return to the house to receive the briefs of the various veterans' organizations.

Basic Rate

The Woods' Committee informed our organization that there was some doubt as to whether its terms of reference included consideration of the basic rate of pension. However, the Committee did consider the basis on which pensions are paid as part of their necessary reference and we presented our recommendation that the 100 per cent pension be based on the earnings of the unskilled labourer in the federal civil service. The Canadian Corps Association has recommended this in previous appearances before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. This rate represents a balance throughout Canada. The Canadian Corps Association has always felt that this is the best possible basis upon which to estimate earnings in the unskilled labour market. The Canadian Corps Association is extremely disappointed that the government's White Paper did not include study of the basic rate which was submitted to them by the Woods Committee in special report form as well as in the Woods Committee report proper.

Mr. Chairman, do the members have any questions on what has been read to them to date?

The Chairman: Mr. Badanai.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to commend the Canadian Corps Association for their comprehensive brief which I had an opportunity to peruse. How-

[Interpretation]

Voilà l'une des principales raisons pour lesquelles l'Association du Corps canadien témoigne devant vous aujourd'hui, c'est-à-dire pour s'assurer que la loi relative aux pensionnés invalides ne figure jamais dans la catégorie «pauvreté ou bien-être social».

Nous tenons à vous faire remarquer, monsieur le président et messieurs les membres du Comité permanent, que la version anglaise du mémoire que vous avez entre les mains a été sensiblement modifiée depuis le 9 septembre, jour de la publication du Livre blanc du Gouvernement. Vu le retard apporté à l'émission de ce document, nous nous excusons auprès des membres francophones du Comité permanent de ne pouvoir leur fournir, faute de temps, la version française du mémoire revisé. L'Association du Corps canadien désire remercier les membres du Comité permanent qui ont tenu volontiers à revenir sur la colline pendant l'intersession afin d'entendre les mémoires des diverses organisations d'anciens combattants.

Taux de base

Le comité Woods a informé notre organisation qu'il doutait que son mandat comporte l'étude du taux de base de la pension. Néanmoins, le Comité a jugé nécessaire, pour sa propre gouverne, d'examiner sur quoi se fonde le versement des pensions. Nous avons fait valoir notre proposition portant que la pension complète soit établie d'après les gains du travailleur non spécialisé à l'emploi de la Fonction publique fédérale. C'est ce que l'Association du Corps canadien a préconisé, d'ailleurs, lors de ses comparutions antérieures devant le Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants. Ce taux représente une moyenne pour tout le Canada. L'Association du Corps canadien a toujours été d'avis que c'est là la meilleurs façon d'estimer les gains sur le marché du travail non spécialisé. Elle est donc extrêmement désappointée que le Livre blanc du Gouvernement ne fasse pas état du taux de base que le comité Woods propose dans un rapport particulier. Monsieur le président, si les députés ont des questions, je crois que j'en ai lu suffisamment.

Le président: M. Badanai.

M. Badanai: Je voudrais d'abord féliciter le Corps canadien pour son mémoire exhaustif concernant cette question. J'ai pu le lire en entier et en avoir une excellente idée.

[Texte]

ever, on page 2 there is one point referring to the White Paper's final paragraph which reads as follows...

Mrs. Heesaker: Correction, sir, it was not the White Paper's final paragraph, it was the Introductory Remarks' final paragraph, sir.

Mr. Badanai: I see.

Mrs. Heesaker: It was the final paragraph, sir, of the Introductory Remarks.

Mr. Badanai: Then I will amend my question. It reads:

> This over-all assessment is a large and complex undertaking, but when it is completed the government may propose changes in the pension program or in its administration.

That is what you mean here, is it not?

Mrs. Heesaker: It say this on page 7.

Mr. Badanai: Yes, but you mention it here on page 2.

Mrs. Heesaker: No, we were discussing, sir, if you will read our brief, the White Paper's Introductory Remarks and we were speaking of emphasizing the final paragraph in the Introductory Remarks.

Mr. Badanai: Yes, but in any event you are taking issue with the statement.

Mrs. Heesaker: We said that the statement at the conclusion of the Introductory Remarks is confusing. It states two different points of view.

Mr. Badanai: Yes, well this is my question...

The Chairman: Mr. Badanai has a question for you, Mrs. Heesaker.

Mr. Badanai: I want to make sure, Mr. Chairman, that if the government proposes changes, as suggested in the White Paper, that the changes will improve the benefits and certainly not take away what has been promised in the White Paper. But you suggest that they would not do this.

Mrs. Heesaker: I am not suggesting anything. I am suggesting that the White Paper most certainly does not improve everything that we wish improved, nor does the Woods Committee.

[Interprétation]

A la page 2, il y a un point sur lequel j'aimerais revenir, qui traite justement du paragraphe final du Livre blanc.

Mme Heesaker: Ce n'est pas le paragraphe final du Livre blanc, mais plutôt le paragraphe final de l'introduction au Livre blanc.

M. Badanai: Je vois.

Mme Heesaker: Ce sont les remarques préliminaires du Rapport que nous avons citées; le paragraphe final à la page 7 du texte français du Livre blanc.

M. Badanai: Je vais modifier ma question.

> Cette évaluation générale est une tâche considérable et compliquée, mais lorsqu'elle sera terminée, le gouvernement pourra peut-être proposer des changements au programme même ou à l'administration du programme des pensions.

Mme Heesaker: Vous trouverez cela à la page 7 du texte français du Livre blanc.

M. Badanai: Oui, mais vous le mentionnez à la page 2.

Mme Heesaker: Nous traitions des remarques préliminaires de l'introduction du Livre blanc, de ce qui est nommé «Introduction au Livre blanc.» Nous disions que cette déclaration à la fin de l'introduction est assez confuse et trompeuse.

M. Badanai: Oui, mais nous posez une question avec la déclaration.

Mme Heesaker: Nous avons dit que la déclaration à la fin de la présentation est confuse. Elle mentionne deux différents points de vue.

M. Badanai: Voici ma question.

Le président: M. Badanai a une question à vous poser, M^me^ Heesaker.

M. Badanai: J'aimerais m'assurer, monsieur le président, que si le gouvernement propose un changement, comme il est dit dans le Livre blanc, les changements amélioreront les avantages. Alors, il n'enlèvera certainement rien à ce qui a été promis dans le Livre blanc. Vous prétendez qu'ils ne le feront pas.

Mme Heesaker: Je ne prétends rien du tout. Je déclare que le Livre blanc n'améliore pas tout ce que nous voudrions voir amélioré ni le Comité Woods non plus d'ailleurs.

[Text]

Mr. Badanai: No, but the suggestion is made, however, that the government may propose changes to the promises made in the White Paper. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that if the government proposes changes then I assume, and I would certainly expect, that it would be to better the promises they have made, and not to be detrimental.

Mrs. Heesaker: You assume, sir, and we hope, but we also feel that the government had sufficient time to have given us all their proposals in the White Paper so that we could have seen whether it was for the betterment or whether it was not for the betterment. We cannot express our opinion on that which we have not had an opportunity to review.

• 1425

Mr. Badanai: My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is that the government acted as quickly as was feasible under the circumstances.

The Chairman: Mrs. Heesaker, would you have preferred that the government take a full firm position and not have a Committee? The purpose of the Committee is to hear from people and to give some flexibility in the government position. Do you feel this is wrong?

Mrs. Heesaker: To which committee are you referring, sir?

The Chairman: To this Committee.

Mrs. Heesaker: Oh, we were not talking about this Committee, we were talking about the White Paper, sir.

The Chairman: I know, but the point is that the program of the Committee is to look at certain recommendations and the Committee has a certain amount of discretion and some scope within which it can make recommendations. Do you feel that this is an error on the government's part?

Mrs. Heesaker: No, I think it is excellent. I only wish that you had before you the complete thoughts of the...

The Chairman: Well, how can there be complete thoughts until they have heard a series of recommendations and gone through this kind of hearing?

Mrs. Heesaker: Well, we will look forward to the future submissions and our request that we will be given subsequent hearings, sir.

The Chairman: I am sorry to have interrupted, but at this point the Committee has

[Interpretation]

M. Badanai: Moi, ce que je soutiens c'est que le gouvernement dit qu'il peut proposer des changements qui viseront, d'après moi, à améliorer la situation et que ce ne seront pas des mesures inopportunes.

Mme Heesaker: Enfin, vous présumez et nous espérons... Le gouvernement a eu suffisamment de temps pour tout présenter dans son Livre blanc. Nous aurions eu un exposé complet à ce moment-là sur lequel nous fonder. Nous ne pouvons nous prononcer sur des questions que nous n'avons pas eu l'occasion d'examiner.

M. Badanai: A mon avis, monsieur le président, le gouvernement a agi le plus rapidement possible dans les circonstances.

Le président: M^me^ Heesaker, auriez-vous préférer que le gouvernement prenne une position ferme sans créer un comité? Enfin, le but du Comité est d'entendre l'opinion de différentes personnes et de permettre au gouvernement d'être un peu plus souple dans sa position. Avez-vous des objections à cela?

Mme Heesaker: De quel comité parlez-vous, monsieur?

Le président: Du présent comité.

Mme Heesaker: Oh, nous ne parlions pas de ce comité, nous parlions du Livre blanc.

Le président: Enfin, le but du Comité est d'étudier les recommandations. Le comité jouit d'une certaine discrétion et peut aussi faire des recommandations. Est-ce une erreur d'après vous?

Mme Heesaker: Non, c'est une excellente chose. J'aurais aimé que vous ayez l'ensemble de nos suggestions.

Le président: Comment pourrions entendre vos opinions avant que vous ayez entendu toutes les recommandations et assister aux séances du comité.

Mme Heesaker: Nous entendrons les prochaines recommandations et nous espérons qu'on nous donnera l'occasion de donner notre opinion.

Le président: Le Comité n'a jamais refusé à un groupe de se faire entendre.

[Texte]

certainly not denied any veterans organization the right to appear nor has the door been closed on any of the organizations. I am sorry, Mr. Knowles.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mrs. Heesaker can correct me if I am wrong, but my impression is that the Canadian Corps Association feels a bit sorry that what we have before us is not just the Woods Report but the limitations that have been imposed upon that report by the White Paper.

Mrs. Heesaker: That is correct.

The Chairman: As I understand it, the terms of reference of the Committee are the Woods report and the recommendations. One of the documents of which we are taking note is the White Papers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, surely the delegation has a right to object to the fact that they did not appear before the Committee when all we had was the Woods Report. You may disagree with them and other members of the Committee may disagree with them.

The Chairman: If that is the point they are making then it is perfectly legitimate. I assumed that another point was being made to the effect...

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I could be corrected, but I...

The Chairman: ...that there was not a complete list of government comments on every point in the Woods Report.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The point I got was that there is objection to the fact that the wide scope of the Woods Report has been limited by the White Paper. I would be glad to be corrected if I am wrong.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, I think probably, somewhat, we are not all of the same understanding. If I had felt that the White Paper was inflexible, and those were the words used by the Minister, I would not have been sitting on the Committee for the last two weeks.

The Chairman: Nor would any of the rest of us, Mr. Guay.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Bear with me for a moment. This is one point. The Minister said that the purpose of his White Paper was flexible so that this Committee could make recommendations to him and make changes.

[Interprétation]

M. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Reprenez-moi si je me trompe, mais j'ai l'impression que l'Association du Corps canadien est désolée parce que le Rapport Woods est limité par le Livre blanc.

Mme Heesaker: C'est exact.

Le président: Les attributions du comité concernent le rapport Woods et les recommandations. L'un des documents dont nous tenons compte, est le Livre blanc.

M. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Enfin, la délégation pose des objections parce qu'elle n'a pas paru devant le Comité alors qu'il n'y avait que le Rapport Woods.

Le président: Ils en ont le droit.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je peux me tromper mais...

Le président: Qu'il n'y avait pas une liste complète des commentaires du gouvernement sur tous les points du rapport Woods.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Ce que j'ai compris, c'est qu'il y a des objections parce que le Rapport Woods dans son étendue a été limité par le Livre blanc.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Je crois que nous ne sommes pas tous sur la même longueur d'ondes. Si je croyais que le Livre blanc est inflexible, je ne siègerais pas au Comité depuis deux semaines.

Le président: Personne d'autres, non plus, M. Guay.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Enfin, voici l'une des questions que le ministre dit. Il dit que le but du Livre blanc était d'apporter une certaine flexibilité, une certaine souplesse. Alors, le Comité pourra faire des recommandations au ministre en vertu desquelles il pourra faire des changements.

[Text]

The Chairman: Right.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is exactly the word, and he was questioned by me. I questioned you at a subsequent meeting, if you recall . . .

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): . . . because I said that if it was not so then it was no use our sitting here. In fact, I think Mr. Chadderton was here when I made the statement that if it was not so then it was no use our hearing your briefs. So I agree with Mr. Knowles that this Committee is to hear briefs and to make recommendations to the Minister. What he may come up with after that we have no knowledge of, but at least this Committee can go on record as either agreeing in principle with some things and make recommendations accordingly, or else turn some things down. The odds are that the Committee that has been sitting to hear briefs here rather looked with a good eye at some of the briefs we have had presented to us. I think we want to listen to your brief in the same light that we have listened to others.

The Chairman: Right.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Then, finally, sit and make recommendations to the Minister. If he had not used this whereby he could make changes in his White Paper or he was inflexible, then I think I would be out of it; I would not want to sit on it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, are you of the opinion that our flexibility includes our right as a Committee, should it wish to recommend to the government that they go beyond the White Paper so long as it stays within the Woods Report?

The Chairman: There has never been any question in my mind that the terms of reference that Parliament set out for the Committee are precisely the terms which will govern the Committee, and they refer to the Woods Committee and its recommendations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Period.

The Chairman: Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, on page 1 they refer to two recommendations, numbers 82 and 148, as two recommendations that they do not endorse. As we were told that number 148 would be accepted unchanged by the government, what is your objection to that particular recommendation.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Parfait.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): C'est exactement ce que le ministre m'a répondu lorsque je l'ai questionné.

Le président: C'est exact.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): J'ai dit que s'il n'en était pas ainsi, alors, il ne servait pas à rien que le Comité se réunisse et perde deux semaines ici. M. Chadderton était présent. Le présent Comité doit écouter les mémoires et ensuite faire ses recommandations au ministre. Enfin, ce qu'il fera ensuite, nous ne le savons pas. Cela n'est plus de notre ressort, mais enfin, nous, ici, nous pouvons étudier le rapport et faire des recommandations au ministre ou laisser tomber ce qui ne nous convient pas. Enfin, notre Comité se réunit pour étudier des mémoires, des mémoires qui nous sont présentés. Nous allons écouter votre mémoire comme nous avons écouté ceux des autres associations.

Le président: Très bien.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Ensuite, nous nous réunirons ensemble pour faire des recommandations au ministre. Il nous a laissé entendre qu'il pourrait vraiment faire des changements à son Livre blanc, sinon, je ne voudrais pas perdre mon temps à venir travailler ici.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Je crois que notre Comité à la souplesse d'aller recommander au gouvernement qu'ils aillent au-delà du Livre blanc en tenant compte du Rapport Wood.

Le président: Eh bien! je suis certain que le mandat qui a été fixé par le gouvernement pour notre Comité avait trait au Rapport Wood et ses recommandations.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Voilà tout!

Le président: M. Marshall.

M. Marshall: A la page 1 on parle de deux recommandations: la recommandation numéro 82 et la recommandation numéro 148 qu'ils n'appuient pas. Vous avez dit que la recommandation 148 avait été acceptée par le gouvernement sans modification. Est-ce que vous seriez opposé à cette recommandation?

[Texte]

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chadderton, would you answer that, please?

Mr. Marshall: It refers to the period of time during which a member of the armed forces...

An hon. Member: You are quite right on that.

• 1430

Mr. Chadderton: Did you want me to answer?

Mrs. Heesaker: Yes, please, Mr. Chadderton.

Mr. C. H. Chadderton (Dominion Honorary Vice-President, Canadian Corps Association): Mr. Chairman, recommendation number 148 would, in effect, establish the present definition used by the Canadian Pension Commission with regard to the limitation of the time meant by "theatre of actual war" to the time when there was shooting going on. I do not recall any other organizations making similar representations, but the representations of the Royal Canadian Legion to the Woods Committee were to the effect that "theatre of actual war" should span that period of time from when the war began by Act of Parliament which was September 1939 through until the war finished by Act of Parliament which, I believe, was April 1946 or 1947 or thereabouts. So what the Canadian Corps Association delegation is saying here is that they do not agree with the recommendation of the Woods Committee.

Mr. Marshall: I see.

Mr. Chadderton: One further point is that probably why this is raising a question is that most of the recommendations of the Woods Committee would have extended certain benefits and there were only two or three which would have restricted benefits and this was one of them.

Mr. Marshall: Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Chadderton. Your comment was very helpful, because I must confess I was a little puzzled.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I was going to ask if the delegation had any further comments to make on 82. Why was it not acceptable? I will ask you the question then.

Mr. E. J. Parsons (Dominion Pensions Advocate, Canadian Corps Association): Because it would restrict attendance allowance that is already available to pensioned

[Interprétation]

Mme Heesaker: Voulez-vous répondre M. Chadderton, s'il vous plaît?

M. Marshall: Il se réfère à une période de temps ou un membre des forces armées.

Une voix: Vous avez tout à fait raison.

M. Chadderton: Vouliez-vous que je vous réponde?

Mme Heesaker: Oui, je vous en prie M. Chadderton.

M. C. H. Chadderton (vice-président honoraire de l'Association du Corps canadien): La recommandation 148, monsieur le président aurait pour effet d'établir la définition actuelle utilisée par la Commission des pensions du Canada concernant la limitation du temps passé sur un «théâtre réel de guerre» au cours d'une bataille. Cela a été fait par suite de demandes de la Légion canadienne au Comité Wood. Je ne me rappelle pas que d'autres organisations aient fait des instances semblables. La Légion demandait que le «théâtre réel de la guerre» s'étende sur la période de la guerre à laquelle la guerre a été déclarée, de 1939 jusqu'au moment où elle a fini, par acte du Parlement, en avril 1946 ou 1947 environ. L'Association du corps canadien dit qu'elle n'est pas d'accord avec la recommandation du Comité Woods.

M. Marshall: Je vois.

M. Chadderton: Le Comité Woods aurait voulu étendre les prestations et il n'y en aurait eu que deux ou trois recommandations qui auraient été limitatives et celle-ci en serait une.

M. Marshall: Merci.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Chadderton, merci de vos remarques, car j'étais un peu perplexe.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Ce que j'allais vous demander c'est si la délégation a d'autres remarques à formuler à propos de la partie 82. Pourquoi n'était-ce pas acceptable? Je pose la question.

M. E. J. Parsons (avocat national des pensions, Association du Corps canadien): Parce qu'elle était restrictive. Ce sont des allocations qui sont déjà mises à la disposition des veterans. We did not want to take away anything that they already had. In fact, we found it both convenient and less expensive to the government to pay a small attendance allowance than hospitalize, it is better for the veteran.

[Text]

The Chairman: Has 82 come up specifically at this stage of the brief?

Mr. Marshall: There were two they did not endorse.

The Chairman: I see.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I understand that where the government has said they do not accept in full does not necessarily mean that they have turned it down. Where they have not accepted it they merely have not made a firm decision on accepting; is that not correct?

The Chairman: Well, we have had some precise testimony from Mr. Ward on many sections. It was quite a challenge to any one man to be expected to be an expert on the broad range of 148 recommendations, but I think that the transcript of these proceedings will be of great interest to those appearing because it will give you a good deal more information than has been available up to this point. No doubt there will continue to be developments.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Another point that was mentioned which I believe is very important is in regard to another part in the section which you have read, that if by any chance there is further change being made that you would like to be heard again. I think that is a point very well taken, Mr. Chairman. Could we not give them assurance that if this is the case that they will be heard again.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay, I think the point has arisen with one or two other groups and what we said was that the door is open. There will certainly be developments and no doubt we may hear from the Canadian Corps Association. I do not know how often we can say that we will have interviews, but certainly the door is not closed by any means at this point.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Right.

Mrs. Heesaker: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to correct any false impression that may have been left in any way that we, of the Canadian Corps Association, are not cognizant and appreciative of the wonderful work done by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs through the many years. We anciens combattants et nous ne voulons rien leur enlever. En fait, il serait plus commode et avantageux pour le gouvernement de leur payer une petite allocation que de les hospitaliser.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Est-ce que ceci s'applique à cette partie du mémoire?

M. Marshall: Il y avait deux points avec lesquels ils n'étaient pas d'accord.

Le président: Je vois.

M. Bigg: Ceci ne veut pas nécessairement dire que le gouvernement les a rejetées s'il ne se prononce pas sur certaines recommandations. Le gouvernement n'a pas encore pris de décision. N'est-ce pas exact?

Le président: Nous avons déjà parlé de ceci à plusieurs reprises. C'est beaucoup d'exiger d'un homme qu'il connaisse à fond 184 recommandations. Les comptes rendus des délibérations présenteront beaucoup d'intérêt pour ceux qui ont comparu. Ils contiendront beaucoup de renseignements.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Un autre point qui est très important se rapportait à une autre partie que vous avez lue, à savoir qui si d'autres changements survenaient, vous aimeriez être reconvoqués. C'est très bien, monsieur le président, on en prend note et est-ce qu'on peut donner à la délégation l'assurance qu'on les reconvoquera.

Le président: La question a été soulevée par un ou deux autres groupes et nous avons dit que la porte était ouverte. Il y aura des événements et naturellement la porte sera ouverte à l'Association du Corps canadien. Combien de fois ils pourront se représenter, je n'en sais rien.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Très bien.

Mlle Heesaker: Notre association apprécie le magnifique travail du Comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants depuis plusieurs années. Nous ne serions pas ici si nous n'approuvions pas votre existence et le rôle que vous jouez dans les aflaires concernant les anciens combattants. Je voudrais dire Committee started many years ago. I would like to mention, too, that we have not had the benefit, sir, as you know of seeing any of the transcripts of the. . . .

The Chairman: This is one of the difficulties, and I apologize for this.

Mrs. Heesaker: Yes, I would like to make that perfectly clear. We have seen no transcripts of what the Minister's statements have been to you; the fact that he said the door was open, or this was only partial or anything. We have not seen any of the transcripts.

The Chairman: This was available through the usual distribution channels last week. I regret the delay.

Mrs. Heesaker: We are not in any way criticizing, we just want it clarified to the members that we cannot expect to know or to comment on that which we have not received copies of. So please understand that I cannot comment on what the Minister has said when I have not seen the transcript as yet.

May I have your permission to proceed, Mr. Chairman, with the reading?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mrs. Heesaker: We are on page 4 now gentlemen.

Re Multiple Disabilities, The Blind, Paraplegics, Etc. Woods Committee Reference No. 64 and No. 65

The Canadian Corps Association is of the opinion that in the case of multiple disabilities, the 100 per cent ceiling should be exceeded to the same extent, and in the same manner as recommended by the Woods Committee. In fact, it has been the feeling of this organization for years that the 100 per cent ceiling was never intended to apply in these cases. We recommend that in the case of multiple disabilities, which, in themselves, when assessed according to the scale exceed 100 per cent—blindness, paraplegia, etc.—be permitted to exceed the 100 per cent ceiling in accordance with the scale as recommended by the War Amputations of Canada, which is precisely the scale adopted and recommended by the Woods Committee.

We urge prompt acceptance of this principle in full. The Canadian Corps Association également que nous n'avons pas vu les comptes rendus des délibérations.

Le président: C'est une des difficultés et je m'en excuse.

Mme Heesaker: Nous n'avons pas lu le compte rendu de ce que le Ministre vous a dit. En fait, vous dites que la porte est ouverte, c'est vrai, mais . . .

Le président: Ceci était disponible par les voies normales de distribution la semaine dernière. Je regrette le retard.

Mme Keesaker: Nous ne critiquons pas, nous voulons simplement dire que vous ne pouvez pas vous attendre à ce que nous nous prononcions en connaissance de cause. Je ne puis commenter ce que le ministre a dit puisque je n'ai pas lu son texte.

Puis-je continuer la lecture, monsieur le président?

Le président: Je vous en prie.

Mme Heesaker: Nous sommes rendus à la page 4, messieurs.

Les infirmités multiples, les aveugles, les paraplégiques, etc., renvoi aux recommandations nos 64 et 65 du Comité Woods

L'Association du Corps canadien est d'avis que, dans le cas des infirmités multiples, le maximum de 100 p. 100 devrait être dépassé dans la mesure et de la façon que recommande le Comité Woods. A la vérité, notre association pense depuis des années que le plafond de 100 p. 100 n'a jamais été prévu comme devant s'appliquer à ces cas. Nous proposons que, dans le cas des infirmités multiples qui, en soi, si elles sont évaluées selon l'échelle, dépassent 100 p. 100 (la cécité, la paraplégie, etc.), devraient dépasser ce maximum de 100 p. 100 d'après l'échelle qu'a proposée l'Association canadienne des amputés de guerre, c'est-à-dire l'échelle que, à son tour, le Comité Woods a adoptée et précisément proposée.

Nous préconisons fortement l'adoption sans retard de ce principe. L'Association du Corps cannot agree with the White Paper's proposal on Page 11, that subject to a means test these disabled veterans may apply for > ...an annual allowance or lump sum grants of not less than $400 and not more than $1,200 per annum for specified amenities to relieve pain and discomfort.

[Text]

Once again, the government is planning to deprive multiple disabled veterans of that which should be theirs by right, and instead plans to ask them to beg for an allowance! The Minister of Veterans Affairs in recent statements has announced that these allowances can be used for the purchase of electrically operated wheel chairs, building of ramps, etc., where needed. We understand that this type of assistance is already available through the Department of Veterans Affairs upon application.

The Canadian Corps Association and the Woods' Report asked not for allowances or hand-outs to be applied for, we asked for the 100 per cent ceiling to be exceeded for multiple disability pensioners of which there are approximately only 425 in Canada, and if the government waits another couple of years to do something for this multiple disability group, there might only be 200 left,—their death-rate is so accelerated.

Do they have any questions, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Any questions from the Committee?

May I ask, Mrs. Heesaker, where you saw the reference to a means test?

Mrs. Heesaker: Anything that has to be applied for is usually a means test. I did not see anywhere where it was an automatic...

The Chairman: There is certainly no reference in the White Paper to a means test in connection with this, none whatever.

Mrs. Heesaker: Can you assure us that there is no means test applicable to this in any way?

The Chairman: Mrs. Heesaker, all I can say is that in the White Paper before us I cannot read any reference to a means test.

Mrs. Heesaker: Similarly, Mr. Chairman, respectfully, we cannot see anywhere that it assures us that there is not a means test.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is between the lines.

[Interpretation]

canadien ne peut souscrire à la proposition faite à la page 11 du Livre blanc, soit que, sous réserve d'une appréciation des ressources, les pensionnés invalides pourront réclamer «une allocation annuelle, ou une indemnité globale, d'au moins $400 et d'au plus $1,200 l'an», pour qu'ils aient les moyens de soulager leurs souffrances. Le gouvernement projette, encore une fois, de priver les anciens combattants affligés d'infirmités multiples, de ce qui leur revient à juste titre; il entend les contraindre à mendier une indemnité. Le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants, dans ses récentes déclarations, a affirmé que pareilles prestations pourront s'employer, le cas échéant, pour l'achat de voitures de malade électriques, pour l'aménagement de rampes, etc. Nous croyons que le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants fournit déjà ce genre d'aide à ceux qui en font la demande.

L'Association du Corps canadien et le rapport Woods ne veulent pas d'allocations ou d'aumônes qu'il faut demander; ils voudraient que le plafond de 100 p. 100 soit dépassé dans le cas des pensionnés souffrant d'infirmités multiples, dont le nombre atteint environ 425 au Canada. Mais si le gouvernement attend encore quelques années pour agir au profit de ce groupe, peut-être n'en restera-t-il que 200 à ce moment-là, à cause de la mortalité élevée chez ces pensionnés.

Y a-t-il des questions, monsieur le président?

Le président: Je me demande d'où vient votre expression de l'évaluation des moyens.

Mme Heesaker: Toute demande se fait ordinairement en fonction de l'évaluation des moyens. Je n'ai vu nulle part que c'était automatique.....

Le président: Il n'est pas fait mention d'une évaluation possible des moyens, pas du tout.

Mme Heesaker: Pouvez-vous nous assurer qu'il n'y aura pas d'évaluation des moyens?

Le président: Je puis dire tout simplement que, dans le Livre blanc, je ne vois aucune allusion à une évaluation des moyens.

Mme Heesaker: De même, nous ne voyons nulle part qu'il n'y en aura pas.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Ce serait entre les lignes?

[Texte]

Mrs. Heesaker: It most certainly seems to us that way, sir.

Mr. Legault: But it is specified that they are subject to a means test?

Mrs. Heesaker: It says in the White Paper that it will be "applied for" and when that terminology is usually used in the Department of Veterans Affairs it means that the applicant has to pass a certain number of provisions. Usually it has to do with his financial standing, his money in the bank and so forth whenever those words are used.

• 1440

We, of the Canadian Corps Association, do not feel this small group of approximately 420 or 425 people should have to disclose the little money they have been able to save out of their pension which is theirs by right of the afflications they have suffered in order to request $400 to $1,200 a year. We are asking that the disability pension rate be raised and that this 100 per cent be exceeded for this very special group of people whose deaths are occurring daily and who will soon, perhaps, all be gone.

Mr. Legault: Then forget, Mr. Chairman, the allowance of $400 to $1,200 as well.

Mrs. Heesaker: Most certainly, and exceed it. There is not any dollar value that you can put on sacrifice such as these men have made; no dollar value, no means test, no compensation or lump sum I am sure that the people who are so afflicted and the organizations which specifically represent them could very capably discuss this. I understand the disability groups to which we referred are to appear here tomorrow and I am sure that in addition to those who have supported us they will have some very, very concrete proposals for you to consider. We certainly think there is no dollar value on their compensation and most certainly they should not be embarrassed by further applications for assistance. We do point out that these ramps and the other things that the White Paper indicated were to be provided are already being provided. We know of some people who have made applications for ramps, Mr. Chairman, and who received the assistance.

The Chairman: Mrs. Heesaker, I am sure you are very anxious to be careful and precise in what you say. The paragraph in question on page 11 of the White Paper says:

> Provision will be made for an annual allowance or lump-sum grants, of not less than $400 and not more than $1,200 per annum, for specified amenities to relieve

[Interprétation]

Mme Heesaker: Apparemment, oui.

M. Legault: Précise-t-on qu'il y aura une évaluation des moyens?

Mme Heesaker: Il n'est pas dit dans le Livre blanc qu'il y aura une évaluation des moyens mais il est dit qu'il faudra demander une allocation et généralement les requérants doivent prouver au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants qu'ils remplissent certaines exigences qui tiennent ordinairement compte de sa situation financière, de son argent en banque et ainsi de suite.

Nous ne pensons pas que ce petit groupe de 420 ou 425 personnes devrait révéler les quelques économies ou épargnes qu'ils ont pu faire pour demander de $400 à $1,200 par année. Nous demandons que le taux de l'allocation d'invalidité soit augmenté et dépasse le 100 p. 100 pour ce groupe spécial de personnes, dont le nombre diminue de jour en jour.

M. Legault: Oublions alors l'allocation de $400 à $1,200.

Mme Heesaker: On ne peut pas évaluer monétairement le sacrifice que ces hommes ont fait, ni monétairement, ni par une évaluation des moyens, ni par une compensation ou un montant global. Je suis sûre que les personnes affligées par ces invalidités et les organismes qui les représentent pourraient discuter de la chose avec beaucoup de compétence. Je sais que d'autres associations se présenteront demain devant le Comité et je suis sûre qu'elles formuleront des propositions très concrètes comme l'on fait ceux qui nous ont aidé. Il n'y a aucune valeur monétaire qui puisse compenser leurs invalidités et ils ne devraient pas être importunés par ces demandes d'allocation supplémentaires. Nous soulignons également que les subventions, pour des rampes et autres objets dont parle le Livre blanc sont déjà fournies. Nous savons que certaines personnes ont demandé des allocations pour ce genre de choses et qu'elles les ont reçues.

Le président: Madame Heesaker, je suis certain que vous voulez être absolument sûre de ce que vous dites. Le paragraphe de la page 11 du Livre blanc se lit ainsi:

> «Une allocation annuelle ou une indemnité globale, d'au moins 400 dollars et d'au plus 1,200 dollars par année, pourra être versée au pensionné pour lui procu-pain and discomfort, and to increase as far as possible the enjoyment of life for the pensioner and to provide for him the essential will to live.

I cannot read into that paragraph any reference to the application or the kinds of thing that you have assumed nor is it my understanding that it would be means tested. Mrs. Heesaker, I am sure we are all anxious to have the record set straight on this matter, but I am aware of any statement that would lead to the interpretation that I believe you have placed before us today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, just to set the record straight, I am sure the Departmental witnesses who appeared before us made it clear that these grants were to be at the discretion of certain officials and I remind members of the specific reference to a ramp that could be built. Incidentally, I produced that this morning as evidence that these are not necessarily annual payments, they could be in the form of a lump sum.

The Chairman: I remember that. It says lump sum or annual.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But in both cases it would be at the discretion of the officials who examine the case and I do not think you have the right to castigate Mrs. Heesaker for thinking that that is a form of a means test. The rest of us do see it that way.

The Chairman: This is a point the Committee will have to clarify in its recommendations. I certainly never thought of it as a means test in the terms in which I understood a means test.

Mr. Crooks: Could I ask a question, Mr. Chairman? If it is not intended to be a means test on what would they base this lump sum of not less than $400 and not more than $1,200?

The Chairman: I think it would be related to the specific requirements in terms of physical needs or other matters which would relieve pain and discomfort of the case that is involved, but I was not aware that there would be the type of thing which is done with war veterans' allowances which is a means-tested program.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer you to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, Issue No. 12, page 221. In reply to my question, the Minister stated:

[Interpretation]

rer les moyens de soulager ses souffrances, afin qu'il puisse jouir plus pleinement de la vie et qu'il retrouve le désir de vivre.

Je ne vois rien dans ce paragraphe qui nous permette de déduire à une évaluation des revenus. Madame Heesaker, nous voulons tous que les choses soient bien claires et précises, mais je ne retrouve rien qui me pousse à croire et qui vous permette de croire à cette interprétation que vous nous soumettez aujourd'hui.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Le ministère a précisè que cette subvention serait versée en fonction du pouvoir discrétionnaire du ministre ou des fonctionnaires et je me souviens que le fonctionnaire parlait d'une rampe pour une chaise roulante qui pourrait être construite. Incidemment, j'ai produit ce matin la preuve qu'il ne s'agira pas forcément d'allocations annuelles. Il pourrait s'agir d'un paiement global.

Le président: Je me souviens de cela. On disait paiement annuel ou global.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Mais dans les deux cas tout cela est laissé au pouvoir discrétionnaire des fonctionnaires, qui examinent le cas, et je ne pense pas que vous puissiez vous en prendre à Madame Heesaker qui pense qu'il peut s'agir dans ce cas d'un contrôle du revenu sous une forme ou une autre. Car la plupart d'entre nous le voient ainsi.

Le président: C'est un point que le Comité aura à éclaircir dans ses recommandations. Je n'ai vraiment jamais pensé qu'il s'agissait là d'un contrôle du revenu sons la forme dont je l'entends.

M. Leslie Crooks: Puis-je poser une question, monsieur le président? S'il ne s'agit pas là d'un contrôle du revenu, sur quoi les fonctionnaires se baseront-ils pour fixer un paiement global entre $400 et $1,200?

Le président: Je pense qu'on se rapportera aux besoins particuliers de l'état physique de l'invalide ou de la façon dont on peut soulager sa douleur ou son inconfort, mais je ne crois pas qu'on applique la même évaluation des revenus que celle qu'on applique lors du versement de l'allocation aux anciens combattants.

M. Badanai: J'aimerais me référer au compte rendu des délibérations du Comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants, fascicule 12 page 221. En réponse à ma question, le ministre a déclaré:

Perhaps the committee can assist me on that. Broadly speaking, it is the purpose of the White Paper to be flexible, and we intend to be flexible in these guidelines as well. We have not yet come up with definite yardsticks on how this will be measured. For instance, in my imagination I visualize a lump sum for the purchase of a ramp, let us say, in the home of a wheelchair veteran so he can wheel himself up and down in his home. That would be an example of the type of lump sum that could be granted.

Following that I asked:

Would that also mean the pitching of a house, or the repairing of a house, or the enlarging of a dwelling?

In reply, Mr. Dube said:

I do not know—perhaps there are other agencies that could deal with that type of assistance. I visualize a type of assistance that would be very close to the veteran himself.

In other words, he would have to apply and make a specific demand. If the Minister is not aware of what the applicant wishes to have or what the veterans who can qualify want, then how in the name of heaven can the government know what kind of assistance should be given to the man. I said:

He would have to apply and make a specific demand? Is that it?

The Minister said:

That is right. He would have to apply. I said, there are 5,000 100 per cent pensioners, but relative to how many of those will qualify I think we will need a bit of experience to find out exactly what is the best way of doing it. But you must not forget that above the amounts that you have just mentioned some of these 100 per cent pensioners also receive an attendance allowance, which can go up to $3,000 a year; and which they are receiving now.

In other words, the Minister has an open mind on the question and if a pensioner claimed that he should have additional assistance, well, I tell you that he will get it by applying.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, that is the very point, I think, about which the Corps is worried. They do not like the idea of these things being either begged for or at the discretion of some person who might say, "We think this is a good case...

[Interprétation]

«Le Comité pourra peut-être m'aider. En général, le but du Livre blanc est d'assurer une certaine latitude envers les lignes directrices, et nous allons respecter cette latitude. Nous n'avons pas encore établi définitivement quels seront les jalons sur lesquels nous nous baserons. Je m'imagine très bien en ce moment, une allocation pour l'achat d'une rampe afin que l'invalide puisse entrer et sortir de sa maison en chaise roulante. Voilà un exemple du genre de paiement global que nous pourrions accorder.»

Après cela je lui ai demandé:

«Est-ce que cela comprendrait également la mise en chantier, les réparations ou l'agrandissement d'une maison?»

En réponse, monsieur Dubé a déclaré:

«Je ne le sais pas. Peut-être qu'un autre organisme pourrait se charger de ce genre d'assistance. Je songe à un genre d'assistance qui toucherait de près les anciens combattants.»

En d'autres mots, l'ancien combattant devra présenter une demande pertinente. Si le ministre ne connaît pas les désirs des anciens combattants ayant droit à cette allocation comment pourrait-il savoir quel montant lui donner? Et j'ai dit au ministre:

Ils devront présenter une demande spéciale? N'est-ce pas?

Et le ministre a répondu:

«C'est exact. Ils devront présenter une demande. Je répète qu'il y a 5,000 pensionnés à 100 p. 100, mais pour ce qui est du nombre d'entre eux qui seront admissibles, je crois qu'il nous faudra attendre d'avoir un peu d'expérience avant de décider quelle sera la meilleure procédure à suivre. Il ne faut pas oublier qu'en plus des montants que vous venez de mentionner, certains de ces pensionnés à 100 p. 100 touchent également une allocation de soins, qui peut aller jusqu'à 3,000 dollars par année; certains touchent déjà cette allocation.»

Autrement dit le même ministre n'a pas pris de position à ce sujet, et je vous dis que si un ancien combattant estime qu'il a besoin d'une aide supplémentaire il l'obtiendra s'il en fait la demande.

M. Bigg: Monsieur le président, voilà le point critique qui inquiète l'Association du Corps canadien. L'Association n'aime pas l'idée qu'on doive quémander, quêter pour une aide semblable auprès d'une personne qui a le pouvoir discrétionnaire de dire: «ce cas est valable».

[Text]

Mr. Badanai: I am not suggesting that the veteran should beg for it. I am suggesting that they should ask for it.

Mr. Bigg: This is a question of semantics. Some people think it is begging to ask. Some people prefer to say, "I have a pension as of right under the Act and there can be no argument with the officials of any kind."

Mr. Badanai: He has to make his need known, has he not?

Mr. Peters: Not under a pension as of right.

Mr. Badanai: I know, but this is a mixture. This is a supplement. It is not the pension, it is a supplement to the pension.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the Corps is saying that rather than ask for these specific hand-outs the pensioner who has these additional multi-disabilities has the right to exceed the 100 per cent pension. I do not think there is any question that in the one case it becomes a right and in the other case it becomes an allowance and an allowance always has a means test attached to it. You can cut it how you like. It can be generous or it can be niggardly, but it always has a means test attached to it. Whether or not we want the Committee to argue about the merits of it, I think we are splitting hairs when we cannot see the difference between what the Corps is asking, that is for more than the 100 per cent pension as a right and additional assistance that could be provided over the 100 per cent pension that could be given as a discretionary grant. I do not think there is much doubt that there is considerable fundamental difference in the two methods and, as I understand it, the Corps is suggesting as the War Amps mentioned that the multi-disabilities fall into a different category than our normal 100 per cent pensioners and that this should be part of the pension structure rather than an allowance structure.

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chairman, that is perfectly correct. We in national veteran organizations, also have to think of the fact that the most modest man among the veterans in Canada is this type of person and if he is given something that is his as a right which is spelled out in the legislation, then he will accept it with pride, but there are many dis-

• 1450

[Interpretation]

M. Badanai: Je ne veux pas dire que l'ancien combattant doit quêter, je suggère simplement qu'il doit en faire la demande.

M. Bigg: Alors la discussion tourne sur des mots, certains trouvent que demander c'est quêter et d'autres disent qu'ils en ont le droit aux termes de la Loi sur les pensions, par conséquent, qu'il n'y a pas de discussions à avoir avec quelque fonctionnaire que ce soit.

M. Badanai: Il doit faire valoir ses besoins, oui ou non?

M. Peters: Non en vertu du droit à la pension.

M. Badanai: Je sais, mais il s'agit d'une allocation supplémentaire. Ce n'est pas la pension c'est un montant qui doit compléter la pension.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, ce que l'association essaye de vous dire c'est qu'au lieu de demander ces aumônes le pensionné qui souffre de cette invalidité multiple ait le droit de dépasser le taux de 100 p. 100 de sa pension. Je ne vois pas pourquoi il peut être question que dans un cas il s'agisse d'un droit et que dans un autre cas on parle d'une allocation et qu'une allocation est versée en fonction de l'évaluation des moyens quel que soit le terme qu'on emploie pour désigner la chose. Si le Comité veut ou non discuter des mérites de la chose, c'est bien, mais il me semble que l'on coupe les cheveux en quatre lorsque nous ne voyons pas la différence que le Corps canadien demande. C'est-à-dire entre un montant supérieur au taux de pension de 100 p. 100 établi comme droit et une assistance supplémentaire versée après le taux de 100 p. 100, sous forme d'allocation laissée à la discrétion du sous-ministre. Il y a une différence fondamentale entre les deux méthodes. Et je pense que le Corps canadien, comme les amputés de guerre, suggère que les cas d'invalidités multiples tombent sous une catégorie différente que nos pensionnés ordinaires à 100 p. 100, et que cette catégorie devrait faire partie intégrante de la structure des pensions plutôt que de la structure des allocations.

Mme Heesaker: C'est parfaitement exact. Nos associations nationales d'anciens combattants ne désirent pas oublier que l'ancien combattant dont les revenus sont les plus modestes sont généralement les invalides et si le gouvernement lui donne quelque chose en vertu d'un droit, il l'acceptera avec fierté, mais il y a beaucoup d'anciens combattants abled veterans who, if they have to make application for $400 or $1,200, will stay at home because this would embarrass them. They should not be put in the position with the disabilities they have and the afflictions they were subjected to in time of war of having to ask for allowances or be subjected to anything that even appears like a means test. It should be theirs by right and that is all we are requesting, sir.

May I continue if the Committee has no further questions, sir?

The Chairman: Yes, go ahead.

Mrs. Heesaker:

Final Appeal—Appointment of Appeal Board, "Outside' 'of the Pension Commission Structure, an excellent Woods' Committee Recommendation, Numbers 17 through to 22.

The Canadian Corps Association strongly supports the recommendation of the Woods Committee, regarding the method of application and processing claims for pension entitlement, and again strongly supports the final recommendation of the majority judgement that an Appeal Board be appointed as a final judicial body, over and above, with no connection directly to the Pension Commission as such.

The Canadian Corps Association does not feel that the government's White Paper proposal on this subject is acceptable. We reiterate our stand, voiced before this committee on Thursday, September 18 when all the national veterans organizations emphasized in their joint statement:

> We are convinced that the ends of justice in this matter can only be served if the government were to recognize the requirements to establish an independent Appeal Board, instead of a reorganization of the existing facilities.

The Canadian Corps Association are concerned not necessarily with the initial decision, but with the final decision. The White Paper's proposal to establish a Director of Pensions within the Department of Veterans Affairs is a step in the right direction, but does not go far enough.

I wish to digress for a moment, Mr. Chairman, and advise you that our association has had second thoughts on this proposal since we prepared our revised brief that we have before you, and we are now very much against such proposals and have prepared, Mr. Chairman, a supplementary five pages which you have before you and which I will read a little later in this brief.

[Interprétation]

qui préfèrent ne pas faire une demande pour un supplément de $400 ou de $1,200, ils préféreront rester chez-eux car cette demande les embarrasse, et ceux-ci ne devraient pas être mis dans la position, avec les invalidités dont ils souffrent, où l'on exige d'eux qu'ils présentent une demande ou qu'ils soient soumis à quelque chose qui ait l'allure d'une évaluation des moyens. Il doit s'agir d'un droit, c'est tout ce que nous demandons.

Puis-je continuer la lecture, si le Comité n'a pas d'autres questions.

Le président: Oui, allez-y.

Mme Heesaker:

Appel final. Nomination d'un bureau d'appel séparé de la structure de la Commission canadienne des pensions. Les recommandations 17 à 22 du Comité Woods sont excellentes.

L'Association du Corps canadien appuie fermement la proposition du Comité Woods au sujet de la méthode relative à la demande et au traitement des demandes de pension; elle appuie aussi fortement la proposition finale contenue dans la décision majoritaire, savoir que soit désigné un Bureau d'appel ou un tribunal qui serait l'organisme judiciaire de dernier ressort au-dessus de la Commission des pensions en tant que telle, et san lien avec elle.

L'Association du Corps canadien juge inacceptable la proposition gouvernementale à ce propos dans le Livre blanc. Nous réitérons la position que nous avons prise devant le présent comité, jeudi le 18 septembre, lorsque toutes les organisations nationales d'anciens combattants ont fait remarquer dans leur déclaration commune que «nous sommes convaincues que les fins de la justice ne seront services en la matière que si le gouvernement convient de l'opportunité d'établir un bureau d'appel autonome, plutôt que de réorganiser les cadres actuels.» L'Association du Corps canadien se soucie non pas nécessairement de la décision initiale, mais de la décision finale. Dans le Livre blanc, la proposition visant à nommer un directeur des pensions constitue un pas dans la bonne voie, mais elle ne va pas assez loin.

Monsieur le président, je désire vous informer ici que notre association a repensé à cette idée depuis qu'elle a préparé le mémoire revisé que vous avez devant vous et qu'elle s'y oppose fermement. Nous avons préparé un supplément de cinq pages pour étayer notre prise de position. Je vous le lirai un peu plus tard.

[Text]

The Canadian Corps Association recommends to the government the adoption of the Wood's Committee recommendation which was to establish a completely separate or independent Appeal Board which would have no connection with the Pension Commission itself.

The Canadian Corps Association is not questioning the integrity or honesty of any of the present Commissioners, but the idea of the White Paper to place 5 of the 15 Commissioners on an Appeal Division would not result in the independent ruling veterans have a right to expect. Being Commissioners, they have been schooled to think along the same lines as their associates. We recommend that this Appeal Board be composed of 5 persons, who are not now, nor ever have been pension commissioners.

Are there any questions, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask: has the Canadian Corps Association ever considered the cost of this independent Appeal Board in the light of the salaries of the present Commissioners and that the Appeal Commissioners would be at a higher salary level and the attendant train and the travelling because you are not going to say that the board is going to sit in Ottawa but will have to meet the veterans in order to do justice to their claims.

I want to put it to the witnesses: have they considered the additional, and I estimated between, $400,000 and $500,000 a year which would be the total outside expense for an appeal board? Will it be that much better at that cost than a re-organized Pension Commission? Now that is question number one to ponder.

Second, with every sympathy for veterans, of which I happen to be one, I wonder is the case of the pensioned veteran any greater than the ordinary citizen in a court of law? Our supreme courts are composed of judges. The appeal courts from these courts of first instance are lawyers, too, and in many instances they are lawyers or judges who have come from the court of first instance, that is the trial division. There is no arms length relationship and as a matter of fact an appeal court can consist of a judge of the court of first instance who may be seconded to the Appeal Court. Yet there is no travesty of justice and there is no suggestion that this is improper. Why, again, do we consider that the Appeal Board in this instance should not be composed of men who at any time have

[Interpretation]

L'Association du Corps canadien se permet de conseiller au gouvernement d'adopter la recommandation du comité Woods, soit de prévoir un bureau d'appel complètement distinct ou autonome, qui n'aurait aucun lien avec la Commission des pensions.

Ce n'est pas que l'Association du Corps canadien mette en doute l'intégrité ou l'honnêteté de l'un ou l'autre des commissaires actuels, mais l'idée du Livre blanc, c'est-à-dire que cinq des quinze commissaires siègent au bureau d'appel, n'assurerait pas aux anciens combattants l'autonomie de décision à laquelle ils ont le droit de s'attendre. Les commissaires, en raison de leurs fonctions, sont conditionnés à penser comme leurs associés.

Y a-t-il des questions, monsieur le président?

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Monsieur le président, je me demande si l'Association du Corps canadien a pensé aux frais de ce tribunal indépendant d'appel, aux traitements des commissaires actuels et à ceux des membres du tribunal d'appel qui seraient encore plus élevés; il faudrait payer les frais du personnel de soutien et de déplacement. Comme le tribunal ne siégera pas ici à Ottawa, il lui faudra aller rencontrer les anciens combattants. J'estime que les frais pourraient monter à $400,000 ou $500,000 par année. A ce prix-là, ne vaudrait-il pas mieux réorganiser la Commission des pensions. C'est une question à se poser.

Deuxièmement, j'ai beaucoup de sympathie pour les anciens combattants, j'en suis un, mais je me demande si un ancien combattant pensionné a plus de droits devant un tribunal qu'un simple citoyen. Nos cours suprêmes sont composées de juges. Les tribunaux d'appel sont composés d'avocats aussi et dans bien des cas, ce sont des avocats ou des juges qui sont venus de la cour de première instance, c'est-à-dire des tribunaux d'instruction. Ils sont complètement indépendants les uns des autres et en fait, un tribunal d'appel peut être composé d'un juge en provenance d'un tribunal de première instance, qui peut être détaché auprès du Tribunal d'appel. Ce n'est pas là un travesti de la justice et rien ne laisse supposer que ce n'est pas convenable. Une fois de plus, pourquoi penser que le Tribunal d'appel been Commissioners or that you could not reorganize your present Commissioners into a panel who might be the Appeal Board as against Commissioners of the first instance.

These are the two points, the two main questions that I would like to put for consideration by the witnesses.

The Chairman: Mr. Lambert has placed two questions; now Messrs. Bigg, Guay and Marshall have indicated their interest.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I just want to bring a point to the attention of Mr. Lambert. When the Minister was questioned by Mr. Peters in regard to the Appeal Board—I am not speaking of the Entitlement Board, I am speaking of the Appeal Board—it was definite that the Appeal Board would remain in Ottawa and would not travel across the country at all. I thought I would bring that point to the attention of Mr. Lambert.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is why I think the government proposal in regard to that is much more nonsensical because I do not think you will do justice to pensioners if you are going to have a board that will sit only in Ottawa.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Of course, I am not giving Mr. Lambert the full explanation. I am only bringing that answer to his attention.

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chairman, we have prepared certain facts and statistics that we would like to give to the honourable member. Could our Dominion Honorary Vice-President now proceed to answer the questions you have asked, sir?

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, the first figure that puzzles me very, very greatly is this figure of $400,000 for the proposed Appeal Board. As I understand Mr. Justice Woods recommendation, it suggested an appeal board of five people, it suggested they should have a salary level higher than that of the present Pension Commissioners which at that time was $18,500 a year. So if you took this at $22,000 you would end up with a figure of something like $130,000 for salaries. On top of that Mr. Justice Woods recommendation, as I understand it, was that this independent Appeal Board would be able to seek independent legal and medical advice on a panel basis. This again, as I understood it, would have been a situation where the Appeal Board would pay for this advice through some type of fee and I would think $25,000 or even $50,000 a year would buy an awful lot of independent medical and legal advice.

[Interprétation]

ne devrait pas être composé d'hommes qui ont déjà été commissaires ou que la Commission actuelle ne pourrait pas être réorganisée de façon à former le Tribunal d'appel en plus de la Cour de première instance.

Le président: M. Lambert a posé deux questions et MM. Bigg, Guay et Marshall s'y intéressent.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je reviens sur ce qu'a dit M. Lambert. Lorsque le ministre a été questionné par M. Peters à propos du Tribunal d'appel—je ne parle pas du Bureau d'admissibilité—il était entendu que le Tribunal d'appel siégerait à Ottawa et ne se déplacerait pas.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Alors, la proposition du gouvernement est d'autant plus incensée que le gouvernement ne pourra pas rendre justice aux anciens combattants si le Tribunal d'appel siège uniquement à Ottawa.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Evidemment, je ne donne pas une longue explication à M. Lambert. Je ne fais que lui signaler la réponse.

Mme Heesaker: Nous avons préparé quelques statistiques que nous voudrions donner aux membres du comité. Notre vice-président honoraire peut-il maintenant répondre aux questions que vous avez posées, Monsieur le Président?

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, le premier chiffre, celui de $400,000, pour le projet de tribunal d'appel me stupéfie. M. Woods a recommandé l'établissement d'un tribunal d'appel composé de cinq personnes dont les traitements seraient plus élevés que ceux des commissaires qui, à ce moment-là, était de $18,500 par année. De sorte que si on prend le chiffre de $22,000, le total des traitements atteindrait environ $130,000; de plus, le juge Woods recommande que cette commission d'appel indépendante puisse demander des avis médicaux et juridiques de sources indépendantes. La Commission paierait alors ses conseillers médicaux ou juridiques au moyen d'honoraires fixes et je pense que $25,000 ou $50,000 représenteraient énormément pour ces honoraires médicaux et juridiques. D'après la recommandation du juge Woods au sujet des frais de transport, le tribunal «pourrait» siéger à Ottawa ou ailleurs à la discrétion du Président. Toutefois, parce qu'il seraient cinq,

[Text]

Mr. Justice Woods recommendation on travel was that this board "may" sit in Ottawa or elsewhere at the direction of the Chairman. However, with five people covering the whole Dominion of Canada there will not be an awful lot of travelling so the travel bill will not be too high. If you take a total figure for salaries, travel and the independent medical and legal advice of something like, say, $200,000 then surely you must deduct from that the cost of what the government is proposing to set up as an alternative, that is, this appeal section within the Commission. If you deduct that from it, I am sure you must not be looking at the figure of more than a $125,000. I submit this figure of $400,000 is a way out of line bearing in mind that the housekeeping would cost approximately the same if one had a five-man board.

It does not matter today whether it is in the Veterans Affairs Building or whether it is in Tower "A" as I understand it the Department of Public Works charges so much a square foot, et cetera, et cetera. You have so many stenographers and their level would be set by the Public Service Commission and nobody could argue with that. So the only thing you are looking at which would bear a price tag over and above the proposed appeal board section—mind you we are only going on the information we have which is a pretty skimpy White Paper—but if you look at the Woods proposals and try to put a dollar sign on them I cannot see where you are coming to more than $125,000.

Now the second question put by Mr. Lambert was this recommendation of the Canadian Corps Association to the effect that no member of the present Commission should sit on the Appeal Board. I think as we all know that is going a little beyond the recommendation of Mr. Justice Woods and his Committee because they felt there would be nothing wrong with some of the present Commissioners sitting on a new Appeal Board so long as they did not form a majority. However, I think with all due respect it should be brought out that what the veterans have to contend with here is not that they are necessarily critical of any individuals on the present Commission, but what they have to contend with is that there is an atmosphere among veterans' organizations that the people who have sat there for so many years and dictated the policy of this thing, laid it down, kept it within themselves, and failed to publish regulations—all this type of thing has created suspicion.

[Interpretation]

ils n'auraient pas à voyager beaucoup d'une extrémité à l'autre du Canada. Par conséquent, les frais de transport ne seraient pas très élevés. Si vous prenez $200,000 comme chiffre global des traitements, des frais de transport et des services juridiques et médicaux indépendants et que vous déduisiez ensuite le coût de la solution de rechange que propose le gouvernement, je suis sûr que le chiffre ne devrait pas dépasser de beaucoup $125,000. Je pense que le chiffre de $400,000 est excessif, compte tenu du fait que les frais de bureau seraient à peu près les mêmes que ceux d'un tribunal composé de cinq membres.

Il importe peu que l'organisme soit logé dans l'immeuble du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants ou dans la tour «A», puisque le ministère des Travaux publics demande un prix fixe par pied carré, ainsi de suite. Quant aux sténographes, leur traitement serait établi par la Fonction publique. Nous avons peu de renseignements, le Livre blanc étant plutôt succinct, mais je ne vois pas comment les propositions du rapport Woods pourraient coûter plus de $125,000.

La deuxième question posée par M. Lambert porte sur la recommandation de l'Association du Corps canadien demandant qu'aucun commissaire actuel ne fasse partie du tribunal d'appel. Je crois que cela dépasse la portée de la recommandation Woods qui estime qu'il n'y aurait rien de mal à ce que les commissaires actuels siègent dans un nouveau tribunal d'appel à condition qu'ils ne s'y trouvent pas en majorité. Je crois toutefois qu'il faut souligner que les anciens combattants ne s'en prennent pas nécessairement à un tel ou tel membre de la Commission. Ce dont ils se plaignent c'est de cette atmosphère de suspicion qui existe dans les associations d'anciens combattants et qui vient de ce que les personnes qui ont siégé au sein de cette commission durant nombre d'années ont établi des politiques, et n'ont pas rendu publics les règlements nécessaires, tout cela a créé une certaine suspicion.

[Texte]

Whether that is justifiable or not I cannot say, but it has created suspicion, and I think it is only right that veterans' organizations should say that in effect we do not really want any of the present people on any new appeal board, and if they do go on, the government is only letting itself in for additional criticism.

So I think, as best as I can judge, this would be the feeling of the Canadian Corps. But bear in mind that it is not a personal thing at all. It is more the establishment that they are getting at rather than the persons. The establishment of this present Commission has run this thing since 1919, with changes of personnel through attrition, but they have run it, and I would submit that 148 recommendations of the Woods Committee in three volumes is sufficient evidence that the veterans are not satisfied with it. So they say, "Why should it now be turned over to the same people?" I think this is the basis of the objection, Mr. Chairman. Was there another question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Obviously the witness is not too aware of the effect of Parkinson's law in government service. This is why I am going to the figure of $400,000, as the result of the experience of seeing small bodies—from small acorns, great oaks grow. It is the same thing in government service.

An hon. Member: Not at the moment, anyway.

Mr. Chadderton: I would have to say to Mr. Lambert that I am well aware of Parkinson's law and I have seen it operate, but I am also going by an announcement of the present government that if they can plug the dike in many other places, maybe they can plug the dike here. But I still say it is unfair for anybody to turn down the Woods proposals on the basis of drawing the figure of $400,000 out of the air, because if you want to put it down in black and white and show me where this $400,000 is coming, and you can back that up with what was said in the Woods Report, I am going to shut up. But until somebody can do that I just do not want to see figures of $400,000 because I think it is a great dis-service to Mr. Justice Woods and his Committee and to the veterans of this country to turn down or suggest that this appeal board be turned down on a block figure like that.

Mr. Parsons: It is my understanding that the final appeal board would not necessarily call the veteran in as a witness. They will render their judgments entirely on evidence that has been heard in the junior boards. Therefore, they could quite conceivably

[Interprétation]

Je ne saurais dire si elle est justifiée ou non, mais elle existe, et il n'est que juste que les Associations d'anciens combattants disent que, de fait, elles ne veulent pas réellement que les mêmes personnes forment la nouvelle commission des appels, et s'il en était ainsi, le gouvernement se prêtera davantage à des critiques. C'est là, à mon avis, l'opinion de l'Association du Corps canadien. Il n'y a là rien de personnel; on s'attaque plutôt à l'organisme de la Commission actuelle qui, depuis 1919, a dirigé cette affaire. Et je prétends que les 148 recommandations du Comité Woods établissent sans l'ombre d'un doute le mécontentement des anciens combattants à cet égard. Voilà pourquoi ils disent: «Pourquoi devrait-elle être remise entre les mêmes mains?» Y avait-il une autre question, monsieur le président.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Le témoin ne connaît pas très bien l'effet de la Loi de Parkinson dans la fonction publique. C'est pourquoi je cite le chiffre de $400,000 au sujet de cette expérience—l'établissement de petits organismes—le chêne vient du gland. Ainsi en est-il dans la fonction publique.

Un membre: Pas en ce moment, en tout cas.

M. Chadderton: Je dois dire à M. Lambert, que je connais fort bien la Loi de Parkinson pour l'avoir vu en opération, mais pour reprendre les mots même d'une déclaration du gouvernement; s'il va «obturer le barrage» en plusieurs autres endroits, il peut le faire ici même. Mais, d'après moi, c'est injuste que quelqu'un refuse les propositions du rapport Woods en alléguant le chiffre de $400,000; si vous voulez, noir sur blanc, me montrer d'où provient ce $400,000 et citer à l'appui le rapport Woods, je me tairai. Mais en attendant, je n'ai que faire des montants de $400,000, car c'est, je crois, rendre un mauvais service au juge Woods, à son comité et aux anciens combattants de notre pays de rejetter, ou de suggérer que soit rejettée cette Commission d'appel sur la foi seule d'un chiffre arbitraire comme celui-là.

M. Parsons: Si je comprends bien, la Commission d'appel finale n'appellera pas nécessairement l'ancien combattant comme témoin. Sa décision se fondera sur la preuve établie par les autres commissions. Alors, il est possible qu'un tel Tribunal d'appel demeure à remain in Ottawa. It is not a case of appearing all over the country to hear witnesses as is done at the present time. That system would be abolished. I understand that the final appeal board would render judgment on evidence submitted to the junior boards, and it would not be possible to introduce new evidence or anything like that at that time.

This is only a final hearing on the legal aspects of the case, as it has been brought forward before the junior bodies, the entitlement bodies. If I am wrong in that assumption, I would like to be corrected. But that is the way I understand it and if that is so, then they could remain right here in Ottawa. They would not need to travel at all.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would like to point out, from experience on the immigration appeal board, that unless the applicant or the appellant is represented by counsel, or somebody who is going to speak on his behalf, the chance of gaining an appeal on the basis of the paper record is mighty, mighty thin. This is the point; whether the applicant for a pension is able to hire somebody or get somebody to come down here and properly present his case.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, I understand that there will be somebody he can get to represent him. We were told that again at that same particular meeting, that this would be available. There would be somebody who would represent him on the appeal board at no cost to the veteran.

Mr. Parsons: Mr. Chairman, the advocates of the veterans' bureau, I believe, will be instructed to work exclusively for the veteran. He has the veterans' organizations who all have personnel who qualify to present a case.

Mrs. Heesaker: All free of charge, too.

Mr. Parsons: All free of charge, with no cost to the veteran.

The Chairman: You do a tremendous job in that respect; no question on that Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Bigg: Concerning this recommendation about not having the personnel sit, we have gone over this with several other witnesses, and as this is not only the hearing but an exchange of ideas, I would like to know what your group thinks of this. I suggest that what we are looking for on this appeal board, no matter how it is set up, is the quality of Ottawa. Il n'est pas question de parcourir le pays pour entendre des témoins comme l'on fait présentement. Ce système serait aboli. Si j'ai bien compris, le tribunal d'appel final fondera son jugement sur les témoignages recueillis par les tribunaux inférieurs, refusant tout nouveau témoignage, toute nouvelle preuve.

Il s'agirait d'une audience finale portant sur les aspects juridiques de la cause portée devant les tribunaux inférieurs. Si j'ai mal compris, j'aimerais le savoir. Sinon, ce tribunal pourrait fort bien demeurer ici même à Ottawa. Il n'aurait pas à se déplacer du tout.

M. Lambert (Edmonton-Ouest): Je voudrais citer l'expérience de la Commission d'appel de l'immigration, où, à moins que le requérant ne soit représenté par un avocat ou quelqu'un qui peut parler en son nom, les chances d'obtenir gain de cause sont bien faibles. Et c'est précisément là la difficulté: le témoin qui soumet une demande de pension peut-il retenir les services de quelqu'un qui le représente devant le tribunal?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Monsieur le président, on nous a laissé entendre qu'il y aura quelqu'un dont il pourra retenir les services pour le représenter, sans déboursés de sa part.

M. Parsons: Les services des avocats du bureau des Anciens combattants seront uniquement retenus, je crois, pour les Anciens combattants. Ils ont à leur disposition le personnel des associations d'anciens combattants qui a la compétence nécessaire pour les représenter.

Mme Heesaker: Gratuitement, également.

M. Parsons: Gratuitement, sans que l'ancien combattant ait à débourser quoi que ce soit.

Le président: Vous faites sur ce point un excellent travail, il n'y a là-dessus aucun doute. M. Bigg.

M. Bigg: Quant à la recommandation qui vise à ne pas faire siéger le personnel, nous avons, sur ce point, entendu et vu que nous sommes ici pour entendre divers points de vue, j'aimerais connaître l'opinion de votre association. Ce que nous recherchons avant tout dans ce tribunal d'appel, c'est la qualité du personnel, plutôt que le nom que nous lui personnel rather than what you call them, and as I am always thinking of classical references to back myself up, I will say that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet".

You are looking for people on this final appeal board who are going to give justice to the veterans and to the taxpayer, I presume, and therefore cost is not, of course, necessarily the deciding factor either. I would suggest that if we want the right personnel on this board, we cannot always trust the politicians of any political stamp. Therefore I would suggest that the answer might be.....

The Chairman: I do not understand that reference, Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Bigg: I said of any political stamp. I am now 60 years of age and have seen them all. I suggest that the answer might be that we have a panel from which to choose. Although you cannot ask the impossible, and you cannot expect any political party in power to give the veterans groups the right to choose the panel of five, I would suggest that if you are allowed to choose two of the five, or have any say in choosing two of the five, this would be the safety margin of hearings. So, rather than leave the choice of these five personnel in the hands of any one group, if there was a panel from which to choose, and the veterans people themselves were consulted or had the actual power of naming two of the five on the board, then you would get at least a quality of personnel with some decision in the hands of people involved. That is number one.

The second would be that once any panel is chosen, with right of nondismissal for life or for a long period of time, they could become stale. So you need another safety valve and that is this, that we must know in some degree what they are doing. And I would suggest that in the legislation which sets them up, or in the order in council which sets them up, that they give the power to this very Committee itself, the right to be told what final appeals are coming, up before they are heard. Give us a month, or some reasonable time, and if we even knew the names of the people, the veterans who are having their final decision made, that this small wedge into the secret vault would put these people on their guard to see that justice was done.

If we wanted to, in the final analysis, we could say that before the final thing is set down, the judgment should be at least tabled before us. Whether we have any final right to say that they should be undone or not, I leave it in the hands of people who know more about law than I do.

donnerons. «Qu'importe, dit le proverbe, le nom qu'on donne à la rose, elle n'en sentira pas moins bon.»

Vous recherchez, pour ce tribunal d'appel, des personnes qui rendrons justice à l'ancien combattant et au contribuable, et le coût ne doit donc pas être un facteur nécessairement décisif. A mon avis, si nous voulons un personnel qualifié pour ce tribunal, nous ne pouvons pas toujours nous en remettre, aux politiciens, quel que soit leur parti.

Le président: Je ne vois pas où vous voulez en venir, M. Bigg.

M. Bigg: J'ai dit quel que soit leur parti. J'ai maintenant soixante ans et je les ai tous vus. Peut-être pourrions-nous constituer un groupe où l'on pourrait choisir. Bien qu'il ne faille point s'attendre à l'impossible et espérer que les associations d'Anciens combattants aient le droit de choisir les cinq membres, il serait, je crois, satisfaisant de leur donner le droit d'en choisir deux sur cinq. Alors, au lieu de laisser ce choix à un groupe unique, s'il y avait un groupe à choisir et si les associations d'anciens combattants pouvaient consulter ou nommer effectivement deux des cinq membres du tribunal, le personnel serait tel qu'une part des décisions reposerait entre les mains des intéressés. Et voilà pour le premier point.

Deuxièmement, lorsque les membres d'un tribunal sont ainsi nommés irrévocablement ou pour un long mandat, ils ont tendance à perdre intérêt. Il faut donc parer à cette éventualité et c'est pourquoi nous devons jusqu'à un certain point savoir ce que nous faisons. Et je suggérais qu'il soit prévu dans les mesures législatives instituant ce tribunal, qu'il aura le droit de savoir à l'avance quelles sont les causes qui seront portées en appel final. Qu'on nous prévienne à l'avance, un mois ou un délai raisonnable. Ei si nous connaissions de plus le nom des anciens combattants qui doivent comparaître, nous pourrions prendre les dispositions pour nous assurer que justice soit faite. Il faudrait que nous puissions faire entendre notre voix avant que la décision finale soit rendue. Je laisse à ceux qui connaissent mieux que moi les lois le soin de décider si nous aurions le droit de renverser ou non les décisions.

But still by the very fact that they had to print their finding and have it in the open to the scrutiny of a responsible body like the present Veterans Committee, I think that these two safety valves would do far more than to say where these five people were going to sit, what building they were going to sit in, and whether you call them from a previous sitting on the board or not. I think, as a matter of fact, it is dangerous to say that a man should not be put on the board if he sat on the previous committee, because there are some men who have sat on these previous commissions who have been of infinite value to veterans, and if they have done signal service for the veterans, I would not like to see them restrained down to the $5,000 less a year, merely because they have done good jobs in one branch, in one level. If they were acceptable, having done a few years there, then they should be the two nominees of the panel.

The Chairman: Have you any comments, Mrs. Heesaker?

• 1510

Mrs. Heesaker: No, but I was sitting here hoping that someone would ask me what I thought of the Nursing Sisters' Association of Canada suggestion this morning of a woman veteran as a Commissioner, and nobody desires to know what I think. I think it would be an excellent idea, and I am sure that all servicewomen would agree. I think that those of us who served in the CWAC, the WRENS and the RCAF WDs would most certainly agree that the most qualified servicewoman would be a nursing sister. I say this because of their medical experience and the fact that they are a comforting persons to have around. Also, they would be of great help because they have nursed so many ex-servicemen and have helped them to understand their problems.

I would like to point out on behalf of the exservicewomen, Mr. Chairman, that servicewomen who have pensions often find it difficult to face a complete panel of men in that you have to tell them very personal things which sometimes prove embarrassing. Just the fact of having a lady seated among the gentlemen would allow the servicewoman more or less to direct her comments to the lady, which in itself would be of benefit to the many servicewomen pensioners. Many aspects of these cases can prove quite embarrassing to a girl. We do refer to ourselves as girls. As there are only two sexes we must be

[Interpretation]

Mais le fait même qu'il leur faudrait rédiger leurs conclusions et les livrer à l'étude d'un organisme responsable tel le Comité des anciens combattants actuel. Ces deux mesures, à mon avis, seraient plus efficaces que de savoir où les cinq membres vont se réunir, où le tribunal va siéger ou si les membres proviennent d'un tribunal antérieur. En fait, il serait dangereux d'interdire à un membre de faire partie du tribunal pour l'unique raison qu'il en a déjà fait partie, car il se trouve parmi eux des membres qui ont été précieux pour les anciens combattants. Et s'ils rendent des services signalés aux anciens combattants, je ne voudrais pas les voir restreints par année de la réduction annuelle de $5000 parce qu'ils ont fait du travail dans un domaine. S'il y ont été acceptables durant quelques années, ils pourraient alors devenir les deux membres choisis par l'Association d'anciens combattants.

Le président: Avez-vous des commentaires? M^me^ Heesaker.

Mme Heesaker: Non. J'espérais que quelqu'un me demande ce que je pense de la suggestion faites ce matin par la Nursing Sisters' Association et selon laquelle une femme devrait être membre de cette Commission, mais personne ne semble vouloir savoir ce que j'en pense. Je crois qu'il s'agit d'une excellente idée et je suis convaincue, que toutes les femmes membres des forces armées seraient du même avis. Je crois que celles d'entre nous qui ont servi dans les Forces Armées, que ce soit dans l'une ou l'autre branche seront d'accord pour dire que les femmes des Forces les plus qualifiées sont certainement les sœurs infirmières. Elles connaissent mieux la situation; et leur présence est réconfortante. Elles se sont occupées d'un très grand nombre d'anciens combattants qu'elles ont aidé à comprendre leurs problèmes.

J'aimerais souligner, monsieur le président, que les femmes qui ont servi et qui reçoivent une pension trouvent souvent difficile de se présenter devant un groupe d'hommes et de devoir leur expliquer leur situation qui est souvent très personnelle et embarrassante. Alors, simplement le fait d'avoir une femme parmi ce groupe d'hommes permettrait à la femme pensionnée de se sentir plus à l'aise. Elle peut, à ce moment-là, adresser ses propos à la femme qui ferait partie de la commission. Cela peut être utile aux femmes pensionnées parce qu'il y a plusieurs choses et plusieurs aspects qui peuvent embarrasser une femme girls, even though we are becoming a little older.

The Chairman: We are getting a little older too.

Mrs. Heesaker: We do point out that it especially would be of benefit to the ex-servicewomen of Canada to have one lady on the board. I am sure that when all service girls become aware of what the nursing sisters have requested they will support this proposal.

The Chairman: The Committee has listened with a great deal of interest and they are happy to hear your comments.

Mr. MacRae: I just wanted to raise a point in connection with what Mr. Chadderton and my colleague, Mr. Lambert, said. It is in reference to the cost of a separate appeal board. I think this is a matter that is completely irrelevant. I say that for this reason: At this moment there are roughly one million veterans in this country. Everyone, the witnesses here, members of this Committee and everyone else, wants to do the right thing. I do not think that cost is that important, especially for this reason—that if there are one million veterans and it costs, let us put the high figure on it, $400,000 that is 40 cents for every man and woman who has served his country, and that is damned little. For $200,000 it would mean 20 cents each. I do not think this matter of cost should enter into it at all.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. MacRae.

Mr. Bigg: While we are on the question of having a lady on the Commission—the point is very well taken—I was just wondering if the witness would be satisfied with having a woman on the board whenever a woman's case was before it. The question of delicacy can work both ways. It might well be that a man is seeking attention and he might feel that with a woman on the board he could not be as frank about things as he would like to be.

• 1515

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg, I think the modern generation is a little less inhibited in these respects than our generation.

Mrs. Heesaker: I would like to respectfully ask since when has any man been delicate with a nurse? Or has any man who has been ou une fille qui doit les exprimer (je dis fille, même si nous devenons de plus en plus âgées).

Le président: Nous aussi, nous vieillissons un peu.

Mme Heesaker: D'après moi, il serait utile pour les femmes qui ont servi le Canada de savoir qu'une femme est membre de la commission. Je suis sûre que si le personnel féminin de l'armée avait connaissance du mémoire présenté par les sœurs infirmières il lui donnerait son approbation.

Le président: Le Comité écoute avec très grand intérêt ce que vous venez de dire et nous en tiendrons parti.

M. MacRae: Je voudrais quand même soulever un point en rapport avec ce que M. Chadderton et M. Lambert on dit. Cela a trait au coût d'une commission d'appel distincte. Je crois que c'est une question qui ne devrait pas s'appliquer. Il y a à peu près un million d'anciens combattants au pays, et tous ici présents, membres du Comité, témoins ou autres, nous voulons rendre leur dû aux anciens combattants. Le coût importe peu s'il y a un million d'anciens combattants. Et mettons le plus haut chiffre, 400 mille dollars, même cela veut dire 40 cents par personne qui a servi son pays au risque de sa vie, ce qui est bien peu, n'est-ce pas. Alors, même 200 mille dollars revient à peu près à 20 sous par personne. C'est à mon avis fort peu les récompenser pour les services qu'ils ont rendus à leur pays.

Le président: Je vous remercie, monsieur MacRae.

M. Bigg: Comme nous traitons de la question des femmes comme membres de la Commission, je crois que ce qu'on a dit est fort juste. Le témoin serait-il satisfait si une femme devenait membre de la commission quand une femme présente sa cause? Quand le témoin a mentionné qu'une femme devrait siéger pour que toute femme qui subit une entrevue soit à l'aise, je ne crois pas que ce serait bien, par contre, pour un homme qui devrait passer une entrevue.

Le président: Eh bien, je crois que la génération moderne est beaucoup moins puritaine.

Mme Heesaker: Je voudrais vous demander ceci: depuis quand un homme est-il gêné en présence d'une infirmière? Il s'est fait soigner, washed, bathed and so on by nurses ever found this feeling prevalent.

The Chairman: I do not think you will find that the views you have expressed in this regard will meet with much argument in this Committee. They listened to the nursing sisters, they have listened to you, and this is an interesting point that had not previously arisen in our discussions.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Or a lady doctor.

Mrs. Heesaker: It is the same thing.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I think that we can safely assume that women will be emancipated and that one of the recommendations will be that a woman will sit on one of the boards anyway.

I am concerned with the contention of the Woods Commission appeal in that this is going to be a paper appeal. It seems to me that any time an appeal really has worked is where medical evidence is produced to your appeal board from records. But the other section of the file is deducted from the presentation to the appeal board for the very simple reason that if they read a number of decisions over a period of time this will create considerable influence on whatever decision they make. I am wondering if you would not feel, no matter what type of an appeal is allowed, whether it be in the stratum of the Department or before an impartial board, that impartiality can really be arrived at, not by having the evidence presented by the petitioner or his advocate but in terms of presenting it as an open medical problem—rather than having it confused by decisions made over a period of time by a number of other adjudicators.

Does it strike you people representing the Association as being possible to really arrive at a new decision when you are using the old evidence? It seems to me, with my limited knowledge of law, that seldom is there a change made in the decision of lower courts where the only thing in question is the competence of the judge to have made the proper decision with the given facts, and where no new appeal procedure is allowed the decision is almost always an endorsement of what the other courts have decided because the evidence has not changed and there has been nothing new except the legal terminology and the legal interpretation. It donner le bain, etc. par elle; il ne devrait pas être gêné devant une femme membre de Comité.

Le président: Je ne crois pas que le Comité contestera la situation que vous avez exposée ici. Il a entendu les sœurs infirmières, il vous a entendu et la question que vous avez soulevée est fort intéressante et nouvelle.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): C'est la même chose pour une femme médecin.

Mme Heesaker: Oui.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, je crois que nous pouvons dire que les femmes seront bientôt émancipées et qu'on recommandera qu'elles siègent aux comités. Je m'inquiète du débat concernant l'appel recommandé par le Comité Woods. Le seul moment où l'on a vu un système d'appel fonctionner est lorsqu'on a des preuves médicales à soumettre contenues dans des dossiers au Bureau d'appel. Mais on déduit le reste du dossier de la présentation faite devant le Bureau d'appel car quand les membres lisent toujours des décisions du même genre pendant un certain temps, il sont en fait influencés. Ne croyez-vous pas qu'on pourrait arriver à une objectivité parfaite de la part des membres du Ministère ou d'un comité impartial en demandant que les preuves ne soient pas présentées par le réclamant ou son avocat? Il faudrait qu'on présente le cas sous forme de problème médical et qu'il ne soit pas toujours lié aux décisions prises pendant tout un temps par d'autres commissaires chargés des décisions.

Ne croyez-vous pas qu'il serait possible d'en arriver à une nouvelle décision lorsque vous vous fondez sur les anciennes décisions. D'après moi, qui connais fort peu les questions juridiques, il y a fort peu de possibilités qu'un examinateur modifie la décision des tribunaux inférieurs où on permet aucune nouvelle procédure d'appel ou où on se base seulement sur la compétence du juge. En fait la décision consiste presque toujours à confirmer la décision des tribunaux antérieurs, car les preuves sont les mêmes et il n'y a rien de nouveau, sauf les termes et l'interprétation du juge. Peut-être frappons-nous à la mauvaise porte quand nous demandons aux examina-seems to me we may be barking up the wrong tree in demanding impartiality on the part of people reviewing a file, and this is all that appears to be happening, with all the given decisions and facts.

Would it not be more favourable to have a final presentation of the case before this appeal board using only the medical evidence, treatment and other things connected to the medical side?

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chairman, we would like Mr. Chadderton and then Mr. Parsons to speak on this subject.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, this particular issue, so far as I am aware, has not been explored by this Committee before. But I would refer you to the Woods Committee, Volume 1, page 79, recommendation 14(I) which states there are really three methods by which the proposed appeal board could deal with the case. The first one is: "(i) Review of the written record." But there is also the proposal that there would be:

> (ii) A review of the written record, supported by an appearance of those representing the appelant; or > (iii) A hearing de novo by leave of the Board.

Therefore Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues did envisage that in certain cases it would be necessary to have the applicant in or to visit wherever the applicant was and take the evidence right from the start—a complete hearing de novo in the presence of the applicant. So that was envisaged in Mr. Justice Woods' recommendations.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask the Association if they have an opinion on the merits of the various types of appeal as opposed to the composition of your Appeal Board. It seems to me that in a legal situation where a lower court has made a decision on the presentation of evidence, whether it be by inquiry or otherwise, this is then appealed only on the basis of the legal decision and that is a fairly specific legal appeal. There was the case that came up the other day of Borrman—I do not know his other name. He was tried in Missouri a number of years ago and they have found, in reviewing the legal terminology, that the case was thrown out. They have now instituted a new trial. That seems to me to be a different ball game altogether.

Has the Canadian Corps Association an opinion on this? It seems to me that the Comteurs qui réétudient un dossier d'être impartiaux.

Ne serait-ce pas préférable de présenter le cas devant la Division d'appel en se basant seulement sur les preuves médicales, le traitement subi et tout ce qui se rattache au problème médical?

Mme Heesaker: Monsieur le président, nous aimerions que MM. Chadderton et Parsons nous entretiennent de ce sujet.

Le président: Bien.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, cette question n'a pas été à ma connaissance étudiée à fond par ce Comité, mais j'aimerais mentionner que dans le Volume 1, page 79 du rapport du Comité Woods, la recommandation (14) I détermine les trois méthodes par lesquelles le bureau d'appel proposé pourrait statuer sur le cas:

> (i) Un examen du dossier;
> (ii) Un examen du dossier accompagné de dépositions des représentants de l'appelant; ou
> (iii) Une audition de novo moyennant l'autorisation du Bureau.

Le juge Woods et ses collègues ont donc pensé que dans certains cas, la présence du requérant serait nécessaire—qu'il vienne lui-même ou qu'on se rende chez lui—afin de consigner à nouveau les preuves depuis le début et de faire en quelque sorte une nouvelle audition en présence du requérant. C'est cela que les recommandations du rapport du Comité Woods préconisent.

M. Peters: Alors, quelle est l'opinion de l'association sur les avantages des différents genres d'appel par rapport à la composition du bureau d'appel? Il me semble que dans une situation juridique où l'on veut rendre justice, lorsqu'un tribunal inférieur a pris une décision après avoir étudié les preuves et les témoignages lors d'enquêtes ou autrement, on ne peut pas en appeler de la décision qu'en se basant sur la décision juridique et il s'agit là d'un appel fondé uniquement sur les questions juridiques. On demande à réentendre la cause. On a eu l'autre jour la cause d'un M. Borman, dont j'ignore le prénom. Il a subi un procès dans le Missouri, il y a quelques années, et en étudiant le compte rendu on a renvoyé la cause hors de cour. On a maintenant institué un nouveau procès. C'est toute une autre affaire, à mon sens.

Est-ce que l'Association du Corps canadien a une opinion à ce sujet-là? Il me semble que mittee has faced the argument of whether or not there should be an appeal board independent from the Department, but they really have not faced up to what grounds the appeal board is going to accept and what the appeal is really going to be. It seems to me that from the veteran's point of view that is much more important than who is hearing it.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I think the Woods Committee comment dealing with appeal boards is quite broad and quite comprehensive. As I see it the thread running through it is that this appeal board should be careful to avoid legal concepts and legal procedures; that its rules of procedure should be sufficiently broad that it would have discretion to call for and hear any evidence that it might wish. It was envisaged that this appeal board would work in pretty close conjunction with the Veterans' Bureau and with the service bureaus and pensions advocates of the veterans organizations to try to establish some rapport on how it was best going to proceed.

I know it was quite specific in saying that firm ground rules, as such, would be a mistake at this stage because Mr. Justice Woods and his colleagues saw the putting into effect of something fairly loose as an appeal board. They did say—and it is specific—that there are three ways in which a case could get before that board, but that the board would have leave to say how the case would be heard. That is quite true. They have to have a check rein. I mean, every veteran might say, "I want to go right to the top." The Board has to lay down the rule somewhere and say "No; you have had a hearing and on the basis of the evidence we feel that that is it. You cannot go any further." But presumably if they were still in doubt they could let him into the second stage and into the third stage.

I think the only answer to your question, Mr. Peters, as we interpret the Woods Committee recommendations here, is that Mr. Justice Woods foresaw the very problem that you are raising now, and he said, "Let us not tie this down to where it is so tight and so stringent that you have got to dot all the "i's" and cross all the "t's" before anybody can get in." He said: "Let us leave it open, and let us get a basis of experience behind us on how we are going to operate." I think that is the answer.

Mr. Parsons: I might point out, Mr. Peters, that the applicant under this system will have had at least three prior hearings, two in writing and one by personal appearance before an le comité a étudié les arguments quant à l'indépendance de la commission d'appel, distincte du Ministère mais qu'il n'a pas étudié les motifs que la Commission d'appel acceptera ni en quoi les appels consisteront. Il me semble que pour l'ancien combattant, c'est beaucoup plus important que celui qui entendra l'appel.

M. Chadderton: Je crois que les observations de la Commission Woods au sujet des appels sont assez étendues et très complètes. Il me semble que la commission d'appel devrait éviter consciencieusement les embûches juridiques. Ses règlements intérieurs devraient être assez souple pour lui permettre de voir, d'entendre toute la preuve qu'elle peut désirer. On prévoit que la Commission d'appel collaborera étroitement avec le bureau des anciens combattants, les services ou des organisations des anciens combattants pour tenter d'en arriver à établir la façon la plus appropriée de fonctionner.

D'après moi, ce serait une erreur de fixer des règles inflexibles car le juge Woods et ses collègues souhaitaient assez de souplesse dans cette commission d'appel. La commission a affirmé qu'il y avait trois façons de soumettre des causes à la Commission mais que cette dernière doit être libre de déterminer la façon de les entendre. C'est vrai. N'importe quel ancien combattant peut demander d'aller devant un tribunal supérieur. Mais la commission d'appel doit pouvoir se fonder sur quelque chose. Elle doit pouvoir refuser l'appel à un demandeur déjà entendu et l'empêcher d'aller plus loin à la lumière de la preuve déjà faite. Mais s'il y a des doutes, on pourrait permettre à un ancien combattant de procéder à la deuxième étape et à la troisième.

La seule réponse à votre question, monsieur Peters, d'après notre interprétation des recommandations du rapport Woods, c'est que M. Woods a prévu le problème que vous soulevez. Il a décidé de ne pas procéder selon des règles assez strictes pour fermer toutes les portes avant qu'on y pénètre. Il propose que nous accumulions un peu d'expérience dans le domaine pour déterminer la meilleure façon de procéder. C'est là, à mon sens, la réponse.

M. Parsons: J'aimerais signaler, monsieur Peters, que le requérant, si j'ai bien compris serait entendu trois fois, deux fois par écrit, une fois personnellement.

entitlement board, with a transcript of the evidence.

I envisage that the cases that will go to the final appeal board will probably be cases with some legal entanglements, such as third party involvement, or matters of that kind, that have apparently not been judged correctly by the junior board, and the advocates see a good reason for taking them to a final board for judgment.

• 1525

A large percentage of the applications for pensions will stop at the entitlement level; they will not get beyond that; I am quite satisfied of that; but there will be some cases—perhaps quite a number, or there may be not so many—that it will be judged are such that they should go for judgment to the final board, which should be made up of people who can make that final decision in a manner satisfactory to the veteran applicants and be so constituted that they do not feel that they are getting anything but honest justice in these final appeals.

I do not feel like tying them down, or hamstringing them, by too many rules and regulations. These have to be broad in cases of this nature. Section 70 of the Act makes it that way; you cannot get around that. That is the way we want it. But no matter what type of personnel you put on the final board it will be charged with making the final decision on a case.

I imagine that a very large number of the cases will be handled by the advocates without the applicant being present. If they want to see the applicant, I believe they would have the power to call him. But he has already had a hearing and a transcript of all that evidence. In other words, their judgment would probably be based more on error of the junior boards than on anything else. That is my feeling.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is very important, because whatever decision we make on how the appeal board should be established is going to hinge to a considerable extent on the evidence we receive from the various veterans organizations that handle cases. I am not able to pick any out of the air—but I am sure they can—that would indicate the type of abuse, or oversight, or neglect, that has become apparent in some of the lower decisions.

I am not really convinced in my own mind about what type of presentation would be desirable on this final appeal; and whatever it is would have considerable bearing on where

[Interprétation]

Alors, je crois que les cas qui iraient au tribunal final d'appel seraient des cas qui présentent des embûches juridiques comme l'intérêt d'un tiers ou des aspects qui auraient prêté à des décisions fautives des tribunaux de première instance que les avocats jugent utiles de présenter au tribunal final.

Une grande partie des demandes d'appels cesserait rapidement et serait réglée au premier niveau sans aller plus loin. J'en suis convaincu. Il y en a d'autres, peut-être en grand nombre, ou peut-être moins, qui seront jugées suffisantes pour motiver une audience au tribunal final qui sera lui-même composé de gens aptes à rendre un jugement satisfaisant pour l'ancien combattant, et le convaincre qu'il obtient pleine justice.

Il ne faut pas, à mon avis, les contraindre par des règles étroites. Il faut leur donner leurs coudées franches. L'article 70 de la loi le stipule. C'est ce que nous voulons. Mais le tribunal final, quelle que soit sa composition, devra rendre le jugement final. Je suppose qu'un grand nombre de cas seront réglés par les avocats sans la présence du requérant. Si sa présence est requise, on doit pouvoir le faire comparaître. Mais il a déjà été entendu, et toute la preuve est au compte rendu. Autrement dit, le jugement s'appuierait plutôt sûr, de négligences ou d'erreurs dans les pretance que sur autre chose. C'est ma conviction.

M. Peters: C'est très important car quelle que soit la décision que nous prendrons sur l'établissement de la commission d'appel, il faut tenir compte surtout des preuves que l'on reçoit des différents groupes qui s'occupent des anciens combattants. Je n'ai pas d'exemples à la mémoire, mais eux en ont, j'en suis sûr, de négligences ou d'erreurs dans les premières décisions qui ont été rendues.

Je ne suis pas vraiment convaincu du genre de présentation qui serait souhaitable au tribunal supérieur mais quelle qu'elle soit, elle influera sur les séances du tribunal et sur sa the appeal board would sit and what kind of appeal board it would have to be. Because if it is going to be only a review of the files in terms of an error, or an omission, somewhere in the process that we now use, then that could be done by a reviewing board of probably three people sitting in Ottawa handling the files with legal counsel, and in no case with the veteran present.

If it is going to be a re-hearing of the case, at which additional evidence is presented, then it would be a different kind of board and I think it should travel.

I think it is going to hinge on the kind of information that you people can provide us. I am not clear in my own mind what kinds of cases should be appealed beyond the appeal structure we now have. I am not familiar with what kinds of cases should be appealed further than that. For this reason I am rather confused about the type of board I would favour. I am not really sure what they are going to do. I think it is up to the veterans organizations to tell us what types of cases should go to this kind of appeal board. You must know some of them, and you must know why they are not being passed now.

For example, if we pass this change in entitlement the Department is going to have an obligation that will arise from the fact that a veteran was A-1 when he went into the service. This will necessitate a review of all those cases where, within six months, a disability that was of a pre-enlistment nature did not show up. All pre-enlistment problems will disappear by this change in the regulations. They will all have to be reviewed, I presume, and they may be solved long before they reach the appeal board. These would not be the kinds of cases I would envision going to an appeal board.

Mr. Parsons: Speaking from my own experience now, I feel that if the applicant appears with this advocate and witnesses before an entitlement board and after that hearing those who are hearing the case reject it, but those whose business it is to look after him—and who have been trained to do this work—feel that there has been an error, that is the type of case that will go to the board. That is, if you come to the entitlement board with a case, and get a good, clear-cut hearing, with witnesses and all the evidence that the advocate can produce—medical evidence and everything else up to date—and you are rejected—particularly if it is a unanimous rejection—I would say stop there. However, if you lose that on a split decision, by all means go to the Appeal Board.

[Interpretation]

composition même. S'il s'agit simplement d'une revision de dossiers pour dépister les erreurs ou les omissions du processus actuel, il suffirait d'un bureau de revision de trois personnes à Ottawa, pour examiner les dossiers avec un avocat sans la présence de l'ancien combattant.

S'il faut réentendre la cause, entendre de nouvelles preuves etc., il faudrait constituer un tribunal d'un genre différent qui pourrait se déplacer.

Tout dépend du genre de preuves et de témoignages que vous pourrez nous fournir. Enfin, moi, je ne suis pas encore certain du genre de causes qui devraient donner lieu à un appel plus loin que la structure que nous avons actuellement. Je ne suis pas très familier avec les causes qui pourraient motiver un appel. C'est pourquoi je me sens un peu empêtré dans ces questions. J'ignore quel sorte de commission je préfère.

Je crois qu'il incombe aux organisations d'anciens combattants de nous dire quel genre d'appel il faudrait interjeter. Vous devez en connaître, et savoir pourquoi on ne les autorise pas. Enfin, vous pouvez nous donner plus de renseignements. Par exemple, si nous adoptons ce changement, le ministère, doit-il avoir une obligation quant aux anciens combattants du fait qu'ils étaient en parfaite santé au moment où ils sont entrés en service? Il s'ensuivrait un examen de tous les cas où l'invalidité ne s'est pas manifestée dans les six mois. Tous les problèmes antérieurs à l'engagement disparaîtront par cette modification. Il faudra tout revoir, je suppose, et tout pourrait se régler avant d'arriver devant la Commission d'appel. Ce ne sont pas des causes que je verrais à la Commission d'Appel.

M. Parsons: Monsieur le président, en fonction de mon expérience, si le requérant se présente avec ses avocats et ses témoins devant une commission d'admissibilité et si après l'audience, cet appel est rejeté, et que ceux qui ont la formation nécessaire pour examiner ces cas estiment qu'une erreur a été commise, ces cas-là doivent être transmis à la commission d'enquête. C'est-à-dire que si on se présente à la commission d'admissibilité, si on obtient un procès en bonne et due forme, avec tous les témoins et les faits présentés par les avocats—état médical, et le reste et s'il y a rejet unanime, je vous dirais: Mais, si on rejette votre demande, sans qu'il y ait unanimité, adressez-vous sans hésiter au Bureau d'appel.

[Texte]

Mr. Peters: What do you envisage going to the appeal board on?

Mr. Parsons: On cases of errors.

Mr. Peters: On the medical evidence?

Mr. Parsons: I think that depends on where the error was made. It could be anything. It is mostly legal error.

Mr. Peters: What would you be referring to the Board? Would it be the transcript in the case?

Mr. Parsons: Usually you put the entire evidence in and then point out where you feel errors were made.

Mr. Peters: But not necessarily the witness?

Mr. Parsons: No, you would not need the witness. You might be better off without the witness.

Mr. Peters: So in your opinion the Board could sit in Ottawa without any...

Mr. Parsons: To be quite honest with you, very often I have found it quite convenient and better to attend an appeal board without the witness. Some witnesses are no good at all in an appeal.

Mr. Peters: It has been my experience in a couple of cases that went to...

Mr. Parsons: I could sit here, sir, as my friend Mr. Anderson knows, and name you case after case after case where we have gone from one appeal board to another appeal board—perhaps one, two or three times—and finally won on the basis of an error in the lower courts. I am not prepared to name names or bring any of the evidence out that I do not feel should be mentioned here. In those cases where an error has been indicated to those who are trained to look for it, I would take them to the appeal board. If you come before the Entitlement Board and you get a good hearing, and you know that was the case, I would certainly advise the man to go no further and to forget about it and try some other type of coverage.

Mr. Bigg: Is it not true that in general appeal boards—and I realize this is not an exact parallel—deal with points of law and that ordinary adjudications such as pension hearings are on points of fact?

Mr. Parsons: Yes.

Mr. Bigg: As a rule there is very little argument about whether or not a man has a

[Interprétation]

M. Peters: Pourquoi s'adresser au Bureau d'appel?

M. Parsons: Pour les cas où il y a eu erreur.

M. Peters: Sans la preuve médicale?

M. Parsons: Cela dépend où l'erreur a été commise. Cela pourrait être n'importe quoi. Il s'agit surtout d'une erreur juridique.

M. Peters: Que porteriez-vous devant le Bureau? S'agirait-il du texte transcrit dans ce cas?

M. Parsons: Habituellement, vous y insérez tout le témoignage et vous indiquez l'endroit où les erreurs ont, semble-t-il, été commises.

M. Peters: Mais pas nécessairement le témoin?

M. Parsons: Vous n'auriez pas besoin du témoin. Il vaudrait mieux ne pas faire appel au témoin.

M. Peters: Ainsi, à votre avis, le Bureau pourrait siéger à Ottawa sans...

M. Parsons: En toute franchise, j'ai constaté qu'il valait mieux se présenter devant le Bureau d'appel sans témoin, car certains témoins embrouillent alors les choses.

M. Peters: C'est ce que j'ai pu constater dans une couple de cas...

M. Parsons: Monsieur, je pourrais m'asseoir et mon ami monsieur Anderson peut vous le dire, et vous nommer un nombre incalculable de cas où nous sommes allés d'un Bureau d'appel à un autre, une, deux ou trois fois, pour finalement gagner notre cause en dénonçant une erreur commise aux tribunaux inférieurs. Je ne suis pas prêt à citer des noms, ou à nommer des témoignages qui, à mon avis, ne devraient pas être mentionnés. Je pourrais présenter au Bureau d'appel les cas où une erreur a été soulignée aux personnes qui sont préparées à les examiner. Si vous vous présentez devant le Bureau d'admissibilité, qu'on vous écoute et que vous savez que tel était le cas, je conseillerais à cet homme de s'en tenir là, d'oublier ses revendications et d'essayer autre chose.

M. Bigg: Est-ce qu'on ne peut pas dire que les Bureaux d'appel, en général, examinent des points de loi et que les décisions ordinaires comme les audiences de pension s'adressent à des questions de fait?

M. Parsons: Oui.

M. Bigg: En général, on ne peut discuter beaucoup pour savoir si un homme est invaphysical disability. It is on whether or not an interpretation of the regulations will allow him such compensation. What they are arguing about—or it used to be—is misconduct. There is a word that can be batted around.

Mr. Parsons: I still feel that the final board run into it is where there is third party involvement, or things of that nature.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, legal liability on the part of third persons and the Crown says, "It was not our responsibility, it was somebody else's", so you should go to a private outfit to get compensated, and so on.

Mr. Parsons: I still feel that the final board should be a group which is entirely divorced from the Commission proper. Under that set-up I believe they could hear 90 per cent of the cases right here in Ottawa. I honestly believe they could.

Mr. Bigg: But they should have power to travel if . . .

Mr. Parsons: If they saw fit.

Mr. Bigg: . . . it was necessary to go to Vancouver to see the airport and see what actually happened, and so on.

Mr. Parsons: I would say leave it open to them, but I am quite sure that 90 per cent of the cases could be heard right here.

The Chairman: We are very interested in hearing your comments, Mr. Parsons. Are there any other questions at this point in the proceedings?

Mrs. Heesaker: Very well, Mr. Chairman. We are now at the bottom of page 6, gentlemen.

Reference Stabilization of Pensions, Woods' Report Recommendation No. 123.

We unconditionally support the recommendations of the Woods' Committee in respect to the stabilization of all disability pensions—and would further recommend that consideration be given to the stabilization of pensions awarded to members of the permanent force that have been in effect for three years or more, provided that ten years have elapsed since the date of discharge from the forces.

The Canadian Corps Association considers that the government's recommendation in the White Paper on the subject of stabilization of disability pensions is inadequate.

[Interpretation]

lide ou non. Il s'agit de savoir si les règlements lui permettent de toucher une telle indemnité. L'objet de la discussion est ou du moins, l'était, la mauvaise conduite. Voilà un mot que l'on peut débattre.

M. Parsons: En une occasion, lorsqu'il y aura une troisième personne impliquée ou quelque chose du genre.

M. Bigg: Oui, la responsabilité juridique de la couronne dit que cela ne relève pas d'une troisième personne, et qu'il s'agissait de quelqu'un d'autre. Vous devriez donc vous adresser au secteur privé pour être indemnisé, et ainsi de suite.

M. Parsons: J'estime encore que le bureau ultime devrait être composé de personnes indépendantes de la commission même. Elles pourraient ainsi entendre 90 p. 100 des cas à Ottawa. Je crois vraiment qu'elles le pourraient.

M. Bigg: Mais ses commissaires devraient avoir la permission de se déplacer, si . . .

M. Parsons: S'ils le jugent nécessaire.

M. Bigg: . . . il était nécessaire d'aller à Vancouver pour voir l'aéroport et voir ce qui s'est passé en réalité.

M. Parsons: Je leur laisserais le loisir de décider, mais je suis bien certain que dans 90 p. 100 des cas, on pourrait tenir l'audience à Ottawa.

Le président: Nous sommes très intéressés à entendre vos commentaires monsieur Parsons. Y a-t-il d'autres questions à poser?

Mme Heesaker: Très bien, monsieur le président. Nous en sommes maintenant au bas de la page 6, messieurs. Stabilisation des pensions, recommandation du rapport Woods n° 123. Nous appuyons sans réserve la recommandation du Comité Woods concernant la stabilisation de toutes les pensions d'invalidité et recommandons de plus qu'on envisage la stabilisation des pensions accordées aux membres des forces permanentes depuis trois ans et plus, à condition que 10 ans se soient écoulés depuis qu'ils ont quitté les forces armées.

L'association du corps canadien estime que la recommandation du gouvernement dans le Livre blanc sur la stabilisation des pensions d'invalidité est inappropriée. Je tiens à dire que lorsqu'ils ont stabilisé les pensions de la Première Guerre mondiale en 1936, l'âge

[Texte]

We would like to point out, sir, that when they stabilized the World War I pensions in 1936 the average age of the World War I veteran was the early forties and now you are asking those of us who are World War II veterans to wait until we are around 60 or 65 years of age, and only then if we have had a pension for 10 years. There simply does not seem to be consistency between that which was given to World War I veterans and that which you are asking the World War II veterans to wait for. Are there any questions, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: May I ask if there are no categories in which a pension is now declared permanent for World War II veterans? Is there now a stabilized and a non-stabilized category?

Mrs. Heesaker: Perhaps Mr. Stroud, our Dominion Resolutions Chairman, will answer that, or Mr. Parsons.

Mr. John Stroud (Dominion Resolutions Chairman, Canadian Corps Association): Tuberculosis is one classification in particular that we know about, where a man comes back and he has a positive reaction and he finds out that he had this illness during his service. He goes into hospital and then when he is considered after hospitalization his pension is gradually reduced to 50 per cent. It is only in that category that there is a permanency of pension.

Mr. Peters: What about a person who has lost a member? Is this not a permanent disability in terms of stabilization?

Mr. Stroud: We would consider it permanent and, as a matter of fact, we have experienced this among our Hong Kong boys were it was considered they had some mental disorders and a pension was given, and then when it came up later under another examiner there was a reduction in pension. This person may have been on pension for a number of years and if stabilization had been in effect he would not have had the reduction.

Mr. Peters: What about obvious things such as a leg amputation; is that not stabilized?

Mr. Stroud: They are stabilized, and gunshot wounds are stabilized.

moyen des anciens combattants se situait dans la quarantaine.

Maintenant, vous nous demandez à nous, des anciens combattants de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, d'attendre d'avoir 60 ou 65 ans et c'est seulement à ce moment-là, après avoir eu une pension pendant dix ans. Il me semble que ce n'est pas conforme à ce qui a été donné aux anciens combattants de la Première Guerre mondiale et à l'attente que vous exigez des anciens combattants de la Seconde Guerre mondiale. Y a-t-il d'autres questions, monsieur le président?

Le président: Monsieur Peters.

M. Peters: Y a-t-il des catégories dans lesquelles la pension est déclarée permanente pour les anciens combattants de la Seconde Guerre mondiale? Y a-t-il une catégorie stabilisée ou non stabilisée?

Mme Heesaker: Monsieur Stroud, notre président national des Résolutions vous répondra peut-être, ou monsieur Parsons.

M. J. Stroud (Président national des Résolutions de l'Association du Corps canadien): La tuberculose est une catégorie que nous connaissons. Un homme est revenu de guerre et a une réaction positive à la maladie. Il s'aperçoit qu'il avait cette maladie pendant son service. Il est hospitalisé, et après son hospitalisation, on diminue graduellement sa pension à 50 p. 100. C'est seulement dans cette catégorie qu'il y a permanence de la pension.

M. Peters: Qu'arrive-t-il à la personne qui a perdu un membre? Est-ce que cela ne fait pas l'objet de la stabilisation d'une pension à cause de l'infirmité permanente que cela représente?

M. Stroud: Nous le considérerions comme permanent et, en fait, nous l'avons constaté chez les anciens combattants de Hong Kong où il y avait quelques désordres mentaux et on a accordé une pension, mais lorsqu'un autre examinateur s'est présenté, il y a eu réduction de la pension. La personne a peut-être touché une pension pendant des années. Si la stabilisation avait été appliquée, cette réduction n'aurait pas eu lieu.

M. Peters: Que se passe-t-il pour les cas évidents, comme l'amputation d'une jambe? N'y a-t-il pas stabilisation?

M. Stroud: Il y a stabilisation, ainsi que pour les blessures par arme à feu.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: There are now two categories, and one of them are those that are stabilized or can be stabilized. In other words, the Pension Commission has the right to stabilize a pension if they wish?

Mr. Stroud: If they so desire.

Mr. Peters: What you are suggesting is that after a period of time this stabilization be automatic.

Mr. Stroud: Exactly.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, this proposal only deals with medical disabilities, as opposed to gunshot wounds, amputations, and that type of thing. There is no criticism of that. They are marked "apparently permanent" by the Commission and they are never reduced. Once they are marked "AP", apparently permanent, there is no problem. The stabilization policy to which we are referring here only has to do with medical disabilities such as a disease or asthma, that type of thing.

Mr. Bigg: I understand that some doubt was raised in the Committee during the last few hearings about the date when these stabilizations were made, whether it was 1936 or 1948. I want to go on record as saying that I checked over these statements very carefully and it is my understanding that they were definitely stabilized in 1936 by regulation of the Department. This is just to clear up any misapprehension.

The Chairman: We had some testimony from one of the departmental officials in respect to this and I do not think it is the kind of thing about which we can get into a dispute.

• 1540

Mr. Bigg: Has that been established?

The Chairman: In fairness to other members of the Committee, we will clarify this by calling back the departmental officials and getting some further documentation. It is not the kind of thing we should have to argue about; I think the record is such that it can be established quite easily.

Mr. Bigg: It will be from now on, in any event.

Mr. Chadderton: If I may speak to that, Mr. Chairman, I understand my name was involved in it but I have not seen the record yet. When I do, and if my statement is in dispute, I will ask the Committee to do what-

[Interpretation]

M. Peters: Il y a maintenant deux catégories, dont l'une est ou peut être stabilisée. Autrement dit, la Commission canadienne des pensions a le droit de stabiliser une pension si elle désire?

M. Stroud: Si elle désire.

M. Peters: Vous demandez qu'après une certaine période, la stabilisation se fasse automatiquement.

M. Stroud: Oui.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, cette idée se rapporte uniquement aux infirmités sur le plan de la santé par opposition aux amputations dues aux blessures par arme à feu et ce genre de choses. Il n'y a aucune critique à ce sujet. La Commission a apposé les termes «permanente en apparence», et ils ne font jamais l'objet d'une diminution. Dès qu'ils auront cette apposition il n'y a pas de problème. La politique de stabilisation dont nous parlons se rapporte uniquement aux incapacités sur le plan de la santé comme une maladie, l'asthme ou quelque chose du genre.

M. Bigg: Je crois que des doutes ont été soulevés au Comité au cours des dernières audiences à propos de la date quand ces stabilisations ont été effectuées, en 1936 ou en 1948. J'aimerais que le compte rendu indique que j'ai vérifié ces déclarations très attentivement et je crois comprendre qu'elles ont été stabilisées en 1936 par un règlement du Ministère. Je ne voulais que rétablir quelque malentendu.

Le président: Un des fonctionnaires supérieurs du ministère est venu témoigner à ce sujet et je ne crois pas que ce soit le genre de choses qui devrait entraîner des malentendus.

M. Bigg: Est-ce que cela a été établi?

Le président: En toute franchise pour les autres membres du Comité, nous l'éclaircirons en convoquant à nouveau ces fonctionnaires et en nous procurant plus de renseignements. Il ne s'agit pas d'un genre de choses qui devraient faire l'objet de contestations. Ce sont des faits qu'on peut retrouver très facilement.

M. Bigg: Ce sera ainsi, à partir d'aujourd'hui.

M. Chadderton: Je sais qu'on a cité mon nom, mais je n'ai pas encore vu le compte rendu. Quand je l'aurai fait et si ma déclaration est contestée, je demanderai au Comité de faire tout ce qu'il pense juste et équitable ever they think is fair and just with respect to having me come back to give an explanation of it.

The Chairman: It is not the kind of thing that we should have a prolonged dispute about. Surely we can establish the date of departmental policy.

Re. Improper conduct—Section 14 of the Pension Act, covered by Recommendations 127 and 128 of the Woods Committee.

The Canadian Corps Association strongly supports the above recommendations that Section 14 of the Pension Act should be rewritten to provide that the interpretation of this section should refer only to wilful disobedience of a lawful command, self-inflicted wounds or injuries, vicious or criminal conduct—nothing more. Further, that where the death of a veteran results from the so-called disobedience of lawful orders, the section should be disregarded and any dependants should be covered as provided under Section 13. Further, that where it is established that any self-self-inflicted injury or wound was incurred while the veteran was of unsound mind, Section 13 should apply.

Mauvaise conduite—Article 14 de la Loi sur les pensions—renvoi aux recommandations nos 127 et 128 du rapport Woods

L'Association du Corps canadien appuie fortement les propositions susmentionnées, à savoir que l'article 14 de la Loi sur les pensions soit remanié de telle sorte que l'interprétation de cet article se réfère uniquement à la désobéissance volontaire à un ordre légitime, aux blessures que l'ancien combattant s'est lui-même infligé ou à sa conduite criminelle ou méchante, et rien d'autre. De plus, si la mort de l'ancien combattant découle de sa présumée désobéissance à un ordre légitime, l'article en question ne s'appliquerait pas, si bien que les personnes à sa charge pourraient invoquer les dispositions de l'article 13; d'autre part, l'article 13 s'appliquerait lorsqu'il serait établie que l'ancien combattant se

We further recommend that the contracting of Venereal Disease be no longer considered as improper conduct, except where failure to report as required by legislation results in excessive disability, but again, this shall not apply where the disability resulting from such contraction is total, or results in the death of the veteran from the disease or the complications arising therefrom. The Canadian Corps Association does not feel that the government's White Paper records any adequate recommendations on this subject, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I believe, Mrs. Heesaker, there are some additional observations which are part of the transcript and when you have had an opportunity to examine them—the transcript unfortunately is not available—you may want to amend what you have said in this respect. I hope there will be some improvement in terms of what you are suggesting.

Mrs. Heesaker: We are satisfied, sir, to wait to read the transcript.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mrs. Heesaker: If there are no questions from the Committee I will proceed, gentlemen. On page 8, Re. Attendance Allowance.

The Canadian Corps Association welcomes the proposal of the government's White Paper that the Pension Act be amended to state unequivocally that attendance allowance is not considered part of any pension paid for disability; we are also pleased that the government rejected Recommendation 82 of the Woods Committee that would have restricted the payment of attendance allowance to those whose need is conditional to some degree at least, on their pensioned disabilities. We question, however, the government's proposal concerning the payment of this allowance for only one month, except in cases of hardship, when a pensioner is in the hospital. Section 33 (3) of the Pension Act provides that the attendance allowance paid to a pensioner who is blind, shall continue during the time that he is an inpatient under treatment or care of the Department of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that this procedure for the blind has been in effect since 1954, the Canadian Corps Association supports the Woods Committee recommendation that this provision be extended to all other pensioners in receipt of serait infligé une blessure au moment où il n'était pas sain d'esprit.

Nous préconisons, en outre, que le fait de contracter une maladie vénérienne ne soit plus interprété comme une preuve de mauvaise conduite, sauf lorsque l'omission d'en faire rapport, ainsi que le veut le règlement, entraîne une très grave infirmité; néanmoins, cette disposition ne s'appliquerait pas, encore une fois, lorsque l'infirmité découlant de cette maladie serait totale, ou bien si l'ancien combattant mourait de la maladie en cause ou de ses suites.

L'Association du Corps canadien est d'avis que le Livre blanc du gouvernement ne renferme aucune proposition valable à ce sujet, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je crois qu'on a eu des précisions à ce sujet, qui se trouvent dans le compte rendu des délibérations mais, malheureusement, ce compte rendu n'est pas encore disponible, et j'espère qu'il y aura des améliorations qui seront faites à ce sujet.

Mme Heesaker: Nous attendrons de lire le compte rendu monsieur le président.

Le président: Parfait.

Mme Heesaker: S'il n'y a pas de questions, je vais continuer, messieurs. Page 8, Allocation de soins.

L'Association du Corps canadien se déclare ravie de la proposition faite par le gouvernement dans le Livre blanc, à savoir de modifier la Loi sur les pensions pour qu'il soit dit sans équivoque que l'allocation de soins n'est pas une partie de la pension versée à l'égard de quelque invalidité; nous sommes heureux, en outre, que le gouvernement ait rejeté la proposition nº 82 du Comité Woods, laquelle entendait restreindre le versement des allocations de soins à ceux dont les besoins dépendent, à tout le moins dans une certaine mesure, de l'invalidité faisant l'objet d'une pension. Nous ne pouvons consentir, toutefois, à la proposition gouvernementale concernant le versement de cette allocation pour un mois seulement, sauf pour prévenir la gêne, lorsqu'un pensionné est hospitalisé. Selon l'article 33 (3) de la Loi sur les pensions, l'allocation de soins que perçoit un pensionné aveugle doit être maintenue lorsque, à titre de patient, il est sous traitement ou sous les soins du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. Etant donné que ces dispositions intéressant les aveugles sont en vigueur depuis attendance allowance at the maximum rate while an inpatient under treatment or care of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Are there any questions, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Are there any questions from the Committee?

Mr. Bigg: That also will be qualified, I think, in the transcript, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: There certainly are comments, but it seems to me that this point has been covered.

Mrs. Heesaker: Continuation of Pension upon the Death of a Veteran Pensioner—Woods Committee Recommendations 109 and 110.

Upon the death of a pensioner, particularly in the higher categories, classes one to nine with or without attendance allowance, but particularly with the allowance, the widow suffers a drastic reduction in income on the death of the veteran. Many have mortgage payments, death expenses and other items to pay with no assistance in so doing. We usually find, too, that the widow will try to keep the home going, regardless, and she is placed in a most unfavourable financial position.

We, therefore, strongly support Recommendation 109 of the Woods Committee Report and suggest this be treated as a priority item, and I quote: "That pension at married rate be continued following the death of a pensioner who, at the time of his death, was in receipt of pension for a dependant wife, child or parent that was caring for him for a period of not less than twelve (12) months...this to include all classes of pension." We also concur further with Recommendation 110 with respect to attendance allowance, that it be continued after the death of the veteran for a period of not less than two months following the death of the veteran. This is to be two clear months, not including the month in which the veteran died. The Canadian Corps Association cannot accept the government's White Paper's disinterest in the needs of our deceased veterans' widows. Surely it cannot be construed that granting one month's pension after the death of a pensioner will bring any alleviation of the widow's financial problems.

Are there any questions, sir?

1954, l'Association du Corps canadien appuie la proposition du Comité Woods, c'est-à-dire d'en faire également profiter tous les autres pensionnés qui reçoivent une allocation de soins au taux maximum, alors qu'hospitalisés ils sont sous traitement ou sous les soins du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants.

Y a-t-il des questions, monsieur le pésident?

Le président: Messieurs, avez-vous des questions?

M. Bigg: Je crois que ceci figurera également au compte rendu.

Le président: Il y a des commentaires mais je crois que ce point a été étudié.

Mme Heesaker: Versement de la pension suivant le décès d'un ancien combattant pensionné—renvoi aux recommandations nos 109 et 110 du comité Woods.

A la mort d'un pensionné, surtout dans les catégories de pension supérieures (classes 1 à 9), qu'il s'y ajoute ou non une allocation de soins, la veuve de l'ancien combattant voit alors son revenu sensiblement diminué. Beaucoup parmi elles ont des paiements hypothécaires, des frais d'enterrement ou d'autres dépenses à acquitter, sans pouvoir jouir d'aucune aide quelconque. Nous constatons aussi que les veuves s'efforcent de garder leur train domestique intact, ce qui les plonge dans une situation financière des plus précaire. C'est pourquoi nous appuyons fortement la proposition n° 109 du Comité Woods, laquelle prime tout, à notre sens, soit «que la pension versée au taux applicable aux personnes mariées soit maintenue à la suite du décès d'un pensionné qui, à sa mort, recevait une pension à l'égard d'une personne à sa charge (épouse, enfant ou parent) qui prenait soin de lui, et ce pour une période d'au moins douze (12) mois.. la chose devant s'appliquer à toutes les classes de pension.»Nous sommes aussi d'accord au sujet de la proposition nº 110 concernant les allocations de soins, à savoir que celles-ci soient maintenues, après la mort de l'ancien combattant, pour une période d'au moins deux mois, c'est-à-dire deux mois révolus, à l'exclusion du mois au cours duquel le décès s'est produit. L'Association du Corps canadien ne peut laisser le gouvernement se désintéresser, dans le Livre blanc, des besoins qu'éprouvent les veuves d'anciens combattants. On ne peut réellement croire, certes, qu'un seul versement supplémentaire mensuel, à la suite du

The Chairman: Are they any questions by members of the Committee?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I do not think we want to make the delegation feel that we are not interested in their presentation, but we have dealt with this in several of the other briefs as, I think, members of the Committee are well aware, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Heesaker: Fine. We are now at the bottom of page 9. Re Hong Kong Veterans, Woods Committee Recommendations 92 and 93.

Owing to the number of recent deaths of Hong Kong veterans and the fact that approximately 395 are still receiving disability pensions of less than 48 per cent, we heartily support Recommendations 92 and 93 of the Woods Committee Report dealing respectively with a minimum pension basis of Class 11 for all Hong Kong veterans who were interned as prisoners of war by the Japanese and that widows of ex-members of this force be eligible for consideration of an award of widows pension under the compassionate pension section of the Pension Act where the veteran has died prior to the inception of this legislation and that this eligibility shall be based on the presumption that unless rebutted, the death was attributable to service.

Rebuttal should be allowed only to be considered in the case of accidental death at the hands of third party or parties, or self-inflicted wounds, except that in the latter, the condition of unsound mind shall be considered as related to service-incurred disability, that is, neurosis or allied mental strain.

Every veteran in Canada, we are sure, shares the Hong Kong veterans' joy that as a result of the recommendations recorded in the government's White Paper, they may soon receive their just compensation. The Canadian Corps Association as a whole and our Hong Kong veterans, in particular, may at last see a successful conclusion to all our years of research and study of the health deterioration of the gallant Canadians who served in the Hong Kong campaign.

décès d'un pensionné, puisse alléger le fardeau financier des veuves d'anciens combattants.

Y a-t-il des questions, monsieur le président?

Le président: Est-ce qu'il y a des questions venant des membres du Comité?

M. Guay (St-Boniface): Nous avons traité de cette question dans plusieurs autres mémoires. Nous ne voulons pas faire croire aux membres de la délégation que nous nous ennuyons à lire cette partie-là, mais disons que cela a été fort bien couvert déjà.

Mme Heesaker: Parfait. Nous sommes maintenant rendus au bas de la page 9.
Anciens combattants de Hong Kong—renvoi aux recommendations nos 92 et 93 du Comité Woods

Étant donné le nombre des décès survenus récemment parmi les anciens combattants de Hong-Kong et vu qu'approximativement 395 d'entre eux reçoivent encore une pension d'invalidité de moins de 48 p. 100, nous appuyons chaleureusement les propositions numéros 92 et 93 du rapport du Comité Woods qui ont trait, respectivement, à la pension de base minimum pour les ex-militaires de Hong-Kong, qui ont été internés par les Japonais au cours de la guerre, et à la proposition voulant que les veuves des anciens militaires de ce groupe soient admissibles à la pension des veuves prévue en vertu de l'article relatif la pension de commissération de la Loi sur les pensions, pour le cas où l'ancien combattant en question soit mort avant que cette mesure législative entrât en vigueur; en outre, que cette admissibilité, à moins que le bien-fondé n'en soit réfuté, soit prévue parce qu'il est présumé que la mort a été attribuable au service militaire. La réfutation ne peut être autorisée que s'il s'agit d'une mort accidentelle due à un ou à des tiers ou à des blessures que le défunt s'est infligé lui-même, sans que, dans ce dernier cas, le dérangement mental doive être considéré comme se rattachant à une infirmité découlant du service militaire, c'est-à-dire la névrose ou l'effort mental apparenté.

Tous les anciens combattants au Canada, nous en sommes sûrs, partagent la joie que doivent éprouver ceux qui ont combattu à Hong-Kong, à l'idée d'être équitablement dédommagés sous peu, au titre de la proposition formulée par le gouvernement dans le Livre blanc. L'Association du Corps canadien en général, et nos anciens combattants de Hong-Kong en particulier, verront finalement la conclusion heureuse des études et recherches accomplies depuis des années sur la détérioration de l'état de santé des vaillants

Are there any questions or observations, sir?

The Chairman: Members of the Committee, do you have any comments? I think that substantially what you have asked for here has been indicated as having been accepted.

Mrs. Heesaker: That is right.

Continuation of Pension for Children up to age 25 when Undergoing Course of Instruction

The Canadian Corps Association feels sure all members of the Standing Committee will agree that Section 26(1)(b) of the Pension Act is decidedly outdated, which provides for continuation of pension to age 21 for a child taking a course of instruction. In this present day of higher education demands by employers, it is necessary that a boy or girl who has the required ability should continue their education beyond the secondary school level and, in fact, through university. Rarely is any such achievement reached at age 21 and thus the Canadian Corps Association endorses Woods Committee Recommendation 108, which states and I quote:

> That Section 26(1)(b) of the Pension Act be amended to provide that pension may be continued on behalf of a child undergoing a course of instruction up to age 25 years or to the date which may be necessary to enable him to complete the academic year in which he attains that age, provided that:
> (a) the Commission may extend the period prescribed above where it is satisfied that because of ill health or other cause the student was unable to resume or commence a course of instruction in an educational institution within the time limit; and
> (b) the pensioner continues to contribute the major share, where possible, of the financial requirements for maintenance and costs associated with the student's schooling.

To substantiate the necessity for this amendment, the Canadian Corps Association draws the Standing Committee's attention to the fact that the Education Assistance Act under which educational assistance is provided to the children of the war dead and deceased pensioners provides for pension payments to Canadiens qui se sont distingués au cours de la campagne de Hong-Kong.

Y a-t-il des questions ou des observations, monsieur?

Le président: Y a-t-il des remarques, des commentaires, des observations à ce sujet de la part des membres du Comité? Je crois que nous sommes généralement d'accord avec vous là-dessus.

Mme Heesaker: C'est bon.

Versement de la pension jusqu'à 25 ans à l'égard des enfants qui suivent un cours d'enseignement.

L'Association du Corps canadien a la certitude que les membres du comité permanent estimeront à l'unanimité que l'article 26 (1) b) de la Loi sur les pensions, celui qui prévoit le versement de la pension jusqu'à 21 ans à l'égard des enfants qui poursuivent leurs études, est absolument désuet. A l'heure où les employeurs insistent sur une éducation supérieure, il est indispensable à un jeune homme ou à une jeune fille ayant les aptitudes voulues, de poursuivre ses études au delà du niveau secondaire et même de finir son cours universitaire. Or, il est rare que la chose puisse se faire avant 21 ans; c'est pourquoi l'Association du Corps canadien appuie la proposition nº 108 du Comité Woods, laquelle se lit comme il suit:

Que l'on modifie l'article 26 (1)b) de la Loi sur les pensions de façon à prévoir la prolongation de la pension versée à l'égard d'un enfant qui suit un cours d'enseignement jusqu'à ce que cet étudiant atteigne l'âge de 25 ans, sauf dans la mesure qui lui permettra, lorsqu'il atteint cet âge, de terminer son année scolaire, à condition que:

> a) la Commission puisse prolonger la période indiquée ci-dessus lorsqu'elle peut s'assurer que la santé de l'étudiant, ou toute autre raison valable, a empêché l'étudiant de reprendre ou commencer ses études dans une maison d'enseignement dans les délais prescrits, et que > b) le pensionné continue à assumer la majorité des frais nécessités par l'entretien et l'instruction de l'étudiant.

Pour étayer son argument en faveur d'une telle modification, l'Association du Corps canadien se permet d'appeler l'attention du comité permanent sur les dispositions de la Loi sur l'aide aux enfants des morts de la guerre (éducation), au titre desquelles ces enfants, ainsi que ceux des pensionnés décé-age 25 and in some cases, gentlemen, to age 30.

Are there any comments or observations?

The Chairman: Members of the Committee?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: Is the Corps suggesting that this be an amendment to the Educational Assistance Act or would it be operated under a section of the pension legislation?

Mrs. Heesaker: It would be an amendment to the Pension Act.

Mr. Parsons: This would have to be an amendment to the Pension Act, if you will pardon me, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Parsons.

Mr. Parsons: In other words, that is the payment for children of living pensioners similar to what they could get as children of the war dead or deceased pensioners.

Mr. Bigg: I gather from this.....

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Bigg: ...that at this time the children of the war dead already get this.

Mrs. Heesaker: That is right, they do, sir.

The Chairman: Are there other questions?

Mrs. Heesaker:

The Statutory Exemption From Income Tax of Payments Made Under the Pension Act Should be Continued—Woods Committee Recommendation No. 143.

The Woods Committee spent much time in researching this important subject because the Carter Royal Commission on Taxation proposed that war disability pensions should become subject to income tax.

Rather than the Canadian Corps Association taking the Standing Committee's time to elaborate on the number of convincing and forceful reasons why war disability pensions have always been tax exempt, we refer you respectfully to the Woods Committee Recommendation 143 for study, please.

Compensation that is being paid to our Canadian disabled veterans is by law and tradition a very special income earned by our war casualties on the field of battle.

dés, jouissent d'une aide éducative jusqu'à 25 ans (parfois 30 ans) sous forme de versement d'une pension.

Y a-t-il des questions ou des observations, monsieur?

Le président: Messieurs?

M. Peters: Oui.

Le président: Monsieur Peters.

M. Peters: Devrait-il y avoir une modification à la loi sur l'aide éducationnelle ou cela relèverait-il d'un article de la Loi sur les pensions?

Mme Heesaker: Je crois que ce serait une modification à la Loi sur les pensions.

M. Parsons: Il faudrait que ce soit une modification à la Loi sur les pensions, monsieur le président.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Parsons.

M. Parsons: En d'autres termes, c'est pour aider les enfants de pensionnés vivants comme ceux des pensionnés morts ou ceux des personnes décédées par suite de la guerre.

M. Bigg: Je crois . . .

Le président: Monsieur Bigg.

M. Bigg: Que les enfants des personnes décédées par suite de la guerre recoivent déjà cette aide.

Mme Heesaker: C'est exact.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions?

Mme Heesaker: Exemption statutaire de l'impôt sur le Revenu en faveur des paiements faits en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions — Renvoi à la recommandation nº 143 du Comité Woods.

Le comité Woods a consacré beaucoup de temps à cette question capitale, car la Commission royale d'enquête sur la fiscalité (commission Carter) a proposé que les pensions d'invalidité de guerre soient déclarées imposables. Plutôt que de prendre le temps du comité permanent pour lui exposer les raisons convaincantes et solides pour lesquelles les pensions d'invalidité de guerre ont toujours été soustraites à l'impôt, l'Association du Corps canadien le prie d'étudier la recommandation nº 143 du Comité Woods.

Le dédommagement versé aux anciens combattants invalides du Canada a toujours été, suivant la loi et la tradition, une rémunération bien particulière que nos blessés de guerre se sont acquis sur le champ de bataille.

There are most certainly other ways for the Canadian government to increase tax dollars, rather than to deprive our war pensioners of their just compensation for loss of limbs, sight and so on.

The Chairman: You are aware, Mrs. Heesaker, that there will be public hearings after the White Paper on taxation has been published and I am sure that your organization will have every opportunity to present a brief on this aspect to that committee if you choose to do so. While we are very interested in your views, I think it is a tax matter and a little beyond the terms of reference of this Committee.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, Recommendation 143 was accepted unchanged.

An hon. Member: Unchanged, yes, so there is no need for . . .

The Chairman: Nevertheless, I do think that the work of government is such that it would be only fair to tell the people who are before us that it is the committee on taxation that will make recommendations on tax changes and not this Committee.

Mr. Peters: Possibly. It might also be the view of this Committee, maybe, to make a presentation to the taxation committee in their various . . .

The Chairman: Mr. Peters, I have looked up many precedents for committees, but I have yet to find one where one committee appeared before another parliamentary committee to make representation. Maybe Mr. Knowles can correct me in that respect, but I have never heard of it happening.

• 1610

Mr. Peters: Possibly some of us individually may do it.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps we should wait to see whether it is necessary.

The Chairman: That is a very good observation, Mr. Knowles.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I do not know if that is a good point, but on the other hand the Canadian Corps Association, no doubt, will have the opportunity to present a brief to the . . .

The Chairman: That is the suggestion I was making to the delegation here. I think Mr. Stroud has . . .

[Interprétation]

Il y a, à coup sûr, bien d'autres façons pour le gouvernement du Canada d'accroître ses revenus fiscaux, sans qu'il ait à priver nos pensionnés de guerre des sommes qui leur sont versées en dédommagement pour la perte d'un membre, de la vue, et ainsi de suite.

Le président: Je vous signale qu'il y aura des audiences publiques après que le Livre blanc sur la fiscalité aura été publié et je suis certain que votre Association pourra présenter un mémoire sur cette question si vous en décidez ainsi. Je crois qu'il s'agit d'une question fiscale qui est hors du mandat de ce Comité.

M. Marshall: Monsieur le président, la recommandation 143 a été acceptée sans changements.

Une voix: Sans changements, oui, mais il n'y a aucun besoin de . . .

Le président: Il n'est que juste de les aviser que c'est le Comité de la fiscalité qui doit faire des recommandations sur les modifications à la structure fiscale. Cela ne relève pas de nous.

M. Peters: Possible, mais peut-être que notre Comité devrait faire connaître son opinion au Comité de la fiscalité.

Le président: J'ai vu bien des précédents, mais je n'ai jamais vu un comité aller témoigner devant un autre comité pour y faire des représentations. Peut-être que M. Knowles pourrait me corriger.

M. Peters: Peut-être pourrions-nous le faire individuellement.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Peut-être serait-il préférable d'attendre pour voir si c'est nécessaire.

Le président: Très bien. Excellente remarque, monsieur Knowles.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Le Corps canadien pourra faire un exposé à l'autre comité s'il le veut.

Le président: Oui, c'est ce que je proposais. Monsieur Stroud.

[Text]

Mr. Stroud: There is one observation that I would like to make. I recall seeing Members of Parliament from this standing committee appear in front of the Woods Committee which was delegated by the Garber setup, so I do not see any harm in their individually appearing before the taxation committee.

The Chairman: Individual Members of Parliament can go before any committee, but the suggestion that as a committee we go, I think, is something else, Mr. Stroud.

Mr. Knowles: We can always break the tradition. Right?

The Chairman: Right.

An hon. Member: That is a good point.

The Chairman: Would you like to continue?

Mrs. Heesaker: Yes, we are on page 12 now, gentlemen.

Legal Damages, Section 20, 21 and 22.

This section of the Pension Act provides in general terms that where legal damages may be paid as a consequence of the circumstances which cause death or disability for which, in addition, there may be a requirement to pay pension under the Pension Act, the amount of such legal damages shall result either in the reduction of pension, or alternatively, the damages shall be paid to the Crown.

The Canadian Corps Association has objected for many years to this portion of the Act, and we so advised the Woods Committee.

We strongly support the Woods Committee recommendations:—

> That the Act be amended to replace the existing Sections 20, 21 and 22 with a new section which would provide that the Act contain only a provision to prohibit a person from receiving both an award of pension under the Pension Act and an award under the Government Employees Compensation Act or similar legislation of the Federal Government designed to compensate for death or disability where such is attributable to employment in the Government service or has been caused under circumstances which in some manner indicate liability upon the Crown.

The White paper does not adopt this recommendation but proposes that, in capitalizing the amount of damages recovered, the portion for special damages, pain and suffering, and loss of consortium would not affect the pension in payment.

[Interpretation]

M. Stroud: Je me souviens d'avoir vu des membres de ce Comité témoigner devant le Comité Woods, qui avaient été délégués par le groupe Barber. Je ne vois donc pas pourquoi ils ne pourraient pas aller témoigner individuellement devant le Comité de la fiscalité.

Le président: Les simples députés peuvent témoigner devant n'importe quel comité, mais c'est une autre affaire, monsieur Stroud, que de faire témoigner un comité.

M. Knowles: On pourrait toujours créer un précédent. Pas vrai?

Le président: En effet.

Une voix: Voilé une bonne suggestion.

Le président: Voudriez-vous continuer?

Mme Heesaker: Page 12, messieurs.

Dommages-intérêts, articles 20, 21 et 22

Règle générale, au titre des dispositions susmentionnées de la Loi sur les pensions, lorsque des dommages-intérêts sont versés à la suite de circonstances ayant entraîné la mort ou l'invalidité et pour lesquelles il peut y avoir, en outre, une obligation d'octroyer une pension au titre de la Loi sur les pensions, le montant de tels dommages-intérêts donne lieu à une diminution de la pension, ou bien il est versé à la Couronne elle-même.

L'Association du Corps canadien s'oppose depuis des années à ces dispositions de la Loi; d'ailleurs, elle en a avisé le Comité Woods.

Nous appuyons fortement la proposition suivante du Comité Woods:

> «Que la Loi soit modifiée afin de remplacer les articles 20, 21 et 22 existants par un nouvel article stipulant une seule interdiction, celle de toucher la pension prévue par la Loi sur les pensions en même temps que l'indemnité prévue par la Loi sur l'indemnisation des employés de l'État ou toute autre législation fédérale semblable visant à indemniser la victime ou ses ayants droit pour le décès ou l'invalidité, lorsque ce décès ou cette invalidité peuvent être reliés au service du gouvernement fédéral ou sont survenus dans des circonstances telles que la Couronne est en quelque sorte tenue d'un dédommagement.»

Tout en rejetant cette proposition, le Livre blanc préconise que, dans la capitalisation du montant recouvert en dommages-intérêts, ce qui est réservé aux dommages particuliers, à la douleur et à la souffrance, et à la perte de cohabitation ne réduise pas le paiement de la pension.

[Texte]

The government still proposes to recover any damages awarded for loss of earnings, which makes up the bulk of any third party award.

We feel that the only portion of any third party award, that should be claimed by the Crown is if there is a claim by reason of an expense to the Crown, for example, for medical attention, or loss to the Crown of his services if he were still in the services.

The Chairman: Are there any comments by members of the Committee?

Mr. Peters: The amount of such legal damages shall result either in the reduction of pension or alternatively the damages shall be paid to the Crown. Is this now elective?

Mr. Parsons: It is still in effect. It is apparently going to be modified a little by what is in the White Paper.

Mr. Peters: No, at present is it elective? Can you elect to take the damages or pension?

Mr. Parsons: Yes, you must elect to take one or the other. There is more or less compulsion upon the widow in the case to sue the third party for damages and then the procedure is to turn over the damages as required by the government to the Commission in order to get her pension or they will capitalize those damages and possibly pay her a reduced pension on the capitalized value of those damages.

Mr. Bigg: They do not pay her legal fees if she loses?

Mr. Parsons: They apparently intend to now—not if she loses, no. To the best of my knowledge this kind of thing only applies to a serviceman or a servicewoman in Canda's armed forces. I do not know of any place else where this applies.

The Chairman: You mean the armed forces of no other country in the world use this, is this what you are saying?

Mr. Parsons: I do not think so and certainly the only people in this country who are affected by such a clause as this are our servicemen. That is all. I do not know of anybody else. To my mind it is an imposition, I do not think it is fair. I know, going back now to the early stages of my life with this when the argument came up on this clause—it has been there for a long time—it was said that a peacetime serviceman being killed by a third party on the street and damages were payable would be in a preferred position to

[Interprétation]

Le gouvernement se propose toujours de recouvrer tous dommages-intérêts octroyés pour la perte de gains, lesquels constituent le plus clair de tout dédommagement d'un tiers.

Selon nous, les seuls cas où la Couronne peut réclamer une partie quelconque du dédommagement d'un tiers, c'est lorsqu'elle a dû faire certaines dépenses (services médicaux, par exemple) ou qu'elle a perdu les services du requérant, si ce dernier faisait encore partie de l'effectif.

Le président: Commentaires, messieurs?

M. Peters: Le montant de ces dommages-intérêts entraînerait une réduction des pensions ou bien les dommages seraient versés à la Couronne n'y a-t-il pas un choix à faire?

M. Parsons: Oui, cela est toujours en vigueur. On va le modifier quelque peu en fonction du Livre blanc.

M. Peters: Est-ce qu'actuellement on n'a pas le choix; le membre peut-il choisir soit une indemnisation, soit la pension?

M. Parsons: Oui, c'est exact. Il y a parfois des obligations qui imposent à la veuve, lors de poursuites contre un tiers, à remettre les dommages-intérêts au gouvernement afin d'obtenir sa pension. Si elle obtient satisfaction ailleurs le gouvernement réduira proportionnellement la pension qu'il lui versera.

M. Bigg: Paie-t-on les frais de cour, si elle perd?

M. Parsons: Ils ont l'intention de le faire, mais non si elle perd. Autant que je sache, ce genre de chose ne s'applique qu'à un membre des forces canadiennes; je ne connais aucun autre endroit où une telle chose s'applique.

Le président: Cela ne s'applique nulle part ailleurs dans le monde? Est-ce ce que vous dites?

M. Parsons: Cela ne s'applique nulle part ailleurs dans le monde, autant que je sache. Les seules personnes ici au pays qui sont régies par cette disposition ce sont les membres des Forces armées, je ne crois pas que cela s'applique à quelqu'un d'autre. Je ne crois pas que cela soit juste du tout. Lorsqu'on a commencé à appliquer cette disposition, on a stipulé que si un membre des Forces armées était tué, en temps de paix, par un tiers et que des dommages soient payables, il serait dans une meilleure position que celui somebody killed during the war on the field of battle. Other arguments have come up from time to time, none of which to me have any really sound basis for argument. I say if that widow is entitled to damages for the loss of her husband she should get those damages and if a pension is payable because of the fact that his death arose out of or was directly connected with service she should get her pension. What is the difference between her and the widow of a man covered by the Compensation Act or some other law?

• 1615

Mr. Bigg: There is one small difference which may have had a bearing on the original statute. At one time the service pensions were what they called "free", and now most pensions are contributary.

Mr. Parsons: Yes, in fact I intended to mention that, Mr. Bigg. I know that in the case of a serviceman the widow's pension is going to come out of the public pocket. I appreciate that fact, nevertheless, it is not such a big pension compared to some of the others she might get. Furthermore, the armed forces are under compulsion to do as they are told. If you are working in industry and you do not like the job that has been assigned to you you can tell your boss where he gets off at and go home. You can quit. But you cannot do that in the forces; you are under the compulsion of the service and to my mind that very fact has a big bearing on this situation right here.

Mr. Bigg: He can be shot.

Mr. Parsons: He has to do as he is told. It does not matter how much danger or what there is in it. He must do as he is told. I have cases in the pot right now; pension has been granted and is held up while something is being done about this. Now, I do not think that is right.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions?

Mrs. Heesaker: Our honourary vice-president would like to comment.

Mr. Chadderton: I just wanted to make sure, Mr. Chairman, the records stand correct on this.

Under Section 20(2) of the Act the Commission may indemnify a person who is required to proceed for any and all costs whether he or she loses the case or not. The government through the Pension Commission will certainly pay the legal costs.

Mr. Bigg: "May".

[Interpretation]

qui aurait été tué sur le champ de bataille en temps de guerre. Il y a eu d'autres arguments qui ont été avancés de temps à autre, mais qui, d'après moi, n'étaient pas valables. Je dis que si une veuve a droit à des dommages-intérêts pour la perte de son mari, elle devrait les recevoir, et que, de plus, si une pension est payable parce que la mort de son mari était due ou indirectement reliée au service, elle devrait recevoir sa pension. Quelle est la différence entre elle et la veuve couverte par la Loi sur les indemnités ou toute autre loi?

M. Bigg: Il y a une certaine différence. A un moment donné, les pensions étaient, disons, «gratuites». Actuellement, celui qui la reçoit doit contribuer.

M. Parsons: Oui, j'allais mentionner ce fait. Je sais que dans le cas d'un membre des Forces armées, il faut qu'il contribue mais qu'une partie provient des Fonds publics. Ce n'est pas une grosse pension si on la compare à d'autres qu'elle pourrait recevoir. De plus, les membres des Forces armées doivent faire ce qu'on leur dit de faire. Si vous travaillez dans l'industrie et que vous n'aimez pas l'emploi qu'on vous a donné, vous pouvez démissionner et rentrer chez vous, mais vous ne pouvez pas le faire quand vous êtes dans les Forces armées. N'oubliez pas que cela est très important et il faut en tenir compte.

M. Bigg: Il peut être tué.

M. Parsons: Il doit absolument faire ce qu'on lui commande de faire, qu'il y ait beaucoup de danger ou non, qu'il aime cela ou non.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions?

Mme Heesaker: Notre vice-président honoraire aimerait faire un commentaire.

M. Chadderton: Je voudrais que l'on inscrive au dossier qu'en vertu de l'article 20(2) de la loi, la commission peut payer les frais, que la personne gagne sa cause ou non. Le gouvernement payera certainement les frais par l'entremise de la Commission des pensions.

M. Bigg: «Peut».

[Texte]

The Chairman: Are there any instances where they have refused as far as you are aware, Mr. Chadderton?

Mr. Chadderton: I do not think it is even may—I think it is shall agree to indemnify such persons or anyone acting on his behalf from all or any costs incurred in connection therewith. I do not think it is permissive, Mr. Chairman. My understanding and certainly my experience is that where the pension recipient is required to proceed the government pays the legal costs.

Mr. Bigg: I am glad to hear that.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Chadderton.

The Chairman: Mr. Howard and Mr. Guay.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, certainly if a man is killed as the result of third party negligence, his widow would be entitled to a pension as a result of his death. Then at the same time it has been suggested that as a result of a civil action his widow would be entitled to damages. Now his widow would be paid a pension because of his death as a service man. She would be getting paid twice. Is this what you intend?

Mr. Parsons: I think you are missing the point, Mr. Howard. Pension is paid to the permanent forces when the death or disability arises out of or is directly connected with his service duties. In other words, if you are a service man and your duty is to drive a truck from A to B and you are going to get hurt, you be in that truck.

Mr. Bigg: Right. Do not be out to lunch!

Mr. Parsons: Yes.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): But the death could still result from a third party action.

Mr. Parsons: It could result from a third party action. He could be off duty, for example. He could be right in his own base and be finished his day's work, have put away his equipment, be on his way home and be killed by a third party. In that case the service is not responsible for his death and there is no pension payable.

The Chairman: But Mr. Howard's case is of a man on duty killed by a third party who is negligent. Is that the way I understand it?

Mr. Parsons: Yes. Actually being on duty at the present time is not always sufficient...

[Interprétation]

Le président: Connaissez-vous des cas où on a refusé de payer, monsieur Chadderton?

M. Chadderton: Je crois que ce n'est pas «peut», mais plutôt quelque chose comme «consentira à payer à ces personnes tous les frais—». Je ne crois pas que ce soit facultatif, monsieur le président. Je crois que le gouvernement paie dans tous les cas.

M. Bigg: Je suis content d'entendre cela.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Chadderton. Monsieur Howard et monsieur Guay.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Si un membre des Forces est tué par suite de négligence d'un tiers, sa veuve devrait avoir droit à une pension en vertu de son décès. De plus, une action civile pourrait aussi lui rapporter des dommages-intérêts. Elle recevrait double indemnité. Est-ce là votre but?

M. Parsons: Vous ne comprenez pas. On paie une pension aux membres des Forces permanentes lorsque le décès ou l'invalidité était dû ou directement relié au service. Autrement dit, si vous conduisez un camion de A à B et que vous vous fassiez blesser, que ce soit dans le camion...

M. Bigg: Bien. Il ne faut pas être au restaurant du coin.

M. Parsons: Oui.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Mais le décès peut toujours résulter de l'action d'une troisième partie.

M. Parsons: Oui, le décès pourrait résulter de l'action d'un tiers. Il pourrait être hors de service, par exemple, à ce moment-là. Il pourrait être à la base et avoir terminé sa journée d'ouvrage, s'en aller chez lui et être tué par un tiers. Dans ce dernier cas, le décès n'est pas dû au service et il n'y a pas de pension versée par les Forces armées.

Le président: Le cas de M. Howard est celui d'un homme au service et tué par une tierce partie négligente.

M. Parsons: Le fait d'être de service n'est pas toujours suffisant...

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): But if he is on duty?

The Chairman: Mr. Howard has a case.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): But if he is on duty and has a highway accident?

The Chairman: He is posing a hypothetical case. A service man on duty driving a truck is killed and someone else is negligent. Mr. Howard asks whether the man's widow should be entitled to both the pension and the indemnity?

Mr. Parsons: Yes. She would be if his death arose out of and/or was connected with his service. He is driving a truck and somebody slams into him and kills him while he is on assigned duty, the Pension Commission are responsible for him.

The Chairman: Right.

Mr. Parsons: And third party damages, if they are assessable can also be collected.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): You are suggesting that that change should be made so that his widow should get both.

Mr. Parsons: His widow should be in the same place as anybody else's wife with a pension payable.

• 1620

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton, I think, has an observation.

Mr. Peters: In other words the pension is actuarially sound in its own right and it is paid because he was killed in the service. The fact that you could collect from a third party has nothing to do with the actuarial relationship with the amount that he was paying for his pension protection. It is no longer as it was during the war where the third party was always enemy or considered to be enemy and there was no liability. In this case they are covered not by the Canadian Government or the Canadian people carrying the premium on a pension, but the serviceman himself is carrying a pension against that. It is similar to insurance, really.

Mr. Parsons: Mr. Peters, I am not talking about the pension to which he has contributed—a service pension. He contributes to a service pension. I am talking about the Canadian Pension Commission's disability pension.

[Interpretation]

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Mais s'il est de service?

Le président: M. Howard a un bon point.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Mais s'il est de service et qu'il ait un accident sur la route?

Le président: C'est un cas hypothétique. Un homme des Forces conduisant un camion est tué par suite de négligence d'une troisième partie. Est-ce que la veuve devrait recevoir à la fois la pension et l'indemnisation?

M. Parsons: Oui, elle devrait les recevoir si le décès est dû ou découle directement du service. Lorsqu'un membre des Forces est de service, la Commission des pensions est responsable pour lui.

Le président: En effet.

M. Parsons: Et s'il y a des dommages-intérêts ils peuvent également être perçus.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Vous proposez un changement grâce auquel la veuve pourrait recevoir les deux.

M. Parsons: La veuve devrait se trouver dans une position aussi avantageuse que n'importe quelle femme de quelqu'un pour qui une pension est payable.

Le président: Je crois que M. Chadderton voudrait parler.

M. Peters: Du point de vue actuariel, la pension est un droit et est payée parce que la personne a été tuée alors qu'elle était de service. Les dommages-intérêts provenant d'un tiers n'ont rien à voir avec le montant que cette personne payait pour s'assurer une pension.

Il ne s'agit plus comme c'était le cas pendant la guerre où le tiers était toujours l'ennemi ou était présumé être toujours l'ennemi et qu'il n'y avait pas de recours possible. N'oubliez pas que cette contribution à la pension, c'est un genre d'assurance d'un autre côté pour le membre des forces en service.

M. Parsons: Je ne parle pas de la pension de retraite mais de la pension d'invalidité de la Commission canadienne des pensions.

[Texte]

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I want to requote a case I gave before the Committee on September 18 to indicate why we feel that a widow in these circumstances is entitled to both. This was the case of a major who was killed coming back from Korea. Because he was on duty, she was entitled to pension which, with today's rate, would get her $200 a month. Trans-Canada Airlines, as it was called in those days, was liable to the tune of $5,000 under the Warsaw Convention and that poor widow had to make a choice as to whether she could continue to receive $200 a month—mark you, she is a major's widow—or $5,000 third party settlement.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): She could not take both.

Mr. Chadderton: That is right, and she cannot yet. Even under your White Paper recommendation, Mr. Chairman, she will still not be able to take both. We subscribe to the fact that the pension is sufficiently small that if some third party insurer wants to give her $20,000 or $100,000, she is entitled to every nickel of it.

The Chairman: Mr. Badanai, you are the past chairman of this Committee and I think this kind of thing has arisen on previous occasions. Do you have some observations here, Mr. Badanai?

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, yes, in view of the question here on page 12 regarding the Government Employees Compensation Act. For instance, why would you exclude payment to a civil servant?

• 1625

Mr. Parsons: They are not affected.

Mr. Chadderton: All I can say to that, Mr. Chairman, is that this was part of what I prefer to call Mr. Justice Woods' legal judgment. What he thought was that Sections 20, 21 and 22 were ultra vires any pension legislation at all except in this one point. He felt that it was not proper to indemnify a person under the Pension Act and the Government Employees Compensation Act for the same accident because the two things are exactly the same. The Canadian Corps subscribes to the viewpoint of the Woods Committee, sir.

Mr. Turner (London East): Mr. Chairman, what happens with Compensation if a veteran is killed in private industry? Does his wife carry his pension as service pension plus the compensation?

[Interprétation]

M. Chadderton: J'aimerais parler à nouveau d'un cas dont j'ai parlé le 18 septembre au comité, pour indiquer pourquoi nous estimons qu'une veuve, dans ces circonsetances, devrait recevoir les deux pensions. Prenez le cas d'un major qui se fait tuer en revenant de Corée; il était de service, alors sa veuve avait droit à une pension de $200 par mois. En vertu du Congrès de Varsovie, la compagnie aérienne devait verser $5,000 à la veuve. Alors, la veuve a dû choisir entre $200 par mois d'un côté ou $5,000 du tiers, et n'oubliez pas qu'il s'agissait de la veuve d'un major.

M. Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Elle ne pouvait pas recevoir les deux?

M. Chadderton: Non, elle ne pouvait pas recevoir les deux et elle ne le pourrait pas davantage aujourd'hui. Même en vertu de vos recommandations, elle ne pourrait pas recevoir les deux. Alors, nous croyons que la pension est tellement faible que si un tiers doit contribuer une autre indemnité, devrait-elle être de $20,000, la personne devrait être en mesure de recevoir cette indemnité.

Le président: M. Badanai, je crois que cela a déjà été soulevé. Avez-vous des observations à faire?

M. Badanai: Oui, j'ai ici une question, page 12, monsieur le président, au sujet de la Loi concernant l'indemnisation des employés de l'état. Pourquoi exclure les fonctionnaires?

M. Parsons: Ça les touche pas.

M. Chadderton: Tout ce que je peux répondre à cette question, c'est que le juge Woods considérait les articles 20, 21 et 22 comme antistatutaires. Il soutenait qu'il n'était pas juste d'indemniser une personne en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions et de la Loi concernant l'indemnisation des employés de l'État pour le même accident. Le Corps canadien entérine le point de vue du Comité Woods.

M. Turner (London-Est): Qu'est-ce qui se produit dans le cas d'une indemnisation d'un ancien combattant qui est tué en travaillant dans l'industrie; est-ce que l'épouse reçoit une pension en plus d'une indemnisation?

[Text]

Mr. Parsons: Do I get this right? Let us say he is a 50 per cent pensioner or higher and the principle applies. No matter how he dies, she gets her widow's pension. I believe in cases where compensation may also be applicable there is an arrangement made between the two.

Mr. Chadderton: No, no.

Mr. Parsons: Is there not?

Mr. Chadderton: No. Under Section 21 of the Act you are out.

Mr. Parsons: You are out, but does not the Commission in some cases collect? She does not collect. I know she will not get more, but does not the Commission, if it feels that Compensation is partly liable...

Mr. Chadderton: It works exactly the same way as third party damages.

Mr. Parsons: Yes. She can only collect the one pension. She is not going to get dual pension.

Mr. Chadderton: Section 21 reads:

> 21. Where a disability or death for which pension is payable is caused under circumstances by reason of which compensation is payable in respect of such disability or death under any provincial Workmen's Compensation Act or legislation...

and so forth. So they cannot have both.

The Chairman: But presumably it could be caused by something other than that.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes. It has to be related. In other words, to quote the classic example, if he has a wooden leg and he slips under the lathe and he is killed, the Workmen's Compensation Board could pay that and by the same token the Canadian Pension Commission could say, "Well, we are not going to continue to pay pension to the widow in that case because this was related to his pensionable disability." That is now covered under the 48 per cent anyway so it would not be affected.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My question is somewhat along the same line as that brought out by Mr. Howard and others. The veteran in question has an alternative, and I think you can clarify it. I am thinking of Mr. Whicher's example of the soldier who was hurt as he stood beside his truck while on duty.

[Interpretation]

M. Parsons: S'il est un pensionné à 50 p. 100 ou plus, le principe s'applique. La veuve reçoit la pension de quelque façon que son époux meure. Je suis pour les cas où l'indemnisation s'applique, où il y a un arrangement possible entre les deux.

M. Chadderton: Non, non.

M. Parsons: N'est-ce pas?

M. Chadderton: Non, en vertu de la section 21 cela ne s'applique pas.

M. Parsons: Est-ce que la Commission ne peut pas recueillir les fonds? Est-ce qu'elle ne le fait pas dans certains cas?

M. Chadderton: C'est la même chose que l'indemnisation provenant d'un tiers.

M. Parsons: Oui. Elle ne recevra qu'une seule pension.

M. Chadderton: L'article 21 stipule ce qui suit:

> 21. Lorsqu'une invalidité ou un décès ouvrant droit à pension se produit dans des circonstances justifiant une indemnité en vertu de cette invalidité ou ce décès, toute loi provinciale sur les Accidents de travail...

Et cetera, ils ne peuvent avoir les deux.

Le président: Mais il semble que ça puisse dépendre d'autre chose.

M. Chadderton: Oui. Enfin, prenons le cas d'une personne qui a une jambe de bois et qui se tue à son travail. A ce moment-là, il a droit à une indemnisation en vertu des accidents de travail; il se peut fort bien que la Commission des pensions refusera de verser la pension à la veuve parce que c'est un accident de travail.

Le président: M. Guay.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Ma question se rapproche du point qui a été soulevé par M. Howard et d'autres. Est-ce qu'il n'y a pas une autre option à laquelle peut recourir cet ancien combattant? Je songe à l'exemple de M. Wincher où le soldat a été blessé à côté de son camion alors qu'il était de service. On lui

[Texte]

Apparently the judge allowed him $1,500, which he spent, and he has been paying this back. In fact the amount which he is paying back is well over $2,000 and Mr. Whicher questioned why this man had to keep on paying back to the government to receive the government pension.

In the case of the soldier from Korea, let us say that Air Canada had paid the widow $100,000. She then would have had the choice of accepting either the $100,000 or the pension, whichever in her wisdom she felt would be to her advantage. Is that not the case?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, it is.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): So at least widows have a choice and I am sure that in making that choice they would take the better of the two. Normally they do not accept the money and if they do not spend it, they go right into the pension that they normally get.

Mr. Chadderton: That is quite true, sir, but it is a question of contract. When that widow's husband went to Korea, she had every right to expect that if he lost his life for a reason directly connected with service, pension would be paid to her. She is not interested in the intricacies of Sections 20, 21 and 22. Just look at the circumstances. He was on his way home and was killed in a plane crash. Our attitude towards this—all veterans' organizations—is that that is a contract. It is as of right; it is hers.

• 1630

And if somebody were to say, "Look, you are getting pension from the Canadian Pension Commission", according to Mr. Justice Woods' interpretation, that should be taken into account by the court that is deciding how much she should be awarded. Well, we have the cart before the horse. In this situation you have the Canadian Pension Commission ruling arbitrarily that she cannot have pension because somebody else is giving her funds from another source.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes, I agree, but I am not clear on this yet. Any of us, Mr. Chairman, could go home by an air flight and the same could happen to us and our wives would feel the same, even while some of us were in the service. Although I am not against your recommendation, my point is that the widow in the case has the choice of whichever of the two is the better. In other words, if widows have the right to choose to their advantage, which we will suggest for the moment would be the Armed Services pension, then I think we are dealing with a versé une indemnité de $1,500 et par la suite il a dû rembourser afin de continuer à recevoir sa pension du Gouvernement. Voici ce que je voudrais savoir. Prenons le cas du soldat de la Corée, supposons qu'Air Canada ait versé $100,000 à la veuve. Elle aurait eu à choisir entre $100,000 ou la pension. C'était à elle de porter un jugement à savoir ce serait préférable dans son cas.

M. Chadderton: Oui, c'est cela.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Les veuves ont donc un choix. Et je suis certain qu'elles choisissent ce qu'il y a de mieux entre les deux.

M. Chadderton: C'est vrai, mais c'est une question de contrat. Lorsque son époux est parti pour la Corée, elle s'attendait à ce qu'une pension lui soit versée advenant la mort de son époux. Les embûches contenues aux sections 20, 21 et 22 ne l'intéressent pas. Considérons les circonstances, il revenait chez lui, il s'est fait tuer, elle devrait donc recevoir une pension. Nous considérons qu'il s'agit d'un contrat et que c'est une chose à laquelle elle a droit.

D'après M. le juge Woods la cour devrait tenir compte de la pension qu'elle reçoit de la Commission des pensions avant de décider le montant qu'on doit lui verser. Par conséquent, la Commission des pensions juge arbitrairement qu'elle n'a pas le droit de recevoir une autre pension.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je suis d'accord, mais j'estime que la veuve a le droit de choisir la meilleure solution. Autrement dit, si les veuves ont le droit de choisir la meilleure solution, alors nous leur faisons justice, est-ce que vous proposez les deux?

them fairly. Are you suggesting that they should get both?

Mrs. Heesaker: Yes, definitely.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, they should get both.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us take the case of members such as Mr. Peters and Mr. Bigg. They have been here long enough that they qualify for the M.P.s' pension and their widows would get the widow's pension. But the widow would also have the right of...

Mrs. Heesaker: ...of suing Air Canada, certainly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If they got the damages it would not effect their widow's pension.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Then my next question to Mr. Chadderton is that because he was on transport he was not really in the field of battle; is this what you mean?

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, in all of these sections 20, 21 and 22 cases, not all of them, there is usually an element of something outside of the direct service connection. Really there is a dual element involved. He is driving a service vehicle so he is doing what he is told to do and he has a compulsion to service. Now, at the same time some Smith Transport smashes into him and kills him. It is only incidental to this thing that he happened to be on duty at that time and his widow would be entitled to pension under Section 13(2) of the Act, as well as entitled to anything from a third party insurer. So these cases always have that element, and this raises another point. Take a look at the small number involved. Take a look at the morale of the situation and I mean this sincerely because it happens in the armed forces. I had a very great connection with army welfare at one time, and this was one thing service people could never understand. They heard about this particular major's case throughout the whole garrison in Calgary, and I do not want to expound on it too much, but the morale of that base just dropped automatically. People just would not believe that any government would turn around and say to this widow you must sue for the $5,000 and when you get it, thank you very much and take it away from her. It just does not make sense.

I realize that there are principles involved where you can argue on both sides of this. We have always admitted that in veterans organizations but the prior principle in this

[Interpretation]

Mme Heesaker: Oui.

M. Chadderton: Oui.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Prenons le cas de M. Peters et M. Bigg. Ils ont droit à la pension des députés et leurs veuves auraient aussi le droit...

Mme Heesaker: De poursuivre Air Canada, oui, certainement.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): S'ils subissent des dommages, la pension de la veuve n'en sera pas touchée.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Ma prochaine question, monsieur Chadderton, est la suivante: voulez-vous dire que, étant donné qu'il était affecté aux transports, il n'était pas vraiment sur le champ de bataille?

M. Chadderton: Oui, les articles 20, 21 et 22, renferment habituellement un élément distinct du service direct. Il y a vraiment un double élément. Parfois le soldat conduit un véhicule de l'armée et s'acquitte ainsi de la tâche qu'on lui a confiée. Il y est contraint par le service, mais voilà qu'un camion de Smith Transport entre en collision avec ce camion militaire et le conducteur perd la vie. Ce n'est que pure coïncidence s'il était alors de service. Sa veuve aurait droit à la pension en vertu du paragraphe (2) de l'article 13 de la Loi de même qu'à tout ce qui lui revient de par l'assurance de ce transporteur commercial. Il y a toujours cet élément et ici se soulève un autre point. Considérez le petit nombre de ceux qui sont en cause. Examinez le moral de la situation. Je suis sincère en cela, parce que la chose arrive dans les forces armées. A un moment donné, je me suis beaucoup occupé du service de bien-être de l'armée. C'était là une chose qu'on ne pouvait comprendre. Toute la garnison de Calgary a eu vent du cas spécial de ce major. Je ne veux pas m'étendre davantage sur cette affaire, mais sachez que le moral de la base a baissé et de façon drastique. Personne ne pouvait comprendre que le gouvernement pouvait faire volte-face en disant à la veuve: poursuivez en justice pour une somme de $5,000, mais dès que vous l'aurez obtenue, nous vous l'enlèverons. La chose n'a pas de sens. Il s'agit là de principes qui comportent du pour et du contre. Dans les organisations des anciens combattants, nous l'avons toujours thing is what is she entitled to under that Pension Act.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The amount is never too great from civil courts anyway.

Mr. Parsons: Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, do not overlook the fact that it is only the serviceman's wife that comes up against this proposition. She is the only one who is going to be affected.

Mr. Bigg: There is another point, Mr. Parsons, that the government only compensates the widow or the veteran on the minimum, his value as a labourer, whereas civil courts take into consideration, sometimes at least, his real value to the widow, his earning power, loss of consortium and all the rest of these things, which in the case of a veteran may be nil, and they compensate accordingly, whereas the government...

The Chairman: I think we will take exception to that, Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Bigg: ...may, may, and in this case the government one sidedly is cutting this widow down to the minimum arbitrarily whereas in law or anywhere else she is entitled to whatever she can get in a court of law. I agree with the presentation that the government have no right unilaterally to cut the woman down to the minimum when she may have lost a great deal more than any pension board can compensate.

The Chairman: I think this is a fairly elaborate point and we could have considerable discussion on it. I wonder if the Committee wishes to pursue it further at this point? I think the brief has made an observation which we have all listened to. Would you like to continue Mrs. Heesaker?

• 1635

Mrs. Heesaker: Yes, certainly, Mr. Chairman. We are on page 13 now gentlemen.

Re Section 13 (2) Pension Act permanent force and militia service Woods Committee Recommendation number 61.

The Canadian Corps Association wholeheartedly supports the recommendation of the Woods Committee, that this clause should be amended to read "Related to Service" and would add that "the compulsion of the service" shall be taken into full account and be the governing factor in awards of pension. Relationship to service to be established when the incident occurs when the man is on duty—temporarily or otherwise—during any period of assigned duty, or during transportaadmis, mais le principe premier demeure que la veuve a droit à ce qui lui revient en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Le montant qu'allouent les tribunaux civils n'est jamais trop élevé.

M. Parsons: Monsieur le président, n'oubliez pas que ceci ne concerne que la veuve de l'ancien combattant. Elle fait cause à part.

M. Bigg: Un autre point, monsieur Parsons. Le Gouvernement n'indemnise la veuve de l'ancien combattant qu'au minimum, c'est-à-dire en fonction d'un travail de manœuvre, alors que les tribunaux civils prennent en considération, au moins de temps à autre, la valeur réelle du mari vis-à-vis de son épouse, son revenu, la perte de son entreprise, etc., et la veuve touche une indemnisation conforme. Dans le cas de l'ancien combattant, rien de tout cela, le gouvernement...

Le président: Monsieur Bigg, je crois que nous ne serons pas d'accord sur ce point.

M. Bigg: Certes, vous le pouvez. Le Gouvernement réduit la pension de la veuve au minimum et de façon arbitraire, alors qu'elle a droit à tout ce qu'elle peut obtenir devant un tribunal civil. Je conviens que le Gouvernement n'a pas unilatéralement le droit de couper au minimum la pension de cette veuve à un moment où elle a perdu beaucoup plus que l'équivalent d'une indemnité de chambre et pension.

Le président: C'est une question très compliquée. Nous pourrions avoir une longue discussion à ce sujet. Je me demande si le Comité veut continuer là-dessus. Il me semble que le mémoire contient les observations voulues. Voulez-vous poursuivre, M^me^ Heesaker?

Mme Heesaker: Certainement, monsieur le président. Nous en sommes à la page 19. Article 13(2) Loi sur les pensions (armée permanente et service dans la milice). Renvoi à la recommandation n° 61 du Comité Woods.

L'Association du Corps caandien appuie d'emblée la proposition du Comité Woods demandant que cet article soit modifié de façon à comprendre les mots «rattachés au service» et elle ajouterait qu'il faut tenir pleinement compte du «service obligatoire» qui serait l'élément déterminant pour accorder la pension. Le rapport avec le service militaire doit être établi quand l'incident se produit lorsque le militaire est dans l'accomplissement de ses fonctions (de façon provisoire ou tion, or duties allied thereto. Any organized sports program or voluntary program, undertaken with the knowledge and consent of the proper authorities, or wherever employers' liability for the employee is apparent.

The Canadian Corps Association deplores the fact that the government's White Paper makes no reference at all to recommendations concerning peacetime regular force disability pension legislation. We wish to point out, that the government's White Paper goes to great lengths to point out that there are 945,200 veterans of Canada's forces. However, they fail miserably to recognize the fact that we presently have serving forces, some of whom, each day receive their honourable discharge, and as they are not properly recognized by the Canadian government, they are unable to take their rightful place proudly beside the 945,200 veterans.

Before concluding our short discussion today of our permanent forces' situation, the Canadian Corps Association request the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to recommend to the government that where treatment is indicated without pensionable award by the Department of Veterans Affairs, and so conveyed to the Department of National Defence, that the regulations should be in full agreement for treatment to continue until the condition is considered to have had all the prescribed treatment in full, even if the treatment or recovery of the ex-service man or woman extends beyond one year after discharge.

Are there any comments, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Members of the Committee?

Mr. Peters: I am interested in the Corps' contention that in this regard the peacetime regular forces be treated the same as wartime service forces.

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chairman, in the first place I, personally, and my colleagues and the majority of veterans hardly class the time we are experiencing today as peace. We class this as a time of stress and these men of our forces today are the people whom you and I are going to call upon, now that we are considered to be over the age bracket of interest, to defend our democratic right tomorrow, next week or next month. So how can we even in the first place class them as peace-autrement), au cours d'une période d'affectation, pendant le voyage ou dans l'accomplissement de fonctions qui s'y rattachent, tout programme de sport ou comportant une participation bénévole, exécuté au su et du consentement des autorités compétentes ou lorsque la responsabilité de l'employeur envers l'employé est évidente.

L'Association du Corps canadien déplore le fait que le Livre blanc du Gouvernement ne fait nullement mention des propositions concernant la législation sur les pensions d'invalidité des forces régulières en temps de paix. Nous tenons à signaler que le Livre blanc du Gouvernement s'efforce de faire ressortir qu'il y a 945,200 anciens combattants, jadis dans les forces canadiennes. Par contre, il est honteux de ne pas admettre l'existence des forces actuelles, dont chaque jour des membres reçoivent leur démobilisation avec honneur; ces derniers n'étant pas convenablement reconnus par le gouvernement du Canada, ils ne peuvent prendre place avec fierté aux côtés des 945,200 anciens combattants.

Avant de terminer aujourd'hui notre bref exposé de la situation régnant dans l'armée permanente, l'Association du Corps canadien prie le Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants de formuler la proposition suivante au Gouvernement: lorsque le traitement sans octroi de pension est recommandé par le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et que cette décision est transmise au ministère de la Défense nationale, le règlement devrait nettement prévoir que ce traitement puisse se poursuivre jusqu'à ce qu'il soit établi que l'affection en cause a fait l'objet du plein traitement prescrit, même si le traitement ou la convalescence de l'ex-militaire se prolonge au-delà d'un an après la démobilisation.

Des commentaires, monsieur le président?

Le président: Les membres du Comité?

M. Peters: L'allégation formulée par le Corps, selon laquelle les hommes des forces armées en temps de paix devraient être traités sur le même pied que les forces armées en temps de guerre m'intéresse beaucoup.

Mme Heesaker: Monsieur le président, en premier lieu, je sais—mes collègues ne l'ignorent pas non plus, comme la plupart des anciens combattants d'ailleurs—que la période actuelle que nous vivons peut difficilement être considérée comme un temps de paix. Nous vivons une période critique et les hommes des forces armées de l'heure actuelle sont ceux à qui nous ferons appel demain, la semaine prochaine ou le mois prochain pour défendre nos droits démocratiques. time forces? This is certainly not a peaceful world we are living in. Personally, as a World War II veteran, I feel there should be little difference in the protection that we of World War II enjoy and what the service people who are continuing to serve the armed forces should enjoy at the present time.

I also feel we cannot possibly attract the finest men and women to this country's armed forces unless we do give them protection of this kind. I mean, surely they hear about cases which are cited by our Pensions Advocate, our Honorary Vice-President and our Resolutions Chairman where some of their people are taken in courts and money is taken away from them after the courts have considered their income and the money the widow is to receive. This certainly must have an effect on the morale of people considering joining. Those of us who are veterans of Canada, who are raising boys and girls, are we going to recommend that our sons should join the armed forces when we are aware of some of these limitations that are protecting them? I have a son who is 13, he is very interested in the armed forces, he is also interested in belonging to a national veterans organization and perhaps some day being the Dominion President, as his father is, but would I recommend him to go into something that does not even give him the protection that the Compensation Act does. I still state that we are in a time of stress, not peace.

• 1640

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a difference. Of course, I have not thought much about it but it seems to me there is a difference between service people we send to Cyprus or the Gaza Strip and in some other fields of pretty active war and those who serve at Petawawa, Camp Borden and some of the other stations. It seems to me that the country in general does not look on this matter of peacetime service in relation to wartime service. I can see great justification in making a difference for certain categories because of the service they do, but I cannot see the people who are in the peacetime service—in fact I am scared some of them would get the hell out if they thought there was going to be any great effort necessary on their part.

The Chairman: I have doubts about that, Mr. Peters.

Mr. Peters: I would just like to know if the Corps is suggesting that there is a direct equation between peacetime service and vet-pouvons-nous, par conséquent, parler de forces armées en temps de paix. Nous ne vivons pas dans un monde pacifique. En tant qu'ancien combattant de la Deuxième Grande guerre, j'estime qu'on devrait assurer la même protection aux membres actuels des forces armées que celle qui nous a été accordée.

Comment pourrons-nous attirer des hommes et des femmes de qualité dans les forces armées, si nous ne leur accordons pas cette protection? En fait, ils sont au courant des cas cités par notre avocat des pensions, notre vice-président honoraire et notre président des résolutions. Ils savent que des anciens combattants ont dû faire des remboursements d'argent après étude par les tribunaux de leur revenu et de celui de leur épouse. Cela n'est pas de nature à améliorer le moral de ceux qui veulent s'enrôler. Croyez-vous que nous allons recommander à nos fils de s'enrôler alors que nous sommes au courant des limitations accordées à leur protection. J'ai un fils de 13 ans que le service dans les forces armées intéresse beaucoup et qui, peut-être un jour, sera membre d'une organisation d'anciens combattants et, comme son père, président national. Est-ce que je vais lui recommander de faire partie d'un mouvement qui ne lui assurerait pas la protection qu'offre la Loi sur les accidents du travail? Je tiens à répéter que nous vivons une période d'agitation. Ce n'est pas un temps de paix.

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, il me semble, à première vue qu'il y a une différence entre les hommes que nous envoyons à Chypre ou sur la lisière de Gaza ou à quelqu'autre endroit où la guerre sévit et ceux qui sont stationnés à Petawawa, à Camp Borden et à d'autres camps. Il me semble qu'on ne fait pas le point entre le service en temps de paix et le service en temps de guerre. Je crois qu'il faut établir une différence entre certaines catégories selon leur service. Je ne vois pas comment ceux qui sont affectés au service en temps de paix pourraient croire qu'on puisse exiger d'eux de grands sacrifices.

Le président: Permettez-moi d'exprimer des doutes à ce sujet, M. Peters.

M. Peters: J'aimerais savoir si le Corps suggère qu'il y a un rapport direct entre le service en temps de paix et les Anciens combatcrans and, if so, what special consideration are they, or are they not, asking for on behalf of those who serve in our peacetime forces?

The Chairman: Mr. Parsons?

Mr. Parsons: In wartime service you are covered, under Section 13(1) of the Pensions Act, for anything that is attributable to or incurred during service. In peacetime service, death, injury or disease must arise out of or be directly connected with your service duty. There is a vast difference. We have found that Section 13(2) in its present form—arising out of or directly connected with—has proven to be quite restrictive; too much so, in the opinion of most of us in the business. We dealt with this. I know I dealt with it for quite a while before the Woods Committee back in January 1966—which is a long time ago. Our feeling was that Clause 13(2) should be changed to contain something a little broader than it does at the present time, bringing the coverage for our servicemen in the peacetime forces, except, of course, those in the danger areas, as you mentioned, who come under the wartime section—I am talking now of those you see serving in Canada, out of the danger areas—to bring their coverage more in line with that provided by the compensation acts of all of the provinces. In other words, "on duty" would represent the liability of the employer to the employee—something along that line.

The Woods Committee came up with a suggestion which I think is a very good one. Instead of "arising out of or directly connected with service" they would simply say "related to service"—just the words "related to service"—as a new Section 13(2). I like that. I can see in that a coverage broad enough that they can then be taken care of when there is any relationship to their service, keeping in mind the compulsion of the service which compelled them to do that thing or be where they were.

That is, we are not asking that the peacetime serviceman be covered the same as in wartime—not for peacetime home service. That was a misunderstanding. We are not asking that. But we do ask that he have coverage equivalent to that, say, of a civil servant or a man in industry.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is that all?

Mr. Peters: Recently, in Ottawa, that has not been too much.

Mr. Parsons: Does that clear up the point?

[Interpretation]

tants et quels avantages sont ou non demandés à l'égard de ceux qui ont servi dans les forces en temps de paix?

Le président: M. Parsons?

M. Parsons: En temps de guerre, vous êtes protégé contre toute éventualité attribuable au service ou intervenue en cours de service, en vertu de l'article 13(1) de la Loi sur les pensions. S'il s'agit de service en temps de paix, le décès, la blessure ou la maladie doit provenir ou se rattacher directement au service commandé. La différence est grande. Nous avons constaté que les présents termes de l'article 13(2)—provenant ou directement rattaché—ont une portée très restrictive; trop, à mon avis, et à celui de la plupart d'entre nous. Nous avons traité cette question. Je sais que j'en ai traité un bon moment devant le comité Woods en janvier 1966. Nous pensions alors qu'il fallait modifier l'article 13(2) pour en étendre la portée de façon à inclure les membres du service en temps de paix. Ceux qui sont en service dans des secteurs dangereux font l'objet des dispositions relatives au temps de guerre. Je parle maintenant des hommes qui servent ici, au Canada, hors des secteurs dangereux pour qu'ils reçoivent une protection qui soit un peu plus en rapport avec celle que reçoivent les employés en vertu des lois sur les accidents du travail. Quelque chose de ce genre.

Le comité Woods a fait une très bonne suggestion. Au lieu de l'expression «provenant ou rattaché directement au service», on dirait «rattaché au service»—tout simplement—dans ce nouvel article 13(2). J'aime bien cela. La portée est assez étendue pour les protéger quand ils sont rattachés au service—compte tenu du service commandé qui les astreignait à poser tel acte ou à se trouver en tel lieu. Bref, nous ne demandons pas que les militaires reçoivent la même protection en temps de paix qu'en temps de guerre pas en tout cas pour ce qui est du service en temps de paix au Canada. Non, c'était un malentendu. Mais nous demandons qu'ils reçoivent une protection équivalente à celle, disons, du fonctionnaire ou de l'employé dans l'industrie.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): C'est tout!

M. Peters: Récemment, à Ottawa, cela n'a pas été excessif.

M. Parsons: La question est-elle éclaircie?

[Texte]

Mr. Peters: Yes; this "related to" would allow you to cover the situation in relation to Cyprus, or the Gaza Strip, or...

Mr. Parsons: No, it would not apply. Cyprus or the Gaza Strip...

The Chairman: I have to point out, Mr. Peters, that we have gone 15 minutes beyond the normal adjournment hour. Do we want to bring the delegation back and continue tomorrow? We have a major problem with staff. There are certain things we can expect them to do and certain things that it is not reasonable for us to expect of them, especially when Parliament is not sitting, and so on. What is the wish of the Committee? I understand you still have a fair amount to cover, Mrs. Heesaker?

Mr. Legault: If it could be completed within 10 minutes or so...

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No; there is one further page, but there is another document. Is that not so?

Mrs. Heesaker: That is right.

Mr. Bigg: We are not going to finish the document today.

The Chairman: What is the wish of the delegation? Would you like to come back tomorrow morning?

Mrs. Heesaker: We would prefer, if possible, to complete it. We would be very grateful if we could. We all live in our respective towns and cities and we would appreciate having the opportunity of completing it.

The Chairman: I have tried to use some discretion with briefs so that we would avoid this situation. It is not always possible to do so. We are going to run into some staff problems if we continue for a prolonged period.

Mrs. Heesaker: We do not think this will take very long. We would like to read it into the record.

The Chairman: Will members of the Committee keep that in mind, please, and make their questions sharp?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sharp or short?

The Chairman: Sharp.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, could I ask just one question? Is there a legal definition for the difference between peacetime and the situation where there is an active theatre of war that our peacetime forces will be serving?

[Interprétation]

M. Peters: Oui; l'expression «rattaché au» permettrait de corriger la question de Chypre, de la lisière Gaza ou...

M. Parsons: Non, elle ne s'appliquerait pas. Chypre et la lisière Gaza...

Le président: Je vous rappelle, monsieur Peters, que nous avons déjà dépassé de 15 minutes le moment de l'ajournement. Voulez-vous que la délégation revienne demain? Le personnel nous pose un problème. Il y a certaines choses que nous pouvons lui demander et d'autres que nous ne pouvons pas, surtout lorsque le Parlement ne siège pas. Que désire le Comité? Il vous reste, Mme Heesaker, une bonne partie de votre mémoire.

M. Legault: Si vous pouviez l'achever en quelque 10 minutes...

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Non. Il reste encore une page. Mais il y a en outre un autre document, n'est-ce pas?

Mme Heesaker: C'est exact.

M. Bigg: Nous ne pourrons pas finir le document aujourd'hui.

Le président: Que désire la délégation? Voulez-vous revenir demain matin?

Mme Heesaker: Nous préférions le terminer si possible. Nous résidons dans des villes différentes et nous aimerions l'achever.

Le président: J'ai essayé d'éviter cette situation. Ce n'est pas toujours possible. Nous allons nous heurter à des problèmes de personnel si nous poursuivons longtemps encore.

Mme Heesaker: Nous croyons que ce sera court. Nous aimerions poursuivre.

Le président: Messieurs les membres feront bien de s'en tenir à des questions claires.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Courtes ou claires?

Le président: Claires.

M. Peters: Puis-je poser une seule question? Existe-t-il une distinction légale entre le temps de paix et un théâtre de guerre active que nos troupes sont appelées à desservir?

The Chairman: May I suggest that perhaps the delegates might like to prepare a supplementary memorandum on this point? We could insert it in our transcript. Would that be satisfactory?

Mr. Parsons: It is already in the Woods Committee Report in full, sir.

The Chairman: And you are endorsing the Woods Committee recommendations?

Mr. Parsons: It is right in there in full; No. 61.

The Chairman: That is fine. I think that covers it.

Mrs. Heesaker: Recommendation 61; it is there and we endorse it fully, sir.

The Chairman: That is it; thank you.

Mrs. Heesaker: I would now ask you, gentlemen, to look at the supplement I gave you. We will read that.

Proposed Directorate of Pensions, Department of Veterans Affairs.

The Canadian Corps Association would wish to register its objections to the proposed establishment of a Directorate of Pensions within the Department of Veterans Affairs, to which would be transferred the administrative and medical staff of the Commission and which would have the responsibility for initial adjudication.

Traditionally, pensions have been administered in Canada by a Commission responsible only to Parliament, through an appropriate Minister of the Crown. This principle was first set out in the Pension Regulations of August 4, 1914, excerpts from which are quoted hereunder:

> (1) There shall be a Commission to be known as the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada, consisting of 3 members appointed by the Governor in Council (hereinafter called the Commission).
> (2) Subject to the regulations hereinafter set out, the Commissioner shall have exclusive jurisdiction and authority to consider and make all grants and payments of military and naval pensions, and of gratuities, allowances and assistance to persons wounded, injured or incapacitated in the military or naval service of Canada (hereinafter called Members of the Forces), or to their dependent relatives, and shall have exclusive jurisdiction and authority to deal with all matters pertaining to such pensions, gratuities, allowances and assistances.

[Interpretation]

Le président: La délégation pourrait peut-être préparer sur ce point un mémoire complémentaire que nous pourrions insérer dans notre compte rendu.

M. Parsons: Il a déjà été versé intégralement au rapport du Comité Woods.

Le président: Et vous souscrivez aux recommandations du comité Woods?

M. Parsons: C'est écrit en tous mots: n° 61.

Le président: Très bien.

Mme Heesaker: La recommandation n° 61: elle est là et nous y souscrivons sans réserve, monsieur.

Le président: C'est cela. Merci.

Mme Heesaker: Je vous demanderais maintenant, messieurs, d'examiner le supplément que je vous ai remis. Nous allons le lire.
Objet: Direction des pensions au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants

L'Association du Corps canadien veut faire savoir qu'elle s'oppose à l'établissement proposé, au sein du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, d'une Direction des pensions, à laquelle serait transféré le personnel administratif et médical de la Commission canadienne des pensions, et qui aurait la responsabilité de l'adjudication initiale.

Au Canada, les pensions ont toujours été administrées par une commission responsable au Parlement seulement, par l'entremise d'un ministre approprié de la Couronne. Ce principe a été énoncé en premier lieu dans le Règlement des pensions du 4 août 1914, dont voici des extraits:

> (1) Est établie une commission devant être connue sous le nom de la Commission de pension du Canada, se composant de trois commissaires nommés par le gouverneur en conseil (ci-après appelée la Commission).
> (2) Sous réserve des règlements énoncés ci-après, le commissaire aura la juridiction et l'autorité exclusives pour examiner et accorder toute demande et effectuer le paiement des pensions militaires et navales, des gratifications, allocations et secours, aux personnes blessées, traumatisées ou frappées d'invalidité en activité de service dans les forces militaires ou navales du Canada (ci-après appelées membres des forces), ou aux parents qui sont à leur charge, et aura la juridiction et l'autorité exclusives pour régler toute question concernant lesdites pensions,

[Texte]

The Pension Act of July 1 1969 provided for the establishment of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada in accordance with Section 3 (1) thereof which stated:

• 1650

> 3 (1) There shall be a Commission to be known as "The Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada" which shall consist of three Commissioners who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council.

Section 7 of this Act stated that the Commission "shall have full power and authority and exclusive jurisdiction to deal with all matters pertaining to pensions etc." In the explanatory note concerning this section the draft bill stated:

> 7. This section continues the Commission in its former position of independence so far as pensions are concerned. The decisions rendered cannot be questioned by any higher authority.

The point we are attempting to establish is that adjudication of pensions—and in fact all matters relating to their administration—have always been the responsibility of an independent agency, reporting through a Minister directly to Parliament.

The proposal in the White Paper suggests that the initial responsibility for adjudication should now be transferred to the Department of Veterans Affairs, under a new Directorate of Pensions. By the nature of the departmental set-up in our government system, the Director responsible for this Directorate would necessarily come under the Deputy Minister of Veterans Affairs and would thus be an officer reporting directly to the Minister. In this regard it seems obvious that, in establishing a Directorate of Pensions as proposed, the principle of independence is being sacrificed.

It might be properly stated that appeals at the proposed Entitlement Board level, and further at the Appeal Board Section level, would be handled by a new Pension Commission whose autonomy would be preserved. Be that as it may, the operation of pensions below the level of appeal would be a Departmental matter—and would be subject to the influences and controls in the same manner as other Departmental Administration.

[Interprétation]

> gratifications ou allocations et lesdits secours.

La Loi des pensions du 1er juillet 1919 prévoyait l'établissement de la Commission de pension du Canada, en vertu du paragraphe 1 de l'article 3 de la Loi, qui se lisait ainsi qu'il suit:

> «3 (1) Est établie une commission devant être connue sous le nom de «la Commission de Pension du Canada», se composant de trois commissaires nommés par le Gouverneur en conseil.»

L'article 7 de cette loi portait que la Commission «a plein pouvoir et autorité et la juridiction exclusive pour régler toutes les affaires relatives aux pensions...» L'annotation concernant cet article du projet de loi se lisait ainsi:

> «7. Cet article continue de reconnaître la position indépendante dont jouissait la Commission en ce qui concerne les pensions. Les décisions qu'elle prend ne peuvent être mises en question par une autorité supérieure.»

Le point que nous tentons d'établir est que l'adjudication des pensions—et en vérité toutes les questions se rattachant à leur administration—ont toujours été la responsabilité d'une agence indépendante faisant rapport directement au Parlement par l'entremise d'un ministre.

Le Livre blanc propose maintenant que la responsabilité de la décision initiale soit transférée à une nouvelle Direction des pensions, au sein du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. De par la nature même de la hiérarchie établie dans les ministères, en vertu de notre système de gouvernement, le directeur placé à la tête de cette direction relèverait nécessairement du sous-ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants et serait par conséquent un fonctionnaire qui se rapporterait directement au ministre. A ce point de vue, il semble évident que l'on sacrifie le principe de l'indépendance en établissant, ainsi qu'il est proposé, une Direction générale des pensions.

Il serait peut-être vrai de dire que les appels interjetés à l'échelon des bureaux d'admissibilité et ensuite à celui de la Division des bureaux d'appels, seraient traités par une nouvelle Commission des pensions dont l'autonomie serait sauvegardée. Quoi qu'il en soit, l'administration des pensions, jusqu'à l'échelon des appels, relèverait du Ministère et serait assujettie aux mêmes influences et aux mêmes contrôles que le reste de l'administration du Ministère.

[Text]

We subscribe that the Woods Committee found no flaw in regard to this question of independence of the Commission. We can only presume that the Committee held to the principle that pensions should continue to be administered by the Commission as heretofore, except that a number of procedural improvements were recommended, including a separate appellate body.

Concerning the necessity to maintain independence, we refer to the Woods Report, volume 3, chapter 46—Conclusion at page 1307 wherein it states:

> "The Pension Commission is free to operate independently of direction or control of the Minister. This traditional arrangement has been the consistent policy of all Governments and all Parliaments since the inception of the Pension Act in 1919. Your Committee desires to emphasize and affirm the importance of this arrangement. It serves to protect the Commission—and the administration of Pensions—from political interference or control. Also, it is intended to create an atmosphere of independence and impartiality for the administration of pensions."

Quite apart from the sacrifice of independence, the Canadian Corps Association would wish to point to another major objection in regard to the suggested transfer of pension matters to a Directorate of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

We refer to the fact that this Department has, since its inception at the end of World War II, been responsible to administer welfare matters where the basic decision is one of need. This applies in particular to applications for War Veterans Allowance and to the Assistance Fund for War Veterans Allowance recipients. Contrasted with this is the basic principle of pension awards in the matter of entitlement, which is "as of right".

• 1655

The staff of the Department has been engaged, in recent years, in handling welfare applications of various types. While we in this Association have no observations to make regarding any lack of performance in this particular field, we do suggest, most emphatically, that the same staff which has become accustomed to handling welfare applications should not be associated in any way with the initial adjudication of applications under the Pension Act.

[Interpretation]

A notre avis, le Comité Woods n'a constaté aucune lacune découlant de l'indépendance de la Commission. Nous ne pouvons que le présumer que le Comité à adhéré au principe que la Commission devrait continuer d'administrer les pensions, comme ce fut le cas jusqu'à présent, sauf que le Comité a recommandé qu'un certain nombre d'améliorations soient apportées à la procédure, y compris l'établissement d'un organisme d'appel autonome.

Relativement à la nécessité de maintenir l'indépendance en matière de pensions, nous nous en référons au Rapport Woods, volume 3, chapitre 46, Conclusion, page 1493, qui se lit en partie ainsi qu'il suit:

> «La Commission des pensions est libre d'agir en dehors de toute directive ou tutelle du ministre. Une telle entente est de tradition et a toujours été respectée par tous les gouvernements et tous les parlements depuis l'adoption de la loi des pensions de 1919. Le Comité désire faire ressortir et affirmer l'importance d'une telle entente. Elle sert à protéger la Commission et la gestion des pensions contre toute ingérence ou régie politique. De plus, sa raison d'être est de créer une atmosphère d'indépendance et d'impartialité dans l'administration des pensions.»

En plus de la perte de l'indépendance, l'Association du Corps canadien veut faire valoir une autre objection majeure au transfert de l'administration des pensions à une Direction du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants.

Nous voulons parler du fait que, depuis sa création à la fin de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, ce ministère est responsable de l'attribution de prestations de bien-être social essentiellement fondées sur le besoin du bénéficiaire. Cela est particulièrement vrai des demandes d'allocations aux anciens combattants et des suppléments accordés aux allocataires par le Fonds de secours. Par contre, selon un principe fondamental, l'admission aux avantages de la Loi sur les pensions est accordée «de droit».

Depuis un certain nombre d'années, le personnel du Ministère s'occupe de demandes de prestations d'assistance sociale de diverses catégories. Bien que notre association n'ait aucune observation à formuler concernant la manière dont les fonctionnaires du Ministère se sont acquittés de ces fonctions, nous voulons souligner le plus énergiquement possible que ce personnel, qui s'est habitué à traiter des demandes d'assistance sociale, ne devrait être associé d'aucune manière à l'adjudication

[Texte]

Those who support the proposal for the Directorate of Pensions might well say that there is no intention to use ordinary D. V. A. staff in regard to the new duties which concern pensions. Even if this were true, we would still have to object on the grounds that the supervisory staff—and perhaps even the entire philosophy—of the Department would be contrary to established principles of independence—seen as so necessary in pensions administration.

One must consider, also, the disadvantages of having pensions handled by the Department of Veterans Affairs at the initial stages, insofar as the applicant is concerned. The World War II Veteran generally acknowledges that the Department of Veterans Affairs is the channel through which he should apply in regard to those discretionary matters adjudicated upon on the basis of a "means test". The prime example is, of course, War Veterans Allowance.

If this Veteran is now required to make application for Pension Benefits through the Department of Veterans Affairs, and is refused such benefit or benefits, he quite legitimately could complain on the general grounds that his application was not handled in the same independent manner to which veterans had become accustomed throughout the years.

We in the Canadian Corps Association see no advantage whatsoever in transferring the more junior functions of the Commission to a Directorate in the Department of Veterans Affairs. Moreover we saw very little criticism in the Woods Report which would substantiate a move of this nature. So far as we can determine, the objective of the Woods Committee was to divest the Commission of the responsibility for final appeal leaving the regular matters of adjudication and administration where they were, subject of course to the procedural improvements recommended in the Woods Committee Report.

The Chairman: There is a tremendous amount in this section and I just regret that we could not have allocated our time in such a way as to give more discussion to it. I say this because this is novel, it has not been discussed in this way in other presentations initiale des demandes soumises en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions.

Ceux qui appuient l'établissement d'une Direction générale des pensions pourraient fort bien dire qu'on ne se propose aucunement d'utiliser le personnel actuel du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants pour remplir les nouvelles fonctions découlant de l'administration des pensions. Même s'il en était ainsi, nous devrions quand même nous y opposer du fait que le personnel préposé à la surveillance, et peut-être même tout l'ensemble de la philosophie du Ministère—iraient à l'encontre du principe reconnu de l'indépendance, que l'on considère comme étant absolument essentiel à l'administration des pensions.

Nous devons considérer, en outre, les désavantages qu'il y aurait à confier au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants les premières étapes du traitement des demandes de pension, du point de vue du requérant. La plupart des anciens combattants de la Seconde Guerre mondiale reconnaissent que le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants est l'organisme auquel ils doivent s'adresser pour obtenir les prestations discrétionnaires assujetties à une «évaluation des moyens». Le meilleur exemple en est, cela va sans dire, les allocations aux anciens combattants.

Si l'ancien combattant doit maintenant présenter sa demande de prestations de pension par l'entremise du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et que ces prestations lui sont refusées, il pourrait très légitimement se plaindre de ce que sa demande n'a pas été traitée avec le même esprit d'indépendance auquel les anciens combattants s'étaient habitués depuis de nombreuse années.

Les membres de notre association ne voient aucun avantage à ce que les fonctions les moins importantes de la Commission soient transférées à une direction du ministère des affaires des anciens combattants. En outre, nous n'avons constaté dans le Rapport Woods que très peu de critiques pouvant justifier une telle mesure. Pour autant que nous puissions l'établir, l'objectif du Comité Woods était de priver la Commission de la responsabilité de l'appel en dernière instance, tout en lui laissant celle des questions ordinaires d'adjudication et d'administration, sous réserve des améliorations de la procédure proposées par le Rapport Woods.

Le président: La matière est très dense, je regrette qu'on ne puisse pas lui accorder du temps pour qu'on en discute davantage. Je dis cela parce que c'est nouveau, qu'on n'en a pas discuté de cette façon dans d'autres mémoires que nous avons reçus, tandis qu'une grande that we have received, whereas much of what was said before is sort of repeating what we had already done.

I do not know what the Committee wants to do at this point. We have now gone substantially beyond the time that we normally proceed. What is the wish of the Committee? Do you wish to hear the rest of the brief now or to invite the delegation to come back.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, in studying the recommendations along with the other submissions the Committee will have an opportunity to discuss this further.

The Chairman: This is a very novel section and, to my knowledge, it is the first time we have had an explicit discussion of such a nature in a brief. Now time will not permit the kind of cross-examination that I think we should give to it.

Mr. MacRae: I will make an unpopular suggestion, Mr. Chairman. I quite agree that this is very well written.

The Chairman: Yes, it is.

Mr. MacRae: It has a lot of good ideas. I would suggest that we come back at 7 o'clock.

The Chairman: What is the wish of the Committee?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I agree with that.

The Chairman: What is our problem with regard to staff and getting transcript?

Mr. MacRae: That is the trouble.

• 1700

The Chairman: There are major problems in this connection. Mr. Levesque, could you comment.

The Clerk of the Committee: I would have to see the Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding that it would not be transcribed the fact remains that members of the Committee and those presenting the brief would at least have a good sound discussion on the matter and this would be of benefit to us. I would suggest, even though the evidence cannot be transcribed, that we ask any questions we wish on it.

The Chairman: If I could just deviate, I understand the Legion has a reception tonight and I am sure there are other matters that do affect some of us. It is a case of trying to be in two places at the same time, but I certainly think . . .

part de ce qui a été dit auparavant ne fait que répéter ce qui a déjà été fait.

Je ne sais pas ce que le Comité désire faire en ce moment. Nous avons déjà dépassé le temps alloué normalement pour notre réunion. Que désire le Comité? Voulez-vous entendre le reste du mémoire maintenant, ou inviter la délégation à revenir?

M. Badanai: Monsieur le président, lors de l'étude des recommandations présentées en même temps que d'autres dépositions, le Comité aura l'occasion de discuter de cela davantage.

Le président: C'est là une section très nouvelle et à mon avis, c'est la première fois que nous avons une discussion explicite d'une telle nature dans un mémoire. Le temps dont nous disposons ne nous permettra pas de débattre la question à fond.

M. MacRae: Je veux formuler quelque chose de très impopulaire. Je suis d'accord que ce mémoire est très bien écrit.

Le président: Oui, en effet.

M. MacRae: Il renferme de très bonnes idées. Je propose qu'on revienne à 7 heures.

Le président: Quels sont les désirs du Comité?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je suis d'accord.

Le président: Quels sont les problèmes touchant le personnel et la transcription?

M. MacRae: Voilà le problème.

Le président: Il y a des problèmes graves à ce sujet. Monsieur Lévesque, pourriez-vous faire des commentaires.

Le secrétaire du Comité: Il faudrait que je vois les chefs de personnel.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): En dépit du fait que ce ne serait pas retranscrit, les membres du comité et les personnes qui présentent le mémoire auraient au moins l'occasion d'avoir une franche discussion à ce sujet et cela nous serait d'un grand bienfait. Je propose même si la preuve ne peut pas être transcrite que nous puissions demander quelque question que ce soit à ce sujet.

Le président: Dans un autre ordre d'idées, je crois que la Légion a une réception ce soir et je suis certain qu'il y a d'autres questions qui ont des répercussions sur certains d'entre nous. On ne peut pas être à deux endroits en même temps mais je crois.....

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Perhaps those of us who have not been invited can carry on.

Mrs. Heesaker: Including those of the Canadian Corps Association.

The Chairman: There is a delegation from another country visiting here and I think they are extending some hospitality. This is just to set the record straight.

We could arrange for half an hour tomorrow morning, with full facilities, but this then involves staying over.

Mrs. Heesaker: Would it be satisfactory if our Dominion Pensions Advocate, I and our Honourary Vice-President remain? The other two gentlemen have appointments tomorrow. However, the three of us would be most willing to appear again in the morning, if this would be of assistance to the Committee.

The Chairman: I think that would be better.

Mr. Bigg: I think that is a good idea because the Committee is not all present, for one thing.

The Chairman: We all have our commitments.

Mrs. Heesaker: We understand this, sir, definitely.

Mr. Bigg: I am quite willing to stay tonight but I realize there are some who may not be able to remain.

The Chairman: I am perfectly happy with whatever is decided.

Mr. Legault: I would be agreeable to your suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that we sit about half an hour tomorrow on the understanding that two or three of our witnesses could remain.

Mr. Bigg: And that would give us a little more time to look the brief over.

The Chairman: Could we start at 9 o'clock in the morning, or a little earlier.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

The Chairman: I think 9.30 satisfies everyone.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, many of us have office work to do and if we could have half an hour in the morning we could get some of that out of the way.

[Interprétation]

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Mais ceux d'entre nous qui n'ont pas été invités, nous pourrions poursuivre la discussion.

Mme Heesaker: Y compris ceux de l'Association du Corps canadien.

Le président: Il y a une délégation d'un pays étranger qui nous rend visite et je pense qu'ils nous ont lancé une invitation. Cela n'est que pour mettre les choses au clair.

Nous pourrions convenir d'une demi-heure demain matin, avec toutes les ressources nécessaires mais cela veut dire que nous aurions à prolonger notre réunion.

Mme Heesaker: Serait-il satisfaisant si l'avocat des pensions du Dominion, moi-même et notre vice-président honoraire restent sur place? Les deux autres messieurs ont des rendez-vous demain. Toutefois, tous les trois, nous serions très heureux d'être présents de nouveau le matin si cela pouvait aider au Comité.

Le président: Je crois que cette solution serait la meilleure.

M. Bigg: Je crois que c'est une bonne idée car le Comité n'est pas entièrement présent.

Le président: Nous avons tous nos engagements.

Mme Heesaker: Nous comprenons cela, monsieur, en effet.

M. Bigg: J'étais bien prêt à revenir ce soir, mais je comprends qu'il y en a qui ne peuvent pas demeurer ici.

Le président: J'accepterai volontiers quelque décision qui sera prise.

M. Legault: Je suis d'accord avec vous, monsieur le président, nous pourrions siéger une demi-heure demain pourvu que deux ou trois de nos témoins demeurent.

M. Bigg: Et cela nous donnerait un peu plus de temps pour étudier le mémoire.

Le président: Pourrions-nous commencer à 9 heures du matin ou un peu plus tôt?

Quelques membres: Oh non.

Le président: Je pense que 9h30 convient à tout le monde.

M. MacRae: Monsieur le président, plusieurs d'entre nous ont du travail de bureau à faire et si nous pouvions avoir une demi-heure dans la matinée nous pourrions éliminer un peu de ce travail.

[Text]

The Chairman: Mr. MacRae, I assure you that no one knows that better than I do.

I am sorry to have to ask you to stay over but I do feel that it would not be doing justice to this section of your brief to treat it in a cursory way. I would much prefer it this way.

Mrs. Heesaker: Fine. It will be a pleasure for us to remain, and we thank you gentlemen for inviting us.

The Chairman: Thank you.

[Interpretation]

Le président: Je peux vous assurer, monsieur MacRae que personne ne sait cela mieux que moi. Je regrette d'avoir à vous réinviter demain matin, mais c'est un sujet si important que nous ne pouvons pas le laisser tomber. Je préférerais qu'on agisse ainsi.

Mme Heesaker: Bien, nous serons heureux de rester et nous vous remercions messieurs de votre invitation.

Le président: Merci.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

TUESDAY, September 30, 1969.
(27)

The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs met this day at 9.35 a.m., the Chairman, Mr. Lloyd Francis, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Badanai, Bigg, Francis, Guay (St. Boniface), Legault, MacRae, Marshall, Peters, Turner (London East), Whicher (10).

Other Member present: Mr. Knowles, M.P., (Winnipeg North Centre).

Witnesses: From The Canadian Corps Association: Mr. Leslie Crooks, First Vice-President; Mrs. Shirley Wood Heesaker, Honorary Secretary; Mr. E. J. Parsons, Pension Advocate and Mr. C. H. Chadderton, Honorary Vice-President. From The Canadian Paraplegic Association: Mr. G. K. Langford, Q.C., Managing Director; Mr. A. C. Clarke, Assistant Managing Director and Mr. Anthony Damiano. From The Department of Veterans Affairs: Mr. D. K. Ward, Chief Pensions Advocate.

The Committee completed the questioning of the delegation from the Canadian Corps Association and began hearing the representation of the Canadian Paraplegic Association. Mr. Langford introduced the delegates and Mr. Clarke read their brief.

It was agreed, that the document entitled "Proceedings of Committee Sessions" and the table "Multiple Disability Casualties", be appended to this day's evidence. (See Appendix "F").

At 12.05 p.m., the Committee recessed to 2.00 p.m.

PROCÈS-VERBAUX

Le MARDI 30 septembre 1969.
(27)

Le Comité permanent des affaires des anciens combattants se réunit ce matin à 9 h. 35, sous la présidence de M. Lloyd Francis, président.

Députés présents: MM. Badanai, Bigg, Francis, Guay (Saint-Boniface), Legault, MacRae, Marshall, Peters, Turner (London-Est), Whicher—(10).

De même que: M. Knowles, député (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre).

Témoins: De l'Association du Corps canadien: M. Leslie Crooks, premier vice-président; M^me^ Shirley Wood Heesaker, secrétaire honoraire; M. E. J. Parsons, avocat des pensions; et M. C. H. Chadderton, vice-président honoraire. De l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques: M. G. K. Langford, c.r., directeur; M. A. C. Clarke, directeur adjoint; et M. Anthony Damiano. Du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants: M. D. K. Ward, avocat en chef des pensions.

Le Comité termine son interrogatoire de la délégation de l'Association du Corps canadien, puis l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques commence à présenter son exposé. M. Langford présente les délégués et M. Clarke donne lecture de leur mémoire.

Il est décidé que le document intitulé «Compte rendu des délibérations du comité» et le tableau intitulé «Cas d'infirmités multiples» soient annexés au compte rendu des délibérations de ce jour. (Voir Appendice «F»).

A midi 05, le Comité lève la séance, pour se réunir de nouveau à 2 h. de l'après-midi.

AFTERNOON MEETING
(28)

The Committee resumed sitting at 2.10 p.m. The Chairman, Mr. Francis, presiding.

Members present: Messrs. Badanai, Francis, Guay (St. Boniface), Legault, MacRae, Marshall, Peters, Turner (London East), Whicher (9).

Other Member present: Mr. Knowles, M.P., (Winnipeg North Centre).

Witnesses: From the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded: Messrs. F. J. L. Woodcock, Executive Secretary; C. H. Chadderton, Honorary Life Member and Mr. Chris Davino, President.

The Chairman welcomed the delegation from The Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded. Mr. Woodcock introduced the delegates and Mr. C. H. Chadderton read their brief.

At 4.30 p.m., the questioning of the witnesses being concluded, the Committee adjourned to Wednesday, October 1, 1969 at 9.30 a.m.

SÉANCE DE L'APRÈS-MIDI
(28)

Le Comité se réunit de nouveau à 2 h. 10 de l'après-midi. Le président, M. Francis occupe le fauteuil.

Députés présents: MM. Badanai, Francis, Guay (Saint-Boniface), Legault, MacRae, Marshall, Peters, Turner (London-Est), Whicher—(9).

De même que: M. Knowles, député (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre).

Témoins: De l'Association sir Arthur Pearson des aveugles de guerre: MM. F. J. L. Woodcock, secrétaire exécutif, C. H. Chadderton, membre honoraire à vie, et Chris Davino, président.

Le président accueille la délégation de l'Association sir Arthur Pearson des aveugles de guerre. M. Woodcock présente les délégués et M. C. H. Chadderton donne lecture de leur mémoire.

A 4 h. 30 de l'après-midi, l'interrogatoire des témoins étant terminé, le Comité s'ajourne jusqu'au mercredi 1er octobre 1969, à 9 h. 30 du matin.

EVIDENCE

Recorded by Electronic Apparatus

Tuesday, September 30, 1969.

• 0939

The Chairman: Will the Committee come to order? Last night we heard the brief from the Canadian Corps Association and the last section of the brief read by Mrs. Heesaker yesterday raised a number of questions which are of priority in the White Paper and at that time I thought this section of the brief certainly deserved a more adequate examination by members of the Committee and we have deferred it until this morning. I want to thank members of the delegation who have stayed over; Mr. Crooks on my right, Mrs. Heesaker, Mr. Parsons and Mr. Chadderton. They are here this morning for the convenience of the members of the Committee to assist in answering questions. Mrs. Heesaker or Mr. Crooks, do you want to say anything at this point?

• 0940

Mrs. Shirley Wood Heesaker (Dominion Honorary Secretary, Canadian Corps Association): Mr. Chairman, do you wish the supplementary material reread? It is there before you.

The Chairman: I do not think it is necessary to reread it. It is now in the transcript of the proceedings, Mrs. Heesaker, but I know that it certainly has a good deal of content and is well done. We are very pleased to have it.

Mrs. Heesaker: We are quite prepared, sir, to continue with the question and answer period, if that is the wish of the Committee.

The Chairman: Fine. Who is first on the list?

Mrs. Heesaker: Would it be of any assistance if we presented some material with information that we would like to present to the Committee, would that help?

The Chairman: Fine, please do so.

Mr. C. H. Chadderton (Dominion Honorary Vice-President, Canadian Corps Association): Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, speaking in support of this recommendation of the Canadian Corps Association to the effect that there not be established a director of pensions within DVA, I thought it might be of assistance to the Committee if I were to throw out

(Enregistrement électronique)

Le mardi 30 septembre 1969

Le président: Nous allons maintenant ouvrir la séance. Hier soir, nous avons entendu le mémoire présenté par l'Association du Corps canadien. La dernière partie de ce mémoire lue par M^me^ Heesaker a soulevé un certain nombre de questions qui ont la priorité dans le Livre blanc. J'ai pensé alors que nous devrions revenir ce matin pour continuer l'étude en profondeur de ces choses. Je veux remercier les membres de la délégation qui ont bien voulu revenir aujourd'hui, notamment M. Crooks, M^me^ Heesaker, M. Parsons et M. Chadderton. Ils sont présents encore ce matin pour rendre service aux membres du Comité et répondre à leurs questions, au besoin. Alors, aimeriez-vous prendre la parole à ce moment-ci, M^me^ Heesaker ou M. Crooks?

Mme Shirley Wood Heesaker (Secrétaire nationale honoraire de l'Association du Corps canadien): Monsieur le président, désirez-vous que je reprenne la lecture des mémoires additionnels?

Le président: Je ne crois pas la chose nécessaire. Ils ont été portés au compte rendu de notre séance d'hier. Il s'agit là d'un document important et très bien présenté. Il nous fait plaisir de l'avoir.

Mme Heesaker: Nous pourrions procéder à une période de questions et de réponses, si tel est le désir du Comité.

Le président: D'accord. Qui veut prendre la parole?

Mme Heesaker: Est-ce que cela vous serait utile que nous présentions certaines données et certains renseignements?

Le président: La chose nous va.

M. C. H. Chadderton (Vice-président national honoraire de l'Association du Corps canadien): Monsieur le président, messieurs, pour appuyer la recommandation formulée par l'Association du Corps canadien s'opposant à la création d'une Direction des pensions au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, je crois qu'il pourrait être utile au some information which could be under the heading of some food for thought because our feeling about it is that in the White Paper, the suggestion to set up a directorate of pensions is really asking us to "buy a pig in a poke". We were talking about this last night; we were contrasting that proposal with the Woods Committee proposal which deals with an appeal board. I know there has been criticism of the fact that the Woods Committee went into too much detail; their report was too weighty; it was too thick; but the one thing about it we have found is that it certainly gives you all the details of any proposal they have made, even to the historical background, for instance, of the appeal board. It gave the reasons why the appeal board of the twenties failed and the appeal court of the thirties failed. The Woods Committee gave suggestions on why an appeal board of the sixties and seventies would not fail. They also went into all the where, what, why, when and how of how an appeal board would be set up. We could not help contrasting this with the fact that we are given a few lines in the White Paper which would at one fell swoop transfer all the guts of the Pension Commission over to the department. We were posing some questions about this, we do not have the answers, and I do not know that the Committee has them.

First, what about the district staffs of the Pension Commission; the people who toil for the Pension Commission out in the districts. We do not know whether it is proposed to transfer them to DVA or not. If not, then we can see a real conundrum because you would have the pension medical examiner sending in an initial case to the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Veterans Affairs would look at it, but it would really be a Commission matter. If the Department of Veterans Affairs did not like it, if they did not think it was written up properly, who is going to discipline the people back in the field; the DVA people or the Commission people? I mean they would be wandering around in the district without any head at all.

Another thing is the Medical Advisory Branch. The Woods Committee made some proposals and suggestions about the Medical Advisory Branch, but there certainly was no suggestion that it be transferred away from its own Commission. We feel that in the Medical Advisory Branch—I think I am speaking certainly for a number of veterans' organizations—they have a great esprit de corps. They have 18 or 20 top medical people who have been doing a pretty fair job of everything. At the moment they think they belong to the first team. What are you going

[Interpretation]

Comité que je donne des renseignements pertinents, parce que nous croyons que, dans le Livre blanc, la suggestion visant à établir une Direction des pensions nous demande ni plus ni moins de signer un chèque en blanc. Nous en avons discuté hier encore. Je sais qu'il y a eu de la critique à l'endroit du Comité Woods qui a proposé la création d'une commission d'appel. On s'y est acharné sur trop de détails. Chose sûre, c'est qu'on y trouve tous les détails nécessaires touchant les propositions qui ont été formulées. En ce qui concerne l'historique de la Commission d'appel, on nous dit pourquoi la commission ou le tribunal d'appel des années 1920 a échoué. Le Comité Woods dit aussi pourquoi une commission d'appel mise sur pied au cours des années 1960 ou 1970 ne faillirait pas. On explique en détails l'établissement et le fonctionnement du tribunal d'appel. Par contre, le Livre blanc ne dit que quelques mots sur le transfert de la Commission des pensions au ministère. Nous nous sommes interrogés à ce sujet. Nous attendons des réponses et nous ignorons si le Comité peut nous les donner.

Tout d'abord qu'adviendrait-il du personnel de district de la Commission des pensions? Seraient-ils mutés ou non au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants? Dans la négative, cela pourrait causer de graves problèmes, parce qu'il y aurait l'examinateur médical qui pourrait examiner un cas, l'envoyer au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, et ce ministère l'étudierait, alors que le cas devrait relever de la Commission. Supposons que le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants n'agrée pas une décision parce qu'elle est mal rédigée, qui va reprendre les agents du district? Les agents du ministère ou ceux de la Commission? On écrit à l'aveuglette, sans direction aucune.

Un autre point, c'est celui de la direction consultative médicale. Le Comité Woods a formulé certaines propositions à ce sujet, mais il n'a pas proposé qu'elle ne relève plus de la Commission. Nous estimons que la Direction consultative médicale—et je crois exprimer l'opinion d'un grand nombre d'Associations d'anciens combattants,—est animé d'un bon esprit de corps. On y compte 18 à 20 personnes qui font un excellent travail et, à l'heure actuelle, elles croient appartenir à la première équipe. Que va devenir cet esprit de corps, si vous les faites passer à une autre équipe?

to do to that esprit de corps if you relegate them to the second team because any way we look at it, any way you slice the cake in pensions the first team is going to be the Commission, and whatever appeal structure you set up. The second team is going to be the people who are doing the initial adjudication. The Medical Advisory Branch will be divorced, presumably, from the people for whom they have toiled all these years, and they are going to be placed under some new director of pensions.

Another thought came to us, that on the present Commission, which is really the boss of the Medical Advisory Branch, there are at least five doctors. So there is a Commission which is at least partly medically oriented. If you set up a new director of pensions within DVA, I do not know whether the thought is that he will be a doctor or not, but, certainly the Medical Advisory Branch would then come under him, and through him they would come under the Deputy Minister of Veterans Affairs and they would be completely divorced from the medically oriented Commission for which they have toiled, and I think toiled well, all through the years.

There is a third thought, food for thought, I think that is very, very serious; that is, this Claims and Review Branch of the Commission. In the Woods Report there were some suggestions on how the Claims and Review Branch could be improved, and I think the major suggestion was that they should be given some more help; they are overworked. However I did not see any suggestion they should be transferred out from under the Commission for which they have worked and toiled loyally all these years into somebody else's backyard where they are going to toil presumably.

Now the Claims Review Branch, and this is a very important point to us, has people with a tremendous amount of expertise on some of the lesser known sections of the Pension Act. By the lesser known, I mean for instance, whether you divide a pension, whether you take part of a pensioner's pension and give it to his wife because she is separated from him; whether she is entitled to maintenance or not. These are very tough things and they take expertise. So presumably in one fell swoop all these people who have all this expertise and who really belong in this Commission which is going to be responsible for this thing, are taken and put under the Department of Veterans Affairs. I do not know what is going to happen to their esprit de corps, their loyalty, I really do not know.

[Interprétation]

Quelle que soit la façon dont nous regardions les choses, quelle que soit la structure, la première équipe sera la Commission. La deuxième équipe sera constituée des gens qui prennent les décisions en première instance. Enfin, la direction consultative médicale fera corps à part, semble-t-il, et relèvera d'un nouveau Directeur des pensions.

Soulignons que la présente Commission de qui relève la Direction consultative médicale compte au moins 5 médecins. Vous avez une Commission qui est partiellement médicale. Si vous établissez une nouvelle Direction des pensions au sein du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, je me demande si cette Direction comprendra des médecins ou non! La Direction consultative médicale relèvera de cette Direction et du sous-ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants. Elle n'aurait donc rien à faire avec la Commission qui possède une expérience médicale acquise au cours des années.

J'en viens maintenant à une question qui mérite toute notre attention. Il s'agit de la division de la revision et des réclamation de la Commission. Le Rapport Woods dit comment on pourrait l'améliorer. Il lui faudrait de l'aide, car elle est surchargée de travail. Je n'ai vu nulle part une proposition portant qu'on devait transférer les membres du personnel de la Commission où ils ont travaillé depuis de nombreuses années d'un autre organisme pour y peiner encore.

La division de la revision et des réclamations—et cela nous semble très important—compte des gens qui ont beaucoup d'expérience dans la compréhension de certains points difficiles qui relèvent de la Loi sur les pensions. Ainsi, ils savent comment déterminer la pension dans des cas bien particuliers. Par exemple, dans le cas d'un pensionné qui est séparé de sa femme, ils peuvent dire si elle a droit à une partie de la pension. Ce sont là des questions difficiles à résoudre; elles exigent de l'expérience. On transférerait donc, semble-t-il, tout ce personnel d'expérience, relevant de la Commission, au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. Que va devenir leur esprit de corps, leur loyauté? Je l'ignore complètement. Peut-être qu'ils sont d'accord, mais je ne vois pas comment ils

[Text]

Maybe they are all for it, but I just cannot see it because they will be under a brand new master and they will have a lot of new ground rules set out for them.

So I think, Mr. Chairman our thoughts in the Canadian Corps Association is simply that we are being asked, and perhaps this Committee also is being asked, to buy a "pig in a poke". There may be a lot of merit in this set-up, but how can we tell because we are simply given a few lines. Again we would compare it to the proposals in the Woods Committee, which have all the historical basis there, all the supporting comment, all the where's and why's so you could actually make some kind of a judgment as to how it would work. Certainly if we are going to have to consider transferring the basic responsibility for initial adjudication and Claims and Review, and Medical Advisory Branch to the Department of Veterans Affairs, we deserve more, Mr. Chairman, than a few lines of explanation in the White Paper or maybe even a few minutes of verbal explanation which we have not had yet, but presumably your Committee may have.

These are certainly our views and we are delighted to have an opportunity to bring them out and to answer any questions that you might have concerning the problem.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, my question just to start it off is that I do not understand what you mean by having a separate body entirely because on page 184 of the text in reference to the Minister's explanation to us in this Committee I understood that a new body to be known as the appeals—is this where you are making the difference, the Appeal Division, the Appeal group, or are you speaking of the 10 commissioners themselves?

Mr. Chadderton: No, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we are speaking about the proposal to establish a Directorate of Pensions within DVA, which as we understand it would have the responsibility for initial adjudication of pension claims and also to which would be transferred the present staffs of the Medical Advisory Branch and the Claims Review Branch of the Commission. We see it as a retrograde step; we think pensions should be independent of departmental administration, departmental authority. As a matter of fact, we subscribe completely, I think, to the views of a former minister given before this Committee yesterday when he said that when he was the Minister he could see all the influences that could be brought to bear upon a part of a department by a Minister. This is pourraient l'être, car ils relèveront d'un nouveau maître, et ils seront régis par de nouveaux règlements de travail.

Monsieur le président, nous croyons, en tant qu'Association du Corps canadien, que l'on nous demande simplement de signer un chèque en blanc. Peut-être que ce serait quelque chose de bon, mais comment voulez-vous que nous le sachions. Nous ne disposons que de si peu de renseignements. Si encore nous pouvions l'envisager en regard des propositions du Comité Woods, avec des renseignements de base, des explications sur les «ou» et les «pourquoi», nous pourrions dire comment les choses marcheront. Il ne fait aucun doute que si les fonctions principales relatives aux décisions en première instance, à la division de la revision et des réclamations et à la direction consultative médicale doivent être transférées au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, nous devons avoir plus que les quelques renseignements contenus à ce sujet dans le Livre blanc ou les quelques explications verbales qu'on attend encore et que le Comité pourrait nous transmettre. Ce sont là nos vues; nous sommes heureux d'avoir l'occasion de vous les faire connaître et de répondre à vos questions à ce sujet.

Le président: Monsieur Guay?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Je ne comprends pas ce que vous voulez dire par «organisme distinct», parce que, d'après la version du texte relatif aux explications du ministre au Comité, il y aura un nouvel organisme chargé des appels. De quoi s'agit-il? De la division des appels, du groupe d'étude des appels? Parlez-vous des dix commissaires eux-mêmes?

M. Chadderton: Non, nous parlons de la proposition visant à établir une Direction des pensions au sein du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et qui, d'après nous, serait chargée des décisions en première instance relatives aux réclamations de pension. Les membres du personnel actuel de la direction consultative médicale et de la division de la révision et des réclamations de la Commission seraient mutés à cette direction. Nous croyons qu'il s'agit là d'une mesure rétrograde. Nous croyons que les organismes relatifs aux pensions devraient être indépendants de l'autorité et de l'administration du ministère. Nous sommes d'accord avec un ancien ministre qui a exprimé son opinion hier devant le Comité. Il a dit que, lorsqu'il était ministre, il a été à même de voir toute exactly what would happen if you set up a Directorate of Pensions, but thank God, the Pension Commission has been free of these influences since 1919.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, would not the recommendation of this Commission that you are talking about, be subject to the Appeal Board, subject to be appealed?

Mr. Chadderton: Oh yes, there is no question about it.

Mr. Badanai: Then, where are the great slight objections to it? I cannot see the various reasons for your objections.

Mr. Chadderton: I have to put it to you as a specific case. A man comes in and makes an application for pension. The application form is filled out, there are certain investigation forms filled out, certain medical forms filled out, and the case then goes presumably to what would be known as the Directorate of Pensions within DVA. If the information is insufficient, as it often is on applications of any kind—people cannot make decisions because they have not got the right kind of information—presumably, the DVA people would then be in the position of having to send that application back out for further information, further medical advice, further this, further that. Then a decision is made.

By this time and up until this stage, this application has not been touched by the Pension Commission. It has been touched by the departmental officials and departmental officials only. There is the first question of a delay because you have lost maybe a year, six months at the least and maybe a year. Second, it has been all batted around, it has gone into certain channels, it has been subjected to a certain type of thought.

We brought out in our brief yesterday, I think our basic objection right there Mr. Badanai, and it is this: That basically the Department of Veterans affairs is a welfare department and there is no place for pensions in the hands of welfare people. We subscribe to the work DVA is doing; they do a marvelous job in welfare; they do a first-rate job with war veterans allowance, but the basic difference between war veterans allowance and pension is just that. War veterans allowance is need, pension is right and we are just afraid that the whole application will get off the rails before it even gets started. Then we are just compounding the problem because then it is going to be up to an entitlement board to take a second look and say, l'influence que peut faire jouer un ministre sur une partie du ministère. C'est justement ce qui se produirait si vous établissez une Direction des pensions. Dieu soit loué, la Commission des pensions a été libre de ces influences depuis 1919!

M. Badanai: Monsieur le président, la recommandation du Comité dont vous parlez ne pourrait-elle pas faire l'objet d'appel devant la Commission d'appel?

M. Chadderton: Oui, cela ne fait aucun doute.

M. Badanai: Alors, pourquoi vous opposez-vous à cela? Quels sont vos motifs?

M. Chadderton: Je vais vous donner un cas précis. Un homme se présente et demande une pension. Il remplit une formule de demande de pension. Il s'agit d'une formule d'enquête d'ordre médical qu'il faut remplir. La formule est envoyée à la Direction des pensions au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. Si les renseignements sont insuffisants, comme cela se produit la plupart du temps, on ne peut prendre de décision semble-t-il, la formule ne renfermant pas les renseignements voulus. Les agents du ministère devraient renvoyer la demande pour obtenir d'autres renseignements, d'autres informations médicales etc. Ce n'est qu'ensuite qu'une décision sera prise.

Jusqu'à ce moment-là, la demande n'a pas encore été vue par la Commission des pensions. Seuls les fonctionnaires du ministère en ont pris connaissance. Alors, il y a déjà un délai. Vous pouvez perdre ainsi au moins six mois et peut-être jusqu'à un an. Deuxièmement, on éparpille tout, les renseignements vont d'un palier à l'autre et le tout est assujetti à une certaine appréciation.

Le mémoire que nous avons présenté hier renferme l'objection fondamentale que voici, M. Badanai. Fondamentalement, le ministère des Affaires des Anciens combattants est un ministère de bien-être et les gens qui s'occupent de bien-être n'ont pas à s'occuper des pensions. Le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants fait un excellent travail, tant au point de vue allocation aux anciens combattants que bien-être, mais c'est de cela uniquement qu'ils doivent s'occuper. Les demandes de pensions ne devraient pas relever d'eux. L'allocation aux anciens combattants entre dans le cadre des besoins, tandis que la pension est un droit et nous craignons que, dès le début, la demande prenne une mauvaise tangente.

[Text]

"Good God, look what they have done with this at the lower level of adjudication". This is human nature. I do not care what anybody says, this is exactly what will happen in this set-up and I cannot see the reason for it. I am not aware of anyone who has examined the Pension Act in the last 50 years having said one word about the Pension Act being placed under the Minister. As a matter of fact, their observations have been the opposite in that they have said, "leave the pensions autonomous". This would be a step in the wrong direction. We could continue to discuss it all morning, but I think that is our major point.

[Interpretation]

Nous ne faisons que régler le problème parce que le bureau d'admissibilité veillera à examiner à nouveau la chose et à dire: «Mon Dieu, regardez ce qu'ils en ont fait au premier niveau de décision». La nature humaine est ainsi. Peu m'importe ce que l'on dit, c'est exactement ce qui se produira dans ce règlement, et je n'en vois pas la raison. A ma connaissance, personne n'a revisé la Loi sur les pensions au cours des 50 dernières années, n'a parlé de la loi qui relève du ministre. En fait, tout le monde en a dit le contraire. Ils ont réclamé qu'on laisse les pensions autonomes. Ce serait un mauvais pas. Nous pourrions en discuter toute la matinée, mais à mon avis, c'est le point le plus important.

0950

Mr. Badanai: I fail to agree entirely with your argument. I still have great faith in the Department, sir; you may not have, but I have. After all, all the recommendations contained in the White Paper are flexible. The Minister made the statement to the Committee that the recommendations are flexible and are bound to be changed and so on, according to circumstances. I cannot see any valid objection that you are propounding against this Commission. We have three Appeal Boards. They can appeal once, twice or three times. They have not only one appeal, but three. Therefore, I cannot see why you should be so concerned with this. I appreciate the fact that you have a different view about it, but after all we have studied the matter, too.

M. Badanai: Je ne puis approuver tout à fait votre argument. J'ai encore bien confiance au ministère, peut-être pas vous, mais moi tout au moins. Après tout, toutes les recommandations contenues dans le Livre blanc sont souples.

Le ministre a déclaré au Comité que les recommandations sont souples et qu'elles sont susceptibles d'être modifiées et ainsi de suite, selon les circonstances. Je ne vois pas d'objection valable pour que vous vous opposiez à la Commission. Il y a trois bureaux d'appel. Ils peuvent présenter un appel une fois, deux fois ou trois fois. Ils n'ont pas qu'un appel, mais trois. Je ne vois pas pourquoi vous devriez tellement vous préoccuper de ce problème. Je ne vois pas pourquoi vous vous en préoccupez tant, je comprends que vous ayez une opinion différente, mais après tout, nous avons aussi examiné la question.

We were briefed by the Minister and I think the Minister was very, very precise in his presentation. He repeated over and over again that these regulations would be flexible to meet the conditions of the times. Your proposal would eliminate the Commission which . . .

Nous avons entendu l'exposé du ministre qui, à mon avis, a été très précis. Il a répété plusieurs fois que ces règlements seraient assez souples pour répondre aux besoins de notre époque. Votre proposition éliminerait la Commission qui . . .

Mr. Chadderton: No, no, Mr. Chairman, but there is one point I would like to make. Mr. Badanai said that in the final analysis we should not worry about it because there would be an appeal. Surely to God we are not saying that regardless of what they do at the initial level of adjudication—let them muck it up all they like—eventually the Pension Commission and/or the Appeal Board will pull it out of the fire. Certainly we are not going to subscribe to that kind of administration of pensions. We want the initial decision to be right in the first place and if it is, everybody will be happy. Your appeal people only come into the picture when something has gone wrong. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that it

M. Chadderton: Non, monsieur le président, mais j'aimerais apporter une précision. Monsieur Badanai a déclaré qu'en dernière analyse que nous ne devrions nous en inquiéter parce qu'il y aurait un appel. Nous ne prétendons pas qu'en dépit de ce qu'ils font au premier niveau de décision, laissez-les gâcher tout ce qu'ils veulent, que la Commission des pensions et le Bureau d'appel la retireraient du feu. Nous n'allons certainement pas souscrire à ce genre d'administration des pensions. Nous voulons que la décision initiale soit placée au premier plan et si c'est ainsi, tout le monde sera content. Les personnes qui s'occupent des appels n'entrent en jeu que lorsque quelque chose va mal. A mon avis, monsieur is any answer to say we should not worry about it because in the final analysis it will be subjected to appeal. What we are interested in is a good solid basis of initial adjudication.

Furthermore, as you said, the Minister has stated that it is flexible. I am glad it is flexible because as far as we are concerned if the pronouncement in the White Paper on this and a lot of other things were eventually to turn into legislation, you would certainly have a lot of unhappy veterans in this country. I do not think there is any question about that. I am glad to see that these things are being discussed.

• 0955

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chairman, reiterating what Mr. Chadderton has said, it is because of the Canadian Corps Association's sincerest belief in the Minister of Veterans Affairs' assurance that this White Paper is a flexible document, that we are here today stating how we feel on many and varied subjects and, particularly, this one. We definitely do not wish to see any part of the work of the Pension Commission delegated to the Department of Veterans Affairs which primarily is concerned with war veterans allowance and general welfare programs.

I also would like to state, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Parsons and I have found very often—the gentleman to my right has said that we have no worries because eventually the proposed appeal board, which we suggested, will correct any errors—that when a veteran has gone into these initial stages and has received a rejection on the first appeal, because his is very proud and so forth he will simply say to us, "Well, if they do not see my need and they do not believe me, to hell with it, I am not going to appeal again".

So we will lose people who absolutely will not begin the long struggle of appeals. They will do this initial work in connection with an application for pension, but if they get a rejection they are either satisfied or will not go to the trouble of prolonging the agony for a year or two. I do not think we should have any program which might give us any reason to believe that we would not have a complete and fair hearing on the initial placement of the pension with any adjudicating body. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

le président, on ne devrait pas dire que nous ne devons pas nous faire du mauvais sang parce qu'en dernier lieu, il y a quand même la cour d'appel. Ce qui nous intéresse, c'est que la décision initiale soit établie sur une base solide.

En outre, comme vous l'avez dit, le ministre a déclaré qu'elles sont assez élastiques et je serais heureux que ce soit ainsi, parce que, autrement, en ce qui nous concerne, si la conclusion qui figure dans le Livre blanc, et d'autres choses à ce sujet étaient adoptées sous forme de mesure législative, il pourrait y avoir un grand nombre d'anciens combattants malheureux au pays. Je ne crois pas qu'il y ait de question à ce sujet et je suis heureux que ces questions soient débattues.

Mme Heesaker: Pour rapporter les propos de M. Chadderton, c'est à cause de la profonde confiance que l'Association du Corps canadien place en les assurances faites par le ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants à l'effet que le Livre blanc est un document flexible, que nous nous trouvons dans cette enceinte pour exprimer notre opinion sur diverses questions et particulièrement sur celle-ci. Nous ne voulons absolument pas qu'une partie des pouvoirs de la Commission des pensions soit déléguée au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants qui traite beaucoup plus des allocations des anciens combattants et des programmes de bien-être général.

J'aimerais souligner également, monsieur le président, que M. Parsons et j'ai remarqué à plusieurs occasions—la personne qui se trouve à ma droite—a dit que nous ne nous inquiétons pas parce qu'éventuellement, le bureau d'appel que nous projetons ne corrigera ces erreurs. Que lorsqu'un ancien combattant est passé par toutes les étapes initiales et qu'on a rejeté son appel à la première étape, étant donné qu'il est très orgueilleux, il nous dira simplement: S'ils ne voient pas mes besoins, et s'ils ne me croient pas, eh bien, qu'ils aillent au diable. Je ne vais pas présenter un autre appel.

On perdra ainsi des gens qui ne voudront certainement pas participer à cette longue suite d'appels. Ils présenteront une demande de pension à l'étape initiale, mais si elle est rejetée, ils sont soit satisfaits ou ils ne reprendront pas cette longue agonie d'un an ou deux.

Mais, de toute façon, à mon avis, aucun programme ne peut nous donner les raisons de croire que l'audience ne serait pas juste à l'étape initiale de la demande de pension, avec un corps de décision. Merci, monsieur le président.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mrs. Heesaker. I think Mr. Peters has a question.

Mr. Peters: Is the Corps of the opinion that the veterans are better off under the present system, although there could be some changes, than they would be under the White Paper's recommendation? As I understand it there are three proposals. There is a proposal in the Woods Committee to improve the appeal structure of the Canadian Pension Commission beyond what it is at present. There is the present status quo which provides for an appeal within the Canadian Pension Commission at various stages and the third proposition is to put it back in D.V.A. and build a second section in the D.V.A. structure.

Of those three proposals, obviously the one recommended by the veterans is the one contained in the Woods Committee Report, but of the other two is the Canadian Corps more in favour of retaining the status quo or the proposal in the White Paper?

Mr. Chadderton: I do not think the Canadian Corps is in any way, shape or form, in favour of either of the other two. We just do not see, Mr. Peters, any alternative. We took a look at this again last night and said, "All right, what did the Woods Committee propose concerning the Claims and Review Branch which the White Paper says will be transferred"? They proposed that some of the procedures be streamlined, that it be given more work, particularly to adjudicate on routine matters, and that it be given more help, but certainly not transferred. What did they say about the Medical Advisory Branch? They said that generally it is doing a good job; their procedure should be speeded up because the doctors are required to review files and they get bogged down; they should have some administrative help there, but they should not adjudicate on claims—there was some suggestion that they were actually making the decisions—and that is all.

When it came to the set-up for the actual adjudication of claims, the Woods Committee suggested to speed things up that they should go on a single commissioner basis. In other words, instead of one commissioner writing up the decision and two other commissioners signing it, which involves three people, let us cut out the comedy because everybody knows it is a one-commissioner deal anyway. Let one commissioner, called an entitlement officer, go

[Interpretation]

Le président: Merci, madame Heesaker. Je crois que M. Peters a une question à poser.

M. Peters: L'Association est-elle d'avis que les anciens combattants sont mieux traités sous le système actuel, bien qu'il pourrait y avoir quelques changements, qu'ils ne le seraient en vertu de la recommandation du Livre blanc? Si je comprends bien, il y a trois propositions. Il y a la proposition du Comité Woods, destiné à améliorer le système d'appel de la Commission canadienne des pensions. Le statu quo actuel qui prévoit un appel à diverses étapes devant la Commission canadienne des pensions et la troisième proposition vise à remettre ce pouvoir au ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants et d'établir une deuxième section dans le système du ministère.

La recommandation des Anciens combattants est contenue dans le rapport du Comité Woods, et parmi les deux autres, le Corps canadien, qui encourage plus le statu quo ou la proposition du Livre blanc?

M. Chadderton: Je ne crois pas que le Corps canadien soit d'une manière ou d'une autre en faveur de l'une ou l'autre des ces deux propositions. Je ne vois pas de solution, monsieur Peters. Nous avons encore examiné ces questions hier soir et nous nous sommes demandés ce que le Comité Woods avait proposé au sujet de la Direction des réclamations et de la révision qui sera transférée d'après le Livre blanc? Ils ont proposé que quelques-unes de ces procédures soient un peu améliorées, qu'on y attribue plus de travail, en particulier pour décider des questions routinières et qu'on y porte plus d'aide, mais qu'on ne la transfère pas. Qu'a-t-on dit au sujet de la Direction consultative médicale? En général, on a déclaré qu'on y fait un très bon travail mais que leur procédure doit être un peu plus rapide, parce que les médecins doivent réviser leurs dossiers et ils s'embourbent. On devrait les aider sur le plan administratif, mais ils ne devraient pas porter de jugement sur ces plaintes. On a indiqué qu'ils rendraient actuellement des décisions, c'est tout.

Mais, quand on est arrivé au règlement de la décision actuelle des plaintes, le Comité Woods a proposé d'accélérer les choses et de présenter le cas devant un seul commissaire. Autrement dit, au lieu d'avoir un commissaire pour rédiger la décision et deux autres pour la signer, ce qui implique trois personnes, mettons fin à cette comédie parce que de toute façon tout le monde sait qu'il n'y a qu'un commissaire qui s'occupe de l'affaire.

ahead and approve or decline that claim. That is the first level of adjudication.

The second level of adjudication would be either examiners' hearings or these entitlement boards, all within the Commission—let it run, let it do its job—but if the Commission failed, you would have to go beyond the Commission and repose the ultimate authority in something outside of the Commission, which would be an independent appeal board. Therefore, I am afraid our answer to your question is that we cannot subscribe to any other system because we have seen it, we have studied it and we cannot see there is any other alternative.

• 1000

Mr. Peters: Maybe I should put my question in another way. There are only two alternatives. Either you can take the proposition as we have it now or you can take the proposition that is presented in the White Paper. Of those two, which is the most acceptable?

Mr. Chadderton: That is a Hobson's choice. The honest answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is that neither is acceptable. We are certainly not satisfied with the Commission set up as it is, where you have Appeal Boards of the Commission going around making these decisions; but the basic flaw is that there is no ultimate authority outside of the Commission to whom you can appeal, or who has the responsibility to say yes or no. Unless you do something to correct that basic flaw we would simply say the job has not been done.

Mr. Peters: There is no alternative?

Mr. Chadderton: There is none; I am afraid not, sir.

Mr. Parsons: There is a time element related to this, too, Mr. Peters, along your line of thought. If initital decisions are going to be made by departmental officials I just cannot visualize the attention being given to the claim in the initial stages that is given now.

In our Commission, for example, a large proportion of the cases are actually rendered complete, and you get your case and everything all set up in the initial stage. I would say perhaps one out of three goes to a higher board—an Appeal Board. When you do that there is a long delay, sometimes of a year or more, getting to a a Board. I can see delays in this proposed set-up.

[Interprétation]

Laissons un commissaire appelé agent de l'admissibilité et avançons, et approuvons ou refusons la plainte portée. C'est le premier niveau de décision.

Au deuxième niveau, il y aurait les audiences des examinateurs ou les bureaux de l'admissibilité, au sein de la Commission, laissons-les aller, laissez-les faire leur travail, mais si la Commission échoue, il vous faudrait aller au-delà de la Commission et accorder le pouvoir final ailleurs que dans la Commission, et qui constituerait un bureau d'appel indépendant. Par conséquent, je crains que notre réponse à votre question indique que nous ne pouvons souscrire à tout autre système, parce que nous l'avons vu, nous l'avons étudié et nous ne pouvons voir d'autre solution.

M. Peters: Pourrais-je présenter ma question autrement? Il n'y a que deux solutions. Vous pouvez prendre la proposition telle qu'elle ou vous pouvez prendre la proposition qui est présentée dans le Livre blanc. Laquelle est la plus acceptable?

M. Chadderton: C'est un choix assez limité. En toute honnêteté, monsieur le président, aucune n'est acceptable. Nous ne sommes pas satisfaits de la Commission, de la manière dont elle a été établie. Vous avez des jurys d'appel à la Commission qui se déplaceront pour rendre les décisions, mais le grand défaut est qu'il n'y a pas d'autorité suprême en dehors de la Commission à qui vous puissiez faire appel et qui a le pouvoir de dire oui ou non. A moins que vous ne fassiez quelque chose pour corriger ce défaut, nous dirons tout net que le travail n'a pas été fait.

M. Peters: N'y a-t-il aucun choix?

M. Chadderton: Non il n'y en a pas, je regrette, monsieur.

M. Parsons (Avocat des Pensions): Monsieur le président, la question de temps naturellement se présente aussi dans ce cas. Si la première décision doit être prise par le ministère et je ne conçois pas l'attention qui est accordée à la demande actuellement aux premiers paliers. Ici, dans notre commission, par exemple, une grande partie des cas sont étudiés et complétés dès le premier palier. Je dirais que un sur trois est transmis à un palier supérieur, un bureau d'appel. Si vous le faites, il y a naturellement des délais assez longs, peut-être un an et plus avant d'obtenir que vous passiez, et je peux prévoir qu'il y aura des délais dans cette manière de procéder.

I do not feel it is right to take any part of our pensions administration away from this independent Commission. For many, many years they have existed and they have done the best job they could do with the authority under which they work. Many people blame the Pension Commission for many things, but the Commission can only do what their authority permits them to do—what the Act permits them to do. But they have done all right, and we can see ways to improve that work and definitely improve the Act, the authority under which they work. But do not take away the independence of that Commission and make it part of a departmental affair under the Minister. The Commission should exist as an independent body, as they are now.

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Bigg: I think it is very valuable. It has already been claimed that the White Paper is flexible. I am sure that whoever wrote the White Paper meant well, which is sometimes the worst thing you can say about anything.

What is the rationale? I presume they are trying to give the veterans an even better deal than they have had before. I think they are mistaken on this particular point. All the veterans' groups, which we are meeting now—I would not say by the dozen, but almost by the dozen—seem to agree that the present Commission have done an excellent job within their terms of reference.

Mr. Parsons: That is right.

Mr. Bigg: Therefore it is the terms of reference that we should worry about, particularly in relation to the final appeal?

Mr. Parsons: That is right.

Mr. Bigg: I want to compliment those who wrote the White Paper on what they have already done in their change of attitude towards presumptions on the health of the veteran and.....

The Chairman: They meant well.

Mr. Bigg: No; they have done well; they not only meant well but I think they have done well. But in this particular case they appear to be flying in the face of the very people who most need the attention. That, of course, I consider to be my job—to try to straighten this out so that the rationales coming down from the top and coming up from the bottom meet in a new charter of justice

[Interpretation]

Je ne crois pas moi-même qu'il est juste d'enlever une partie de notre administration sur les pensions à la Commission, cette Commission indépendante. Pendant nombre d'années, ils ont accompli le meilleur travail possible dans la limite de leurs pouvoirs. Nombre de personnes blâment la Commission des pensions pour bien des choses mais la Commission ne peut faire que ce qu'elle a la possibilité de faire et elle fait son possible. Nous voyons certainement des moyens d'améliorer la situation et d'améliorer la loi en vertu de laquelle fonctionne la Commission. Mais n'enlevez pas l'indépendance de cette Commission pour faire d'elle simplement un rouage d'un ministère déjà existant. La Commission doit toujours être indépendante, demeurer un organisme indépendant et autonome comme elle l'est maintenant.

M. Peters: Oui.

M. Bigg: Je crois que cela est très bien. Il a déjà été dit que le Livre Blanc contient des recommandations pleines de souplesse. Je comprends que celui qui a rédigé le Livre Blanc voulait bien faire. Ce qui est parfois le pire. Quelles en sont les raisons? Ils essaient d'accorder un meilleur traitement aux anciens combattants, de leur faire un meilleur sort qu'auparavant, mais je crois qu'ils ont fait des erreurs à ce sujet. Tous les groupes d'anciens combattants, et nous en avons rencontré presqu'une douzaine, tous ces groupes semblent d'accord sur ce point, la Commission actuellement fait un excellent travail dans le cadre de ses possibilités, dans le cadre de son mandat.

M. Parsons: C'est vrai.

M. Bigg: Alors c'est au sujet de ce mandat que nous devrions nous préoccuper en particulier en rapport avec l'appel final.

M. Parsons: Oui.

M. Bigg: Je veux cependant féliciter les auteurs du Livre Blanc pour ce qu'ils ont déjà fait et accompli en rapport avec les présomptions relatives à la santé des anciens combattants.

Le président: Ils ont voulu bien faire.

M. Bigg: Ils ne voulaient pas que bien faire, ils ont fait du bien. Mais il faut qu'ils puissent venir en aide à ceux qui ont le plus besoin de leur aide. J'aimerais voir les principes qui inspirent les hautes autorités et les aspirations venant de la base se rencontrer de façon à rendre possible une véritable justice pour les anciens combattants. D'après mon expérience, et ce que j'ai entendu un peu for the veterans. Therefore, I have to agree from my experience, and from what I have heard, that the present Pension Commission set-up has done an excellent job within its terms of reference.

[Texte]

• 1005

Mr. Parsons: Right.

Mr. Bigg: Therefore, I cannot see any reason for changing it unless we are considering economy. A big difference in economy could be a factor, or the streamlining of it to help us get things done more efficiently and rapidly. If this change is going to do that, I will be happy about that. But it seems that on both of these it also fails. I cannot see any economy in the change suggested.

Relative to the streamlining, I think the changes in the terms of reference are going to do a great deal more to get early and proper adjudication than switching the adjudicating boards from one group to another. As the Woods Report had more time and went into it much more thoroughly than any one author of the White Paper, or any brief that we can get from you, or from anybody else, it seems to me that unless we have evidence to the contrary the Woods Report should be presumed to express the general feeling and need of the veteran; and unless that is disproved, we are right back into a sort of primary adjudication job.

The Chairman: Have members of the Committee any further questions? Mr. Peters?

Mr. Peters: When Mr. Bigg was speaking I was wondering—and perhaps Mr. Parsons could tell me—whether there was another rationale, perhaps, for this being suggested by the Department. Welfare seems to be going into a new phase in relation to government operations. That would obviously affect War Veterans Allowance and then the Department of Veterans Affairs would really have disappeared except for the Pension Commission.

In recent years has there been an increase or a decrease in the cases that go beyond the original adjudication at the lower level? Are there more cases going to appeal now than there were previously? I suppose there are peaks after a war for a 25-year period. There must be changes in the applications to the Canadian Pension Commission, or in the workload at various periods. Are we now coming to a period when the Canadian Pension Commission will be handling an increasing number of difficult cases because of the Second World War veterans?

[Interprétation]

partout, c'est que le système actuel de la Commission des pensions est excellent et qu'elle a fait un excellent travail dans les limites de ses pouvoirs.

M. Parsons: Bien.

M. Bigg: Par conséquent, je ne vois aucune raison d'apporter des modifications sauf en ce qui concerne peut-être la possibilité de faire des économies. Je sais que l'on tente partout de faire des économies aujourd'hui, c'est déjà un facteur important; il faut tenter de rationaliser le système et mettre de l'huile dans les rouages, si des économies étaient possibles j'en serais bien content mais enfin, je ne vois pas d'économie possible avec les modifications proposées. Je crois que les changements que l'on propose d'apporter aux conditions existantes permettront de mieux rendre les décisions, et beaucoup plus rapidement au lieu de déplacer les Bureaux d'appel d'un groupe à un autre. Évidemment, les auteurs du Rapport Woods ont eu le temps d'aller au fond des choses beaucoup plus que ceux qui ont rédigé le Livre blanc ou les mémoires que vous nous avez soumis. A moins de preuves du contraire, on peut penser que le Rapport Woods représente l'expression générale des besoins des anciens combattants et dans ce cas, le problème devant lequel nous nous retrouvons se rapporte en somme à la décision du stade initial.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions provenant des membres du Comité? M. Peters?

M. Peters: Quand M. Bigg parlait, quelque chose m'est venu à l'esprit, quelque chose que M. Parsons pourrait me dire. Je me demande quelles sont les raisons pour lesquelles on a proposé cela parce qu'il semble que le bien-être, la sécurité sociale entrent dans une nouvelle phase en ce qui concerne du moins le gouvernement. Cela affectera aussi la pension des anciens combattants. Le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants risque de disparaître à l'exception de la Commission des pensions.

Au cours des dernières années, y a-t-il eu une augmentation ou une diminution des demandes de pensions qui sont allées plus loin que le stade initial? Y a-t-il plus de cas qui vont en appel qu'auparavant, je suppose qu'il y a des sommets, après la guerre, pendant 25 années. Il doit y avoir des différences dans le nombre de demandes qui arrivent à la Commission des pensions. Est-ce que nous en arrivons à une période d'augmentation en ce qui concerne la Commission des pensions,

[Text]

Mr. Parsons: I do not know what others are experiencing—and I see a fellow-advocate over there, Mr. Anderson—but of my cases usually about one in three has to go to appeal. The main reason for that is the lapse of time and the continuity of the evidence you must accumulate. Doctors die and their files are destroyed or lost. You have to establish the fact that it was attributable to or incurred in service, that he had it when he came out of the service, that he has had it ever since and has it now. It is the intervening years that make the work.

Quite often you have cases which are perhaps difficult to judge at the initial levels, and you have to bring the applicant in and let him tell his story. The only way you can do that is before an Appeal Board.

Mr. Peters: Has there been an increase in the number of difficult cases that you get? After the war there was initially a fairly easy situation where you established a great number of pension claims very easily because the evidence was self-evident. Now there must be an increase in the cases related to and arising out of wartime service that are certainly not self-evident. When can we expect the peak for the Canadian Pension Commission, and how long will it last?

1010

Mr. Parsons: Today it is not so much the number of cases; it is the fact that you have to go back over so many years. A high percentage of the cases going to appeal today are to get the man before a Board. In many cases you must take the man's word for it and judge whether or not he is telling the truth. You cannot always go back and get the evidence you want, no matter how you try, and we are now getting quite a number of consequential disabilities, conditions which arise from a pension condition, such as back injuries, arthritic cases, degenerative spinal conditions, and things of that nature, which in some cases take many years to show up. These are things that now quite often have to go through to the appeal board level.

Mr. Peters: Are there still a number, a certain percentage of cases remaining from World War I?

[Interpretation]

parce qu'il y a davantage de cas difficiles concernant les anciens combattants de la deuxième grande guerre?

M. Parsons: Je ne connais pas l'expérience des autres. Mon collègue M. Anderson pourrait peut-être vous renseigner à ce sujet, mais ordinairement un cas sur trois dont j'ai à m'occuper doit aller en appel. La principale raison pour cela, c'est le temps qui s'écoule. Vous avez accumulé des renseignements assez difficiles, le médecin décède les dossiers sont détruits ou perdus il faut alors prouver que le décès, la maladie, l'invalidité est attribuable, découle du service et cela est difficile. C'est le délai écoulé qui complique le travail. Très souvent il est difficile de juger d'un cas aux premiers stades, vous devez faire comparaître le requérant pour qu'il vous explique sa situation personnellement. La seule façon d'y arriver c'est de le convoquer devant une commission d'appel.

M. Peters: Est-ce qu'il y a une augmentation dans le nombre de cas difficiles que vous ayez à traiter et qui ont trait à la guerre? Après la guerre, la situation était assez facile, il était facile à ce moment-là de régler un grand nombre de demandes de pension. Les faits étaient évidents et les preuves faciles à recueillir. Aujourd'hui, il doit y avoir une augmentation du nombre de cas qui se rapportent ou découlent du service, sans que les fautes soient aussi évidentes. Devons-nous attendre à atteindre le maximum en ce qui concerne les demandes présentées à la Commission des pensions et pendant combien de temps?

M. Parsons: Aujourd'hui, ce n'est pas le nombre de cas qui compte, c'est la difficulté d'obtenir des preuves étant donné les nombreuses années écoulées depuis la guerre. Il y a un grand nombre de cas aujourd'hui qui doivent aller en appel afin de pouvoir faire comparaître le requérant devant une commission d'appel. A ce moment-là, vous devez vous fier à la parole du requérant, vous ne pouvez pas juger s'il dit ou non la vérité. On ne peut pas toujours revenir en arrière pour recueillir les preuves. Et un nombre assez élevé d'invalidités se présentent à nous, qui découlent d'états donnant droit à une pension telles les lésions dorsales, l'arthrite, les états dégénératifs de l'épine dorsale et autres affections du même genre qui ne se manifestent parfois qu'après plusieurs années. Autant d'états que le tribunal d'appel est aujourd'hui souvent appelé à considérer.

M. Peters: Y a-t-il encore quelques cas de la première guerre mondiale à traiter?

[Texte]

Mr. Parsons: Not very many.

Mr. Peters: I suppose this is very much on the decline.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, I have some information on that that I think would be helpful. The latest figures we have—and we are quoting from the Woods Committee Report specifically on it rather than the departmental report because it is up to the departmental officials to quote their own reports—indicate that in the fiscal year 1964-65, which is not too long ago, there were 2,900 initial applications from World War I veterans and the total applications that year numbered 7,000, of which approximately 1,500 eventually went to appeal boards, and I understand that ratio has not changed significantly since 1964-65. So, we still have a heavy volume of appeals.

Another thing that I think is most interesting, Mr. Chairman, is that in the Woods Committee Report they made a projection, and I quote from the introduction on page 14 of Volume I:

> . . . your Committee can foresee the need for an extensive pension administration for the World War II veterans for at least 25 years, bearing in mind the extent of the pension work still being done in 1967 for those who served during the 1914-18 war.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the Woods Committee felt that quite an active pension administration would be required for another 25 years.

The Chairman: Are there any questions by other members of the Committee? Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Bigg: Do you think there is some confusion in the Department on the part of people who perhaps have not been with this problem for a long time and they confuse the war veterans' allowance with pensions. It seems to me that somebody is trying to streamline the whole affair and say, "If a veteran tries to get a pension and he cannot get one, he can always get the war veterans' allowance. Therefore why not combine them in one department, so that having" . . .

The Chairman: Surely that proposal is not before us. There is no suggestion of combining war veterans' allowances with pensions, and there is nothing in the White Paper . . .

[Interprétation]

M. Parsons: Très peu.

M. Peters: Je suppose, en effet, que ce nombre doit diminuer.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, j'ai à ce sujet des renseignements qui pourraient être utiles. Les chiffres les plus récents que nous ayons,—et je les tire du Rapport Wood plutôt que du rapport du ministère, car c'est aux fonctionnaires supérieurs de chaque ministère qu'il appartient de citer leurs propres chiffres—ces chiffres indiquent que, au cours de l'année financière 1964-1965, ce qui est assez récent, il y a eu 2,900 demandes initiales provenant d'anciens combattants de la première guerre mondiale, tandis que les demandes pour cette même année s'élevaient dans l'ensemble à 7,000 dont 1,500 environ ont été formulées devant un tribunal d'appel—je crois savoir que cette proportion est sensiblement aujourd'hui ce qu'elle était en 1964-1965. Bref, nous avons encore en appel un grand nombre de demandes.

Autre fait très intéressant, monsieur le président, le rapport du Comité Wood renferme à la page 17 de l'Introduction du Volume 1 une prévision dont je cite les termes:

> . . .le Comité peut prévoir que s'imposera un fort travail de gestion des pensions en faveur des anciens combattants de la seconde guerre mondiale pendant au moins 25 ans, en tenant compte du travail relatif aux pensions que l'on accomplit encore en 1967 en faveur de ceux qui ont servi pendant la guerre de 1914 à 1918.

En d'autres mots, monsieur le président, le Comité Wood a pensé que des mesures énergiques s'imposeront encore au cours des 25 prochaines années aux fins de l'administration des pensions.

Le président: Les autres membres ont-ils des questions à poser? Monsieur Bigg.

M. Bigg: Croyez-vous qu'il y ait au ministère une certaine confusion parmi les gens qui y sont depuis peu et qui pourraient confondre la question des allocations aux anciens combattants avec celle des pensions? Il semble qu'on soit en train de simplifier cette affaire en disant: «Si un ancien combattant tente sans succès d'obtenir une pension, il peut toujours obtenir une allocation. Pourquoi alors ne pas confier l'administration de ces deux questions à un même ministère, de sorte que . . .

Le président: Nous n'avons pas à étudier une telle proposition. Il n'est pas question de combiner les Allocations aux anciens combattants avec les pensions, et rien dans le Livre blanc . . .

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I am probing the group that is before us. I am quite sure that without their opinion I would not have an answer on this, and I do not know where else I can get it.

The Chairman: Mr. Bigg, we have another delegation waiting and we have a schedule for today, and this group has been good enough to stay over with us, but I think how far the questions can go with respect to the proposal before us is a matter that I have to raise at this point. I do not think the question of war veterans' allowances is before this Committee.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, what is the rationale for combining all the veterans' legislation in one department and one commission? You are answering the question instead of the delegation.

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chairman, perhaps both you and Mr. Bigg would give us an opportunity to answer that. I am going to ask our Dominion Honorary Vice-President if he would comment on that subject.

Mr. Chadderton: Without getting into any discussion of war veterans' allowances, I think we can take the first part of the question and give you an answer, because it does put its finger on one of the main problems. We are alarmed about the fact that the DVA people, who do a lot of good work in war veterans' allowances, are going to become too heavily involved in pension administration. I will cite an actual case without giving you the name, but the Chairman of the Commission knows it and he may wish to talk about it as well. This case concerned a double amputee and a departmental representative went out to do what is called a recheck because the man is receiving entitlement allowance. He went into the home and, instead of sticking to the point and ascertaining if this man still has a need for attendance, can he get in and out of the bathtub by himself, the young welfare officer in his zeal began asking the same questions he asks of a prospective WVA recipient, such as, "How much money do you have in the bank?", and so on.

• 1015

I brought this to the attention of the Chairman of the Commission and I must say that he very quickly gave me a very decent answer when he said—and in effect he apologized—that there was no requirement for this welfare officer to get that kind of information,

[Interpretation]

M. Bigg: Monsieur le président, je m'excuse, mais je cherche à me renseigner auprès du groupe qui comparaît devant nous. Sans l'opinion de ce groupe, il me faudra chercher ailleurs une réponse à ma question, mais où, je n'en sais rien.

Le président: Monsieur Bigg, une autre délégation attend de comparaître et l'ordre du jour est établi pour la journée. Nous sommes reconnaissants envers ce groupe qui a bien voulu se prêter à nos questions, mais il convient ici de fixer une limite aux questions qui se rapportent à la proposition en cours de discussion. Je ne crois pas que le Comité ait à étudier cette question des allocations aux anciens combattants.

M. Bigg: Alors, pourquoi confier à un seul ministère et à une seule commission toutes les mesures législatives concernant les anciens combattants? Vous répondez à la question au lieu de la délégation.

Mme Heesaker: Monsieur le président, permettez-nous, et vous aussi M. Bigg, de répondre à cette question. Je vais demander à notre vice-président honoraire national de commenter cette question.

M. Chadderton: Sans nous engager à fond dans une discussion sur les allocations aux anciens combattants, nous pouvons je crois répondre à la première partie de la question, parce qu'elle soulève de fait un des problèmes fondamentaux. Nous nous alarmons du fait que les gens du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, qui font un excellent travail dans le cas des allocations des anciens combattants, vont devenir trop engagés dans l'administration des pensions. Je vais vous exposer un cas réel, sans y mettre de nom, mais la Commission est au courant et voudra peut-être en parler aussi. Il s'agit d'un double amputé des deux membres. Un représentant du ministère a été faire ce qu'on appelle une revérification de son cas, parce que la personne reçoit des allocations de soins. Arrivé au domicile, au lieu de s'en tenir à la question et vérifier si l'invalide a encore besoin d'aide—peut-il prendre son bain seul, etc. . .,—le jeune agent du bien-être social s'est mis, dans son zèle, à poser les questions réservées aux anciens combattants qui désirent une pension, comme: «Combien d'argent avez-vous à la banque?» etc.

J'ai attiré sur ce cas l'attention du président de la Commission et je dois dire qu'il m'a rapidement donné une réponse—de fait, s'est excusé—car la Commission n'exige pas de tels renseignements, elle veut seulement connaître le besoin de soins, non la situation the Commission does not want it, the Commission only wants to know the need for attendance, not the financial situation, and that is the problem which we see.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Chadderton. As far as I am concerned, sir, we have to have some guidelines and relevance, and the war veterans' allowance is not before this Committee.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to dispute this but to my mind, and I think other members of the Committee must feel somewhat the same way, we are concerned with why the White Paper proposals were made the way they were. The Department is now handling one side of it. If we put the Canadian Pension Commission into the Department, then obviously they will be handling both sides of it. To my mind you should know why somebody proposes something. I think it has been very well explained why the Woods Committee is making this proposition. However, we really have three propositions before us; the status quo, the DVA side of it, which is the White Paper, and the Woods Committee. I suggest we should not pursue it further, Mr. Chairman, but in the back of my mind, and I am sure in other members' minds, I want to know the rationale of the proposition which is made in the White Paper, I suggest that perhaps we should not talk about it, but we are all going to have to think about it.

Mr. Chairman: Do the Committee members have any other questions they would like to ask?

Mr. Leslie Crooks (First Vice-President, Canadian Corps Association): Mr. Chairman, we of the Canadian Corps Association want to go on record as stating that we emphatically do not want any department which is handling war veterans affairs to handle disability or pension claims.

The Chairman: I think your brief has been excellent on the point and I think that you have made it very clearly. I think you have done a very good job on that.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add that I think he has made a very strong point and I am sure that we will take this under consideration. I am sure that the people who wrote the paper had the good of the veterans at heart. We will take your arguments into account and I do not see why it cannot be changed to meet your requirefinancière, et c'est là le problème que nous constatons.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Chadderton. Quant à nous, nous devons respecter notre mandat et ce comité n'a pas été chargé d'étudier la question des allocations aux anciens combattants.

M. Peters: Je suis d'accord, monsieur le président mais j'estime, et d'autres membres du Comité feront, je crois, de même, que nous sommes intéressés de savoir pourquoi les propositions du Livre blanc ont été faites de cette façon. Le ministère en administre présentement un aspect. Si on intègre la Commission des pensions au ministère, il administrera alors les deux aspects de la question. On doit, à mon avis, savoir pourquoi quelqu'un propose une chose. Je crois qu'il a été très bien établi pourquoi le Comité Woods fait cette proposition. Toutefois, nous sommes réellement en présence de trois propositions: le statu quo, le point de vue du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, soit le Livre blanc et le Comité Woods. Je propose qu'on s'en tienne là, monsieur le président, mais je ne puis m'empêcher de m'interroger, et d'autres font de même, j'en suis sûr, sur le motif de la proposition faite dans le Livre blanc. Peut-être vaudrait-il mieux n'en point parler, mais il nous faudra tous y penser.

Le président: Les membres du Comité ont-ils d'autres questions à poser?

M. Leslie Crooks (premier vice-président, Association du Corps canadien): Monsieur le président, nous, membres de l'Association voulons que soit officiellement enregistrée notre déclaration à l'effet que nous nous opposons catégoriquement à ce que le ministère préposé aux affaires des anciens combattants soit chargé de l'administration des réclamations relatives aux invalidités ou aux pensions.

Le président: Je crois que votre mémoire a très bien mis en lumière ce point sur lequel il n'est resté aucune ambiguïté. Vous avez à cet égard fait un très bon travail.

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, je voudrais ajouter qu'il s'est exprimé avec vigueur et que nous en tiendrons compte. Ceux qui ont rédigé le rapport avaient à cœur le bien des anciens combattants. Nous tiendrons compte de vos arguments et je ne vois pas pourquoi cela ne peut être changé pour répondre à vos besoins. Tous, tant que nous ments. I think every one of us—the government and everyone around this table—has the good of the veterans at heart. You feel that this should be done and it certainly is not going to cost any more money. It is for the good of the veterans and your arguments have been given. Therefore I suggest that we are making a mountain out of a molehill. We are for you, so let us not get into a fight around this table.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Whicher.

Mrs. Heesaker: Mr. Chairman and members of the Standing Committee, this concludes our brief which deals specifically with a few of the recommendations recorded in the Woods Report, and you will realize we have only touched on some of the major recommendations. We trust, however, that all of the 148 recommendations of the Woods Report will be reviewed in full by the Committee at your various sessions. The Canadian Corps Association wish to point out the the government's White Paper makes no reference to or did not accept 50 per cent of the recommendations, and in many instances the modifications referred to by the Minister of Veterans Affairs has nullified the intent of the recommendations in the Woods Report.

Our senior officer, Mr. Chairman, the Dominion First Vice-President, Mr. Leslie Crooks, will conclude our presentation to you this morning.

Mr. Crooks: Thank you, Mrs. Heesaker.

The Chairman: Mr. Crooks.

Mr. Crooks: Mr. Chairman and members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, at this point we wish to record that the Canadian Corps Association was pleased to join with all other national veteran organizations in the joint statement which was presented to you on Thursday, September 18.

As the joint statement is the unanimous opinion of all organizations, its importance cannot be emphasized too strongly, for to our knowledge it is the first time in Canada's History that any statement has had the combined Veteran strength of this country so fully united in support thereof.

In conclusion, we wish to express our appreciation to your Committee for presenting our Association with the opportunity of appearing before you today. The reading of this Brief to you, completes our formal sommes, le gouvernement et ceux qui sont ici présents, ont à cœur le bien des anciens combattants. Il vous semble que cela doit être fait et il n'en coûtera certainement pas plus cher. C'est à l'avantage des anciens combattants, et vos raisons ont été présentées. Aussi, j'estime que nous sommes en train de faire une montagne d'un rien. Nous sommes en votre faveur, il n'y a donc pas lieu de nous quereller.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Whicher.

Mme Heesaker: Ceci termine la présentation de notre mémoire qui traite plus particulièrement de quelques-unes des recommandations faites dans le Rapport Woods, et vous concevez que nous n'avons qu'effleuré quelques-unes des recommandations les plus importantes. Toutefois, nous espérons que les 148 recommandations du rapport Woods seront étudiées à fond au cours des séances à venir du Comité.

L'Association du Corps canadien tient à souligner que le Livre blanc du gouvernement mentionne aucunement ou rejette 50 p. 100 des recommandations et, à maintes reprises, les modifications auxquelles le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants fait allusion annulent l'effet des recommandations du rapport Woods.

Notre premier vice-président, monsieur Leslie Crooks va terminer la présentation de notre mémoire.

M. Crooks: Merci, madame Heesaker.

Le président: Monsieur Crooks.

M. Crooks: Monsieur le président, messieurs les membres du comité permanent sur les Affaires des anciens combattants: nous aimerions vous voir noter que l'Association du Corps canadien a été heureuse de se joindre aux autres associations nationales d'anciens combattants aux fins de la déclaration conjointe qui vous a été faite le jeudi 18 septembre.

Vu que cette déclaration conjointe représente l'opinion unanime de toutes les associations, on ne saurait trop insister sur son importance, car, à notre connaissance, c'est la première fois dans l'Histoire du Canada que toutes les associations d'anciens combattants du Canada se sont unies pour appuyer un témoignage.

Nous désirons remercier le Comité d'avoir fourni à notre Association l'occasion de témoigner devant lui. Nous avons terminé notre présentation formelle qui comprenait la lecture de notre mémoire, mais nous sommes presentation, but we are prepared, if necessary, to discuss further any part of the same that you may desire. Thank you very much Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen.

The Chairman: Are there any questions that anyone wants to raise at this point? If not, in the name of the Committee I would like to thank the delegation very much for a very lucid and well-prepared brief which I am sure will be of great help to members of the Committee when they come to making their recommendations.

Mr. Crooks: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Will the meeting please come to order. We have with us today the Canadian Paraplegic Association. Mr. G. K. Langford, Q.C. is the Managing Director and Mr. A. C. Clarke the Assistant Managing Director of the Canadian Paraplegic Association. I understand that Mr. Langford is going to introduce the delegation and those present.

I have also suggested that the gentlemen who are likely to be speaking perhaps should position themselves as close as possible to the microphones. This will assist the transcription of the proceedings.

Mr. Langford, would you like to introduce your group?

Mr. G. K. Langford, Q.C., (Managing Director, The Canadian Paraplegic Association): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We had hoped that John Counsell, the Chairman of the Association, would be able to be present this morning, but he has spent the last several weeks in hospital trying to cure a small pressure sore. He has just recently been discharged home but his doctors say "no travelling".

On my right is Andy Clarke who originated in Saskatchewan, served overseas with the RCAF, was injured back in 1944 while flying a Typhoon aircraft, was hospitalized eventually in Toronto, took his degree in economics and political science from the University of Toronto following discharge from hospital, came to work with the Canadian Paraplegic Association first as a Rehabilitation Officer and, more recently, as Assistant Managing Director.

Down at the other end of the table is Tony Damiano, another Toronto boy, who served with the Royal Canadian Regiment in Kerea. Unfortunately in 1952 he suffered an injury to his neck, damage to the spinal chord, and he is a quadriplegic as a result. At the tout de même prêts à en discuter n'importe quelle partie, si vous nous le demandez.

Le président: Est-ce qu'il y aurait des questions à poser? S'il n'y en a pas, je voudrais remercier au nom du Comité la délégation pour son merveilleux mémoire et sa présentation très claire. Ceci aidera énormément les membres du Comité quand ils présenteront leurs recommandations. Merci messieurs.

M. Crooks: Merci beaucoup, monsieur le président.

Le président: Je rappelle le Comité à l'ordre. Nous avons aujourd'hui avec nous l'Association des Paraplégiques canadiens. M. G. K. Langford en est l'administrateur directeur et M. A. C. Clarke, l'administrateur directeur adjoint. M. Langford va faire les présentations. J'invite ceux d'entre vous qui voudraient participer à la discussion de s'asseoir le plus près possible des microphones.

Monsieur Langford, voulez-vous présenter les membres de votre groupe?

M. G. K. Langford, C. R. (Administrateur directeur de l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques): Nous avions espéré que le président de l'Association, M. John Counsell, serait ici avec nous ce matin, mais il a été retenu plusieurs semaines à l'hôpital et bien qu'il soit à la maison, son médecin lui a dit de ne pas voyager. A ma droite, Andy Clarke, natif de la Saskatchewan. Il a servi outre-mer dans le CARC et il a été blessé en 1944 alors qu'il pilotait un avion Typhoon. Il a été hospitalisé à Toronto. Après son séjour à l'hôpital, il a étudié l'économie politique à l'université de Toronto. Une fois diplômé, il est entré au service de l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques, d'abord en qualité d'agent de réadaptation, puis en qualité d'administrateur directeur adjoint. A l'autre extrémité de la table, vous voyez M. Tony Damiano, un autre citoyen de Toronto, qui a servi dans le Régiment Royal Canadian en Corée. En 1952, il a été blessé au cou. Sa moelle épinière a été endommagée et depuis lors il est quadriplégique. En ce moment, ses médecins lui ont permis de s'absenter deux jours de l'hôpital Sunnybrook où on essaie de le guérir d'infections récurrentes des voies urinaires.

[Text]

moment Tony is officially confined to Sunnybrook Hospital to clear up some recurring urinary infections but his doctors have let him out for two days in order to appear before the Committee.

With Tony is Major J. A. L. Robichaud. I think he is known to most members of the Committee. He served with the North Shore Regiment and was wounded in France in 1944.

Further to my right, another gentleman known to you, is Cliff Chadderton. We have asked him to sit in with the delegation, largely to save time, in that Cliff is far more knowledgeable of the details of the Woods Committee Report than I am.

Mr. Bill Handley, who served with the Black Watch Highlanders of Canada, is from Montreal. He was injured in England with resulting paraplegia back in 1941 and was I believe the first World War II paraplegic to be returned to Canada.

Mr. Harry Ward served with the North Nova Scotia Highlanders. He was injured in 1944 in France and since leaving hospital has been engaged as Executive Director of the Quebec Division of the Canadian Paraplegic Association.

• 1030

That brings the delegation down to myself. I managed to graduate from Osgoode Hall Law School just before going into the army, served with the Calgary Highlanders, was wounded in 1945 outside Nijmegen in Holland, on discharge from hospital in Toronto I took on the position of General Secretary of the Canadian Paraplegic Association and, more recently, that of Managing Director.

That completes the delegation, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I would like to say at the beginning, Mr. Langford, that as our proceedings will be quite informal please do not hesitate to call on any members of your delegation whenever you see fit.

Mr. Langford: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we are grateful for this opportunity of appearing before you and appreciate your interest in being here to listen to us. We know that you have come at some inconvenience to yourselves in that this Committee was convened a full month before the opening of the next session of Parliament.

We are very pleased that the government has clarified one point, has indicated that its

[Interpretation]

A côté de M. Damiano, vous voyez le major J.-A.-L. Robichaud. Membre du régiment North Shore, il a été blessé en France en 1944.

Plus loin, à ma droite, vous voyez M. Cliff Chadderton que vous connaissez bien. Nous l'avons demandé surtout pour épargner du temps, parce qu'il connaît beaucoup mieux que moi le rapport du Comité Woods.

M. Bill Handley, de Montréal, a servi dans le Régiment canadien des Black Watch Highlanders. En 1941, il a été blessé en Angleterre. Devenu paraplégique, je crois qu'il a été le premier des paraplégiques de la Deuxième guerre mondiale à revenir au Canada.

M. Harry Ward a servi dans le Régiment North Nova Scotia Highlanders. Il a été blessé en France en 1944 et depuis sa sortie de l'hôpital, il est directeur exécutif de la Division québécoise de l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques.

Enfin, moi-même je fais partie de la délégation. J'ai obtenu un diplôme en droit de Osgoode Hall juste avant de devenir membre de l'armée. J'ai servi avec les Calgary Highlanders, j'ai été blessé en 1945, près de Nymegen en Hollande. A ma sortie de l'hôpital, je suis devenu le secrétaire de l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques et plus récemment l'administrateur directeur.

Voilà, monsieur le président, la composition de la délégation.

Le président: Comme nos délibérations se feront sans formalité, n'hésitez pas, monsieur Langford, de vous adresser à n'importe quel membre de votre délégation quand vous le voudrez.

M. Langford: Merci monsieur. Monsieur le président, messieurs, nous vous remercions de nous avoir reçus et nous apprécions énormément l'intérêt que vous nous portez. Et nous savons que ceci peut vous avoir causé des inconvénients du fait que le comité c'est déjà réuni un bon mois avant la rentrée du Parlement.

Nous sommes très heureux de voir que le gouvernement a clarifié un point et a indiqué general review and recommendations contained in the White Paper are to be considered flexible, and that the Minister is anxious to have our views and recommendations and your recommendations on this subject, which makes the job of veterans' organizations and of this Committee of vital importance to the war disabled of Canada.

[Texte]

We hope that we may speak frankly this morning, Mr. Chairman, and we know that you will hear us with understanding.

Before getting into the substance of the brief there are two points that I would like to mention that are not contained in the main brief. The first is to express our pleasure with the proposals in the White Paper relating to the Hong Kong veterans. This has been a very difficult matter to deal with and we are pleased to note that justice will at last be done for this very deserving group.

The second point came up a little earlier this morning and concerns the Canadian Pension Commission. We in the Canadian Paraplegic Association have happily enjoyed the most cordial relations with the members and personnel of the Canadian Pension Commission and the Department of Veterans Affairs. We feel that we have had reasonable treatment from both these branches and it is somewhat alarming to read that the government proposes in effect to break up the Canadian Pension Commission by the establishment of a Directorate of Pensions within the department. Now we say, without casting any aspersions on the department or any of its personnel, that as far as we are concerned the Canadian Pension Commission has served us well in the matters of initial adjudication and we see no reason for this change.

Mr. Chairman, if I may, I am fighting a bit of a sore throat this morning and I would like to call on Mr. Clarke to read the brief.

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. A. C. Clarke (Assistant Managing Director of the Canadian Paraplegic Association):

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this brief is respectfully submitted on behalf of the paraplegic and quadriplegic veterans, who are those who suffered traumatic injury to the spinal cord during the course of their service in Canada's military forces. These people are among the most seriously disabled of all those whose disabilities stem directly from military service. The purpose of this brief is to draw to the attention of the Committee the follow-que sa revue générale et ses recommandations qui figurent au Livre blanc ne sont pas définitives et que le ministère est très anxieux de connaître nos points de vue et commentaires ainsi que vos recommandations, ce qui rend le travail des associations d'anciens combattants et de votre Comité d'une grande importance pour les invalides de guerre.

[Interprétation]

Nous espérons, monsieur le président, que nous pourrons vous parler d'une manière très franche ce matin et que nous obtiendrons votre compréhension.

Avant de présenter notre mémoire, je voudrais exposer deux points très clairement qui ne font pas partie de notre exposé. Le premier point exprime notre joie face aux propositions du Livre blanc sur les anciens combattants de Hong Kong. Il s'agit d'une question délicate et nous sommes heureux de voir qu'enfin justice leur sera faite.

Le deuxième point est venu un peu plus tôt ce matin et concerne la Commission canadienne des pensions. Nous, de l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques, nous sommes très heureux de dire que nous avons de très bonnes relations avec les membres et le personnel de la Commission canadienne des pensions et du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants. Nous avons été assez bien traités par ces deux organismes et c'est avec déception que nous apprenons que le gouvernement veut remplacer la Commission canadienne des pensions par une Direction des pensions à l'intérieur de son ministère. Sans vouloir discréditer le ministère ou son personnel, nous devons dire que la Commission canadienne des pensions nous a bien servis et que nous ne voyons aucune raison de l'abolir.

Monsieur le président, j'ai un léger mal de gorge et j'aimerais que M. Clarke lise le mémoire.

Le président: Allez-y.

M. A. C. Clarke (directeur adjoint de l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques):

Monsieur le président,
Messieurs,

Le présent mémoire est respectueusement présenté au nom des anciens combattants paraplégiques et quadraplégiques qui ont été blessés à la colonne vertébrale à l'occasion de leur service dans les Forces armées du Canada. Ils font partie du groupe de ceux qui sont le plus sérieusement handicapé à la suite d'une incapacité résultant directement de leur service militaire. Ce mémoire a pour ing matters which are of particular concern to the paraplegic veterans:

1. Payment of Pension in relation to the full extent of the disability incurred, in accordance with the intent of the Pension Act, Section 28(1). (Woods Committee recommendations nos 64, 65 and 74.)

2. Continuation of Attendance Allowance to a paraplegic or quadriplegic pensioner during periods of hospitalization for active treatment from time to time as required, for the full duration of any such period of treatment. (Woods Committee recommendation no. 85.)

3. Continuation of compensation at married rate to the widow of a pensioner in Classes 1 to 9, for a full year following the death of a pensioner. (Woods Committee recommendation no. 109.)

The Disability of Paraplegia

It is interesting to note that over 80 per cent of the paraplegic casualties from World War I died within the first year following injury, while the life expectancy of the remainder was drastically shortened.[1] The reason for this lies in the complex nature of the disability.

A paraplegic is a person who is paralyzed from the waist down as a result of injury to the spinal cord. The actual level of the lesion to the spinal cord may vary from the cauda equina to the upper thoracic vertebrae. Normal voluntary and sensory functions are lost below the level of this injury. The individual is thus without the ability to move his legs, to stand or walk or even to change position. In the higher lesions, voluntary control over the muscles of the legs and trunk may be replaced by involuntary muscle spasms or jerks, which are in themselves further disabling and upsetting. He loses voluntary control over the evacuations of his bowel and bladder, which, apart from the social and psychological aspects, poses a constant threat but d'attirer l'attention des membres du Comité sur les points suivants qui présentent un intérêt particulier d'une extrême importance pour les vétérans paraplégiques et quadraplégiques:

1. Paiement d'une pension basée sur l'incapacité totale en vertu de l'article 28 (1) de la Loi sur les pensions (Recommandations 64, 65 et 74 du Comité Woods).

2. Continuité de l'allocation pour le service d'aide aux paraplégiques ou quadraplégiques pensionnés durant les périodes d'hospitalisation pour fins de traitements. Ces jours à l'hôpital sont nécessaires de temps à autre et l'allocation devrait être versée pendant tout le temps de chaque hospitalisation (Recommandation 85 du Comité Woods).

3. Continuité de la pension à la veuve au taux de personne mariée pendant un an après la mort d'un pensionné des classes 1 à 9 (Recommandation 109 du Comité Woods).

Invalidité résultant de la paraplégie

Il est important de noter que plus de 80 p. 100 des paraplégiques de la Première grande guerre sont décédés environ un an après avoir subi leur blessure, alors que les autres ont eu une survie relativement courte[1]. La raison de cet état de choses réside dans l'immense complexité de cette invalidité.

Le paraplégique est paralysé à partir de la taille à la suite d'une blessure à la moelle épinière. Le niveau de la lésion à la moelle épinière varie du coccyx à la vertèbre thoracique supérieure. A partir du niveau de la blessure, les mouvements volontaires et la sensation sont complètement anéantis. Le paraplégique ne peut pas mouvoir ses membres inférieurs et, par conséquent, il lui est impossible de marcher, de se tenir debout ou encore de changer de position. Lorsqu'une lésion se situe plus haut, le contrôle volontaire des muscles des jambes et du tronc est parfois remplacé par des spasmes musculaires involontaires, ce qui rend le handicap plus compliqué et plus pénible. Le paraplégique perd le contrôle volontaire du fonctionnement de ses intestins et de sa vessie, ce qui, en plus de poser un problème social et psychologique, constitue une menace constante pour sa vie et to his life and health through urinary tract sepsis.[2]

The management of his paralyzed bladder and bowel may, in the paraplegic, occupy a large part of his time, energy and thought. The mechanics of doing this in a way that will maintain a level of health and which will make him socially acceptable may require the use of indwelling catheters to drain the bladder, the wearing of external urinary devices and the daily practice of meticulous prophilactic measures designed to minimize infection. Despite careful attention to these details many paraplegics are subject to recurrent bouts of serious illness of urinary tract origin, which often require treatment in hospital and which are both debilitating and time consuming.

The paraplegic also becomes insensate below the level of his lesion. The ramifications of this loss are such that the individual, being unable to feel extremes of heat or cold or other pain stimuli, thus becomes liable to burns, freezing and injuries of which he may be unaware. He will not know where his feet are without looking at them, and this too may lead to injury. Most serious of all, with impaired feeling, muscle power, and circulation, the paraplegic is in constant danger of developing pressure sores, which once developed may take weeks, months or even years to heal.

His susceptibility to pressure sores and to urinary sepsis are leading threats to his general sense of well being and to his expectation of life.

Many paraplegics suffer from abnormal and distorted pain sensations of neurological origin not associated with external stimulation. This sort of pain does not serve any useful function and while it may not be continuous it can be crippling when it does strike.

Both the loss of sensation and the presence of abnormal pain make it difficult to distinguish the symptoms of illnesses, not related to his paraplegia, to which he may be subject from time to time.

sa santé en raison de l'infection des voies urinaires[2].

La paralysie de la vessie et des intestins force généralement le paraplégique à consacrer une partie considérable de son temps, de son énergie et de sa pensée au bon fonctionnement de ces organes. C'est un problème qui pèse constamment sur son esprit et sur son subconscient. Les moyens mécaniques de faire fonctionner ces organes de manière à maintenir un état de santé relativement bon et une vie sociale passable comprennent, entre autres, l'usage de la sonde interne qui draine la vessie et de l'urinoire de caoutchouc dissimulable. L'usage de ces deux appareils exige une attention méticuleuse et constante afin de prévenir ou de minimiser l'infection. Mais même s'ils prennent les plus grandes précautions, de nombreux paraplégiques sont sujets à de fréquentes infections urinaires qui exigent l'hospitalisation et une longue convalescence. Ces infections sans cesse renouvelées affaiblissent le paraplégique et prennent considérablement de son temps.

Le paraplégique a perdu toute sensation à partir du niveau de sa blessure. En conséquence il devient très sensible à la chaleur ou au froid extrêmes, ou à d'autres causes externes qui peuvent provoquer la douleur. C'est dire qu'il peut subir sans même s'en rendre compte des brûlures, des gelures ou d'autres blessures. Ainsi, pour savoir où sont ses pieds, il devra les regarder. Mais ce qui est encore plus sérieux, c'est qu'en raison de son manque de sensation et de l'atrophie musculaire, les plaies qu'il s'inflige peuvent prendre des semaines, des mois et même des années à guérir. Le fait d'être particulièrement exposé aux dangers mentionnés plus haut ainsi qu'aux infections urinaires, constitue une menace constante au bien-être et à la longévité du paraplégique.

Plusieurs paraplégiques souffrent de douleurs et de sensations anormales et intolérables d'origine neuroligique n'ayant aucun rapport avec un stimulus extérieur. Ces douleurs ne remplissent aucune fonction utile et, bien qu'elles ne soient pas continuelles, n'en sont pas moins paralysantes et démoralisantes. La perte de sensation et la présence de douleurs anormales rendent parfois très difficile le diagnostique des symptômes de maladies ou de malaises qui ne relèvent pas de la paraplégie. L'effet psychologique de cette condition varie en intensité avec les individus.

The male paraplegic also suffers the loss of his sexual powers, both capability and potency. The ramifications of this can only be guessed at in terms of the individual's self image and in terms of his relationships with the opposite sex.

As stated earlier, over 80 per cent of the spinal injury casualties, arising out of service during World War I, died during the first year following injury. Consequently the spinal injuries veterans of World War II comprise the first sizeable group of young men, previously in good health and physical condition, which can be used to observe and study the effects of this disability in terms of premature aging. The deterioration in bone structure, musculature, neurological system and general loss of sense of health, well-being and energy is very real to the older paraplegic. There is little doubt that such premature aging and deterioration takes place earlier in the life of a paraplegic or quadriplegic. Dr. Jousse and his associates have documented one facet of this.[3] It may be the effects of physical strain from lifting and throwing himself around the way he has to in the course of daily living, from improper muscular support when sitting and carrying out activities from this position, and of the frequent serious illnesses he is subject to with urological infections and pressure sores, but there is no doubt in the minds of the paraplegic and quadriplegic veterans that these changes do take place. In fact the life expectancy of these people, while dramatically improved from the experience of the era of World War I, is still much below the average for the general population.[4]

• 1040

The quadriplegic suffers all of the disabilities and susceptibilities of the paraplegic plus several additional ones of his own. Most apparent, and not in any way to be underestimated, is the loss of use of his arms and hands either partially or completely. The lesion to the spinal cord in the quadriplegic is located in the cervical region and all normal voluntary and sensory functions are lost below the level of the lesion.

[Interpretation]

Comme nous l'avons déjà mentionné, plus de 80 p. 100 des paraplégiques de la Première grande guerre sont décédés au cours de l'année qui a suivi leur blessure et les autres n'ont pas survécu longtemps. C'est donc dire que les paraplégiques de la Deuxième grande guerre forment le premier groupe important de jeunes hommes qui étaient auparavant en bonne santé et en bonne condition physique, et chez qui on peut étudier maintenant le vieillissement prématuré causé par leur infirmité. La détérioration de la structure des os, des muscles, du système nerveux et la perte générale de la sensation de bien-être, de santé et d'énergie est quelque chose de bien réel pour le paraplégique plus âgé.

Il n'y a aucun doute possible que le vieillissement prématuré et la détérioration générale mentionnés ci-dessus apparaissent beaucoup plus tôt dans la vie d'un paraplégique ou d'un quadraplégique. Le docteur Jousse et son équipe ont fait des recherches importantes à ce sujet[3].

Les causes de ces phénomènes physiologiques sont diverses et multiples. Elles sont peut-être dues, en partie, à l'effort physique constant et souvent trop prononcé que le malade doit déployer pour se lever et se déplacer de toutes sortes de façons au cours des journées. Il est possible qu'une autre cause soit le support musculaire incorrect lorsque le paraplégique poursuit ses activités quotidiennes dans une position assise; ou encore les malaises fréquents et très sérieux causés par l'infection des voies urinaires et les plaies inguérissables. Quoi qu'il en soit, il ne fait aucun doute dans l'esprit du paraplégique ou du quadraplégique que ces changements physiologiques ne sont, hélas, que trop réels! En fait, la longévité de ces personnes, même si elle a été prolongée depuis la Première grande guerre, n'en reste pas moins beaucoup plus basse que la moyenne de longévité de la population en général[4]. En plus des difficultés

The loss of use of arms and hands, either completely or partially, makes the quadriplegic dependent to a very great extent on the assistance of others for even the most basic of functions, e.g., elimination, eating, dressing and even turning in bed. It seriously limits his opportunities for the enjoyment of life, particularly if he is not intellectually well endowed and educated. Only those quadriplegics who are well educated and who have outstanding personalities with special skills of an intellectual nature to offer, are able to engage in a useful occupation.

In addition to the obvious limitations in the use of his arms and hands, the quadriplegic is subject to respiratory problems, to disabling and distressing spasms, to uncontrolled sweating, and to the loss of feeling and normal sensation over a greater part of his body.[5] He is susceptible to a greater degree to the dangers of pressure sores and of urinary infection.

Gentlemen, these are the disabilities suffered by the paraplegics and quadriplegics. They may not be very visible when you see these people dressed up in their best suits, sitting apparently comfortably in wheelchairs, putting their best foot forward so to speak. However appearances are sometimes deceiving.

We believe that it was clearly the intent of Parliament as expressed in the Pension Act to award pensions in accordance with the full extent of the disabilities incurred (Section 28(1) of the Pension Act. We are pleased that the government in its recent White Paper has recognized the exceptional burden of disablement which the multiple disability pensioners carry. However we are most disappointed with the philosophy, the method and the amount of the government's proposal as we particulières au paraplégique le quadraplégique doit supporter de nombreux autres malaises qui lui sont propres. Le plus apparent et non le moindre, c'est la perte partielle ou totale de l'usage de ses bras et de ses mains. La blessure à la moelle épinière chez le quadraplégique se situe dans la région cervicale et toutes les fonctions normales volontaires et sensorielles sont détruites à partir du niveau de la blessure.

La perte partielle ou totale de l'usage des bras et des mains rendent le quadraplégique presque entièrement et constamment sous la dépendance des autres, même pour les fonctions les plus usuelles: éliminer, manger, faire sa toilette, s'habiller et même se tourner dans son lit. Il est facile de comprendre qu'un tel état limite cruellement sa joie de vivre, surtout si le développement intellectuel et l'éducation laissent à désirer. Seuls les quadraplégiques qui ont l'avantage d'avoir une bonne éducation et une belle personnalité et qui sont doués de talents spéciaux sont réellement capable de s'adonner à une occupation utile ou, tout au moins à une activité qui peut les délasser.

En plus d'être limité dans ses mouvements, le quadraplégique est sujet à des troubles respiratoires parfois très sérieux, à des spasmes angoissants qui augmentent considérablement son infirmité. Souvent aussi il transpirera abondamment et d'une façon incontrôlable. Et pour lui la perte d'une sensation normale affectera une plus grande partie de son corps[5]. Il est aussi plus exposé aux dangers des plaies et des infections urinaires.

Voilà les infirmités dont souffrent les paraplégiques et les quadraplégiques. Cela n'est peut-être pas très évident lorsqu'on voit les gens bien habillés, bien assis, semble-t-il du moins dans une chaise roulante. Toutefois, les apparences sont souvent trompeuses.

Nous croyons que le Parlement a vraiment l'intention comme cela est exprimé dans la Loi sur les pensions d'accorder des pensions en fonction de l'invalidité subie (article 28 (1) de la Loi sur les pensions). Nous sommes heureux de voir que le gouvernement dans sa Loi sur les pensions reconnaisse sa dette. Toutefois, nous sommes vraiment désappointés par la philosophie, les méthodes et l'ensemble des propositions du gouvernement en ce qui concerne les infirmités multiples.

understand it, to compensate the multiple disability pensioners for their exceptional burdens of disablement.

It appears to us that this proposal is for another discretionary allowance. It has a welfare connotation to it and it puts both the person who must exercise the discretion and the applicant in an intolerable position.

We do not understand what the government intended when it referred to:

> "specified amenities to relieve pain and disconfort, and to increase as far as possible the enjoyment of life for the pensioner and to provide for him the essential will to live".

We, the paraplegic and quadriplegic war disability pensioners, have the will to live or we would not be here today. All that is necessary to die is to relax the constant 24 hour a day vigilance that is required to avoid urinary tract infections and pressure sores and life can be brought to an unobtrusive, undramatic close. The will to live is not the problem.

Further, most special amenities known to date, which relate directly to our disabilities, are already provided by the Department. For the more general amenities, we would prefer to arrange them ourselves, according to individual interest and taste.

The crux of the matter is that we, as disability pensioners with disabilities assessable several times beyond the 100 per cent level, can see no reason why we should not be compensated for the true assessable extent of the disabilities we carry. As to the method of doing this we urgently request the implementation of the Woods Committee recommendations numbers 64, 65 and 74.

We do not believe that the costs involved are out of line in view of the small number of pensioners to whom they are applicable. There are approximately 165 paraplegics and 15 quadriplegics entitled to treatment and compensation for their primary disabilities. Including the blind and the multiple amputees there are fewer than 500 pensioners in all who would qualify. We estimate that an additional expenditure of less than $2 million would permit the implementation of the Woods Committee recommendations and that the total pension expenditures on the multiple disability casualties would then be under $3.5 million annually. It should be added that the multiple disability casualties are diminishing

[Interpretation]

Il nous semble que la proposition laisse trop de pouvoirs discrétionnaires au gouvernement. Elle renferme connotations de bien-être qui placent le requérant et l'autorité compétente dans une position insupportable.

Nous ne comprenons pas ce que le gouvernement entendait faire lorsqu'il a dit qu'il voulait «améliorer la situation des pensionnés pour lui redonner le maximum de goût à la vie.» Nous, pensionnés quadraplégiques et paraplégiques, ne serions pas ici si nous n'avions pas le goût de vivre. Tout ce qu'il faut pour mourir, c'est d'arrêter la vigilance de 24 heures qui est nécessaire pour éviter et éliminer les infections des voies urinaires entre autres. Le désir de vivre n'est pas un problème, nous avons goût à la vie.

Il y a des commodités reliées directement à notre invalidité, dont s'occupe d'ailleurs le ministère. Pour ce qui est des autres d'ordre général, nous préférons nous en occuper nous-mêmes suivant nos goûts.

Enfin, en tant que pensionnés pour infirmités ou invalidités, nous devrions recevoir des indemnités proportionnelles à nos invalidités, celles-ci dépassant de beaucoup le 100 p. 100 d'évaluation. Quant aux méthodes d'applications, nous vous demandons d'adopter au plus vite les recommandations 64, 65 et 74 du Comité Woods.

Nous croyons que le coût n'est pas si élevé, vu le nombre de personnes en cause. Environ 165 paraplégiques, et 15 quadraplégiques ont droit à des traitements et une compensation. Si l'on tient compte des aveugles et des amputés multiples, il y aurait moins de 500 personnes. Il en coûterait 2 millions de dollars de plus pour mettre en application les recommandations du Comité Woods, ce qui porterait le chiffre total des dépenses à 3.5 millions de dollars par année. Il faudrait ajouter que les cas d'infirmités multiples diminuent en nombre et continueront de diminuer très rapidement. L'engagement financier n'est que pour une période limitée.

in numbers and will do so at an increasingly rapid rate. The financial commitment involved is for a limited period of years only.

We believe the people of Canada would agree that those who have helped make Canada the great nation it is today and who have suffered so heavily in the service of their country, who are barred from so many of the normal enjoyments of life, should be compensated at realistic rates.

We do believe that the provision of supplementary pension by right as recommended by the Woods Committee would be the most appropriate way within the power of the government to increase as far as possible the enjoyment of life of the pensioner and provide for him and his family the financial well being and security that he is unable to provide with his limited or, in some cases, non-existent earning power.

The Chairman: I wonder Mr. Clarke if I could interrupt and suggest we break at this point for five minutes or so. Would that be convenient? I think we have some coffee provided.

After recess

The Chairman: I am going to invite Mr. Clarke to resume. I think at this stage there is a logical break in the brief and I wonder Mr. Clarke was it your wish that there should be questioning at this period or how would you like to proceed?

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, that would be our preference if the Committee would indulge us in that. If there are any questions we would . . .

The Chairman: Are there any questions by members? Mr. Whicher.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I think all of us are impressed with your views of attendance allowance. We have had other people before us who stressed this point and certainly I agree with what you say. There is just one thing, how long do you think this should go on? As I understand, it is cut off immediately if the veteran goes in the hospital. If he is away for a month it is cut off or if he is away for two months, but supposing that unfortunately the veteran had to be in the hospital say, for a year. What would your views be then? Do you think that it should be fully paid?

Nous croyons que les Canadiens seront d'accord que ceux qui ont aidé à faire du Canada le grand pays qu'il est aujourd'hui, qui ont sacrifié leur corps au service de leur pays et qui ont perdu plusieurs des joies de la vie par suite de ce sacrifice ont droit à des compensations équitables. Cela leur revient de droit, cela devrait être fait pour accroître la joie de vivre du pensionné et le bien-être de sa famille. Enfin, il est souvent incapable d'obtenir la sécurité dont il a besoin, vu ses pensions et la pauvreté de ses revenus, s'il en a.

Le président: Puis-je vous interrompre, monsieur Clarke, et proposer que nous arrêtions pour 5 minutes. Cela vous convient-il? Je crois qu'il y a du café à notre disposition.

(Pause de 5 minutes)

Reprise de la séance.

Le président: Alors, je demanderai à M. Clarke de reprendre son travail. Je pense qu'il y a, à ce point une interruption logique du mémoire et je me demande si vous ne désiriez pas, M. Clarke, que nous posions maintenant les questions ou alors que nous procédions d'une autre façon?

M. Clarke: M. le président, ce serait là notre intention si le comité nous le permettait. Nous ne serions que trop heureux de répondre aux questions...

Le président: Y-a-t-il des questions? M. Whicher?

M. Whicher: Monsieur le président, nous sommes tous impressionnés par les propositions que vous faites au sujet de l'allocation de soins. D'autres personnes qui ont comparu ici partageaient votre point de vue, et je ne peux manquer d'être d'accord avec ce que vous avez dit. Une question se pose pourtant: pendant combien de temps croyez-vous que cette situation peut se perpétuer? Si je le comprends bien, dès qu'un ancien combattant va à l'hôpital, s'il est absent pendant un mois, cette allocation est supprimée, ou s'il manque pendant deux mois; mais supposons que ce malheureux ancien combattant soit à l'hôpital pendant disons un an, qu'est-ce que vous

[Text]

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, would you like a comment on that now? I think we deal with that one in the next section.

The Chairman: Oh, all right. We will hold it then.

Mr. Whicher: I see. It was mentioned earlier in the brief. One thing more, later on in the brief are you suggesting that instead of 100 per cent pension it should be 300 per cent or 200 per cent? Do you take a figure?

Mr. Langford: I think, sir, our recommendation is that the Woods Report be implemented which in that case would be 350 per cent or three and a half times the basic rates as a reasonable comparative compensation level for paraplegics.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask one question of fact, Mr. Chairman? Does the figure of 165 paraplegics include veterans who suffered spinal injury of an external nature and does it also include veterans who have contracted any diseases while they were on service which produced spinal injury and the same kind of effects? I have in mind multiple sclerosis, for example.

Mr. Langford: No, sir. We have not dealt with the disease situation. We were talking in terms of actual traumatic injury to the spine.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But there are such persons who are drawing pension.

Mr. Langford: Yes, there can be.

The Chairman: Are there other questions? Would you like to resume then, Mr. Clarke? Possibly some members may come back at the end of your brief, sir.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, may I just comment that not included as part of the brief, but supplementary to it, we have filed a couple of papers. One outlines our estimate of what this would cost in some detail and then there is another supplementary paper which contains Dr. Jousse's remarks to the Woods Committee on what is entailed in the disability of paraplegia. It amplifies a little bit on what we have said in describing the disability. I may say that Dr. Jousse is recognized as feriez? Pensez-vous que l'allocation devrait être intégralement versée?

[Interpretation]

M. Clarke: Monsieur le président, voulez-vous que nous discutions maintenant sur ce sujet. Je pense que cette question fait l'objet de la prochaine section d'étude.

Le président: Oui, bien sûr, nous attendrons donc.

M. Whicher: Bon, on en a parlé plus tôt dans le mémoire. D'autre part, j'aimerais savoir si, plus loin dans votre mémoire, vous proposez qu'au lieu de 100 p. 100 l'on verse des pensions pouvant atteindre 300 p. 100 ou 200 p. 100? Choisissez-vous un chiffre?

M. Langford: Nous recommendons que le rapport Woods soit appliqué. Alors, ce qui signifierait dans ce cas 350 p. 100, trois fois et demie le taux de base qui est accepté et admis actuellement comme compensation raisonnable dans le cas des paraplégiques.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Puis-je, monsieur le président, poser une seule question de fait? Le chiffre de 165 pour les paraplégiques s'applique-t-il aux anciens combattants ayant subi des blessures de nature externe à la moelle épinière, et s'applique-t-il aussi aux anciens combattants qui ont contracté des maladies alors qu'ils étaient en service, maladies ayant causé des dommages à la moelle épinère ou des suites de ce genre? Je songe aux scléroses multiples par exemple.

M. Langford: Non, monsieur, nous n'avons pas traité des maladies. Nous avons parlé des blessures traumatiques, rélles à la moelle épinière.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Mais il y a des cas où ces personnes reçoivent des pensions pour cela?

M. Langford: Oui cela se peut.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Voulez-vous reprendre la lecture de votre mémoire, monsieur Clarke? Il se peut que certains membres du Comité posent des questions à la fin du mémoire, monsieur.

M. Clarke: Monsieur le président, puis-je apporter quelque réflexions additionnelles, supplémentaires à notre mémoire? J'ai ici un document qui donne notre évaluation des coûts avec ventilation et j'ai un autre document supplémentaire (dont l'interprète n'a pas l'exemplaire) qui donne les remarques faites au Comité Woods par le docteur Jousse concernant ce qui fait partie de l'invalidité des paraplégiques. Ceci s'ajoute quelque peu à notre description de l'invalidité. J'ajouterai one of the world's leading authorities on the disability of paraplegia or spinal injuries.

The Chairman: I am sure the members of the Committee will be very happy to have this and we will append it as part of the transcript; the estimated costs and the breakdown which you provided and Dr. Jousse's testimony. Is that agreeable to the members of the Committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Chadderton has a point that he would like to clarify.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton.

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, you will recall yesterday that in speaking of this 350 per cent, if my memory serves me correctly, a figure of $20,000 or somewhere in that neighbourhood was used. This might be the time to say that using the Woods Committee assessment basis and using the present or current rates of pension at single rates of $3,180, this would bring the paraplegic to a pension, not of $20,000 but of $11,130 a year at single rates. If you add the $864 for his wife you are still only at $11,994 which is a long way from that $20,000 figure.

• 1110

It is quite possible that in using the $20,000 figure someone may be adding in attendance allowance and if so I think all we can do is bring you back to the judgment right in the White Paper where at long last it clarifies that attendance allowance is not part of pension. Attendance allowance is encumbered income. It does not come to the man to compensate him for his injury. It comes to him and every cent of it goes out again because of the added cost of his disability.

So I think the record should be clear that 350 per cent at current rates of interest even for a married pensioner is still only $11,900 and nowhere near the $20,000 figure which I heard quoted yesterday.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton, I believe the figure that you recommended is something like $4,150 or that order for a base and 350 per cent of that would be in excess of $14,500, would it not?

Mr. Chadderton: Oh, quite, but if we can have the assurance of the majority of members of the Committee that they are going to que le docteur Jousse est l'une des autorités mondialement reconnue sur le cas des paraplégiques ou des malades de la moelle épinière.

Le président: Je suis certain que les membres du Comité seront très heureux d'avoir ce document et nous l'adjoindrons à la copie en appendice; ainsi que les estimations des coûts et la ventilation que vous avez fournie et le témoignage déposé par le docteur Jousse. Est-on d'accord pour inclure ce document au procès-verbal?

Quelques voix: D'accord.

M. Clarke: Monsieur le président, M. Chadderton aimerait clarifier un point.

Le président: Monsieur Chadderton.

M. Chadderton: Monsieur le président, vous vous rappellerez que, hier, lorsque nous avons parlé du 350 p. 100, si ma mémoire est bonne, un chiffre de 20 mille dollars ou dans ce genre a été cité. Et il serait peut-être opportun de signaler à ce moment-ci, qu'en utilisant la base d'évaluation du Comité Woods et en utilisant les taux actuels de pension de 3,180 dollars, cela permettra aux paraplégiques d'obtenir une pension de non pas 20 mille dollars mais de 11,130 dollars par année pour une personne. Si vous ajoutez 864 dollars pour son épouse, vous avez 11,994 dollars, ce qui est bien loin du chiffre de 20 mille dollars. Il est fort probable qu'en utilisant le chiffre de 20 mille dollars, on y comprenne l'allocation de soins et s'il en est ainsi, tout ce que nous pouvons faire est de vous renvoyer au jugement du Livre blanc qui, enfin, clarifie la question de l'allocation de soins en décidant qu'elle ne fait pas partie de la pension. Il s'agit d'un revenu engagé. Elle n'est pas versée pour compenser l'ancien combattant des blessures qu'il a reçues parce que chaque penny qu'il reçoit s'en va à nouveau en frais supplémentaires causés par son invalidité.

Ainsi, il est bien certain que 350 p. 100 au taux courant d'intérêt, même pour pensionné qui est marié, ne représente que 11,900 dollars, ce qui est bien loin du chiffre de 20,000 dollars que j'ai entendu citer hier.

Le président: Je pense, monsieur Chadderton, que le chiffre était de 4,150 dollars et que les 350 p. 100 de cela seraient 14,500 dollars. C'est exact?

M. Chadderton: C'est exact. Mais si nous pouvons être assurés que la majorité des membres du Comité va recommander ceci au recommend to the government tomorrow morning that the basic rate of pension go up to $4,150, we would be very happy. However, you and I know that that recommendation is not going to be made.

The other thing that bothers us is that there is an announcement in the White Paper which we take to mean that any increase in the basic rate of pension is going to await the decision of this government in regard to the social fabric of the country and all these other things. We can only deal, Mr. Chairman, with the known factors and the known factors do not come to $20,000, they simply come to about $11,900.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton, just to get the record straight. As I understand the reference, it was to analyze the recommendations which were in the Woods Committee and certainly this was the group of recommendations in the Woods Committee Report; just to set the records straight.

Mr. Chadderton: I will say this, that Mr. Justice Woods in his Committee did state that if this 350 per cent were put into effect that it would apply on whatever the current rate of pension is. If the current rate of pension is $4,150 then..

The Chairman: That was recommended by the Committee.

Mr. Chadderton: Right. But by your own mathematics then, Mr. Chairman, you still only get the $14,000 and not $20,000.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton, one of the things, I think, that the Committee do is to have a research paper prepared in this respect outlining what this would be and also, I presume, just what is involved because I do not think they can approach it in a piecemeal fashion. I think it has to be looked at in relationship to the structure of pension rates. But that is another problem which we will certainly be looking at in some detail, I am sure.

Mr. Chadderton: Yes, this is true, Mr. Chairman, but at least two members of this Committee were completely scared off this recommendation yesterday in terms of $20,000, because they buttonhoied me right outside that door. I said I thought we had better set the record straight that it is not $20,000, and that is what we are trying to do here, sir.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, if we are discussing the feelings that we had, I suggest that it has to be discussed in terms of what the pension is now, not what we recommend gouvernement demain matin, que le taux de base de la pension monte à 4,500 dollars, nous en serons très content. Mais nous savons que cette recommandation ne sera pas faite et de plus ce qui nous inquiète aussi c'est qu'il est indiqué dans le Livre blanc que toute augmentation dans le taux de base de la pension devra attendre la décision rendue par le gouvernement en ce qui a trait à l'édifice social du pays et ces autres sujets. Monsieur le président, ainsi nous devons de nouveau travailler avec les choses qui nous sont connues et les choses qui nous sont connues ne se montent pas à $20,000, elles s'arrêtent simplement à $11,900.

Le président: Mettons les choses au point, monsieur Chadderton, si je comprends bien nous sommes ici pour analyser les recommandations qui sont présentées dans le rapport du Comité Woods et ceci touche précisément les recommandations du rapport Woods.

M. Chadderton: Bien, d'accord, je dirais que si le juge Woods et son comité dirait que les 350 p. 100 devaient s'appliquer, ceci s'ajusterait immédiatement sur le taux de pension actuel, si le taux de pension actuel est de $4,150, alors...

Le président: C'est ce que recommandait le Comité.

M. Chadderton: Mais même d'après vos propres calculs vous voyez que nous n'arrivons qu'à $14,000 et non pas au $20,000 mentionnés plus tôt.

Le président: Mais monsieur Chadderton, je dois vous faire savoir que le Comité doit considérer tous ses mémoires comme des recherches afin de pouvoir en discuter et non de discuter des choses point par point. Il faut regarder ces choses en considérant le taux actuel des pensions. Mais ce dernier problème il est certain que nous allons l'examiner dans les détails.

M. Chadderton: Oui d'accord, c'est vrai, monsieur le président, mais deux membres de ce Comité ont été tellement effrayés par les recommandations de ce Comité à cause de ce $20,000 qu'ils m'en ont parlé quand je suis sorti de la séance. Je crois que nous devrions nous rappeler que ce n'est pas de $20,000 qu'il s'agit.

M. Peters: Je soutiens, monsieur le président, que ceci devrait être discuté en ce qui concerne le taux actuel des pensions, et non en ce qu'il devrait être parce que notre rôle that it may be because we are really not involved in studying the pension rates. We are only involved really in deciding whether or not we change the formula for paraplegics and multiple disabilities in terms of 100 per cent and that really the discussion is not on a proposed amount but should be on the amount that we now have. That would bring it up to a figure of approximately $11,000.

Mr. Chadderton: Excuse me, $11,900; I think it is important. The $900 means a lot, one way or the other.

Mr. Peters: $12,000.

The Chairman: Are there any other comments by members of the Committee?

Mr. Clarke: I will go on.

The Attendance Allowance

The second matter of great concern to the paraplegic and quadriplegic veterans is that of attendance allowance.

With regard to this there are some proposals which we approve and some which we regret in the White Paper. We welcome the proposed amendment which will state unequivocally that attendance allowance will not be considered part of any pension paid for any disability. We also endorse the government's proposal to continue to maintain the present arrangement under which this allowance may be awarded to a pensioner on the basis of his need for an attendant, regardless of whether or not he has pension entitlement for the disability which creates the need. We are aware of pensioners who have become paraplegic in civilian life who have been helped by this provision.

• 1115

We regard the proposal to provide that attendance allowance be continued for one month following the death of the pensioner as an improvement, although the Woods Committee Report recommended two months.

We very much regret the proposed reduction of payment of attendance allowance to a blind pensioner during periods when he is necessarily detained on treatment in hospital, to one month from the present legislative provision for paying the allowance throughout the period of his necessary hospitalization, and we regret the implied introduction of the means test if it is to be continued in pay beyond one month. We respectfully submit that the reasons which have made the provisions of Section 33(3) of the Pension Act valid in their application to blind pensioners n'est pas d'établir précisément ces taux. Nous sommes ici pour discuter les détails à savoir si nous devons, oui ou non, changer la formule qui s'applique aux paraplégiques et aux invalidités multiples et de savoir si leur pension de 100 p. 100 pourrait être relevée, c'est-à-dire si elle devrait atteindre approximativement $11,000.

M. Chadderton: Pardon, monsieur, je corrige, $11,900. Je crois que c'est important. Neuf cents dollars, c'est quelque chose.

M. Peters: $12,000.

Le président: Est-ce qu'il y aurait des explications à donner?

M. Clarke:

L'allocation de soins

Un deuxième problème qui affecte beaucoup le paraplégique et le paraplégique total, c'est l'allocation de soins. A ce sujet il y a quelques propositions que nous approuvons et d'autres dont nous regrettons la présence dans le Livre blanc. Nous applaudissons à la modification proposée qui dit sans équivoque que l'allocation de soins ne sera en aucun cas considérée comme faisant partie d'une pension quelconque payée pour une invalidité quelconque. Nous acceptons aussi la proposition du gouvernement aux fins de continuer l'arrangement actuel en vertu duquel cette allocation peut être accordée à un pensionné quant à ses besoins en soins, sans compter s'il a droit à une pension pour invalidité ou non. Nous avons eu connaissance de pensionnés qui sont devenus paraplégiques dans leur vie civile, et qui ont été aidés par cette disposition.

Nous regardons la proposition de pourvoir à l'allocation de soins pendant le mois qui suit la mort du pensionné comme une amélioration, même si le rapport du comité Woods recommandait un délai de deux mois.

Nous regrettons profondément la réduction proposée du paiement de l'allocation de soins à un pensionné aveugle pendant les périodes durant lesquelles il est sous traitement à l'hôpital. Cette allocation était d'un mois en vertu des dispositions de la loi actuelle, et elle est réduite au paiement de l'allocation pendant la période nécessaire d'hospitalisation. Nous regrettons l'introduction du contrôle des revenus si cette allocation devait être continuée à être versée après ledit mois. Nous disons respectueusement que les raisons qui ont rendu valables les disposiin the past continue to be valid, and we had hoped that these provisions would be extended to cover those with spinal injuries, entitled to attendance allowance, as recommended by the Woods Committee, No. 85. We also submit that there should be no thought of the introduction of a means test when a pensioner otherwise entitled to attendance allowance is necessarily detained on treatment in hospital. In our view the means test has no place in war disability pension legislation at all.

Section 30(1) of the Pension Act reads:

> "A member of the forces who is totally disabled and helpless, whether entitled to a pension of class one or a lower class, and who is, in addition, in need of attendance, is entitled, if he is not cared for under the jurisdiction of the Department of Veterans Affairs in a hospital, to an addition to his pension, subject to review from time to time, of an amount in the discretion of the Commission of not less than four hundred and eighty dollars per annum and not more than three thousand dollars per annum."

This allowance assists the paraplegic in meeting the additional expenses which he encounters in living with his disability. At the maximum rate, the allowance is at a level where it may be possible to hire an attendant for one eight-hour shift, five days a week. In practice, however, a more efficient solution is to use this money to purchase occasional attendance as required and as an allowance to compensate the pensioner for the many additional expenses occasioned by his disability.

The paraplegic must live within a controlled environment if he is to function with any degree of self sufficiency. Being confined to a wheelchair for mobility, he is restricted in his living accommodation, his transportation and in most of his daily activities. His living accommodation whether it be in a house, an apartment or a hotel must be accessible to a wheelchair and it must be spacious enough, especially in hallways, doorways, and bathrooms, to accommodate a wheelchair. He is restricted to the one-floor house which is more expensive per square foot than the two-storey or split-level house. Despite the extra cost per square foot he needs more square feet of space in which to tions de l'article 33(3) de la Loi sur les pensions dans leur application aux pensionnés aveugles au cours du passé continuent à être valables, et nous avions espéré que ces dispositions auraient été étendues aux pensionnés souffrant de blessures à la colonne vertébrale, du fait qu'ils soient eux aussi admissibles à l'allocation de soins, comme la recommandation n° 85 du rapport Woods le mentionne. Nous proposons aussi que l'on ne devrait absolument pas penser à l'introduction d'un contrôle des revenus lorsqu'un pensionné qui reçoit une allocation de soins est pendant une certaine période, sous traitement à l'hôpital. A notre point de vue, ce contrôle des revenus n'a pas sa place dans une législation sur les pensions d'invalides de guerre.

L'article 30 (1) de la Loi sur les pensions dit ceci:

> «Un membre des forces qui est atteint d'invalidité et d'impotence totale, qu'il ait droit à une pension de la première catégorie ou d'une catégorie inférieure, et qui, de plus requiert des soins, a droit, s'il n'en reçoit pas sous la juridiction du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, à un supplément de pension, sous réserve de révision de temps à autre, d'un montant, à la discrétion de la Commission, d'au moins quatre cent quatre-vingts dollars par année et d'au plus trois milles dollars par année».

Cette allocation a pour but d'aider le paraplégique ou le paraplégique total à subvenir aux dépenses supplémentaires qu'entraîne nécessairement son handicap. A son taux maximum, l'allocation peut permettre l'engagement d'un aide à raison de huit heures par jour, cinq jours par semaine. Cependant, il semble que la manière la plus efficace d'utiliser cette allocation consiste pour l'invalide à engager de l'aide occasionnelle, quand besoin il y a, et à se servir du reste de l'allocation pour régler les multiples dépenses supplémentaires occasionnées par son invalidité.

Afin de pouvoir jouir d'une certaine autonomie, le paraplégique est forcé de vivre dans un environnement contrôlé et restreint. Confiné dans une chaise roulante, son espace vital, ses mouvements et la plupart de ses activités quotidiennes sont considérablement réduits. L'endroit où il vit, que ce soit une maison, un appartement ou un hôtel, doit être facilement accessible en chaise roulante. Il doit offrir assez d'espace surtout dans les corridors, les portes et la chambre de bain pour que le paraplégique puisse circuler sans trop de difficultés en chaise roulante. A moins qu'il y ait un ascenseur facile d'accès, le malade doit demeurer dans une plain-pied, ce qui est plus dispendieux s'il s'agit d'une maison. Il manoeuvre with a wheelchair. He also needs level or ramped access to his house, which in the Canadian climate, should be covered. Ideally, his garage should be big enough to permit him to get out of his automobile inside the garage into his wheelchair and enter the house all under shelter from the weather. This requires a larger than average garage.

In apartments, usually only the more expensive buildings offer sheltered car parking, sheltered access from garage to elevator and enough space in the apartment, particularly in the bathroom to manage with a wheelchair.

If he goes travelling, in order to get manageable accommodation in hotels, motels, and so on, he has to pick the more expensive accommodation. He cannot make shift. For similar reasons, it is advisable that he choose the more expensive means of transportation, for the demands of other travellers may be somewhat less, the service people may be able to give him more assistance and the accommodation may be more suitable.

For daily transportation, the only conveyance a paraplegic can use is a hand controlled car or a taxi. The use of less expensive public transportation by persons in wheelchairs is just not feasible. In addition to the metered fare the taxi driver should be, and expects to be, tipped for lifting a wheelchair in and out of the taxi trunk and for the extra time a disabled fare requires.

• 1120

When it comes to maintenance of a house and yard the paraplegic must hire all his work done, from cutting the grass, to painting, to snow shovelling. Even the most trifling repair and maintenance jobs are beyond the reach and the physical capacity of most paraplegics. For these he is dependent upon the plumber, the carpenter or the service man or upon the kindness of his friends and neighbours. If he goes to the theatre he has to sit in readily accessible seats on the ground floor, usually the most expensive in the house. If he goes on a holiday, he has to choose expensive accommodation in order to get a layout of facilities in which he can manage with a wheelchair. He is not able to rough it for fear of pressure sores or breakdown in health.

Curiously, the more active and busy the paraplegic is, the more attendance and assistance he requires. If he sits at home watching television in a controlled environment he needs less help than if he is living life as fully as is possible for him. Yet he must avoid the life of a recluse if he is to maintain his health both physically and psychologically.

[Interprétation]

doit, en outre, avoir une rampe d'accès qui, à cause du climat canadien, doit être couverte. Son garage devrait être assez spacieux pour lui permettre de sortir de son automobile, de s'installer dans sa chaise et de pénétrer sous couvert dans sa maison, sans trop de difficultés.

S'il vit en appartement, il devra opter pour une conciergerie où la vie coûte plus cher, mais qui offre un endroit de stationnement couvert avec un ascenseur et assez d'espace pour circuler librement en chaise roulante.

S'il voyage, il doit s'arrêter à des hôtels ou à des motels plus dispendieux afin d'obtenir les services dont il a besoin. Il doit aussi généralement prendre le transport qui lui offre plus de facilité de mouvement, mais qui coûte plus cher.

Pour ses déplacements quotidiens, il n'a à sa disposition que deux moyens de transport: une auto conduite entièrement à la main ou le taxi. S'il prend le taxi, le conducteur exigera avec raison un montant supplémentaire pour l'aide qu'il sera appelé à donner.

Il devra nécessairement engager de l'aide pour tous ses travaux domestiques (tondre le gazon, enlever la neige, peinturer, etc.). Il lui est même impossible d'effectuer les plus petites réparations et les travaux d'entretien courants qu'une personne ordinaire peut accomplir. En un mot, il doit constamment débourser pour les plus menus services.

Il est assez paradoxal de constater que plus le paraplégique est actif, plus il a besoin d'aide. Par exemple, s'il se contente de s'asseoir chez lui pour regarder la télévision, il aura moins besoin d'assistance que s'il s'efforce de vivre une vie aussi remplie que possible. Le paraplégique doit éviter de vivre en reclus, s'il veut conserver une santé physique, psychologique et morale relativement bonne.

L'allocation de soins n'est pas une compensation additionnelle pour incapacité mais bien une allocation permettant de faire face à des dépenses supplémentaires et inévitables causées par la paraplégie.

The Problem Pertaining to Attendance Allowance

Under the present provisions of the Pension Act, whenever a paraplegic is admitted to hospital under the jurisdiction of the Department of Veterans Affairs, attendance allowance is suspended during his period of hospitalization. For the first two months of his hospitalization for active treatment an equivalent amount is paid to him through the Treatment Services. However, this treatment allowance ceases completely after two months. This is a matter of great concern to the paraplegic who, as has been pointed out above, uses this allowance to provide for himself accommodation in which he can manage and a variety of other services in the nature of, or in lieu of, attendance. He does not sell his house or give up his apartment or other accommodation while he is in hospital. If he has a housekeeper or cleaning lady, he does not release her from service or he may not find a suitable one when he is ready for discharge from hospital. In other words, his overhead of expense carries on without much diminution simply because he is temporarily in hospital. With the complications of paraplegia and quadriplegia, necessary hospitalization can easily run beyond two months. There should be no cessation or limitation of attendance allowance to a veteran necessarily hospitalized or detained in hospital for active treatment. It should be continued without reduction for those paraplegic and quadriplegic veterans who normally live out of hospital, whenever they require admission for active treatment, regardless of the duration of the period of treatment. We request the retention in the Pension Act of the present Section 33(3) which states that attendance allowance shall be paid to a blind member of the forces while he is an in-patient under treatment or care from the Department, and that this provision be extended to cover those with spinal injuries who are entitled to attendance allowance. (Woods Committee recommendation No. 85.)

[Interpretation]

Le problème de l'allocation de soins

Lorsque le paraplégique est hospitalisé sous les auspices du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants, son allocation de soins cesse. Pendant les deux premiers mois de son hospitalisation seulement, les services de traitements lui versent un montant équivalent. Les deux mois écoulés, il ne reçoit plus aucune allocation de service, peu importe la durée de son hospitalisation, durée qui peut facilement se prolonger bien au delà de deux mois. La situation devient alors précaire et déprimante. Pendant son absence, il doit assurer un entretien raisonnable de sa maison, son appartement ou de sa chambre pour son retour. C'est dire que la très grande partie des services dont il a besoin doivent continuer même pendant son hospitalisation. Nous sommes donc d'avis que cette allocation ne devrait ni cesser, ni être limitée lorsqu'un vétéran doit être hospitalisé. L'article 33(3) de la Loi sur les pensions dit bien que l'allocation d'hospitalisation à un vétéran aveugle sera payée pendant son hospitalisation. Nous maintenons que cette disposition de la Loi devrait s'étendre aux vétérans qui ont été blessés à l'épine dorsale (Recommandation 85 de la Commission Woods).

The Chairman: Do you want to interrupt at this point for comments? Mr. Whicher had a question some time ago about the attendance allowance. Perhaps this would be the time to put it, Mr. Whicher?

Mr. Whicher: I think the brief is quite explicit but my question was how long this attendance allowance should be paid when the veteran is in the hospital? I agree that he should not be cut off if he goes in for a month or two months, and you have covered that. You say in your brief, "regardless of the duration of the period of treatment." We have

Le président: Est-ce que quelqu'un veut faire des commentaires à ce point-ci? Monsieur Whicher avait une question au sujet de l'allocation de soins. Peut-être est-ce le temps de la poser, monsieur Whicher?

M. Whicher: Je pense que le mémoire explique très bien la situation mais ma question portait sur le temps pendant lequel cette pension doit être payée lorsque l'ancien combattant est à l'hôpital. Je suis d'accord que cette allocation ne devrait pas être supprimée si le pensionné passe un mois ou deux à l'hôpital. Vous avez déja couvert le sujet. Nous to have some figure there. We could not have it continue if the treatment was taking a year. I use that as an example. Have you any suggestion about when the cut-off should be?

The Chairman: Mr. Clarke?

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, we think that the attendance allowance to a veteran should be continued, who normally lives out of hospital, throughout the period of his necessary detention for treatment in hospital, regardless of how long the treatment takes.

Mr. Langford: This essentially, I believe, is a medical decision. If the man is detained and not permitted to go home for medical reasons he presumably has to maintain his home and services in the community awaiting discharge. As you probably know, discharge is sometimes unpredictable; it may be a month, or two months, or it may be six months.

• 1125

Another period of possible long-term hospitalization, which arises from time to time, is the serious illness, or the terminal illness situation, which may well drag on up to a year. We feel that if the stay in hospital is medically necessary this is no time to bother the man and his wife about changing their living arrangements and cutting down expenses.

The Chairman: Mr. MacRae, Mr. Peters.

Mr. MacRae: How many paraplegics have been completely confined to hospital since the end of the war and have never been allowed out? Have there been some in that category?

Mr. Langford: I am not sure that I can answer that in terms of paraplegics. There are a number of quadriplegics who are permanently resident in hospital.

Mr. MacRae: And have never been out?

Mr. Langford: And who only go out possibly for short periods, for a holiday, or to visit members of the family, to provide a break; but who cannot survive or manage outside of hospital for any prolonged length of time.

It was our thinking that these people are normally resident in hospital, so that the attendance allowance in that case would be payable just for the period they are out of hospital.

[Interprétation]

devrions avoir quelques chiffres à ce sujet. Nous ne pouvons continuer à verser l'allocation si le traitement dure pendant un an. Je donne ce chiffre comme exemple. Avez-vous des suggestions en ce qui concerne la date à laquelle il faudrait couper cette allocation?

Le président: Monsieur Clarke?

M. Clarke: Nous pensons que l'allocation de soin doit continuer lorsqu'un ancien combattant vit normalement à l'extérieur de l'hôpital, tout au long du traitement, sans que la durée du traitement soit en cause.

M. Langford: Je pense qu'il s'agit là d'une décision purement médicale. Si l'ancien combattant est sous traitement et qu'il ne peut pas retourner chez lui pour des raisons médicales, il doit présumément continuer à entretenir la maison et payer les services nécessaires en attendant sa sortie de l'hôpital. Il y a aussi une autre possibilité en ce qui concerne la durée de l'hospitalisation, c'est-à-dire le moment où le vétéran contracte une maladie très grave ou que son affection est dans sa phase terminale. Nous pensons que tant que le vétéran doit rester à l'hôpital pour des raisons médicales, que ce n'est pas le temps d'ennuyer cet homme et sa femme afin de modifier leur train de vie et couper leurs dépenses.

Le président: Monsieur MacRae, puis monsieur Peters.

M. MacRae: Je voudrais vous demander si vous pouvez nous faire savoir combien d'anciens combattants ont été admis dans les hôpitaux à la fin de la guerre et qui n'en sont jamais sortis?

M. Langford: Je regrette mais je n'ai pas, je crois, les renseignements que vous demandez surtout en ce qui concerne les paraplégiques, mais il y a plusieurs quadriplégiques qui sont en résidence permanente à l'hôpital.

M. MacRae: Et qui n'en sont jamais sortis?

M. Langford: Qui peuvent sortir peut-être pour des périodes très courtes ou pour des vacances ou encore pour visiter des membres de leur famille, afin de leur changer les idés; mais ces personnes sont obligées de rester à l'hôpital parce qu'elles ne pourraient pas survivre si elles étaient en dehors de l'hôpital pendant une longue période. Nous pensons que dans les cas où ces personnes sont normalement des résidents de l'hôpital, que l'alloca-

Mr. MacRae: Yes; of course.

Mr. Langford: Mr. Damiano, who is present, is one who is not permanently resident in hospital. He happens to be in at the moment, and may be for a period of few months, for treatment of a urinary infection. Although, as you can see, his disability is quite severe, he and his wife and adopted children are able to manage out of hospital for the basic part of the year and his hospitalization is a temporary matter of clearing up this particular infection. As soon as that can be cured there will be no one more anxious to be discharged from hospital than Tony.

Mr. MacRae: Thank you.

The Chairman: Possibly he might want to say something at this point. I do not know.

Mr. Anthony Damiano (Scarborough, Ontario): I could say that I do not think I would be able to manage out of the hospital if the Ontario Government did not pay part of my rent. I pay only $88 a month, I live in an apartment that is not suitable. I cannot get into the bathroom. I do not like to talk about people, but I live in an area that perhaps you people would call a slum.

Mr. Badanai: Do you have any children?

Mr. Damiano: Yes, two.

Mr. Badanai: And you live in an apartment?

Mr. Damiano: Yes—the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Mr. Badanai: I see; and are you on the main floor?

Mr. Damiano: No; the ninth floor. In the last two years I have had to call the fire department three times to get me upstairs.

Mr. Badanai: You require help going up and down?

Mr. Damiano: I require help for everything.

Mr. Badanai: Everything?

Mr. Damiano: If it were not for my wife I would never be able to survive outside.

tion de soins ne devrait être versée que lors du séjour à l'extérieur de l'hôpital.

M. MacRae: Oui, bien sûr.

M. Langford: Monsieur Damiano ici présent est une personne qui n'est pas résidente en permanence dans un hôpital. Il est actuellement à l'hôpital parce qu'il suit un traitement pour enrayer une infection urinaire.

Comme vous le constater, même si son invalidité est grave, lui, sa femme et ses enfants adoptifs se tiennent à l'écart de l'hôpital la majeure partie de l'année, et son hospitalisation est temporaire, afin de le débarrasser de cette infection. Aussitôt qu'il sera guéri, il n'y en aura pas de plus impatient que Tony pour demander son licenciement de l'hôpital.

M. MacRae: Merci.

Le président: Peut-être que monsieur Damiano aimerait dire quelque chose? Je ne sais pas.

M. Anthony Damiano (Scarborough, Ontario): Je ne pense pas que je serais capable de me débrouiller si le gouvernement de l'Ontario ne payait pas une partie de mon loyer. Je ne paie pourtant que $88 de loyer par mois pour un appartement qui ne me convient pas. Je ne peux pas aller à la salle de bain. Je n'aime pas dire du mal des gens, mais je dirai que mon quartier peut s'appeler un quartier de taudis.

M. Badanai: Avez-vous des enfants?

M. Damiano: Oui, deux.

M. Badanai: Et vous vivez dans un appartement?

M. Damiano: Oui, un appartement de la Ontario Housing Corporation.

M. Badanai: Au rez-de-chaussée?

M. Damiano: Non. J'habite le neuvième étage. J'ai dû appeler trois fois les pompiers pour me remonter chez moi au cours des deux dernières années.

M. Badanai: Vous avez besoin d'aide pour monter et descendre?

M. Damiano: Oui, j'ai besoin d'aide pour tout.

M. Badanai: Pour tout?

M. Damiano: Si ce n'était pas pour ma femme, je n'aurais jamais été capable de vivre à l'extérieur de l'hôpital.

[Texte]

Mr. Peters: Is it your wife who is your attendant?

Mr. Damiano: Yes. My wife has never had a holiday in the twelve years that we have been married. We cannot afford a holiday.

Mr. Whicher: May I ask what your cheque is per month with the attendance allowance?

Mr. Damiano: With the attendance allowance and having two children—they deduct veterans insurance—$639 a month.

Sometimes I have to hire outside help. To give you an example, two months ago my wife hurt herself lifting me. She could not lift me. I went to the hospital to try to get in. They will only admit you if there is something wrong with you. They did not consider there was anything wrong with me at that time. I did not have an infection. You cannot be admitted now through the University of Toronto, as they have it arranged, unless you have an infection, or a high temperature, or something like that.

Mr. Badanai: I have one further question, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Damiano, are you taking a course at the university?

Mr. Damiano: No; I did not.

Mr. Badanai: You do not do anything?

Mr. Damiano: No, I do not do anything.

Mr. MacRae: I was trying to say, Mr. Chairman, that just for this veteran to survive has been a tremendous accomplishment in view of his very serious disability.

Mr. Damiano: You will have to credit my wife with that.

Mr. MacRae: Yes; and you, too.

The Chairman: Mr. Whicher?

Mr. Whicher: I think, Mr. Chairman, that a fellow like Tony should be able to get into the hospital at any time he wants to; that is what I think. I think there is something wrong when he cannot get in unless under certain conditions . . .

Mr. Damiano: They did let me in, but after I had waited three hours in the admitting part of the hospital and I had tried to explain the case. It was late at night, so they had to phone the head of Sunnybrook and he said to let me in under active treatment. I stayed in

[Interprétation]

M. Peters: Est-ce que je peux vous demander, monsieur, si c'est votre femme qui s'occupe de vous?

M. Damiano: Oui, monsieur. Ma femme n'a pas pu prendre de vacances depuis les douze années que nous sommes mariés. Nous ne pouvons pas nous payer de vacances.

M. Whicher: Puis-je vous demander à combien se monte votre chèque mensuel, y compris l'allocation de soin?

M. Damiano: Avec l'allocation de soin et en ayant deux enfants, mais moins l'assurance des anciens combattants, je reçois $639 par mois.

Je suis obligé quelquefois d'engager de l'aide. Il y a deux mois, ma femme s'est blessée en me levant, et de ce fait ma femme ne pouvait plus me lever. J'ai dû aller à l'hôpital pour essayer d'obtenir mon admission. La seule façon pour qu'on vous admette à l'hôpital, c'est d'être malade. Mais à ce moment-là, comme il n'y avait rien qui n'allait pas avec moi, on n'a pas voulu m'accepter. Vous ne pouvez pas être admis à l'hôpital universitaire de Toronto à moins que vous ayiez une maladie très spéciale comme une infection, une fièvre assez élevée et des choses comme ça.

M. Badanai: Est-ce que vous suivez des cours à l'université?

M. Damiano: Non.

M. Badanai: Vous ne faites rien?

M. Damiano: Non. je ne fais rien.

M. MacRae: Je vous disais, monsieur le président, que pour ce vétéran, survivre, c'est déjà une prouesse extraordinaire, pour un invalide.

M. Damiano: C'est à ma femme que je le dois.

M. MacRae: Oui, et à vous aussi.

Le président: Monsieur Whicher?

M. Whicher: Monsieur, je vous dirais, je trouve que des personnes comme Tony devrait être à même de pouvoir être admis dans un hôpital comme il le veut. Il y a donc quelque chose qui ne va pas s'il ne peut entrer que dans certaines conditions.

M. Damiano: Il m'ont admis après que j'eus attendu pendant trois heures dans la section des admissions et c'était déjà tard la nuit. Il fallait demander au surintendant de Sunnybrook qui a ordonné de m'admettre sous traitements actifs. J'y suis resté quelques jours et just a couple of days and I got my brother-in-law in Toronto to help until my wife got over this thing.

Mr. Whicher: We should appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that a fellow like Tony waiting for three hours is the same as many of us waiting for three days. He should not have to wait more than three minutes. I think these doctors should be told this, too.

The Chairman: Are there any further comments or questions?

Mr. Marshall: You do not have to answer this, Tony, but how do you manage on the $600 and some odd dollars a month?

Mr. Damiano: I have a very hard time.

Mr. Marshall: You have a pretty hard time.

Mr. Damiano: My wife does not go anywhere.

Mr. Marshall: Have you got in debt because of it?

Mr. Damiano: Oh yes, I am quite in debt. I have a car which I am still making payments on, otherwise I would not have one. Every Christmas I get farther in debt. My son, who is 11 years old, he has not been to Expo. He went to the Exhibition once. This year he did because he has a paper route.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Who drives the car, your wife?

Mr. Damiano: My wife.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This $600 is the total of your cheque, including the attendance allowance. How much is that? What is the attendance allowance?

Mr. Damiano: Yes, the attendance allowance is $250 a month, $3,000 a year.

Mr. Bigg: Twenty-four hours a day.

Mr. Damiano: Yes. If I had to hire an attendant, I would never be able to do it.

Mr. Bigg: Your wife is on three shifts a day?

Mr. Damiano: That is right.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can ask Tony because I know that he wants to help and we are trying to help to;—do you have special costs? We know you have to hire people when your wife hurts herself, for example, but your food costs for your family would not be any greater than they would be mon beau-frère naturellement est venu m'aider car ma femme ne pouvait y voir.

M. Whicher: Il ne faut pas oublier que trois heures d'attente pour Tony équivaut à 3 jours pour une personne comme nous. Il ne devrait pas attendre plus de 3 minutes. Les médecins devraient être mis au courant.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions ou commentaires?

M. Marshall: Vous n'êtes pas tenu de répondre, mais comment vous débrouillez-vous avec 600 dollars par mois Tony?

M. Damiano: Bien, c'est très difficile.

M. Marshall: Vous avez beaucoup de difficulté.

M. Damiano: Ma femme ne sort pas.

M. Marshall: Avez-vous contracté des dettes?

M. Damiano: Oui, j'en ai. J'ai une voiture, que je paye par versements. Chaque fois, que Nôel arrive je m'endette d'avantage. Mon fils qui a 11 ans, n'est jamais allé à l'Expo. Cette année il est allé à l'exposition parce qu'il a livré les journaux.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Qui conduit la voiture, votre épouse?

M. Damiano: Mon épouse.

M. Knowles (Winnipeg-Nord-Centre): Ce montant de 600 dollars, comprend donc toutes les pensions que l'on vous donne? Quelle est la pension de soin qu'on vous donne?

M. Damiano: Oui, l'allocation est de 250 dollars par mois, à peu près 3,000 dollars par année.

M. Bigg: Vingt-quatre heures par jour.

M. Damiano: Oui. Si je devais engager quelqu'un, je ne pourrais pas y arriver.

M. Bigg: Votre épouse est sur trois équipes par jour?

M. Damiano: C'est exact.

M. Whicher: Je voudrais questionner Tony. Il sait que nous voulons l'aider et il est prêt à collaborer. Est-ce que vous avez des frais spéciaux, par exemple quand votre femme a été blessée, avez-vous engagé quelqu'un? Vos dépenses de nourriture sont les mêmes que pour tout le monde je suppose. Et vous me for others and your rent is $88 a month you said?

Mr. Damiano: Yes.

Mr. Whicher: Is your car the main extent of your indebtedness?

Mr. Damiano: The car, no, a finance indebtedness too, because every time Christmas comes around we never have enough money out of our cheque to buy any presents for the children or something like that and they have to have some presents of some kind. So as long as you pay your bills each month it is not hard to get credit.

Mr. Legault: Mr. Chairman could I ask Tony, have you ever experienced some time when your attendance allowance has been cut?

Mr. Damiano: I would not let it be cut because I would not stay in the hospital. I would get out myself.

Mr. Legault: So you cannot afford to stay in the hospital?

Mr. Damiano: No. I am in there now. The first time was 10 days now this time it has been about 18 days. If I had come close to the two months, if they would not let me out, I would try to make some excuse to see if they would discharge me and then let me come back in another week or something, so it would continue.

Mr. Legault: You are not able to afford the luxuries, such as today, you would be most occupied, I would say, at times just to look at TV. You would not be able to afford a colour TV.

Mr. Damiano: You can afford a colour TV as long as you have a good credit rating, if you pay your debts.

Mr. Legault: Yes, but you would be constantly in debt in order to keep up some of the things.

Mr. Bigg: Some paraplegics have automobiles. Have we any idea how much it would cost to maintain one of these special automobiles, these electric controlled ones and so on? Could you tell us that? How much would it cost, for instance, to get a car that Tony could drive.

Mr. Damiano: I could never drive a car, sir.

[Interprétation]

dites que votre loyer est de 88 dollars par mois.

M. Damiano: Oui.

M. Whicker: Votre voiture constitue votre dette la plus importante?

M. Damiano: Non. J'ai aussi une dette financière. Mais parce que je n'ai jamais assez d'argent pour Noël, je dois emprunter de l'argent et de ce fait, je suis constamment en dettes. Tant que vous payez vos comptes tous les mois, on vous fait crédit facilement.

M. Legault: Avez-vous eu des cas déjà où vos allocations ont été coupées?

M. Damiano: Non, je serais sorti de l'hôpital avant.

M. Legault: Vous ne pouvez pas vous permettre de rester à l'hôpital?

M. Damiano: Non. J'y suis présentement. Voyez-vous, je suis allé une fois pour dix jours, et cette fois-ci ça fait dix-huit jours. Si je devais y aller pour plus de deux mois, il faudrait que je m'arrange pour trouver une raison pour sortir de l'hôpital pour revenir une semaine plus tard peut-être pour que l'allocation continue. Je ne peux pas me permettre de rester plus de deux mois à l'hôpital et perdre mon allocation.

M. Legault: Vous ne pouvez pas vous offrir de luxe, par exemple, vous avez peut-être un téléviseur, mais vous ne pouvez pas avoir la télé-couleur?

M. Damiano: Vous pouvez en avoir un si vous payez bien vos dettes.

M. Legault: Oui, mais vous seriez toujours endetté si vous voulez être à la page.

M. Bigg: Certains paraplégiques ont des automobiles, combien en coûte-t-il pour obtenir ces automobiles fabriquées spécialement avec une direction manuelle électrique? Combien en coûterait-il pour avoir une voiture que Tony pourrait conduire?

M. Damiano: Je ne pourrais pas conduire une automobile.

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: Some of your boys can, if they have the very up-to-date automobiles. Do you have any idea what that would cost?

Mr. Langford: Tony could not; a few partial quadriplegics do manage to drive cars. Most paraplegics manage to drive cars as the only method of available transportation. The cost is essentially the normal cost of operating an automobile. Fitting it with handcontrols is a minimal cost of possibly $75 or so.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is the initial cost, I guess that is the burden when you purchase a car with the additional equipment required; is that it?

Mr. Langford: No, the additional equipment is not essentially expensive. It is the normal cost of operating an automobile, but it ties a car up completely to the paraplegic. It is normally not available to the rest of his family because he has to keep it with him all the time. It is his only means of transportation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have one further question, Mr. Chairman. Is your insurance—are you a risk? Are you considered at a higher rate?

Mr. Langford: Normally at a bit higher rate.

Mr. Bigg: If he ties up the automobile it means he would have to have a special automobile for his use in other words. If he wants to drive a car he has to have a second family car.

Mr. Langford: If you get into a situation here you need a car to work, he needs the car all day long there is no car at home for the rest of the family.

Mr. Bigg: That would double his transportation cost.

The Chairman: Are there other questions?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am sure that Tony's wife does not want to go out, if Tony stays home. I guess if she cannot go out, and she cannot leave, you cannot go out at all. She is your only source of help.

Mr. Damiano: I could probably stay two or three hours and if nobody is there I have a urinal bag on that will fill up; if it is not emptied, I will sweat or spasm, or get headaches; the urine just backs up into your kidneys.

[Interpretation]

M. Bigg: Certains le font avec une voiture très moderne. Avez-vous une idée de ce que ça pourrait coûter?

M. Langford: Tony ne pourrait pas. Certains des quadraplégiques partiels peuvent conduire des automobiles. Plusieurs des paraplégiques ont des autos, car c'est leur seul moyen de transportation. Leur coût de fonctionnement est à peu près le même que pour une autre automobile. Le coût d'installation de système spécial de direction est d'environ 75 dollars.

M. Guay (St-Boniface): C'est le coût initial qui est élevé lorsque vous achetez une voiture équipée en conséquence?

M. Langford: Non, l'équipement additionnel n'est pas très dispendieux. Les frais d'entretien sont les mêmes que pour une automobile ordinaire. La famille ne peut se servir de la voiture car il doit l'avoir continuellement à sa disposition.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Une autre question, monsieur le président. Au point de vue assurance, êtes-vous un risque spécial, payez-vous un taux plus élevé?

M. Langford: Ordinairement, oui, nous avons à payer des taux plus élevés.

M. Bigg: Si cette voiture est uniquement à son usage alors il lui faut une autre voiture pour la famille.

M. Langford: S'il a besoin de l'auto pour aller travailler, l'auto est à sa disposition toute la journée et il n'y a pas de voiture à la maison pour le reste de la famille.

M. Bigg: Cela doublerait son coût de transport.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions?

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Si votre épouse ne peut pas vous laisser, elle ne peut pas sortir du tout car elle est votre seule aide.

M. Damiano: Je peux rester peut-être deux ou trois heures seul, mais s'il n'y a personne mon sac urinoire sera plein et s'il n'est pas vidé je commence à avoir mal à la tête, à transpirer abondamment et avoir des spasmes. Alors je ne peux pas rester plus de trois heures sans surveillance.

[Texte]

Mr. Clarke: Could I just make one further comment. I think Tony exemplifies the person who is willing to take the exceptional risk of living out of hospital so that he can have a more normal life with his wife and children. I think there are other quadriplegics who choose to remain in hospital because they are not willing to undergo the financial privation which Tony feels is worth it in order to live in the community in a normal fashion. I think there are few quadriplegics who would attempt to live out if they did not have to experience the sort of thing that he has described.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, is this the point where I could ask the question about the $400 and the $1,200. What do the paraplegics think about this as an alternative to the percentage which the Woods Report asks for? If it is not out of order, I would like to ask Mr. Clarke what he thinks about that.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Bigg, I think we tried to express our views on that in the earlier section. We feel that we have a disability. We feel that the quadriplegics have a disability and we would like to be compensated for the disabilities we have. We certainly do not like the idea of having to apply for a lumpsum grant on an annual basis. There is a table of disabilities at present which works fine till you reach the 100 per cent level and then it stops.

We do not see anything wrong with that yardstick of measurement except that we wish it could be applied when you have these disabilities multiplied a number of times over. We do not want to have to apply for a grant on a welfare basis.

Mr. Bigg: Thank you, Mr. Clarke.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have a supplementary, Mr. Chairman. Do you feel then that the manner in which it has been recommended is in line with what the Canadian Corps Association told us yesterday, that it is more or less a means test?

Mr. Clarke: That is certainly the way we read the recommendation in the White Paper. That is the way it looked to us. Perhaps this Committee has information that we do not have, but all we have to go on is what we have seen in the White Paper and it certainly implies a means test to us.

[Interprétation]

M. Clarke: Puis-je faire un autre commentaire? Je crois que Tony est un excellent exemple de la personne qui est un risque exceptionnel, et qui préfère vivre en dehors de l'hôpital et mener une vie assez normale avec son épouse et ses enfants. Il y a d'autres paraplégiques qui préfèrent demeurer à l'hôpital, plutôt que de subir le fardeau financier nécessaire pour vivre dans la collectivité d'une façon normale avec sa famille. Il y a peu de quadraplégiques qui tenteraient de vivre à l'extérieur s'ils n'avaient pas à subir l'expérience que Monsieur vient de mentionner.

M. Bigg: Puis-je poser une question au sujet du 400 dollars et du 1,200 dollars? Qu'en pensent les paraplégiques comme option au pourcentage proposé dans le rapport Woods? Qu'est-ce que vous en pensez de toute façon M. Clarke?

M. Clarke: M. Bigg, je crois que nous avons tenté d'exprimer notre point de vue à ce sujet dans les sections précédentes de notre mémoire. Nous croyons que nous sommes des invalides. Nous croyons que les quadraplégiques souffrent d'infirmité et nous aimerions avoir des indemnités, des compensations pour les infirmités que nous avons. Nous n'aimons pas l'idée que nous devons nous mettre à genoux pour essayer d'obtenir une allocation du moins sur une base annuelle. Il y a un tableau pour les invalidités qui est utile jusqu'au niveau de 100 p. 100, mais ensuite hélas, il s'arrête là.

Nous n'avons pas d'objection à cette façon de calculer les indemnités, mais, il faudrait qu'elle s'applique lorsque les infirmités se multiplient, à plusieurs reprises. Nous ne voulons pas devoir demander des allocations qui ressembleraient à de l'aide venant du bien-être social.

M. Bigg: Merci, M. Clarke.

Le président: M. Guay.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Une question supplémentaire M. le président, croyez-vous que la façon dont les recommandations sont présentées correspond à ce que l'Association du Corps canadien nous disait hier, qu'il s'agit plus ou moins d'une vérification des revenus?

M. Clarke: Enfin, c'est ce que nous avons compris en lisant le Livre blanc. Peut-être le comité a-t-il des renseignements que nous, nous ne possédons pas. Pour nous tout ce que nous savons c'est ce que nous avons lu dans le Livre blanc et il y est certainement question d'une vérification des revenus.

[Text]

Mr. Langford: I think, Mr. Chairman, what is really needed here is not a grant for special amenities, no matter how generously it is handled, but an extension of the pension or a supplement to pension, as you wish, to cover these greater disabilities which would be part and parcel of the compensation for the disability incurred.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Langford.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Clarke, I gather from the last witness that there seems to be some kind of a gap in the attendance allowance which has not been covered in that in some cases the attendance allowance is not only inadequate as to amount for a full-time attendant, whether it be his wife, a nurse or some other competent woman, but it is a three-shift job in many cases and the allowance does not appear to cover that emergency. In the hospitals, I gather, the nurses have some kind of union hours and although it is very expensive, no doubt, they are able to give 24-hour attendance to a paraplegic. In some cases he might prefer to be in hospital rather than put such a burden on his wife or on one woman who might be willing to give him 24-hour service. I think if this were broken down in this way we might have a better idea of why the total cost should look so heavy on paper and yet be a fair adjustment. Could you enlarge on that a little?

Mr. Langford: I think, Mr. Chairman, with adequate compensation as suggested in the Woods Committee Report and with the attendance allowance, bearing in mind that rarely would this mean a hired attendant—this would not be a feasible way of spending the money—that paraplegics and quadriplehardship or certainly with less hardship and gics like Tony could manage without undue less financial worry on the part of a family.

I believe the last time I appeared before a parliamentary committee on this subject to present a brief dealing with the attendance allowance, Bill Purvis was with us—I do not know whether any of you gentlemen recall Bill, but he was one of the few quadriplegics who did hire a full-time attendant. Bill was a lawyer working with the Attorney General's office, I believe, in Ontario. He hired an attendant and he had to get housing that involved a separate room and bath wing for the attendant as the attendant lived in. I do not recall the actual figures, but his costs for this were somewhat astronomical because the attendant had to drive him everywhere he

[Interpretation]

M. Langford: Je crois, monsieur le président, que ce dont nous avons besoin ici ce ne sont pas des allocations de compensations particulières même si elles sont très généreuses, mais une extension de la pension qui tienne compte de toutes les infirmités dont souffre chaque personne.

Le président: Merci, monsieur Langford.

M. Bigg: M. Clarke, après avoir entendu le dernier témoin, il me semble qu'il y a une carence dans les allocations de soins dont nous n'avons pas parlé. Il semble que pour certains cas le montant soit nettement insuffisant pour une garde à plein temps que ce soit par sa femme, une infirmière ou une garde-malade. Il peut se faire que dans certains cas il faille trois infirmières par jour, pour le garder à tour de rôle, l'allocation versée ne semble pas tenir compte de cette situation. Dans les hôpitaux, les infirmières observent des horaires fixés par les syndicats et bien que ce soit très coûteux, elles peuvent assurer la garde d'un paraplégique vingt-quatre heures sur vingt-quatre. Parfois celui-ci préférera être à l'hôpital plutôt que d'imposer un tel fardeau à sa femme ou à une garde qui pourrait lui donner un service de vingt-quatre heures. Si nous considérons la situation de cette façon nous comprendrons peut-être mieux pourquoi le coût total peut sembler si important sur le papier et malgré tout être parfaitement justifié. Pourriez-vous nous donner votre point de vue à ce sujet?

M. Langford: Je crois qu'avec une compensation suffisante comme il est proposé dans le Rapport Woods et avec l'allocation de soins, en tenant compte du fait qu'il s'agira rarement d'engager une garde à plein temps, ce ne serait pas une bonne manière de dépenser l'argent, alors que des paraplégiques ou des paraplégiques comme Tony peuvent s'en sortir sans trop de problèmes pour la famille.

Je crois que la dernière fois que j'ai participé au travail d'un comité parlementaire à ce sujet, pour présenter un mémoire qui parlait justement des allocations de soins, Bill Purvis était avec nous. Je ne sais si vous vous souvenez de lui; il était l'un des quelques paraplégiques qui avaient engagé un garde à plein temps. Bill était avocat qui travaillait pour le bureau du Procureur général en Ontario je crois. Il avait engagé un garde-malade qui devait avoir sa chambre particulière avec salle de bains. Je ne me rappelle pas les chiffres exacts mais le coût était absolument astronomique; le garde devait le conduire partout où il voulait aller, s'occuper de lui vingt-quatre went, had to look after him during the night and had to take care of him essentially on a 24-hour basis although it was not continuous attendance during that period. Fortunately, probably for the finances of the company, but unfortunately for Bill, he did not survive more than about two or three months after that last meeting.

heures par jour même si la surveillance n'était pas continuelle. Heureusement pour les finances de la compagnie mais malheureusement pour Bill, il n'a pas survécu longtemps après notre dernière rencontre.

I do not know of anyone else at the moment who is trying to manage with a full-time attendant on a 24-hour basis. Most of this is taken over by members of the family.

Je ne connais personne d'autre pour l'instant qui essaie de s'en sortir en engageant un aide vingt-quatre heures par jour. En général, c'est la famille qui est mise à contribution.

Mr. Bigg: My daughter recently graduated as a nurse. Her starting pay will be $465 a month. If she were unfortunate enough to be married to a soldier and had to give up her profession in order to give him 24-hour attendance her income would drop to $250 a month immediately for 24-hour duty.

M. Bigg: Ma fille vient d'être reçue infirmière. Elle reçoit, pour débuter, quelque chose comme $465 par mois. Si elle devait épouser un soldat et abandonner sa profession pour s'en occuper, vingt-quatre heures par jour son revenu tomberait à $250 par mois pour un travail de vingt-quatre sur vingt-quatre.

Mr. Langford: And there would be additional expenses beyond the amount of effort she had to...

M. Langford: Il y aurait des frais additionnels en plus de la somme d'efforts qu'elle aura à fournir à ce moment-là.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, but I was just talking about straight take-home pay as far as the woman is concerned who is willing to give up her profession and time to look after a crippled husband.

M. Bigg: Il faudrait qu'elle abandonne sa profession pour s'occuper de son mari infirme.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, could I ask if the Department of Veterans Affairs has ever discussed with you the possibilities of additional assistance to allow you to buy a home or have one built to your requirements?

M. Peters: Monsieur le président, puis-je demander à M. Parsons si le ministère des Anciens combattants a déjà envisagé la possibilité d'accorder une aide additionnelle pour vous permettre d'acheter une maison ou en faire construire une.

Mr. Damiano: No, but on my own in 1961 I did apply under VLA. I was accepted and did get a house, an older house which cost $10,000. I only needed $1,600, which I borrowed, and because the payments were low under VLA at that time I could afford it, but after I had been in the house for three years everything started falling apart. I could not make any repairs and I could not afford to pay someone to come to fix the house, so I had to sell it. I sold it in 1964 before real estate started going up for $11,000 and now that same house is worth $24,000.

M. Damiano: J'y ai pensé moi-même en 1961. J'ai demandé un prêt en vertu de la Loi sur les anciens combattants. Il s'agissait d'une vieille maison qui coûtait $10,000. J'avais besoin seulement de $1,600 que j'ai empruntés. Les versements étaient assez bas à ce moment-là, je pouvais les payer, mais au bout de trois ans, il fallu réparer. Je ne pouvais pas les faire moi-même et je ne pouvais payer quelqu'un, aussi j'ai dû revendre la maison. Je l'ai vendue en 1964 pour $11,000 avant le boom sur les biens immobiliers, maintenant la même maison vaut $24,000.

Mr. Peters: But there has not been any discussion since of DVA building you a house that would meet your requirements?

M. Peters: Depuis le ministère des Anciens combattants n'a-t-il pas parlé de vous faire construire une maison qui répondrait à vos besoins?

Mr. Damiano: No.

M. Damiano: Non.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, if your pension, Mr. Damiano, were increased to 350 per cent

M. Peters: Si votre pension, monsieur Damiano, était accrue jusqu'au maximum de of maximum then would you be able to have a house built for yourself that would...

Mr. Damiano: I do not imagine I would be able to get the initial down payment because real estate is so expensive in Toronto. I imagine it is expensive in Ottawa, too.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask you another question? Because of your condition you would almost have to remain in the immediate vicinity of one of the highly qualified hospitals?

Mr. Damiano: That is right, and that is why I live in Toronto.

Mr. Peters: This, of course, makes your cost of living considerably higher than it would be in an outside area.

Mr. Damiano: That is right...

Mr. Peters: The normal hospital really would not be adequate.

Mr. Damiano: No, because they are not equipped for quadriplegics. They do not even know them, really. If I went to a normal hospital they would not know what to do with me. They would switch me to a veterans hospital that is equipped for such cases and I think that is part of the trouble.

Mr. Peters: So you are limited in choosing a location to one within close proximity to a major hospital, preferably a DVA hospital?

Mr. Damiano: Yes, that is right.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? I have in mind that the brief still has some sections to be covered and I wonder if members of the Committee would invite Mr. Clarke to continue at this point. Yes, Mr. Clarke.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chadderton has a comment he would like to make, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Chadderton.

Mr. C. H. Chadderton (Dominion Honorary Vice President, Canadian Corps Association): Mr. Chairman, the paraplegics have asked me to raise one point for the information of the Committee because no one so far has touched upon the rather strange situation where the Pension Act provides attendance allowance for the war blinded while they are in hospital without restriction, but under the treatment regulations the paraplegics are allowed two months when they go into hospital.

[Interpretation]

350 p. 100, seriez-vous en mesure à ce moment de faire construire une maison?

M. Damiano: Je n'aurais pas le montant qu'il faut pour donner au début parce que les maisons sont très chères à Toronto, à Ottawa aussi j'imagine.

M. Peters: Est-ce que je peux vous poser une autre question? Du fait de votre condition, vous devez demeurer près d'un hôpital qui soit à même de vous donner vos soins?

M. Damiano: C'est la raison pour laquelle je vis à Toronto.

M. Peters: Et de ce fait le coût de la vie est beaucoup plus élevé que si vous habitiez hors de la ville, n'est-ce pas?

M. Damiano: Oui, c'est exact.

M. Peters: Un hôpital ordinaire ne conviendrait pas dans votre cas?

M. Damiano: Non, parce que les autres hôpitaux ne sont pas équipés pour soigner les quadriplégiques. Si j'allais dans n'importe quel hôpital ils ne sauraient pas comment prendre soin de moi. Ils m'enverraient dans un hôpital d'anciens combattants qui est équipé pour les gens dans mon cas.

M. Peters: De ce fait, vous êtes limité dans le choix de l'endroit où vous pourriez habiter, de ce fait vous devez habiter à proximité d'un hôpital et de préférence, un hôpital des anciens combattants.

M. Damiano: Oui, c'est cela.

Le président: Y a-t-il d'autres questions? Sinon, nous pourrions continuer à lire le mémoire que M. Clarke avait commencé car il y a d'autres parties à étudier.

M. Clarke: Monsieur Chadderton a un petit commentaire à faire, monsieur le président.

Le président: Monsieur Chadderton?

M. C. H. Chadderton (vice-président honoraire de l'Association des Corps canadiens): M. le président, les paraplégiques m'ont demandé de porter un point à l'attention de ce comité parce que personne n'a parlé de cette situation plutôt étrange, la Loi sur les pensions prévoit une allocation de soins pour les aveugles de guerre qui sont à l'hôpital sans restriction alors qu'on n'accorde cette allocation aux paraplégiques qui sont à l'hôpital que pendant deux mois seulement aux termes du règlement des traitements.

I think the interesting thing about this is the reference in the Woods Committee Report, Volume II, Chapter 17, page 659, wherein the Woods Committee quotes a letter from the Acting Chairman of the Pension Commission to the then Minister of Veterans Affairs in which he said that he had had representations from the paraplegics concerning the continuation of attendance allowance while in hospital, and he said:

> I feel that it is highly inadvisable, if not impossible, to amend the Pension Act by Order in Council when Parliament is in Session. It is also undesirable to throw the Pension Act open for amendment so soon after the recent Parliamentary Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Then the suggestion is made that under the treatment regulations they could do this for two months. Incidentally, this was in 1947 and we submit that that was temporizing; there was good reason for not amending the Pension Act at that time, as the acting chairman of the commission says, but what happened is that the paraplegics have been stuck with a two-month temporary situation since 1947.

On behalf of the paraplegic delegation we wish to suggest that the compromise suggested in the White Paper of 1969 certainly does not give effect to the representations that some of the same people before you this morning have been making to the government since 1947, and I think it is a rather strange coincidence that this should have remained within the purview of the treatment regulations of the Department since 1947, when the whole idea originally was to put it in the Pension Act. However, it was not practical, let us say, to put it into the Pension Act in 1947, so you still have this temporary situation on your hands. I think that might well be taken into account in your deliberations.

The Chairman: Mr. Peters and Mr. Bigg.

Mr. Peters: I am curious about a person who is not married and decides to live out. Is it difficult to hire a suitable attendant for a quadriplegic?

Mr. Langford: I would think, sir, that it would be very difficult to hire a suitable attendant and to retain him for any length of time.

[Interprétation]

La partie la plus importante en ce qui concerne ceci, c'est la référence dans le Rapport Woods, volume II chapitre 17, page 754, le rapport Woods cite une lettre du président suppléant de la Commission des pensions adressée au Ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants d'alors, dans laquelle il lui fait part des représentations des paraplégiques en ce qui concerne la continuation du versement de l'allocation de soins alors qu'ils sont à l'hôpital. Il dit et je cite:

> J'estime qu'il n'est pas du tout à conseiller, voir qu'il est impossible, de modifier la loi sur les pensions au moyen d'un décret du Conseil lorsque le Parlement siège. En outre, il ne sied pas d'exposer la loi sur les pensions à des modifications si tôt après le récent Comité parlementaire chargé d'étudier les Affaires des anciens combattants.

Il ajoute ensuite qu'en vertu des règlements sur les traitements, il pourrait verser cette allocation pour deux mois.

C'était en 1947, et il s'agissait d'une situation temporaire. Il y avait une bonne raison de ne pas amender la loi sur les pensions à cette époque comme nous l'a dit le président suppléant de la Commission, mais ce qui est arrivé c'est que les paraplégiques se sont vus bloqués par cette politique temporaire de deux mois depuis 1947.

Au nom des paraplégiques, nous désirons faire remarquer que le compromis proposé dans le Livre blanc de 1969 ne tient aucun compte des représentations qui ont été soumises au gouvernement depuis 1947 par les mêmes personnes qui comparaissent devant vous.

Je crois qu'il est plutôt étrange que cette question relève toujours des règlements sur les traitements du ministère des Anciens combattants depuis 1947, alors qu'il était tout d'abord question de l'inclure dans la Loi sur les pensions. Cependant, en 1947, il n'était pas facile de l'inclure dans la loi, c'est pourquoi vous avez toujours cette situation temporaire sur les bras. Je crois qu'il faudrait en tenir compte dans vos délibérations.

Le président: M. Peters et M. Bigg.

M. Peters: Je vous remercie, monsieur. Puis-je vous demander si pour une personne qui n'est pas mariée, et qui n'est pas hospitalisée, il est très difficile d'engager une garde compétente si elle est quadraplégique?

M. Langford: Oui, monsieur. C'est extrêmement difficile de trouver une aide compétente pour soigner un quadraplégique pour n'importe quelle période de temps.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: If, because of the two-month period and your inability to pay them, you lost that person whom you were able to hire, it would be almost impossible to get that particular attendant back again.

Mr. Langford: They might have to stay in hospital and not be able to make these arrangements again. This is quite true.

Mr. Peters: And would the fact that you were in hospital not create an almost impossible situation with respect to looking the market over? You would not really be in a position to shop around, so to speak, as you might be in other circumstances. You would be very restricted in the method by which you could hire these people. If you had an attendant who was copacetic and you lost that person, it probably would not be possible to hire someone else.

Mr. Langford: Normally what happens is that an attendant as such is not hired but that extra expenses are incurred to provide sufficiently convenient living arrangements so that a member of the family can match the..

Mr. Peters: In fact, then,...

Mr. Langford: The attendant then boils down to a whole series of people who come into the picture over a 24-hour period to provide various services, rather than a single person trying to provide these services.

Mr. Peters: In fact, you have really only known one person out of the 300, 400 or 500 who really had a full-time attendant who was not a member of the family.

Mr. Langford: It was a rare situation, yes.

Mr. Peters: So, with this one exception, it has not really been possible to in fact hire an attendant for the money that is available. Of course, his circumstances were such that he could afford to supplement the attendance allowance out of his other income. So, we have not really been paying enough money to allow full-time attendants unless there were other circumstances surrounding it. We say that we are paying this attendance allowance, but we are really not paying it, we are providing certain compensation so that members of the family can assist, but we have never paid enough money to allow a full...

• 1155

[Interpretation]

M. Peters: Si vous perdez cette personne que vous avez engagée parce que vous n'avez que deux mois à recevoir l'allocation et que vous ne pouvez la payer, il est presque impossible d'obtenir à nouveau les services de cette personne.

M. Langford: Et peut-être il vous sera nécessaire de rester à l'hôpital et vous ne savez ensuite ce que vous ferez. C'est tout à fait vrai.

M. Peters: Cette situation ne devient-elle pas difficile du fait que vous êtes à l'hôpital, vous n'êtes pas en mesure de faire les recherches nécessaires. Vous êtes très limité car si vous perdez un bon garde-malade il vous est impossible d'en trouver un autre.

M. Langford: Ce qui arrive en général, monsieur, c'est qu'on ne peut engager ce genre de personne. Mais des dépenses sont consenties pour fournir des arrangements assez satisfaisants pour qu'une personne de la famille...

M. Peters: En fait, alors...

M. Langford: Le garde est alors remplacé par toute une série de gens qui fournissent les divers services plutôt que par une seule personne au cours de la journée.

M. Peters: En somme, vous voulez dire que vous connaissez seulement une personne sur un chiffre de 300, 400 ou 500 qui a pu se procurer un aide à plein temps qui n'était pas un parent.

M. Langford: C'est exact, monsieur. C'est exact.

M. Peters: Ainsi il n'a pas été possible, à cette exception près, d'engager quelqu'un avec l'argent qui est alloué?

Encore dans ce cas-là, ses moyens lui permettent que de compléter l'allocation de soins. En résumé, nous pouvons dire que nous ne payons pas suffisamment pour que le malade puisse obtenir une aide continuelle sauf dans des cas particuliers. En somme, que nous payons une allocation de soins, fournissant une certaine compensation pour les membres de la famille qui aident le malade mais elle est insuffisante pour permettre d'engager un aide à plein temps.....

[Texte]

Mr. Langford: I think that is right.

Mr. Peters: In other words, we pay an amount of money indirectly to the paraplegic in hospital for three-shift service, but we are not providing an alternative by saying that we provide attendance allowance. We are really not doing this, and it is not quite correct to say that this is an attendance allowance because we have never really engaged in duplicating the service that we discontinued when we closed some of the hospitals.

Mr. Langford: I think it would be incorrect to think of this as a salary for a single attendant. In practice this is an expense allowance to cover a host of additional expenses which enables the paraplegic or quadriplegic and his family to manage by themselves. The last thing I would want is an attendant following me around all day. I would like to have enough income so that I could arrange my environment and purchase the necessary services as required in order to manage comfortably without undue strain on either my family or my neighbours.

Mr. Bigg: That answer my question too, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marshall: On page 11 of the brief you ask for retention of the present Section 33(3) of the Pension Act and the implementation of Woods Committee Recommendation No. 85. We heard from Mr. Ward that Recommendation No. 85 was accepted but modified. I wonder if it would be in order, Mr. Chairman, if I were to ask Mr. Ward if he would repeat the modification. It would clear up a lot of further questioning.

The Chairman: I will put it to the Committee. I see Mr. Ward is here. I do not know whether he is prepared to speak to this point or whether he would prefer to do so later. What is the wish of the Committee?

An hon. Member: What is the wish of Mr. Ward?

The Chairman: Mr. Ward, would you like to comment at this point? There is a microphone beside Mr. Peters which you can use.

Mr. Harry Ward (Chief Pensions Advocate): I am not exactly sure of the question Mr. Peters asked.

An hon. Member: It was Mr. Marshall.

[Interprétation]

M. Langford: C'est exact.

M. Peters: En somme nous payons indirectement pour les paraplégiques dans les hôpitaux pour des soins de 24 heures. Mais l'allocation de soins que nous leur versons ne représente rien d'équivalent. En fait il n'est pas jus e de dire que nous donnons une allocation de soins parce que nous n'avons jamais cherché à remplacer le service que nous avons discontinué lorsque nous avons fermé quelques-uns des hôpitaux d'anciens combattants.

M. Langford: Monsieur, ce serait erroné d'envisager l'allocation de soins comme un salaire pour payer un aide.

En pratique, il faut la considérer comme une allocation de frais permettant au paraplégique et à sa famille de faire face à des dépenses supplémentaires. Je ne voudrais moi-même pour rien au monde avoir quelqu'un sur mes talons à longueur de journée mais j'aimerais avoir assez de revenu pour me permettre de vivre confortablement et d'acheter les services nécessaires et sans constituer un fardeau pour ma famille et mes voisins.

M. Bigg: Cela répond à mes questions M. le président.

Le président: Monsieur Marshall?

M. Marshall: Dans le mémoire, à la page 11, vous demandez que l'on conserve le paragraphe (3) de l'article 33 de la Loi sur les pensions et vous demandez aussi que la recommandation 85 soit mise en vigueur. Nous avons entendu M. Ward nous dire que la recommandation 85 a été acceptée mais avec des modifications.

Je voudrais demander à M. Ward s'il voudrait bien répéter la modification qui a été apportée?

Le président: Je vois que M. Ward est ici. Nous pourrions peut-être le lui demander? M. Ward voudrait-il nous renseigner maintenant ou plus tard. Quel est le désir de ce Comité?

Une voix: Quel est le désir de M. Ward plutôt.

Le président: Monsieur Ward, est-ce que vous seriez prêt à nous expliquer? Vous avez un microphone près de M. Peters, dont vous pouvez vous servir.

M. Harry Ward (Avocat en chef des pensions): Je ne suis pas certain exactement du sens de la question de M. Peters.

Un membre: C'était M. Marshall.

[Text]

Mr. Ward: It was Mr. Marshall, I beg your pardon.

Mr. Marshall: I will repeat it, Mr. Ward. You gave us a resume of recommendation No. 85, and the witnesses are asking for this in their brief. On page 11 they say that they are requesting the retention of Section 33 of the Pension Act and also recommendation No. 85 of the Woods Committee Report, and in your explanation to us a few days ago you mentioned that No. 85 was accepted but modified. Do you remember what the modification was, or could we have that this afternoon?

Mr. Ward: If I could see the recommendation I think I would remember the modification.

Mr. Marshall: I am prepared to wait until this afternoon if you are going to be coming back.

Mr. Ward: I think the intention of the modification was to endeavour to create equality for all persons in receipt of an attendance allowance so that there would no longer be special categories. For instance, the blind pensioner, as you know, who is in receipt of attendance allowance has one provision which applies solely to his case. The paraplegics, through the veterans treatment regulations, have certain provisions that apply solely to their case. Amputees—and it may be a multiple amputee—are in an entirely different category.

I believe the intention was to create a universal and equal application for attendance allowance, and the proposal was that the attendance allowance be continued for the month of admission to hospital plus one month as of right for all categories. Then, at the discretion of the authorities, it could be extended for an indefinite period of time depending on certain circumstances. There was some mention of a means test but it is my understanding that there is no means test as such envisaged by this proposal. That is to say, the income of a person would probably not be taken into consideration in deciding whether to exercise the discretion of paying attendance allowance for an extended period, but more to look at the person's individual circumstances, his environment—his need in that sense, but not in the money sense. That may be a means test, but it is not a money means test situation. Does that answer your question, Mr. Marshall?

[Interpretation]

M. Ward: Oui, en effet.

M. Marshall: Je répète ma question M. Ward. Lorsque vous avez donné un résumé de la recommandation n° 85, les témoins disent à la page 11 qu'ils demandent que soit conservé l'article 33 de la Loi sur les pensions, et que la recommandation n° 85 du Comité Woods soit mise en vigueur. Il y a quelques jours vous nous avez dit que la recommandation n° 85 avait été acceptée mais modifiée. Vous rappelez-vous quelles sont les modifications qui ont été apportées ou pourriez-vous nous le dire cet après-midi?

M. Ward: Si vous m'apportiez la recommandation, je pourrais peut-être me souvenir de la modification.

M. Marshall: Je suis prêt à attendre jusqu'à cet après-midi si vous revenez.

M. Ward: Je crois que ce que l'on proposait grâce à la modification, c'était de créer une certaine égalité pour toutes les personnes qui reçoivent des allocations de soins afin qu'il n'y ait plus de catégories spéciales. Par exemple pour le pensionné aveugle qui comme vous savez touche une allocation de soins il existe une disposition qui ne s'applique qu'à son cas. Le paraplégique dans les règlements des traitements des anciens combattants a des dispositions qui ne s'appliquent qu'à lui. Les gens qui souffrent d'infirmités multiples sont aussi placés dans une catégorie entièrement distincte.

Je crois que l'intention était de créer une admissibilité aux allocations de soins uniforme pour tous et il était proposé que le versement de l'allocation continue un mois après l'admission à l'hôpital plus un autre mois, pour toutes les catégories. Ensuite, on laisserait à la discrétion des autorités la possibilité de continuer, pour une période indéfinie de temps, le versement de cette allocation de soins selon les circonstances. Il n'était pas question, je pense bien, d'une vérification du revenu. D'après moi, il n'y a pas de véritable vérification des possibilités de gain et de revenu. On ne tiendrait vraiment pas compte du revenu d'une personne dans la décision de verser des allocations de soins pour une plus longue période, mais on étudierait davantage la situation particulière dans laquelle se trouve cette personne, son milieu, ses besoins, mais non pas sur le plan financier. Cela peut être une vérification des moyens et non pas des revenus. Est-ce que cela répond à votre question, monsieur Marshall?

[Texte]

Mr. Marshall: That answers my question. I feel it is wise to have it on the record in relation to the attendance allowance.

The Chairman: Again, once we start examining additional witnesses we are going to open up a whole series of matters that the Committee will be looking at. I am bearing in mind consideration for the witnesses before us this morning, who have been waiting for some time and have not yet completed their brief. I know that other members, such as Mr. Guay and Mr. Whicher, want to ask questions.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I had two, but Mr. Ward has answered one.

The Chairman: There is no end, once we start this. This is my concern. Because I am sure members of the Committee have a series of questions they wish to ask.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): My question to Mr. Ward would have been...

The Chairman: Perhaps we could call him back. All right; proceed.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): No, in view of the time I will go along with your wishes. I have noted the questions and I can ask them later on, if you wish.

The Chairman: I do not like to embarrass our witnesses by saying this, but they have waited for some time. Not all of us suffer the same inconveniences as they do, Mr. Guay.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): In view of that I will wait and question Mr. Ward later on.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, may I make one comment?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Clarke.

Mr. Clarke: It is in connection with Mr. Ward's testimony. I think we have to agree that all those who are entitled to attendance allowance should be treated alike. We applaud, and would like to see everyone so treated, the way the blind are presently treated in the Pension Act; that is, if they are necessarily detained in hospital under treatment their attendance allowance is not cut.

The Chairman: That is your point, and I think it is clearly and well made, Mr. Clarke. Members of the Committee have your testimony on this point.

[Interprétation]

M. Marshall: Oui, cela répond très bien à ma question. Je crois qu'il est sage de l'insérer au compte rendu sur les allocations de soins.

Le président: Dès que nous commencerons à interroger d'autres témoins, nous allons soulever toute une série de questions que le Comité étudiera. Je respecte les témoins de ce matin qui ont attendu quelques instants et qui n'ont pu compléter leur mémoire. Je sais que d'autres personnes, comme messieurs Guay et Whicher désirent poser des questions.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): J'en avais deux, mais monsieur Ward a déjà répondu à une.

Le président: A mon avis, on n'en finira pas avec ce genre de remarques. Je suis convaincu que les membres du Comité ont une série de questions qu'ils désirent poser.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): La question destiné à monsieur Ward était la suivante . . .

Le président: Nous pourrions peut-être lui demander de revenir. Très bien, continuez.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Étant donné le temps qui nous est alloué, je préfère suivre vos conseils. J'ai noté les questions que je voulais poser et je pourrai les poser plus tard, si vous le désirez.

Le président: Je ne veux pas mettre notre témoin dans l'embarras en disant . . ., mais ils ont attendu quelque temps. Nous ne connaissons pas tous les inconvénients qu'ils ont, monsieur Guay.

M. Guay (Saint-Boniface): Enfin je pourrai poser ma question plus tard à monsieur Ward.

M. Clarke: Monsieur le président, puis-je faire un commentaire?

Le président: Oui, monsieur Clarke.

M. Clarke: Au sujet du témoignage de monsieur Ward, je crois que nous devons avouer que tous ceux qui ont droit à une allocation de soins devraient être traités sur un pied d'égalité. Nous sommes donc d'accord, nous voudrions que chacun soit traité de la même façon que les aveugles le sont en vertu de la Loi sur les pensions, c'est-à-dire que s'ils sont hospitalisés pour être traités, leur allocation de soins n'est pas suspendue.

Le président: C'est ce que vous voudriez nous faire comprendre et cela nous l'avons bien compris, monsieur Clarke. Avec la permission des membres du Comité, pourriez-vous poursuivre la lecture du mémoire.

With the permission of the Committee, perhaps we should proceed with the brief.

Mr. Clarke:

Continuation of Compensation (Pension) to Widow

With the paraplegics, and indeed with other multiple disability casualties, war disability compensation (pension) comprises either the bulk of the individual's income, or a large part of it. On the death of the pensioner, his wife and family are almost immediately faced with a sharp drop in income to the widow's rate, although expenses carry on much as before until alternative arrangements for living accommodation and other arrangements to retrench can be effected. These arrangements take some time to complete and should not be rushed nor even proceeded with until the widow is in a position to do so objectively. It is, therefore, recommended that compensation be continued at full married rate to the widow of a pensioner in Classes 1 to 9 for a full year following the death of the pensioner.

This practice is already followed in War Veterans Allowance cases and should be extended to those who have entitlement for war disability compensation. (Woods Committee recommendation No. 109.)

Summary

These are the matters urgently in need of change which are of greatest concern to the veterans who have suffered spinal injuries:

1. Payment of Pension in relation to the full extent of the disability incurred in accordance with the intent of the Pension Act, Section 28(1). (Woods Committee recommendations Nos. 64, 65 and 74.)

2. Continuation of Attendance Allowance to a paraplegic or quadriplegic pensioner during periods of hospitalization for active treatment from time to time as required, for the full duration of any such period of treatment. (Woods Committee recommendation No. 85.)

3. Continuation of compensation at married rate to the widow of a pensioner in Classes 1 to 9, for a full year following the death of the pensioner. (Woods Committee recommendation No. 109.)

Gentlemen, we appreciate this opportunity which has been made available to us to bring these matters to your attention.

[Interpretation]

M. Clarke:

Maintien des indemnités (Pension) de la veuve

Pour les paraplégiques et pous tous les autres qui sont atteints d'infirmités multiples, les indemnités pour infirmités de guerre (pension) constituent le revenu total d'une personne ou une grande partie de ce revenu. A la mort du pensionné, l'épouse et la famille reçoivent alors presque aussitôt un revenu très faible, au taux de la veuve, même si les dépenses sont aussi nombreuses, et cela, jusqu'à ce qu'on ait pris d'autres dispositions. Ces arrangements prennent un certain temps et de toute façon, la veuve ne devrait pas se presser ni s'en occuper avant qu'elle ne soit en mesure d'agir de façon objective. Il est donc recommandé que les indemnités de la veuve d'un pensionné qui fait partie des catégories 1 à 9 soient maintenues au taux de la femme mariée pendant toute l'année qui suit la mort du pensionné.

Cette méthode est actuellement adoptée pour les cas d'allocations des anciens combattants et devrait aussi s'appliquer aux personnes qui ont droit aux allocations d'infirmité de guerre (Recommandation n° 9 du Comité Woods).

Sommaire:

Voici les questions qui appellent des changements et qui intéressent au plus haut point les anciens combattants qui ont reçu des blessures à la colonne vertébrale:

1. Le versement de la pension par rapport à l'importance de l'infirmité, conformément au paragraphe (1) de l'article 28 de la Loi sur les pensions (Recommandations n°s 64, 65 et 74 du Comité Woods).

2. Le maintien de l'allocation de soins à un paraplégique ou quadraplégique au cours de son hospitalisation pour un traitement périodique, pendant toute la durée de la période de traitement (Recommandation n° 85 du Comité Woods).

3. Le maintien des indemnités pour la veuve d'un pensionné qui appartient aux catégories 1 à 9, au taux de la femme mariée pendant l'année qui suit la mort du pensionné (Recommandation n° 109 du Comité Woods).

Messieurs, nous sommes très heureux d'avoir eu l'occasion de soumettre ces questions à votre attention.

This presentation is respectfully submitted by the Canadian Paraplegic Association, John G. Counsell, S.M., O.B.E., M.C., Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Clarke. Have members of the Committee questions they wish to put to the delegation at this point? If not, on behalf of the Committee I would like to thank you very much for appearing, and for your brief, and say that if there are further observations at this stage we have no intention of closing the door. But we are very pleased to hear what you have had to say this morning.

Mr. Clarke: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We appreciate the hearing.

AFTERNOON SITTING

• 1408

The Chairman: I will now call the Committee to order.

This afternoon we have the submission of The Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded. Mr. F. J. L. Woodcock, the Executive Secretary of the Association, will introduce the delegation. Mr. Woodcock.

Mr. F. J. L. Woodcock (Executive Secretary, The Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded): Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of our group, the Chairman of this Committee is Mr. Lloyd Francis.

I would like to introduce first our President, Mr. Chris Davino. Chris was RCR and was wounded at Ortona. His disability is total blindness. He has one eye out and the other has no remaining sight in it, with facial scars.

Next we have Johnny Dion, as he is known to us—Charlemagne by first name. He lost an arm and is totally blind. It was one of those unfortunate training accidents in England during the war—a grenade explosion. With him, of course, is his lifetime companion and constant escort, Madame Dion.

• 1410

We also have Mr. John Henry, a man who lost one eye in the Air Force and the other on civvy street. He is totally blind and wears two plastic eyes. John Henry and Mrs. Henry, his escort. We also brought along for the Committee's benefit more or less a cross section of the ambulatory group among our war blinded. There is Lorne Smith. We call him "Lewis Gun", because he too was a fighting soldier in the same regiment. He is well known and quite a friend of Tony Damiano, who was here this morning. Mr. Smith's escort is Mr. Simpson.

[Interprétation]

Cet exposé a été respectueusement soumis par l'Association canadienne des paraplégiques.

Le président: Merci monsieur Clarke. Est-ce qu'il y a d'autres questions? S'il n'y en pas, je tiens à vous remercier au nom des membres du Comité pour votre participation à notre travail et pour la qualité du mémoire que vous avez présenté. Si vous désirez faire d'autres déclarations, nous serons heureux de vous entendre comme nous l'avons été ce matin.

M. Clarke: Merci beaucoup, monsieur le président et croyez bien que nous partageons votre opinion.

SÉANCE DE L'APRÈS-MIDI

Le président: Attention, la séance débute, messieurs. Cet après-midi, nous avons l'Association des aveugles de guerre Sir Arthur Pearson. Nous avons M. F. J. L. Woodcock, le secrétaire exécutif de l'Association qui présentera la délégation. M. Woodcock a la parole.

M. F. J. L. Woodcock (Secrétaire exécutif de l'Association des aveugles de guerre Sir Arthur Pearson): Monsieur le président, au bénéfice de tout le groupe, le président du Comité est M. Lloyd Francis. J'aimerais d'abord présenter le président, M. Chris J. Davino R.C.R., un blessé de guerre d'Ortona, il est complètement aveugle. Il a perdu un œil et l'autre ne voit plus loin et il a des cicatrices au visage.

Nous avons ici aussi M. Dion connu sous le nom de Charlemagne et qui a perdu un bras, et qui est complètement aveugle aussi. Il s'agit d'un de ces accidents malheureux lors de l'entraînement en Angleterre au cours de la guerre soit l'explosion d'une grenade. Son escorte coutumière, sa femme M^me^ Dion l'accompagne.

Nous avons M. John Henry ici présent. Il a servi dans les Forces aériennes où il a perdu un œil; il a perdu l'autre œil alors qu'il était dans la vie civile il est maintenant complètement aveugle, et a les deux yeux en plastique maintenant.

Avec M. John Henry nous avons aussi ici présent M^me^ Henry qui lui sert d'escorte.

Nous avons cru bon d'amener aussi au bénéfice du Comité, quelques représentants du groupe itinérant des aveugles de guerre. Il s'agit de monsieur Lorne Smith que nous

[Text]

Have I forgotten anyone? I am sorry, I have left out one of the important ones. Perhaps I will be a little facetious here when I introduce W. N. Mayne, the Assistant Secretary of the Association. W. N. Mayne was wounded, as he says, from stem to gudgeon—he was a Hong Kong prisoner of war. I am sure, Mr. Chairman and the Committee, you realize the seriousness of that particular group and what maltreatment did to them. Unfortunately Al Martiro, another badly handicapped war blinded with two artificial eyes and severe amputations, was unable to be here today because of ill health.

I might add that in the main this group are employed in some form. I say "in some form" because in the case of John Henry, I only hope that any member of this Committee or the government, for that matter, has the opportunity to meet John Henry on his farm up near Campbellville, where he himself has built a workshop and has all the machine tools. It is merely a remunerative hobby with him and it just pays for itself, but one must admire the guts of a man who will do that sort of thing rather than to sit in the old arm chair of helplessness.

Mr. Mayne works for CNIB. Chris Davino works for CNIB. Tony Dion very fortunately has a s'and of his own, one of these canteen stands in the explosive division in Sorel, I think. Smitty, with no face, has good guiding vision in his one remaining eye. He has had 42 operations attempting to build him a nose. Why does he travel with an escort? I would only add, Mr. Chairman, that I think you would get sick and tired of being called monkey face and names of that type by unthinking, cruel children. Smitty works. He sees the floor but does not see the dirt on it. He sweeps twice, three times, to make sure he has got the dirt cleaned up. That is Smitty's job. Mr. Chairman, that is our delegation today.

I am the Executive Secretary of the Association and work for CNIB. You will read in our brief "Thank God for CNIB."

[Interpretation]

appelons «Lewis Gun» parce que lui aussi était très combattif dans le même régiment. Il est bien connu et c'est un assez bon ami de monsieur Tony Damiano, que vous avez rencontré ce matin. Monsieur Simpson lui sert d'escorte.

Est-ce que j'ai oublié quelqu'un? Je m'excuse mais j'ai oublié l'une des personnes importantes. Je semblerai peut-être un peu facétieux de présenter monsieur W. N. Mayne, secrétaire adjoint de l'Association. Monsieur Mayne a été blessé comme il le dit, des pieds à la tête, il a été prisonnier de guerre de Hong Kong.

Je suis certain monsieur le président et messieurs les membres du Comité que vous comprenez la gravité des blessures subies par les prisonniers de Hong Kong. Malheureusement, monsieur Al Martiro une autre personne gravement handicapée, un aveugle de guerre qui a deux yeux artificiels et qui a subi de graves amputations a été dans l'impossibilité de venir aujourd'hui parce qu'il était malade.

Permettez-moi d'ajouter que dans l'ensemble ces personnes ont trouvé de l'emploi, de façon ou d'une autre comme monsieur John Henry.

J'espère que les membres du Comité ou du gouvernement auront l'occasion de rencontrer monsieur John Henry sur sa ferme près de Lampbellville où il s'est installé un atelier muni de toutes les machines-outils nécessaires. C'est presque un passe-temps qui lui permet de gagner suffisamment d'argent pour vivre. Il préfère travailler plutôt que de rester simplement assis dans une chaise à ne rien faire.

Monsieur Wayne travaille pour I.N.C.A. tout comme monsieur Chris Davino. Monsieur Tony Dion possède une cantine à Sorel, dans la partie populeuse, je crois. Sans visage, monsieur Smitty, peut bien se diriger avec le seul œil qui lui reste. On a pratiqué 42 opérations pour tenter de lui refaire un nez. Pourquoi est-il accompagné d'une escorte? Vous comprendrez, je le crois, que vous seriez fatigué de vous faire traiter de face de singe ou d'autres noms semblables par des enfants cruels, sans cervelle. Il travaille. Il voit le plancher, mais il ne voit pas la poussière qu'il y a dessus. Il balaie deux, trois fois pour être certain qu'il a bien enlevé la saleté. C'est son travail. Monsieur le président, voilà notre délégation.

Je suis secrétaire exécutif de l'Association et je travaille à l'I.N.C.A.. Vous lirez dans notre mémoire notre gratitude envers l'I.N.C.A.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Woodcock. I understand it was your intention to ask Mr. Chadderton to read the brief for you. Is that right?

Mr. Woodcock: Last, but by no means least, is the honourary life member of our Association, because of the devotion he has shown not just on the Woods Committee but devotion to work for veterans, Mr. C. H. Chadderton, whom I am going to ask to read our brief in its entirety and our reaction to the White Paper, which I would then ask you to take up point by point.

The Chairman: Fine.

• 1415

Mr. Chadderton: Mr. Chairman, the first brief is the one in the light coloured jacket with the plastic hinges. You will notice that this brief is dated December 1968. It was prepared after the Woods Commit'ee Report but, of course, before the White Paper.

Submission of the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded to
The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs
December 1968

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

We sincerely appreciate the opportunity to appear before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and to express our appreciation of the Woods Committee Report, which recommends solutions to so many of the interrelated problems which have disturbed the War Blinded for many years, and we trust our appearance will create a better understanding of the problems of the War Blinded in particular.

This is the second time only in the history of the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded, since it was formed in 1922, that we have appeared before a parliamentary committee on Veterans Affairs as a separate organization, although we have always appeared with the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada, giving full support to the briefs submitted on those occasions.

In 1961 we appeared before the entire Pension Commission as a group on the matter of the cost of blindness in relation to the then inadequate awarding of Attendance Allow-

Le président: Merci, monsieur Woodcock. Je crois que vous avez l'intention de demander à monsieur Chadderton de lire le mémoire pour vous n'est-ce pas?

M. Woodcock: Le dernier mais non pas le moindre, je vous présente le membre honoraire à vie de notre Association à cause de son dévouement non seulement au Comité Woods, mais aussi à l'ensemble du travail pour les vétérans, monsieur C. H. Chadderton qui, à ma demande aura l'obligeance de lire l'ensemble du mémoire et nos réactions au Livre blanc que nous espérons avoir la possibilité d'étudier point par point.

Le président: Très bien.

M. Chadderton: Le premier mémoire possède une couverture bleue pâle brochée. Vous remarquerez que le mémoire est daté de décembre 1968. Il a donc été préparé après le Rapport du Comité Woods, mais avant le Livre blanc.

SOUMISSION DE L'ASSOCIATION DES AVEUGLES DE GUERRE SIR ARTHUR PEARSON
AU COMITÉ PERMANENT
DES AFFAIRES DES ANCIENS COMBATTANTS
Décembre 1968

Monsieur le président
Messieurs,

Nous sommes heureux d'avoir l'occasion de témoigner devant le Comité permanent des Affaires des anciens combattants et de pouvoir donner notre avis sur le Rapport du Comité Woods qui préconise des solutions à un si grand nombre de problèmes reliés entre eux qui ont intéressé les aveugles de guerre pendant plusieurs années. Nous croyons aussi que notre témoignage fera naître une meilleure compréhension des problèmes des aveugles de guerre.

C'est la deuxième fois dans l'histoire de l'Association des aveugles de guerre Sir Arthur Pearson, depuis sa formation en 1922, que nous témoignons devant un comité parlementaire sur les Affaires des anciens combattants à titre d'organisme indépendant, quoique nous ayons toujours comparu avec le Conseil national des Associations des anciens combattants en appuyant entièrement les mémoires soumis à ce moment-là.

En 1961, notre groupe a témoigné devant la Commission des pensions, au sujet du coût de la cécité par rapport à l'allocation insuffisante pour soins aux diverses catégories de notre ance to the various categories within our group. We were most grateful for the co-operation of the Canadian Pension Commission on that occasion for providing the minimum Attendance Allowance for all War Blinded whose sight loss was assessed at 100 per cent and thereafter increased by multiples of $300 according to the degree of visual loss, up to the maximum permissible for blindness for those who are totally blind. We still feel this method of assessment to be fair and equitable, although far too inadequate for the present day cost of blindness.

[Text]

In order to better understand the diverse and interrelated problems affecting the War Blinded, we again submit an item, entitled:—Cost of Blindness.

Our past experience with legislative and administrative group sleads us to believe that blindness, as a disability, is vastly underra'ed and all too often our battle casualties suffer additional disabilities which increase—and sometimes double—the serious disability of blindness. They partly blame themselves because, in general, the blind—a minority group—have had to minimize their disabili'y in order to retain a place on the fringe of the sighted world. Then, too, sighted groups, such as the one assembled here today, form an impression of the blind as a whole, from a few outstanding exceptions. The entire social structure of the world is based on sight. They do feel the main cause of their present problems is a complete misunderstanding of the disabili'y of blindness and in particular those who are totally blind. As was aptly put by one member—"It is bad enough to be shut in by blindness, but far worse to be shut out by sighted misunderstanding."

Our members feel that blindness requires more assistance at all times than any o'her disability, except for the bedridden, and it costs just as much, or more, to maintain their place in the social order of community life, especially as prostheses for the blind in no way restore independence in whole, or in part, and in the main serve a cosmetic purpose only.

It has been stated that 85 per cent of continued education is visual. We firmly believe this and note that, as the years pass, we are rapidly losing touch with modern developments in many fields. The casual daily sighted glances at prin', prictures and material objects are denied to our group, who depend mainly on hearing and sense of touch. (We groupe. Nous avions apprécié au plus haut degré la collaboration de la Commission canadienne des pensions en cette occasion qui avait accordé l'allocation minimum pour les soins nécessaires à tous les aveugles de guerre dont la perte de la vue était évaluée à 100% et, par la suite, augmentée par des multiples de $300, conformément de degré de la perte visuelle, jusqu'au maximum permis pour la cécité de ceux qui sont complètement aveugles. Nous estimons encore que cette méthode d'évaluation est juste et équitable, même si elle est tout à fait insuffisante pour le coût de vie réel des aveugles.

Afin de mieux comprendre les problèmes divers et étroitement liés des aveugles de guerre, nous soumettons une autre rubrique intitulée: Coût de la cécité.

Notre expérience passée avec les groupes législatifs et administratifs nous amène à croire que la cécité, en tant qu'infirmité est largement sous-estimée et, trop souvent, nos blessés de guerre souffrent d'infirmités supplémentaires, lesquelles augmentent et souvent doublent la gravité de la cécité. Ils se blâment eux-mêmes en partie, parce que les aveugles forment un groupe minoritaire et à ce titre, ils ont dû minimiser leur infirmité afin de pouvoir occuper une place dans le monde des voyants. Ainsi, les groupes normaux, tels que celui qui se trouve dans cette enceinte aujourd'hui, considère les aveugles comme un tout, à part quelques rares exceptions. Toute la structure sociale du monde est basée sur la vue. Ils pensent que leurs problèmes actuels viennent principalement de la mauvaise compréhension de l'infirmité de l'aveugle et en particulier ceux qui le sont tout à fait. Comme l'a bien expliqué un de nos membres: Il est assez dur d'être fermé au monde par la cécité, mais il est encore pire d'être rejeté par l'incompréhension des voyants.»

Nos membres affirment que la cécité demande plus d'assistance en tout temps que n'importe quelle autre infirmité excepté pour ceux qui sont cloués au lit, et il en coûte autant sinon plus pour maintenir leur place dans l'ordre social de leur vie communautaire. Car les prothèses pour aveugles ne rendent l'indépendance, soit totale ou partielle et elles ne servent qu'un but esthétique uniquement.

Il a été démontré que 85 p. 100 de l'éducation permanente est visuelle. Nous le croyons fermement et notons que, comme les années passent, nous perdons rapidement la notion des perfectionnements de notre époque dans plusieurs domaines. Les regards furtifs sur les quotidiens, les images et les objets sont refusés à notre groupe qui dépend do, however, have a fairly accurate impression of mini skirts and hippies!!).

Mr. Woodcock: I would like to comment, if I may, Mr. Chairman.

It is a facetious remark in some respects, but on the other hand "hippies" and "mini skirts" have been on the lips of so many people around us that we have a fairly accurate description of them. That is aside from the fact that we have to look at them with these things—and I am using my fingers now, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chadderton: In attempting to assess the cost of blindness, there are several points which should be kept in mind:

• 1420

1. The entire social structure of the world is based on the ability to see.

2. The blind are attempting, by various methods and determination, to retain a place in the sighted world.

3. The ability to read and to see printed materials is an all-important key to progressive gainful earning power denied to the blind.

4. Cost cannot be measured merely by enumerating the day-to-day out-of-pocket cash expenses so necessary if the blind are to retain the maximum mobility and independence possible in blindness, or to take part in the every day living in a sighted community.

5. Also keep in mind that the cost of blindness is an expenditure over and above the cost of living.

6. The many frustrations experienced by the blind contribute to health conditions, difficult to prove as consequential disabilities.

(a) Out-of-pocket cash expenditures—Mobility.

Extra cash must be expended to retain mobile independence. The moment the totally blind leave the narrow confines of familiar surroundings, they are forced to make out-of-pocket expenditures—cost of cabs and all-important tips, far more excessive than their sighted counterpart. On strange ground the totally blind cannot move without sighted assistance and unless accompanied by a sighted escort he must pay, one way or another, to get from point to point. This sighted assistance is paid for by various forms of gratuiprincipalement de l'ouïe et du toucher. (Toutefois, nous avons une idée assez juste des mini-jupes et des hippies!)

M. Woodcock: Monsieur le président, j'aimerais faire un commentaire si vous me le permettez.

Il s'agit d'une remarque assez facétieuse d'une façon, mais d'un autre côté les hippies et les mini-jupes ont fait l'objet de tant de conversations que nous en avons maintenant une assez bonne idée, car nous ne pouvons les examiner qu'avec nos doigts, monsieur le président.

M. Chadderton: En essayant d'évaluer le coût de la cécité, il y a plusieurs points à considérer:

1. Le système social mondial s'appuie sur la vue.

2. Les aveugles essaient, par détermination avec diverses méthodes d'occuper une place dans le monde des voyants.

3. L'aptitude à lire et à voir les caractères imprimés est un moyen très important pour mieux gagner sa vie, ce qui est refusé aux aveubles

4. le coût de la cécité ne peut pratiquement pas être calculé en énumérant les dépenses quotidiennes pour que l'aveugle puisse conserver la liberté de mouvement et le degré d'indépendance permis par la cécité, ou de prendre part à la vie de chaque jour dans la communauté des voyants.

5. Il faut aussi tenir compte du fait que le coût de la cécité est une dépense qui dépasse le coût de la vie.

6. Les frustrations éprouvées par l'aveugle influencent sa condition de santé et elles entrent difficilement dans le cadre des infirmités conséquentes.

a) Dépenses pour les déplacements

On doit dépenser plus d'argent pour conserver une liberté de mouvement. Dès qu'une personne totalement aveugle quitte son entourage, elle est forcée de faire des dépenses additionnelles—taxis, pourboires, etc.. qui excèdent celles des voyants. Dans un endroit inconnu, l'aveugle dont la cécité est totale ne peut se déplacer sans l'assistance d'un voyant ou sans la compagnie d'une escorte qu'il doit payer d'une manière ou d'une autre pour se déplacer. L'assistance d'un voyant est payée sous différentes sortes de pourboires. Quand ties. When travelling, the blind are forced into higher cost accommodation, in order to acquire adequate and convenient facilities and personnel, which necessitates unavoidable expenses, and naturally, higher cost meals through the inability to seek out lower cost restaurants, unless, of course, sighted guides are retained.

In this do-it-yourself age, the blind are forced to pay for all forms of maintenance at current rates; therefore, they are unable to protect their cash income, as do their sighted neighbours. The blind pay for their independence in many ways, even within the confines of their home terrain, resorting to taxis, hired help, paid readers and repayment of friends and acquaintances for gratuitous services rendered. The blind either meet these costs, or retrench and take no part in the normal activities of the sighted community. It is our experience that all too often the blind are forced to do just that, a cost they must pay for being blind. With but few exceptions, sports activities are denied the blind because of their handicap. The few exceptions permitting participation cost the blind more than the sighted participants in that they require sighted assistance on a paid, or voluntary, basis. The above applies to almost all other recreational outlets.

(b) Hidden Costs of Blindness

The hidden costs of blindness are impossible to assess and yet, in actual fact, are very costly to the blind. The very narrow field of employment, through the inability to see, is the more apparent. Not only are the job opportunities few and far between, when compared to their sighted, disabled counterparts, but the normal progress and promotion, with accompanying salary increases, are in the main denied to those who cannot see, regardless of their intelligence and ability. This, in effect, confines the blind to a specific form of employment in a firm, over a long period of time, with no hope of promotion, or increased responsibilities and corresponding increase in income. To combat a DVA administrator's statement—made during a discussion on pension increases—"Yes, but you are all working...", a recent survey indicates that a little less than half of the 237 war blinded veterans of World War II are unemployed and are mainly depending on pension incomes to raise families. Of the employed, it is interesting to note that 45 are employed by CNIB, thank God for CNIB!

[Interpretation]

l'aveugle voyage, il est forcé d'être servi et de réserver des installations convenables, qui exigent des dépenses supplémentaires, et naturellement, des repas plus dispendieux à cause de son incapacité de chercher des restaurants à prix modeste, à moins, bien sûr, qu'il soit accompagné d'un voyant.

Dans ce siècle du bricolage, l'aveugle est obligé de payer toute forme de maintien au tarif courant, c'est pourquoi, il est incapable de protéger son revenu comme le fait son entourage. L'aveugle paye son indépendance de plusieurs façons, même dans sa propre demeure; en recourant aux taxis, en engageant de l'aide, des lecteurs, en récompensant ses amis et connaissances pour services rendus bénévolement. L'aveugle n'arrive à rencontrer ces dépenses ou se retire et ne prend aucune part aux activités normales de la communauté des voyants. C'est par expérience que nous disons que l'aveugle est obligé de faire tout cela—c'est le prix qu'il paye pour sa cécité. A part quelques exceptions, les activités sportives sont refusées à l'aveugle à cause de son handicap. Les quelques exceptions auxquelles il peut participer, lui coûtent plus cher qu'aux voyants car cela nécessite l'assistance d'un voyant bénévole ou rémunéré. Les exemples énumérés plus haut s'appliquent à presque toutes les autres sorties récréatives.

b) Dépenses cachées de la cécité.

Les dépenses cachées de la cécité sont impossibles à évaluer, cependant elles sont en fait très élevées pour l'aveugle. Les possibilités d'emploi très limitées à cause de sa cécité en sont la preuve. Non seulement les occasions d'emploi sont minimes par rapport à celles des voyants, mais le progrès normal et la promotion qui s'accompagnent d'augmentations de salaire sont en principe écartées dans le cas des aveugles, sans tenir compte de leur intelligence et leur habileté. Cela a pour effet de restreindre l'aveugle à une forme spécifique d'emploi dans une entreprise et ce pour une période de temps très longue sans espoir d'avancement ou de responsabilités accrues et d'augmentations de salaire correspondantes. En réponse à un administrateur du ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants qui a dit: «Oui, mais vous travaillez tous...», lors d'une discussion sur l'augmentation des pensions, une enquête récente démontre que près de la moitié des 237 aveugles anciens combattants de la Seconde Guerre mondiale sont sans emploi et dépendent principalement des revenus de leur pension pour élever leur famille. Parmi ceux qui ont du travail, il est intéressant de noter que 45 d'entre eux sont au service de l'I.N.C.A., Dieu merci!...

Can anyone assess the cost of blindness to the wives and families of the blind? Even we who live under these conditions cannot fully appreciate the full extent to which we depend on the eyes of our loved ones. We do, however, have tangible proof of this dependence when the wife of one of our comrades dies. We see the degree of helplessness thrust on our comrade when he loses the second pair of eyes, through the loss of his lifelong companion. Our wives willingly perform many additional tasks because of our blindness. They are on duty every minute of every day, providing, in addition to their household responsibilities, service such as reader, guide, valet, chauffeur, interrupting their normal routine to perform one hundred and one little tasks which require sight. It includes additional responsibilities necessary in family life. We

Est-il possible d'évaluer le coût de la cécité pour la femme et la famille des aveugles? Même en vivant dans ces conditions, nous ne pouvons voir vraiment jusqu'à quel point nous comptons sur les yeux de nos plus proches parents. Nous constatons toutefois cette dépendance quand l'épouse de l'un de nos camarades meurt. Nous voyons le degré d'impuissance dans lequel se trouve notre camarade lorsqu'il perd une seconde paire d'yeux, en perdant la compagne de sa vie. Nos femmes font de bon gré des travaux supplémentaires qu'entraînent notre cécité. Elles travaillent chaque minute de la journée à remplir, en plus de leurs responsabilités de ménagères, les fonctions de lectrice, de guide, de valet, de chauffeur, interrompant ainsi leur routine normale pour faire mille et une choses qui exigent l'usgae de la vue. Cela comprend depend on their eyes to keep us in touch with the every day world—its colour, its beauty, its shape, its size, its constant activities; in other words, what you, a sighted person, see every waking minute of every day. Our wives, with but few exceptions, are unable to accept gainful employment as is the trend to-day. What is the cost of blindness to their health and happiness?

What is the cost of blindness to the health of the blind? Only those who live it can appreciate the tuned-in nervous tension required to retain mobility and independence. What contribution does frustration and tension make to nerve conditions, stomach troubles, sleepless nights and general health breakdown? What is the cost of blindness through inability to participate in healthy outdoor sports, with a very few exceptions, and for that matter, many other recreational outlets included? Remember, we only have free treatment and hospital services for our pensionable conditions. We pay medical and hospital expenses for many conditions that we consider connected with our pensionable disability.

These are the intangibles that cannot be proven, and yet we know they cost the blind a great deal.

The foregoing, in part, emphasizes our reasons for supporting the Woods Committee Report in general, and in particular the items that follow.

Woods Committee Report.

Most of the dissatisfaction of our members is created by the interpretation of a number d'autres responsabilités nécessaires à la vie familiale. Nous dépendons de leurs yeux pour rester en contact avec le monde, sa couleur, sa beauté, ses formes, ses dimensions, ses activités constantes, en d'autres mots, ce que vous, une personne voyante, voyez à chaque instant de la journée. A part quelques exceptions, nos épouses ne peuvent accepter un emploi rémunérateur comme on a tendance aujourd'hui. Quel est le coût de la cécité par rapport à leur santé et leur bonheur?

Quel est le coût de la cécité par rapport à la santé de l'aveugle? Seulement celui qui la vit peut évaluer la tension nerveuse requise pour se déplacer et être indépendant. Quelle contribution apportent la frustration et la tension aux conditions nerveuses, troubles d'estomac, insomnies et dépérissement de la santé en général? Quel est le coût de la cécité entraîné par l'impossibilité de participer aux sports extérieurs qui nous gardent en forme, à part de très rares exceptions et pour celà, plusieurs autres évènements récréatifs? Souvenez-vous que nous avons des traitements et services médicaux gratuits seulement pour l'invalidité qui ouvre droit à pension. Nous payons les frais médicaux et hospitaliers pour plusieurs conditions que nous considérons comme liés à notre invalidité ouvrant droit à pension. Il s'agit de facteurs intangibles qui ne peuvent être prouvées et cependant, nous savons qu'elles coûtent cher à l'aveugle.

Ce qui précède, augmente en partie les raisons que nous avons d'appuyer le rapport du Comité Woods en général, et en particulier ce qui suit:

Rapport du Comité Woods

Une grande partie du mécontentement de nos membres vient de l'interprétation d'un of sections of the Pension Act. These interpretations have been established by one or two officials at various times in the past and it seems to us that, in spite of the wording of the Act, a one-man interpretation of those words becomes a hard and fast law, which others administering the Act over the years have not had the initiative to interpret for themselves.

Sections 20, 21 and 22 read as follows:—

20. (1) Where a death or disability for which pension is payable is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person to pay damages therefor, if any amount is recovered and collected in respect of such liability by or on behalf of the person to or on behalf of whom such pension may be paid, the Commission, for the purpose of determining the amount of pension to be awarded shall take into consideration any amount so recovered and collected in the manner hereinafter set out.

(2) In any such case the Commission may require such person or anyone acting on his behalf as a condition to the payment of any pension, to take all or any steps that it deems necessary to enforce such liability and for such purpose shall agree to indemnify such person or anyone acting on his behalf from all or any costs incurred in connection therewith.

21. Where a disability or death for which pension is payable is caused under circumstances by reason of which compensation is payable in respect of such disability or death under any provincial Workmen's Compensation Act or legislation of a similar nature either in the place of, or as additional to, or apart altogether from any amount that is recovered or collected in respect thereof under section 20, if any compensation is awarded to or on behalf of any person to or on behalf of whom such pension may be paid, the Commission, for the purpose of determining the amount of pension to be awarded shall take into consideration any compensation so awarded in the manner hereinafter set out.

22. (1) Where any amount so recovered and collected or the capitalized value of any compensation so awarded, or both, is greater than the capitalized value of the pension that might otherwise have been certain nombre d'articles de la Loi sur les Pensions. Ces interprétations ont été faites par un ou deux fonctionnaires supérieurs à divers moments dans le passé et il nous semble que, en dépit du texte de la loi, une interprétation personnelle de ces mots devient une loi difficile et très vite faite, que d'autres, qui administrent la loi depuis plusieurs années n'ont pas eu l'initiative d'interpréter pour eux-mêmes. Les articles 20, 21, et 22 se lisent comme il suit:

20. (1) Lorsque le décès ou l'invalidité pour laquelle une pension est payable a été causée dans des circonstances en vertu desquelles une personne est légalement obligée de payer des dommages-intérêts pour cette invalidité ou ce décès, si une somme est recouvrée et perçue, en ce qui concerne cette responsabilité, par ou pour la personne à qui ou pour le compte de laquelle cette pension peut être payée, la Commission, en vue de déterminer le montant de la pension à accorder, doit tenir compte de la somme ainsi recouvrée et perçue de la manière énoncée ci-après.

(2) En pareil cas, la commission peut enjoindre à cette personne ou à toute autre agissant en son nom comme condition de paiement d'une pension, de prendre toute mesure que la Commission juge nécessaire pour faire valoir son droit et, à cette fin, elle peut consentir à tenir cette personne ou toute autre agissant en son nom indemne de tous frais occasionnés de ce chef.

21. Lorsque l'invalidité ou le décès pour lequel une pension est payable résulte de circonstances entraînant l'exigibilité d'une indemnité concernant cette invalidité ou ce décès sous le régime de toute loi provinciale sur les accidents du travail ou d'une législation du même genre, soit au lieu, soit en sus ou à l'exclusion complète de toute somme recouvrée ou perçue à l'égard de ladite invalidité ou dudit décès sous le régime de l'article 20, si une indemnité est accordée à ou pour une personne à qui ou pour le compte de qui cette pension peut être payée, la Commission, en vue de déterminer le montant de la pension à accorder, doit tenir compte de toute indemnité ainsi accordée de la manière énoncée ci-après.

22. (1) Lorsqu'une somme ainsi recouvrée et perçue ou la valeur capitalisée d'une indemnité ainsi accordée, ou l'ensemble des deux, excède la valeur capitalisée de la pension qui aurait pu autre-payable under this Act, no pension shall be paid.

(2) Where any amount so recovered and collected or the capitalized value of any compensation so awarded, or both, is less than the capitalized value of the pension that might otherwise have been awarded under the provisions of this Act, a pension in an amount that, if capitalized equals the difference between such amount or the capitalized value of such compensation, or both, and the capitalized value of the pension that might otherwise have been payable under this Act, may be paid.

(3) If any amount so recovered and collected, or any part thereof, is paid to Her Majesty, a pension that, if capitalized equals the amount so paid but is not in any event greater than the total pension that, apart from this section, would be payable under this Act, may be paid.

Sections 20, 21 and 22 were designed, we feel sure, for those still in uniform, but in no way intended to affect the 100 per cent disabled battle casualty. We have, at the moment, Case A, assessed at 100 per cent disability and receiving 100 per cent pension for several disabilities other than blindness, but who has recently been rendered totally blind as a result of an automobile accident.

As a passenger, the accident may very well prove to be the fault of other person, or persons. He will, if awarded a sum of money by the civil court, have to turn same over to the Receiver General, or have his pension decreased over a period of time by an amount determined on his life expectancy. Case A had good vision; the recent accident has caused total blindness.

We have, in the past, through the National Council of Veterans Associations, pointed out the serious effect this Section has on widows, who are not even allowed to deduct from the amount of the civil court award, the cost of the ambulance, the lawyer, and other costs involved in establishing a claim.

We feel that the original intent of these Sections 20, 21 and 22 being incorporated into the Pension Act was to govern those who were still in uniform, who could either accept the civil court award for a disability for ment être payable sous le régime de la présente loi, il n'est payé aucune pension.

(2) Lorsqu'une somme ainsi recouvrée et perçue ou la valeur capitalisée d'une indemnité ainsi accordée, ou l'ensemble des deux, est moindre que la valeur capitalisée de la pension qui aurait pu autrement être accordée sous le régime des dispositions de la présente loi, il peut être payé une pension représentant un montant qui, s'il est capitalisé égale la différence entre ce montant ou la valeur capitalisée de cette indemnité, ou les deux, et la valeur capitalisée de la pension qui autrement aurait été payable sous le régime de la présente loi.

(3) Si une somme ainsi recouvrée et perçue, ou toute partie de ladite somme, est versée à sa Majesté, il peut être payé une pension qui, si elle est capitalisée, égale la somme ainsi payée mais n'est en aucun cas supérieure à la pension totale qui, à l'exclusion du présent article, serait exigible sous le régime de la présente loi.

Les articles 20, 21 et 22 ont été conçus, nous en sommes certains, pour ceux qui sont encore en uniformes, mais en aucune manière à l'intention des blessés de guerres dont l'invalidité est évaluée à 100 p. 100. Nous avons en ce moment le cas A, dont l'incapacité a été évaluée à 100 p. 100, qui reçoit une pension de 100 p. 100 pour plusieurs infirmités autre que la cécité, qui est devenu complètement aveugle à la suite d'un accident d'automobile dans laquelle il avait pris place. On peut fort bien prouver que l'accident a été causé par une ou d'autres personnes.

Si une somme d'argent lui est accordée par le Tribunal civil, il aura à la remettre au Receveur Général ou sa pension sera diminuée pendant une certaine période de temps d'un montant déterminé, d'après son espérance de vie. Le cas A avait une bonne vue, mais son récent accident l'a rendu complètement aveugle.

Par l'entremise du Conseil National de l'Association des Anciens Combattants, nous avons dans le passé signalé les effets graves que cet article avait sur les veuves qui n'ont même pas le droit de déduire le coût de l'ambulance, de l'avocat et autres dépenses occasionnées par la présentation d'une plainte du montant adjugé par le tribunal civil.

Nous avons l'impression que les articles 20, 21 et 22, incorporés dans La loi sur les pensions étaient destinés à ceux qui étaient encore en uniformes qui pouvaient, soit accepter le montant adjugé par le tribunal which the government of the day was not responsible, or a disability pension.

We fully support the Woods Committee Recommendation No. 19 and urgently plead that Sections 20, 21 and 22 be deleted from the Pension Act.

Balance of Pension Payable on Death.

Section 24. (sub-section (4)):

Any pension, or balance of pension, whether unpaid or held in trust by the Commission or the Department, due to a deceased pensioner at the time of his death, or, in the case of a person whose death occurred after the coming into force of this sub-section, due on the day following his death or the first day of the month following that in which his death occurred, as the case may be, does not form part of the estate of such deceased pensioner.

Sub-section (5):

The Commission may, in its discretion, direct the payment of such pension, or balance of pension, either to the pensioner's widow or his child or children, or the widow and child or children, or may direct that it be paid in whole or in part to any person who has maintained him or been maintained by him or towards the expenses of the pensioner's last sickness and burial.

Sub-section (6):

If no order for the payment of such pension, or balance of pension, is made by the Commission, such pension, or balance of pension, shall not be paid."

Under Section 24, permitting the Canadian Pension Commission to exercise its discretion, there was a case which caused considerable unrest among our members—Case B, who, through illness was unable to sign his last one or two pension cheques (his War Disability Compensation cheques) and on the death of the veteran they were returned to the Receiver General, with no re-issuing of a cheque to next-of-kin (children). We would add that this case was an appalling shock to the welfare officers of St. Dunstan's for the Blind in England, where Case B died. War disability cheques are paid in arrears. Therefore, to be fair and just, we feel that the $337.35 returned to the Receiver General should have been repaid to his surviving daughters. Canada profited by his death by the return of money which should have gone to his daughters. How would you feel if your last one or civil pour une infirmité dont le gouvernement actuel n'était pas responsable, ou une pension d'infirmité.

Nous appuyons pleinement la recommandation n° 19 du rapport du Comité Woods et nous demandons urgemment que les articles 20, 21 et 22 soient rayés de la Loi sur les pensions.

Balance de la pension payable au décès

Les paragraphes 4, 5 et 6 de l'article 24:

(4) Le montant d'une pension ou d'un reliquat de pension, dû à un pensionné défunt, à l'époque de son décès survenu avant ou après l'entrée en vigueur du présent paragraphe, qu'il soit impayé ou détenu en fiducie par la Commission ou par le Ministère, ne fait pas partie de la succession dudit pensionné défunt.

(5) La Commission peut, à sa discrétion, ordonner le paiement de ladite pension ou dudit reliquat de pension à la veuve et à son enfant ou ses enfants, ou ordonner qu'il soit versé en totalité ou en partie à toute personne qui a eu le pensionné à sa charge ou qui a été à la charge du pensionné, ou aux fins de frais de sa dernière maladie et de ses funérailles.

(6) Si la Commission n'émet aucun ordre pour le paiement de cette pension ou du reliquat de pension, la pension ou le reliquat ne doit pas être payé.

En vertu de l'article 24, qui autorise la Commission canadienne des pensions d'exercer sa discrétion, il y avait un cas qui a causé une grande inquiétude parmi nos membres; il s'agit du cas B, qui, en raison de sa maladie, était incapable de signer son dernier ou avant dernier chèque de pension (ses chèques d'indemnités pour l'infirmité de guerre), et à la mort de l'ancien combattant, ils ont été retournés au Receveur Général, sans que l'on renvoie de chèque aux héritiers (enfants). Nous ajouterons que ce cas a causé un émoi terrible parmi les agents du bien-être de St. Dunstan's pour les aveugles en Angleterre, où le cas B est décédé. Les chèques d'infirmité de guerre sont payés en arriérages. Alors pour être juste et équitable, nous estimons que les $337.35 retournés au Receveur général devraient être remboursés à ses héritiers. Le Canada profita par son décès du retour de two uncashed salary cheques were claimed by the Receiver General and not re-issued?

We are considerably puzzled by the original intent of Section 24.

Multiple Disabilities.

Similarly, we feel the mythical barrier of no compensation for disabilities beyond 100 per cent to be a misinterpretation of intent. Prior to our submission of 1945, a veteran with multiple disabilities, the arithmetical total of which could—and in some cases did—amount to 200 per cent to 300 per cent, could not even receive 100 per cent pension because of the then interpretation of Section 13 of the Pension Act. If the major disability in this case was 80 per cent and the second disability was assessed at 15 per cent, for pension purposes, they deducted 80 per cent from 100 per cent leaving 20 per cent; he then only received for his second assessed disability of 15 per cent, 15 per cent of the remaining 20 per cent. Computing pension on this basis for additional disabilities, under this system, regardless of the arithmetical total of the man's disabilities, he would never receive 100 per cent pension—short of infinity! The Commission, at that time, saw the error of their interpretation and adjusted computation of disabilities to a straight arithmetical total, but only up to the mythical barrier of 100 per cent and no more, which to us seems ridiculous and tragic—yes, tragic, to the group within our ranks with whom we are mainly concerned—the totally blind, and the blind with a variety of additional disabilities. Under the present scale of assessment our Association rates total blindness at 300 per cent to 400 per cent.

> As the late W. C. Dies—known to many of you—himself totally blind, with an arm off and with defective hearing, has said on so many occasions: "Unless you fellows do something about it soon, it will be too late for a good many of us." Bill joined the Honour Roll of our Departed Comrades on December 11, 1968. The Membership of our Association has now decreased to 48 Members of World War I and 170 of World War II, and of this number approximately 37 are totally blind.

We feel that Section 13 could realistically have been interpreted to compensate a disabled veteran for each disability, according to the assessment for each disability. Section 13 l'argent qui aurait dû aller à ses héritières. Comment réagiriez-vous si votre dernier ou vos deux derniers chèques de paye non encaissés étaient réclamés par le Receveur général et ne vous étaient pas émis à nouveau?

Nous sommes intrigués par l'intention originale de l'article 24.

Infirmités multiples

Nous sentons que la barrière mythique de l'absence d'indemnités pour les infirmités au-dessus de 100 p. 100 est une fausse interprétation du contenu. Avant notre mémoire de 1945, un ancien combattant atteint de multiples infirmités, dont le total arithmétique pourrait, et en certains cas totalisait entre 200 à 300 p. 100 ne pouvait même pas recevoir une pension de 100 p. 100 à cause de leur interprétation de l'article 13 de la Loi sur les pensions. Si l'infirmité majeure dans ce cas était 80 p. 100 et la deuxième infirmité était évaluée à 15 p. 100 en terme de pension, on déduisait 80 p. 100 de 100 p. 100 laissant 20 p. 100 alors il ne recevait que 15 p. 100 pour sa deuxième infirmité, 15 p. 100 du 20 p. 100 qui restait.

Sous ce système, en additionnant ainsi la pension pour infirmités supplémentaires, sans tenir compte du total arithmétique de l'invalidité de l'homme, il ne pourrait jamais toucher une pension de 100 p. 100. En ce temps-là, la Commission a constaté l'erreur de leur interprétation et a redressé le total des infirmités au total arithmétique des infirmités, mais seulement jusqu'à la barrière mythique de 100 p. 100 et pas plus, ce qui nous semble ridicule et tragique, oui tragique, pour le groupe de personnes qui nous intéressent principalement, la personne atteinte de cécité totale et l'aveugle qui a une variété d'infirmités supplémentaires. Sous la présente échelle d'évaluation, notre association évalue la cécité totale entre 300 p. 100 et 400 p. 100.

Comme le défunt W. C. Dies—que plusieurs connaissaient, lui-même totalement aveugle, avec un bras amputé et une surdité partielle, nous l'a très souvent dit: «A moins que vous, compagnons, ne fassiez quelque chose très bientôt, il sera trop tard pour plusieurs d'entre nous.» Bill joignit le rang d'honneur de nos compagnons défunts le 11 décembre 1968. Le nombre de membres de notre association a maintenant perdu 48 membres de la Première Guerre mondiale et 170 de la Seconde, et de ce nombre environ 37 personnes sont entièrement aveugles.

A notre avis, l'article 13 aurait pu en réalité être interprété de façon à indemniser un ancien combattant infirme pour chaque infirmité selon l'évaluation accordée pour chaque does definitely indicate that a veteran should be compensated at a specific rate for the injury, the disability, in other words, "singular" throughout.

> Section 13. Item 1:
> (a) pensions shall be awarded in accordance with the rates set out in Schedule A to or in respect of members of the forces when the injury or disease or aggravation thereof resulting in the disability in respect of which the application for pension is made was attributable to or was incurred during such military service...

Nowhere do we find a Directive in any form limiting the administration to the arithmetical total of 100 per cent pension and no more.

We would also point out that Section 28 (Pensions for Disabilities) sub-Section (2) states: "...The estimate of the extent of a disability..."

Thank God the Woods Committee recognized what we considered to be a gross injustice in the method and interpretation of compensation for multiple war disabilities. Therefore, we urgently appeal that the Woods Committee Recommendation No. 14 on multiple disabilities be given priority and implemented as soon as possible.

Protection of the Widows of the War Blinded.

On the high priority list of urgent concern to our members is the protection of our widows. We—and we alone—know the many, additional responsibilities forced on our loved ones by our inability to see, some of which were outlined under "Cost of Blindess". Too often we have seen the widow of a World War I veteran left with a pitiful bank balance (approximately $2,000), their life's savings from their only source of income—War Disability Pension. Also, widows of World War II comrades left with unpaid debts and dependent children on the sudden death of the husband, the veteran having had very little, if any, opportunity to protect his widow by earned income, insurance, etc., because of the severe handicap of blindness.

The principle of the adjustment period has already been recognized under the War Veterans Allowance Act, wherein the full amount is continued for one year following the death of either party. We fully appreciate the need for this adjustment period, but cannot understand why the same principle is not applied infirmité. L'article 13 indique de façon définitive qu'un ancien combattant devrait être indemnisé à un taux spécifique pour la blessure, l'infirmité, en d'autres mots, pour chaque infirmité.

> Le paragraphe 1 de l'article 13:
> a) Les pensions seront accordées en rapport aux taux désignés dans la Schedule A de ou en considération du membre des forces quand la blessure, ou la maladie ou l'aggravation laquelle, résultant de l'infirmité pour laquelle l'application de la pension est faite, était attribuable à ou était contractée durant tel service militaire...

Nulle part, nous trouvons une directive d'aucune forme qui limite l'administration au total arithmétique de 100 p. 100 de pension et pas plus.

Nous voulons aussi signaler que le paragraphe (2) de l'article 28 (Pensions pour infirmités) indique: «...L'estimé du degré d'une infirmité...»

Dieu merci, le Comité Woods a reconnu ce que nous tenons pour une grave injustice dans la méthode et l'interprétation de l'indemnité pour infirmités de guerre multiples. Par conséquent, nous demandons que l'on donne priorité à la recommandation n°14 du rapport du Comité Woods sur les infirmités multiples, et qu'elles soit appliquée aussitôt que possible.

Protection des veuves des aveugles de guerre

Sur la liste des questions urgentes de nos membres se trouve la protection de nos veuves. Nous et nous seuls savons les maintes et maintes responsabilités supplémentaires imposées aux êtres que nous sont chers par notre cécité dont quelques-uns figuraient sous la rubrique «Le coût de la cécité.» Trop souvent, nous avons vu la veuve d'un ancien combattant de la Première Guerre mondiale laissée avec un mince compte en banque d'environ 2,000 dollars, les économies de toute une vie provenant de leur seule source de revenu—la pension d'infirmité de guerre. Les veuves de nos compagnons de la Seconde Guerre mondiale aussi, se trouvent avec des dettes et des enfants en bas âge au décès soudain de leur époux, car l'ancien combattant a eu peu de chance ou pas du tout pour protéger sa veuve par son revenu, ses assurances, etc....à cause du grave handicap qu'est la cécité.

Le principe de la période de redressement a déjà été reconnu aux termes de la Loi sur les allocations des anciens combattants, où le plein montant continue à être versé pendant l'année qui suit le décès de l'une ou de l'autre partie. Nous constatons la nécessité de cette période de redressement, at least to the widows of the war blinded, who have a far more serious need for the adjustment period, financially and otherwise. In 1956 the original resolution on this subject was submitted by our Association, through the National Council of Veterans Associations, and was born out of the tragic circumstances related to the writer by the young widow of a recently-deceased World War II veteran. In those days, the pension terminated on the exact date of the death of the veteran. One thing the resolution did accomplish, the Act was amended to permit payment of the pension to the end of the month in which the veteran died. The moral to this is, if you are going to die, then die on the 2nd of the month, not the 30th.

We strongly support the Woods Committee Recommendation No. 27 on this subject.

Blind Attendance Allowance. (Woods Comm. Recommendation No. 17)

We urge the granting of the maximum Attendance Allowance under the Act for those who are totally blind. It should be noted that the majority of the blind have carried the disability and have been in need of attendance as a direct result of enemy action. Their disabilities were incurred at a very young age. Many of our veterans of World War I have carried the serious disability of total blindness for over fifty years and, with a few exceptions, their wives have had to render constant attendance with no opportunity to accept employment in order to augment the pension income.

Basic Rate. (Woods Comm. Recommendation No. 13)

Our Association is perfectly satisfied with the present method of establishing a basis on which to compensate war disabilities, i.e., the average wage of the untrained, unskilled labourer in the Public Service of Canada. We feel that a change to any other barometer would eliminate any future basis for comparison. Rightly or wrongly, we believe that a change to any other barometer would be an attempt to down-grade a comparable monetary amount. Unfortunately for the disabled, war disability pensions have not kept pace with the wages of the untrained labourer in the Public Service of Canada.

mais ne pouvons comprendre pourquoi le même principe n'est pas appliqué au moins aux veuves des aveugles de guerre qui ont beaucoup plus besoin de la période de redressement, sur le plan financier et autre. En 1956, la résolution originale sur ce sujet a été soumise par notre association par l'entremise du Conseil national des Associations d'anciens combattants et était née des circonstances tragiques racontées à notre auteur par la jeune veuve d'un ancien combattant de la Seconde Guerre mondiale décédé récemment. Dans ce temps-là, la pension se terminait à la date exacte du décès de l'ancien combattant. La Résolution a permis que la Loi soit modifiée afin de permettre le versement de la pension jusqu'à la fin du mois où le vétéran mourait. Comme morale si vous êtes sur le point de mourir, faites-le le 2e jour du mois et non pas le 30e.

Nous souscrivons vigoureusement à la Recommandation nº 27 du Comité Woods à ce sujet.

Allocations de soins pour les aveugles
(Recommandation nº 17 du Comité Woods.)

Nous recommandons fortement l'octroi de l'allocation maximum de soins en vertu de la loi, pour ceux qui sont totalement aveugles. Il serait à noter que la majorité des aveugles ont supporté leur infirmité et ont eu besoin de sions, à titre d'invalidité reçue au cours de combats directs avec l'ennemi. Leurs infirmités se sont produites à un très jeune âge plusieurs de nos anciens combattan's de la Première Guerre mondiale qui sont complètement aveugles depuis plus de cinquante ans et à part quelques exceptions, leur épouse ont eu à leur donner des soins constants sans avoir l'occasion d'accepter un emploi afin d'augmenter le revenu de leur pension.

Taux de base
(Recommandation nº 13 du Comité Woods.)

Notre association est très satisfaite de la méthode actuelle utilisée pour établir une base des indemnités d'infirmités de guerre, i.e., le salaire moyen d'un travailleur non spécialisé dans la Fonction publique du Canada. Nous avons le sentiment qu'un changement de baromètre éliminerait toute base future de comparaison. A tort ou à raison, nous croyons qu'un changement de critère tenterait de diminuer un montant d'argent comparable. Malheureusement pour les infirmes de guerre, les pensions d'invalidité n'ont pas augmenté au rythme des salaires du travailleur non spécialisé dans la Fonction publique du Canada.

Prisonniers de guerre—Hong Kong

Parmi les aveugles de guerre, 48 sont des prisonniers de guerre de Hong Kong, dont la loss is attributable to malnutrition and optic neuritis. They have suffered from peripheral neuritis, avitaminosis, pellagra, beri-beri, and amoebic dysentery, etc. It is only natural, therefore, that many of them, not suffering from blindness, have had contact with us. In fact, the writer pointed out to the Department in 1946 the complete lack of stamina among many of the group who contacted him in various parts of Canada, many of whom had no pension and no entitlement and yet could not return to their normal "civvy street" occuptions because of experiences and conditions exactly the same as the 48 registered with us as blind. The writer recalls, too, that shortly after the return of 1300 to 1400 survivors from Hong Kong we were advised it appeared that over 5 per cent of them had defective vision.

We urge the implementation of the Woods Committee Recommendation No. 20.

Exemption of Pension from Income Tax.

We urge compliance with the Recommendation under Chapter 39 of the Woods Committee Report. We repeat here the expression of our Association's opinions contained in the following letter, dated November 23rd, 1967, sent to the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, P.C., M.P.:—

"Dear Mr. Minister,

For fifty years we have had to gradually build up an atmosphere of rehabilitation for the seriously disabled war blinded, by creating public confidence in their ability to perform, and by a gradual process of motivating and encouraging the blind to accept a job, however menial, regardless of their intelligence and abilities—latent and otherwise. With a few exceptions, the jobs are of the low-paid variety, monotonous, with no hope of promotions in the competition with sighted employees.

One of the paramount incentives has been that the seriously disabled war blinded could work and earn any amount, without in any way affecting his pension and allowances. If the War Disability Pension is to be subject to income tax—according to Carter recommendations—it will destroy the incentive, and the rehabilitation of the severely handicapped will be set back fifty years.

Although I am writing the above on behalf of the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded, I feel obligated to point out that, in perte de la vue est attribuable à la malnutrition et à la névrite optique. Ils ont souffert de névrite périphérique, d'avitaminose, de pellagre, du béri-béri et de la dysenterie amoébique, etc.

Il est naturel par conséquent que plusieurs d'entre eux qui ne sont pas atteints de cécité, aient communiqué avec nous. En fait, l'auteur a fait remarquer au ministère en 1946, le manque complet de résistance chez plusieurs personnes du groupe qui s'étaient adressées à lui dans le Canada, dont plusieurs n'ont pas de pension et n'y ont pas droit et cependant, ils ne peuvent retourner à leurs occupations normales de vie civile parce que leur expérience et leurs conditions sont exactement les mêmes que celles des 48 personnes qui sont inscrites avec nous comme étant aveugles. L'auteur rappelle aussi que peu après le retour des 1,300 à 1,400 survivants de Hong Kong, nous avons été informés que plus de 5 p. 100 d'entre eux avaient une vision défectueuse.

Nous vous prions instamment d'adopter la Recommandation nº 20 du Comité Woods.

Exemption d'impôts sur les pensions

Nous espérons ardemment que l'on acceptera la recommandation qui figure au chapitre 39 du rapport du Comité Woods. Nous reproduisons la lettre suivante datée du 23 novembre 1967 et envoyée au ministre des Finances, l'honorable Mitchell Sharp, c.r., dép., dans laquelle nos associations exprimaient leur avis:

Monsieur le Ministre,

Depuis cinquante ans, nous avons dû créer graduellement une atmosphère de réadaptation des aveugles de guerre, en faisant naître la confiance du public en leur habileté, et en encourageant l'aveugle à accepter un ouvrage, toutefois inférieur, sans avoir égard à leurs intelligence et aptitudes, cachés, peu rémunérés, monotones, sans aucun espoir de promotion, dans la course des employés normaux.

Nous l'avons incité parce que l'aveugle de guerre atteint d'une infirmité grave pouvait travailler et gagner n'importe quel montant d'argent sans en aucune manière modifier sa pension et ses allocations. Si la pension d'infirmité de guerre est imposable d'après les recommandations du Rapport Carter—cela vous fera perdre tout stimulant et la réadaptation des grands handicapés sera rejetée cinquante ans en arrière.

Quoique j'écris ces mots au nom de l'Association des aveugles de guerre Sir Arthur Pearson, je me sens obligé de faire remarquer my employment capacity with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind (CNIB), I review the files of all blind veterans registered with CNIB (1,400), most of whom are War Veterans Allowance recipients, and I have seen too many cases where the means test completely robs the veteran of incentive to work, jobs available to the blind being of a lesser income than remaining on War Veterans Allowance.

"...I shudder to think of all the implications that would evolve from taxing the War Disability Pension. I feel certain that many who now, in a sense, merely augment their pension income, would terminate their employment, in spite of loss of self-respect. There is, however, an over-all exercising among our group of courage, determination and unwillingness to give in to all that their handicap entails, which I, personally, feel should be encouraged rather than discouraged. They have never been complainers—but then, what else could be expected of men who volunteered to give their all—and almost did!

We appreciate the magnitude of your task, but we trust that you are able to recommend continued payment of War Disability Pension as untaxed income.

Yours Respectfully,

F.J.L. Woodcock,
Executive Secretary,
Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded. ..."

We respectfully submit the opinions of our Association expressed above. In addition, we fully support the brief of the National Council of Veteran Associations in Canada and the November 1968 joint statement from the National Chartered Veterans Associations in Canada. It is our sincere hope that your Committee sees fit, in their Recommendations, to create stepping-stones, not stumbling blocks, for the seriously disabled of Canada. That brief was signed by Mr. C. J. Davino, the President, and by Mr. F. J. L. Woodcock, Executive Secretary of the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Chadderton. How does the Committee wish to proceed? There is a supplement to this, I understand, which is going to be put on the record. Should we discuss this brief as it is submitted, or hear the supplement and then review que mon emploi à l'Institut national canadien pour les aveugles (INCA), me permet de reviser les dossiers des anciens combattants inscrits à l'INCA (1,400) dont la plupart d'entre eux touchent des allocations d'anciens combattants et j'ai vu trop de cas où les «Tests d'évaluation» ont complètement enlevé à l'ancien combattant tout motif de travailler, car les postes offerts aux aveugles rapportent moins que les allocations des anciens combattants.

Je tremble en pensant aux implications de l'imposition des pensions d'invalidité de guerre. Je suis certain que plusieurs qui, en un sens, augmentent un peu, leur revenu de pension, laisseraient leur emploi, même au coût de leur amour propre. Il y a toutefois dans notre groupe un esprit de courage et de détermination à ce pas céder leur dû en vertu de leur handicap, qui, à mon avis, devrait être encouragé et non pas découragé. Ils ne se sont jamais plaints—mais que pouvez-vous attendre de plus d'hommes qui se sont offerts volontairement pour le pays!

Nous reconnaissons la grandeur de votre tâche et nous croyons que vous êtes en mesure de recommander le versement continu de la pension d'invalidité de guerre comme revenu non imposable.

Veuillez agréer, monsieur le ministre, l'assurance de mon dévouement le plus sincère.

Le secrétaire exécutif de l'Association des aveugles de guerre Sir Arthur Pearson.

Nous soumettons respectueusement les opinions exprimées plus haut par notre association. En plus, nous souscrivons entièrement au mémoire du Conseil national canadien des Associations des anciens combattants et à l'exposé conjoint des Associations nationales à chartre des anciens combattants du Canada du mois de novembre 1968. Nous espérons sincèrement que votre comité verra juste, dans leurs recommandations, et ouvrira aux infirmes du Canada une voie facile et non pas semée d'embûches.

Le mémoire portait la signature de messieurs C. J. Davino, président et F. J. L. Woodcock, secrétaire exécutif de l'Association Sir Arthur Pearson des aveugles de guerre.

Le président: Nous voulons vous remercier, monsieur. Je voudrais savoir comment le Comité désire procéder car je crois comprendre qu'il existe un supplément à ceci, qui sera inséré au compte-rendu. Devons-nous l'examiner au fur et à mesure ou écouter le suppléboth? What is to be the procedure at this point?

Mr. Woodcock: Mr. Chairman, our reaction to the White Paper is such that perhaps it would be best to read it now and stop after each section and discuss it at that point. I would be glad to discuss any phase of our brief. We had hoped to present it at a time when we might have influenced what the White Paper contains today, but we did not have the opportunity, in spite of promises.

The Chairman: Mr. Woodcock, the White Paper outlines a flexible position, as was indicated by the Minister. The Committee is reviewing that, and we are asking, in particular, for your reaction to it, which I am sure the members of the Committee will be happy to hear.

Mr. Woodcock: Mr. Chairman, if I may further add this, I appreciate the fact that Parliament is not in session, that your Committee is sitting, and . . .

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Woodcock: . . . that you have come back from families and friends and so forth, when you would like to relax and throw the fishing line in the lake, for instance.

The Chairman: No, Mr. Woodcock . . .

Mr. Woodcock: But by the same token my great fear is that this matter will be wound up in too big a hurry, that it will become law, and that we will not have had the opportunity to rebut it.

The Chairman: Mr. Guay?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, I believe Mr. Woodcock has a point. I am presuming—I have not read his second brief, but it is appended here, as Mr. Woodcock mentions—that really what they have in mind pertains to the White Paper. I am very much tempted to agree with him that he read it chapter by chapter and that we ask questions. As I have said previously—and I am going to repeat it—it seems to me that to take it chapter by chapter whereas we can be briefer, and I think it gives us a better opportunity to discuss with them the points they seek to impress upon this Committee.

I know that you are concerned with the element of time.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Guay (St Boniface): We are all concerned with that, but I think we must also ment et puis revenir? Quelle procédure devrions-nous suivre?

M. Woodcock: Je pense, monsieur le président, qu'il serait peut-être préférable de le lire dès maintenant de s'arrêter à chaque partie et d'en faire la discussion. Je serais heureux d'en examiner chaque phase. Nous avions espéré le présenter à un moment où nous aurions pu influencer le contenu actuel du Livre blanc, mais nous n'en avons pas eu l'occasion, en dépit des promesses.
